

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THE
LAWYERS REPORTS
ANNOTATED

NEW SERIES
BOOK 23

BURDETT A. RICH, HENRY P. FARNHAM, EDITORS

1910

ROCHESTER, N. Y.
THE LAWYERS CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY

1910

122032

JUL 29 1942

Copyright 1910,

by

THE LAWYERS CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY.

E. R. ANDREWS PRINTING COMPANY, Rochester, N. Y.

TABLE

OF

CASES REPORTED

A.
Acree, Bigger v.	(Ark.)	187
Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Wimberly	(Tex.)	759
Allen v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co.	(Neb.)	278
Allyn's Appeal	(Conn.)	630
Amalgamated Zinc & L. Co. v. Bay State Zinc Min. Co.	(Mo.)	492
American Cent. Ins. Co., Boston Co-Operative Bank v.	(Mass.)	1147
American Ins. Co., Wiener v.	(Pa.)	593
Appeal of Allyn	(Conn.)	630
Apple, Mader v.	(Ohio)	515
Archer, Miller v.	(Cal.)	868
Ardmore Nat. Bank v. Briggs Machinery & Supply Co.	(Okla.)	1074
Arispe Mercantile Co., Farm- ers' Sav. Bank v.	(Iowa)	889
Armour & Co., Hasbrouck v...	(Wis.)	876
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. C. v. Brown	(Kan.)	247
Atlantic & N. C. Co., Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. v. ..	(N. C.)	223
Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. v. At- lantic & N. C. Co. (N. C.)		223
Austin, Parker v.	(Mich.)	266
Avery, Bradfield v.	(Idaho)	1228
Aylesbury Mercantile Co. v. Fitch	(Okla.)	573
B.
Bailey, White v.	(W. Va.)	232
Ball v. Phelan	(Miss.)	895
Ballew v. Young	(Okla.)	1084
Baltimore & O. R. Co., McKain v.	(W. Va.)	289
Bank, Ardmore Nat. v. Briggs Machinery & Supply Co.	(Okla.)	1074
Boston Co-Operative, v. American Cent. Ins. Co.	(Mass.)	1147
Citizens', v. Schwarzschild & Sulzberger Co. ...	(Va.)	1092
Bank, Farmers' Sav., v. Arispe Mercantile Co.	(Iowa)	889
First Nat., v. Cole ..	(C. C. A.)	255
First Nat., McCarthy v.	(S. D.)	335
First State, v. Williams	(Iowa)	1234
Merchants' Nat., v. Crist	(Iowa)	526
People's State, v. Brown	(Kan.)	824
Third Nat., v. Rice	(C. C. A.)	1167
Barnes, State v.	(Wash.)	932
Barton v. Riverside Water Co.	(Cal.)	331
Baxter v. Krause	(Kan.)	547
Bay State Zinc Min. Co., Amal- gamated Zinc & L. Co. v.	(Mo.)	492
Beauchamp v. Bertig	(Ark.)	659
Becker v. McCrea	(N. Y.)	754
Begley, Hargis v.	(Ky.)	136
Bell, Brown v.	(Colo.)	1096
v. Cincinnati	(Ohio)	910
Belnap v. Condon	(Utah)	601
Berns v. Shaw	(W. Va.)	522
Bertig, Beauchamp v.	(Ark.)	659
Bessemer Irrigating Ditch Co., Middlekamp v.	(Colo.)	795
Bigger v. Acree	(Ark.)	187
Big Sandy & C. R. Co. v. Blankenship	(Ky.)	345
Birmingham Realty Co., Tuske- gee Land & Secur. Co. v.	(Ala.)	992
Blankenship, Big Sandy & C. R. Co. v.	(Ky.)	345
Boston Co-Operative Bank v. American Cent. Ins. Co.	(Mass.)	1147
Boston Elevated R. Co. v. Smith	(C. C. A.)	890
Botzet, Winona v.	(C. C. A.)	204
Bradfield v. Avery	(Idaho)	1228
Breil v. Claus Groth Platts- utschen Vereen ...	(Neb.)	359
Brewer v. Caswell	(Ga.)	1107
Briggs Machinery & Supply Co., Ardmore Nat. Bank v.	(Okla.)	1074
Brindley v. Walker	(Pa.)	1293

Brooklyn Heights R. Co., East
v. (N. Y.)	513
Brooklyn U. Elev. R. Co., Smyth
v. (N. Y.)	433
Brown, Atchison, T. & S. F. R.
Co. v. (Kan.)	247
v. Bell (Colo.)	1096
People's State Bank v. (Kan.)	824
Buckhout v. Witwer (Mich.)	506
Burks v. Harriss (Ark.)	626
Button, Ex parte (Neb.)	1173

C.

Cable v. Spokane & I. E. R. Co.
(Wash.)	1224
Campbell v. Gowans (Utah)	414
v. Seaboard Air Line R.
Co. (S. C.)	1056
Canon City, Manning v. (Colo.)	192
Casserly, Lagerman v. (Minn.)	673
Caswell, Brewer v. (Ga.)	1107
Caywood v. Supreme Lodge, K.
& L. of H. (Ind.)	304
Central Metal & Supply Co.,
Hollander v. (Md.)	1135
Cherryvale v. Hawman (Kan.)	645
Chicago, Molway v. (Ill.)	543
Van Cleef v. (Ill.)	636
v. Wells (Ill.)	405
Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., Allen
v. (Neb.)	278
Keith v. (Neb.)	352
Niemeyer v. (Iowa)	408
Thompson v. (Neb.)	310
Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v.
Moore (C. C. A.)	962
Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., Gan-
non v. (Iowa)	1061
Church of Jesus Christ of L. D.
S. v. Oregon S. L. R.
Co. See Twenty-Second Corp. etc. v. Oregon S. L. R. Co.	860
Chutes Co., Gooding v. (Cal.)	1071
Cincinnati, Bell v. (Ohio)	910
Cincinnati Traction Co., Kellogg v. (Ohio)	158
Citizens' Bank v. Schwarzschild
& Sulzberger Co. (Va.)	1092 Citizens' Deposit Bank, Morehead v. (Ky.)	141
Citizens' Electric Street R. Co.,
Gooch v. (Mass.)	960
City Street Improv. Co. v.
Marysville (Cal.)	217
Clark, McGuire v. (Neb.)	873
Claus Groth Plattsdsutschen
Vereen, Breil v. (Neb.)	359
Coast Lumber Co., Tatum v. (Idaho)	1109
Cochran v. Preston (Md.)	1163
Cole, Re (C. C. A.)	255
First Nat. Bank v. (C. C. A.)	255
Coller v. Knox (Pa.)	171
Columbus, Pegg v. (Ohio)	453
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Com. v. New York C. & H. R.
R. Co. (Mass.)	350
v. Peebles (Ky.)	1130
Sutherland v. (Va.)	172
Conboy, F. W. Woolworth & Co.
v. (C. C. A.)	743
Condon, Belnap v. (Utah)	601
Cooper v. Flesner (Okla.)	1180
v. Goodland (Kan.)	410
Cowden v. Trustees of Schools.. (Ill.)	131
Crigler v. Shepler (Kan.)	500
Crist, Merchants' Nat. Bank v. (Iowa)	526
Crocheron v. Savage
(N. J. Err. & App.)	679
Culver, South Haven & E. R. Co.
v. (Mich.)	564
Cupples v. Level (Wash.)	519

D.

Daily News Pub. Co., Dennison
v. (Neb.)	362
Daily States Pub. Co., Levert v. (La.)	726
Dalton, Interstate Life Assur.
Co. v. (C. C. A.)	722
Darcey v. Darcey (R. I.)	886
Dardis, Re (Wis.)	783
Darling, State v. (Mo.)	272
Dennison v. Daily News Pub.
Co. (Neb.)	362
Depue v. Miller (W. Va.)	775
Derricott, Suell v. (Ala.)	996
Des Moines, Miller v. (Iowa)	815
Dickinson, Rising v. (N. D.)	127
Dorman, West Pratt Coal Co. v.
(Ala.)	805
Dorr v. Midelburg (W. Va.)	987
Downs v. Swann (Md.)	739
Drayton, State v. (Neb.)	1287
Driscoll, L. D. Willcutt & Sons
Co. v. (Mass.)	1236
Dudley v. Northampton Street
R. Co. (Mass.)	561
Duluth Bd. of Trade, State v. (Minn.)	1260
Dupree v. State.... (Tex. Crim. App.)	596
Durant, Morrow v. (Iowa)	474

E.

East v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co
(N. Y.)	513
Eastin, Fall v. ... (U. S. Sup. Ct.)	924
Edwards, Handford v. (Ark.)	190
Ehrlick, State v. (W. Va.)	691
Emig v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. (Ky.)	828
Eminent Household of C. W. v.
Prater (Okla.)	917
Ex parte Button (Neb.)	1173
Hammond (Neb.)	1173
Smythe.... (Tex. Crim. App.)	854

F.

Fall v. Eastin.... (U. S. Sup. Ct.)	924
Fancher v. Fancher (Cal.)	944

CASES REPORTED.

v

Farmers' Sav. Bank v. Arispe Mercantile Co.....(Iowa)	889
First Nat. Bank v. Cole... (C. C. A.)	255
McCarthy v. (S. D.)	335
First State Bank v. Williams (Iowa)	1234
Fitch, Aylesbury Mercantile Co. v. (Okla.)	573
Fitzgerald, Marling v. (Wis.)	177
Flesner, Cooper v. (Okla.)	1180
Fletcher v. State (Okla. Crim. App.)	581
Florida Finance Co. v. Sheffield (Fla.)	1102
Fort Wayne Cooperage Co. v. Page (Ind.)	946
Fraser, Pyross v. (S. C.)	403
Frisch v. Wells (Mass.)	144
Fryer v. Harken (Iowa)	477
F. W. Woolworth & Co. v. Con- boy (C. C. A.)	743

G.

Gannon v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (Iowa)	1061
Garrigan v. United States (C. C. A.)	1295
Gooch v. Citizens' Electric Street R. Co. (Mass.)	960
Gooding v. Chutes Co. (Cal.)	1071
Goodland, Cooper v. (Kan.)	410
Gowans, Campbell v. (Utah)	414
Grabow v. McCracken (Okla.)	1218
Green v. Shoemaker (Md.)	667
Gulf Compress Co. v. Harring- ton (Ark.)	1205

H.

Haas Electric & Mfg. Co., R., v. Springfield Amuse- ment Park Co.....(Ill.)	620
Hammond, Ex parte (Neb.)	1173
Handford v. Edwards (Ark.)	190
Hargis v. Begley (Ky.)	136
Harken, Fryer v. (Iowa)	477
Harrington, Gulf Compress Co. v. (Ark.)	1205
v. Wabash R. Co. (Minn.)	745
Harriss, Burks v. (Ark.)	626
Hartnett v. State (Tex. Crim. App.)	761
Hartshorne v. Ingels (Okla.)	531
Hasbrouck v. Armour & Co.... (Wis.)	876
Hatfield Coal Co., Hermes v..... (Ky.)	724
Hathorn v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. (N. Y.)	436
Hawman, Cherryvale v. (Kan.)	645
Healey, O'Byrne v. (Ala.)	496
Hermes v. Hatfield Coal Co. (Ky.)	724
Hicklin, Illinois C. R. Co. v. (Ky.)	870
Hicks, United States Natural Gas Co. v. (Ky.)	249
Hill, Western U. Teleg. Co. v. (Ala.)	648
Holland v. Sheehan (Minn.)	510
Hollander v. Central Metal & Supply Co. (Md.)	1135

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Home Ins. Co. v. North Little Rock Ice & Electric Co. (Ark.)	1201
Horner v. Schinstock (Kan.)	134
Huffman v. Marcy Mut. Teleph. Co. (Iowa)	1010

I.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Hicklin.... (Ky.)	870
Indianapolis Traction & T. Co. v. Kinney (Ind.)	711
Ingels, Hartshorne v. (Okla.)	531
Insurance Co., Aetna L., v. Wimberly (Tex.)	759
American Cent., Boston Co-Operative Bank v. (Mass.)	1147
American, Wiener v. (Pa.)	593
Home, v. North Little Rock Ice & Electric Co. (Ark.)	1201
Metropolitan L., McElroy v. (Neb.)	968
Mutual Ben. L., Emig v. (Ky.)	828
Interstate Life Assur. Co. v. Dalton (C. C. A.)	722
Intoxicating Liquors, State v... (Me.)	1020

J.

Jarrell v. Young, Smyth, Field Co. (Md.)	367
Jasper v. Wilson (N. M.)	982
Jennings v. Trummer (Or.)	164
Jersey City H. & P. Street R. Co., Najarian v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	751
J. H. Winchell & Co., Nelson v. (Mass.)	1150
J. Thompson & Sons Mfg. Co., Rahles v. (Wis.)	296
Junkin, State ex rel. Ragan v. (Neb.)	839

K.

Kapicski, State v. (Me.)	737
Kasemeier, Rohlf v. (Iowa)	1284
Keith v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Neb.)	352
Kellogg v. Cincinnati Traction Co. (Ohio)	158
Kincaid, White v. (N. C.)	1177
Kinney, Indianapolis Traction & T. Co. v. (Ind.)	711
Kirk v. Wyman (S. C.)	1188
Knox, Collier v. (Pa.)	171
Krause, Baxter v. (Kan.)	547

L.

Lagerman v. Casserly (Minn.)	673
Lake Forest, Poole v. (Ill.)	809
Larson v. Newman (N. D.)	849
v. Salt Lake City..... (Utah)	462

Lawrence v. Toothaker (N. H.)	428	Moore v. Sharpe (Ark.)	937
L. D. Willcutt & Sons Co. v. Driscoll (Mass.)	1236	Morehead v. Citizens' Deposit Bank (Ky.)	141
Leeds & Catlin Co. v. Victor Talking Mach. Co. (C. C. A.)	1027	Morrow v. Durant (Iowa)	474
Legge v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (Mass.)	633	Murphy, Wichita v. (Kan.)	243
Level, Cupples v. (Wash.)	519	Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co., Emig v. (Ky.)	828
Levert v. Daily States Pub. Co. (La.)	726	N.
Lincoln, Tewksbury v. (Neb.)	282	Najarian v. Jersey City, H. & P. Street R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.)	751
Long, Simmonds v. (Kan.)	553	Nation, Moore v. (Kan.)	1115
Los Angeles v. McCollum (Cal.)	378	Natural Carbonic Gas Co., Hathorn v. (N. Y.)	436
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton (Ala.)	183	Nelson v. J. H. Winchell & Co. (Mass.)	1150
v. Scruggs (Ala.)	184	Nelson-Bethel Clothing Co. v. Pitts (Ky.)	1013
Louisville Athletic Club v. No- lan (Ky.)	1019	Nevitt, Tobler v. (Colo.)	702
M.		Newman, Larson v. (N. D.)	849
Mabardy v. McHugh (Mass.)	487	New York C. & H. R. R. Co., Com. v. (Mass.)	350
McCarthy v. First Nat. Bank (S. D.)	335	New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., Legge v. (Mass.)	633
McClellan, State v. (Vt.)	1063	Nichols, Winona v. (C. C. A.)	204
McCollum, Los Angeles v. (Cal.)	378	Niemeyer v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Iowa)	408
McCracken, Grabow v. (Okla.)	1218	Nolan, Louisville Athletic Club v. (Ky.)	1019
McCrea, Becker v. (N. Y.)	754	Norfolk & W. R. Co., Shreve v. (Va.)	771
McElroy v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. (Neb.)	968	Northampton Street R. Co., Dudley v. (Mass.)	561
McGovern, Rockwell v. (Mass.)	1022	Northern Assur. Co., Whitney Estate Co. v. (Cal.)	123
McGrory v. Ultima Thule, A. & M. R. Co. (Ark.)	301	Northern P. R. Co. v. Pierce County (Wash.)	286
McGuire v. Clark (Neb.)	873	North Little Rock Ice & Electric Co., Home Ins. Co. v. (Ark.)	1201
McHugh, Mabardy v. (Mass.)	487	O.
McKain v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (W. Va.)	289	O'Byrne v. Henley (Ala.)	496
Mackenzie v. Minis (Ga.)	1003	Orange & P. V. R. Co., Wright v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	571
Macky, Re (Colo.)	1207	Oregon S. L. R. Co., Twenty- Second Corp., etc. v. (Utah)	860
Mader v. Apple (Ohio)	515	P.
Manning v. Canon City (Colo.)	192	Page, Fort Wayne Cooperage Co. v. (Ind.)	946
Marcy Mut. Teleph. Co., Huff- man v. (Iowa)	1010	Parker v. Austin (Mich.)	266
Marling v. Fitzgerald (Wis.)	177	Patton v. Smith (Ky.)	1124
Martyn, State v. (Neb.)	217	Peebles, Com. v. (Ky.)	1130
Marysville, City Street Improv. Co. v. (Cal.)	217	Pegg v. Columbus (Ohio)	453
Mead v. Winslow (Wash.)	1197	People's State Bank v. Brown (Kan.)	824
Melton, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. (Ala.)	183	Pereira v. Pereira (Cal.)	680
Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Crist (Iowa)	526	Peters v. Peters (Cal.)	699
Metropolitan L. Ins. Co., Mc- Elroy v. (Neb.)	968	Phelan, Ball v. (Miss.)	895
Middlekamp v. Bessemer Irri- gating Ditch Co. (Colo.)	795	Pierce County, Northern P. R. Co. v. (Wash.)	286
Midelburg, Dorr v. (W. Va.)	987	Pike, Sammons v. (Minn.)	1254
Miller, Re (Cal.)	868	Pitts, Nelson-Bethel Clothing Co. v. (Ky.)	1013
v. Archer (Cal.)	868
Depue v. (W. Va.)	775
v. Des Moines (Iowa)	815
v. Wheeler (Wash.)	1065
Minis, Mackenzie v. (Ga.)	1003
Molway v. Chicago (Ill.)	543
Moore, Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. (C. C. A.)	962
v. Nation (Kan.)	1115

Poole v. Lake Forest (Ill.)	809	Railway Co., Orange & P. V., Wright v. (N. J. Err. & App)	571
Potlatch Lumber Co. v. Runkel (Idaho)	536	St. Louis & S. F., v. Richards (Okla.)	1032
Prater, Eminent Household of C. W. v. (Okla.)	917	Seaboard Air Line, Camp- bell v. (S. C.)	1056
Preston, Cochran v. (Md.)	1163	South Haven & E., v. Culver (Mich.)	564
Pumphrey v. State (Neb.)	1023	Ultima Thule, A. & M., McGrory v. (Ark.)	301
Pyross v. Fraser (S. C.)	403	Wisconsin C., Thomas v. (Minn.)	954
R.
Ragan, State ex rel., v. Junkin (Neb.)	839	Re Cole (C. C. A.)	255
Rahles v. J. Thompson & Sons Mfg. Co. (Wis.)	296	Dardis (Wis.)	783
Railroad Co., Atlantic & N. C., v. Atlantic & N. C. Co. (N. C.)	223	Macky (Colo.)	1207
Baltimore & O., McKain v. (W. Va.)	289	Miller (Cal.)	868
Big Sandy & C., v. Blankenship (Ky.)	345	R. Haas Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Springfield Amuse- ment Park Co. (Ill.)	620
Brooklyn Heights, East v. (N. Y.)	513	Rice, Third Nat. Bank v. (C. C. A.)	1167
Brooklyn U. Elev., Smyth v. (N. Y.)	433	Richards, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. (Okla.)	1032
Chicago, B. & Q., Allen v. (Neb.)	278	Ripley v. Sage Land & Improv. Co. (Wis.)	787
Chicago, B. & Q., Keith v. (Neb.)	352	Rising v. Dickinson (N. D.)	127
Chicago, B. & Q., Thomp- son v. (Neb.)	310	Riverside Water Co., Barton v. (Cal.)	331
Chicago, R. I. & P., Gan- non v. (Iowa)	1061	Rockwell v. McGovern (Mass.)	1022
Illinois C., v. Hicklin... (Ky.)	870	Rohlf v. Kasemeier (Iowa)	1284
Louisville & N., v. Mel- ton (Ala.)	183	Roote v. Roote (App. D. C.)	240
Louisville & N., v. Scruggs (Ala.)	184	Runkel, Potlatch Lumber Co. v. (Idaho)	536
New York C. & H. R., Com. v. (Mass.)	350	S.
New York, N. H. & H., Legge v. (Mass.)	633	Sage Land & Improv. Co., Rip- ley v. (Wis.)	787
Oregon S. L., Twenty-Sec- ond Corp., etc. v. ... (Utah)	860	St. Johnsbury, State Bd. of Health v. (Vt.)	766
Spokane & I. E., Cable v. (Wash.)	1224	St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Richards (Okla.)	1032
Wabash, Harrington v. (Minn.)	745	Salt Lake City, Larson v.... (Utah)	462
Railway Co., Atchison, T. & S. F., v. Brown..... (Kan.)	247	Sammons v. Pike (Minn.)	1254
Boston Elevated, v. Smith (C. C. A.)	890	Savage, Crocheron v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	679
Chicago, B. & Q., Nie- meyer v. (Iowa)	408	Saxony Mills v. Wagner & Co. (Miss.)	834
Chicago, M. & St. P., v. Moore (C. C. A.)	962	Sbragia, State v. (Wis.)	697
Citizens' Electric Street, Gooch v. (Mass.)	960	Schinstock, Horner v. (Kan.)	134
Jersey City, H. & P. Street, Najarian v. (N. J. Err. & App.)	751	Schwarzchild & Sulzberger Co., Citizens' Bank v. ... (Va.)	1092
Norfolk & W., Shreve v. (Va.)	771	Scott v. Scott (Iowa)	716
Northampton Street, Dud- ley v. (Mass.)	561	Scruggs, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. (Ala.)	184
Northern P., v. Pierce County (Wash.)	286	Seaboard Air Line R. Co., Campbell v. (S. C.)	1056
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)		Sharpe, Moore v. (Ark.)	937
		Shaw, Berns v. (W. Va.)	522
		Sheehan, Holland v. (Minn.)	510
		Sheffield, Florida Finance Co. v. (Fla.)	1102
		Shepler, Crigler v. (Kan.)	500
		Shoemaker, Green v. (Md.)	667
		Shreve v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (Va.)	771
		Simmonds v. Long (Kan.)	553
		Smith, Boston Elevated R. Co. v. (C. C. A.)	890

Smith, Patton v.(Ky.)	1124	United States, Garrigan v. (C. C. A.)	1295
Smyth v. Brooklyn U. Elev. R.		United States Natural Gas Co.
Co.(N. Y.)	433	v. Hicks(Ky.)	249
Smythe, Ex parte (Tex. Crim. App.)	854	V.
South Haven & E. R. Co. v. Culver(Mich.)	564	Van Cleef v. Chicago(Ill.)	636
Spokane & I. E. R. Co., Cable v.		Victor Talking Mach. Co., Leeds
(Wash.)	1224	& Catlin Co. v. (C. C. A.)	1027
Springfield Amusement Park		Voigt, Woll v.(Minn.)	279
Co., R. Haas Electric		W.
& Mfg. Co. v.....(Ill.)	620
State v. Barnes(Wash.)	932	Wabash R. Co., Harrington v.....
v. Darling(Mo.)	272	(Minn.)	745
v. Drayton(Neb.)	1287	Wagner & Co., Saxony Mills v.(Miss.)	834
v. Duluth Bd. of Trade (Minn.)	1260	Walker, Brindley v.(Pa.)	1293
Dupree v....(Tex. Crim. App.)	596	Welch v. Swasey(Mass.)	1160
v. Ehrlick(W. Va.)	691	Wells, Chicago v.(Ill.)	405
Fletcher v. (Okla. Crim. App.)	581	Frisch v.(Mass.)	144
Hartnett v...(Tex. Crim. App.)	761	Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hill (Ala.)	648
v. Intoxicating Liquors..(Me.)	1020	West Pratt Coal Co. v. Dor-
v. Kapicski(Me.)	737	man(Ala.)	805
v. McClellan(Vt.)	1063	Wheeler, Miller v.(Wash.)	1065
v. Martyn(Neb.)	217	White v. Bailey(W. Va.)	232
Pumphrey v.(Neb.)	1023	v. Kincaid(N. C.)	1177
v. Sbragia(Wis.)	697	Whitney Estate Co. v. Northern
Wilby v.(Miss.)	677	Assur. Co.(Cal.)	123
v. Willett(Ind.)	197	Wichita v. Murphy(Kan.)	243
State ex rel. Ragan v. Junkin (Neb.)	839	Wiener v. American Ins. Co. ... (Pa.)	593
State Bd. of Health v. St. Johns-		Wilby v. State(Miss.)	677
bury(Vt.)	766	Willcutt & Sons Co., L. D., v.
Storz, Stumpf v.(Mich.)	152	Driscoll(Mass.)	1236
Stumpf v. Storz(Mich.)	152	Willett, State v.(Ind.)	197
Suell v. Derricott(Ala.)	996	Williams, First State Bank v. (Iowa)	1234
Superior Court, Tyler v.(R. I.)	1045	Wilson, Jasper v.(N. M.)	982
Supreme Lodge, K. & L. of H.,		Wimberly, Aetna L. Ins. Co. v. (Tex.)	759
Caywood v.(Ind.)	304	Winona v. Botzet(C. C. A.)	204
Sutherland v. Com.(Va.)	172	v. Nichols(C. C. A.)	201
Swann, Downs v.(Md.)	739	Winslow, Mead v.(Wash.)	1197
Swasey, Welch v.(Mass.)	1160	Wisconsin C. R. Co., Thomas v.
T.		(Minn.)	954
Tatum v. Coast Lumber Co. (Idaho)	1109	Witwer, Buckhout v.(Mich.)	506
Tewksbury v. Lincoln(Neb.)	282	Woll v. Voigt(Minn.)	270
Third Nat. Bank v. Rice... (C. C. A.)	1167	Woolworth & Co., F. W., v. Con-
Thomas v. Wisconsin C. R. Co.		boy(C. C. A.)	743
(Minn.)	954	Wright v. Orange & P. V. R. Co.
Wyeth v.(Mass.)	147	(N.J. Err. & App.)	571
Thompson v. Chicago, B. & Q.		Wyeth v. Thomas(Mass.)	147
R. Co.(Neb.)	310	Wyman, Kirk v.(S. C.)	1188
Tobler v. Nevitt(Colo.)	702	Y.
Toothaker, Lawrence v.(N. H.)	428
Trummer, Jennings v.(Or.)	164	Young, Ballev v.(Okla.)	1084
Trustees of Schools, Cowden v...(Ill.)	131	Young, Smyth, Field Co., Jarrell
Tuskegee Land & Secur. Co. v.		v.(Md.)	367
Birmingham Realty		Z.
Co.(Ala.)	992
Twenty-Second Corp., etc. v.		Zeitlin v. Zeitlin(Mass.)	569
Oregon S. L. R. Co. (Utah)	860	Ziska v. Ziska(Okla.)	1
Tyler v. Superior Court(R. I.)	1045
U.
Ultima Thule, A. & M. R. Co.,
McGrory v.(Ark.)	301
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

LAWYERS REPORTS

ANNOTATED

NEW SERIES.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

KATHERINE ZISKA, Plff. in Err.,
v.

F. R. ZISKA et al.

(20 Okla. 634, 95 Pac. 254.)

Fraudulent conveyance — creditors' action — limitation.

1. In the absence of laches in obtaining judgment, a suit to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, begun within two years after recovery of such judgment, is not barred by virtue of the provisions of paragraph 4216, Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. Okla. 1903, which provides that actions for relief on the Headnotes by DUNN, J.

Subject Note. — Conditions precedent to equitable remedies of creditors.

- I. Introduction, 2.
- II. Basis of equitable relief, 4.
- III. Extent to which legal remedy must be pursued.
 - a. As to judgments.
 1. Necessity of, 10.
 2. Sufficiency, nature, effect.
 - (a) In general, 20.
 - (b) Judgments or decrees in equity, 21.
 - (c) Judgments of other jurisdictions, 22.
 3. Proceedings at law affecting judgment, 26.
 - b. As to execution, levy, and return.
 1. As to property subject to levy.
 - (a) Necessity of lien.
 - (1) The general rule, 26.
 - (2) Absence of lien; remedy at law, 31.
 - (3) Expiration of lien, 32.
 - (b) Acquirement of lien.
 - (1) In general, 33.
 - (2) As to real estate, 33.
 - (3) As to personalty, 37.

ground of fraud can only be brought within two years after the discovery, and this notwithstanding the fact that the conveyance in question was made more than two years prior to the institution of such suit. Plaintiff's cause of action does not accrue until recovery of a judgment.

Creditors' action — return of execution nulla bona.

2. Where an attachment is levied upon real estate as the property of a nonresident defendant, although title to the same stands in the name of another, the attaching creditor acquires a lien upon any interest debtor may have in such land, which he may enforce after judgment in a suit in the nature of a creditors' bill, and in such a case the petition need not aver execution issued and returned nulla bona, it being

III. b, 1—continued.

- (c) Rule as to attachment and garnishment liens, 39.
 - (d) Exhaustion of remedy at law.
 - (1) In general, 46.
 - (2) Issuance of execution, 47.
 - (3) Return of execution, 49.
 - (4) Rule where debtor has property open to levy, 54.
 - (5) Effect of levy upon property owned by debtor, 58.
 - (e) Demand, 58.
 2. As to property not subject to levy, 59.
- #### IV. What amounts to exhaustion of remedy at law.
- a. In general, 62.
 - b. Regularity of proceedings at law, 63.
 - c. County to which execution must be sent; return, 64.
 - d. Return of execution.
 1. Sufficiency of, 66.
 2. Conclusiveness of, 68.

sufficient to aver in appropriate language the lack of any other available assets.

Trial — demurrer to evidence — effect.

3. A demurrer to the evidence admits all the facts which the evidence in the slightest degree tends to prove, and all the inferences or conclusions which may be reasonably and logically drawn from the evidence. On a demurrer to the evidence, the court cannot weigh conflicting evidence, but will treat the evidence as withdrawn which is most favorable to the demurrer.

(Dunn, J., dissents in part.)

(April 13, 1908.)

ERROR to the District Court for Canadian County to review a judgment in defendants' favor in an action in the nature of a creditors' bill brought to set aside a conveyance of land alleged to have been made in fraud of plaintiff's rights. Reversed.

Statement by Dunn, J.:

November 4, 1903, Katherine Ziska, plaintiff below, and plaintiff in error here, secured a judgment for \$1,700 in the district court of Lancaster county, Nebraska, against Frank R. Ziska, her husband, in a suit for divorce and alimony. On September 7, 1904, she instituted a suit on said judgment in the district court of Canadian county, Oklahoma, suing out an attachment on a quarter section of land described as the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 17, township 12, range 6 W. of I. M., and on the trial of the cause, on November 21, 1904, secured judgment against Frank R. Ziska in the sum of \$1,834, in which the attachment was sustained and the land ordered sold as required by law. On January

IV. d—continued.

3. Return on or before return day, 71.

4. Effect of collusion as to, 74.

5. Demand before return, 74.

e. Necessity of issuing new execution, 74.

f. Pursuit of joint debtors, 75.

g. Several claims; exhaustion of remedy as to one, 77.

h. Exhaustion as to surety, principal, indorser, 78.

i. Exhaustion of remedy as to debtor and third person, 79.

j. Proceedings on inferior court judgments, 79.

V. Exceptions to general rules; excuses for noncompliance.

a. Where claim is admitted or allowed, 80.

b. Where compliance with rules would be a mere matter of form, 82.

c. Where law and equity are administered by same court, 84.

d. Where debtor is a nonresident, or is absent, 85.

e. Where property is situate beyond jurisdiction, 88.

f. Effect of insolvency; lack of property subject to execution, 88.

g. Effect of debtor's death.

1. In general, 92.

2. Allowance of claim against estate, 96.

h. Actions against corporations.

1. Effect of insolvency, 97.

2. Effect of dissolution or abandonment, 99.

i. Actions against partners.

1. In general, 99.

2. Failure to exhaust remedy as to all the partners, 100.

j. Actions by sureties; promissory notes, 101.

k. Miscellaneous grounds for noncompliance with general rules, 101.

VI. Necessity of exhausting remedy at law, where equity jurisdiction is original.

a. In general; special equities, 102.

b. Fraud, 104.

c. Trusts in general, 105.

d. Statutory trusts, 107.

e. Trust-fund theory.

1. As to corporations, 109.

2. As to ordinary partnerships, 110.

3. As to special partnerships, 111.

f. Estates of deceased debtors.

1. In general, 111.

2. Exhaustion of personal assets, 112.

VII. Effect of special statutes, 113.

I. Introduction.

"Generalities, . . . which with reference to so many cases are founded in truth, sometimes come to be taken, by frequent repetition, as axioms, behind which, as a bulwark, we seldom in any case look." M'Nairy v. Eastland, 10 Yerg. 310.

It is hard to think of any subject that could have suffered more from the evil mentioned in the above quotation than that relating to conditions precedent to equitable remedies of creditors. The frequent repetition of such expressions as "equity will never assume jurisdiction where there is an adequate remedy at law," or "a creditor cannot come into equity until he has exhausted his remedy at law," as if they were axioms applicable to all cases, has tended to complicate what would otherwise be a very simple subject. In addition to this, statutes making actions at law and in equity triable in a single court, and statutes prescribing the procedure as to creditors' bills and bills in aid of execution, have added their mite to the confusion, so that upon looking at the authorities, even in separate jurisdictions, it is hard to find a consistent line of cases on any branch of the sub-

G. 1905, she filed this suit in the district court of Canadian county against Frank R. Ziska and F. M. Ziska. The amended petition alleges that, in April, 1880, plaintiff and defendant Frank R. Ziska were married, and lived and cohabited together until about the 1st day of November, 1901, at which time defendant abandoned her; that, on the 27th day of July, 1903, she instituted an action for divorce and alimony, in which case, on the 4th day of November, 1903, judgment was rendered for an absolute divorce and for $1,700 alimony; that the said judgment has become final; that, on the 7th day of September, 1904, plaintiff instituted her action in the district court of Canadian county against Frank R. Ziska on the judgment above mentioned, and caused an attachment to be issued and levied on the land, and that, on the 21st day of November, 1904, by the consideration of the said court, she secured a judgment against Frank R. Ziska in the sum of $1,834 and costs of suit, and an order that said attachment be sustained and the land sold as required by law to satisfy the said judgment; that, on the 12th day of August, 1893, while plaintiff and defendant Frank R. Ziska were living together as husband and wife, they purchased the said land, which was paid out of the separate estate of this plaintiff, and the legal title to said lands taken in the name of the defendant Frank R. Ziska; that, on November 30, 1901, and after the abandonment of the plaintiff by defendant, a deed was made by the said Frank R. Ziska to his brother, which purported to convey to the said brother, F. M. Ziska, the tract of land in question, and the said deed was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Canadian county on the 12th day of December, 1901; that the said deed so made as aforesaid was made by the said Frank R.

ject. There is not as much actual conflict, however, as appears on the surface, many of the decisions themselves being correct, although the rules relating thereto have been carelessly and inaccurately stated. A careful examination of all of the cases fixes the idea very firmly in the mind that most of the trouble has come from a misunderstanding of the adequate remedy at law rule and the exhaustion of the remedy at law rule, which are often incorrectly referred to as if one were the equivalent of the other. It is necessary only to look behind these two "bulwarks" to discover how the confusion and conflict largely arose, and to determine what the true rules governing equitable assistance to creditors are or ought to be.

It should be stated at the outset that what is here meant by conditions precedent to equitable remedies of creditors are the conditions prerequisite to such relief as is granted under the ancillary jurisdiction of courts of equity, in aid of the legal remedy when the legal remedy is ineffectual or fruitless. The question is, How far must the creditor go at law before he can have this relief? It is not here intended to take up questions relating to creditors' remedies when the jurisdiction of equity is original, as, for example, to enforce trusts. There are, strictly speaking, no conditions precedent to equitable relief in this class of cases as this term is used with reference to creditors' actions, as here the creditor comes into court in the first instance. The cases, however, in which the question of conditions precedent has been raised and discussed with reference to its bearing upon the original jurisdiction of courts of equity, have been collected and grouped under one subdivision of the note, and they are important as marking the boundary lines of the subject.

The term "condition precedent" is therefore used in this note in its narrow sense, that is, to signify how far the creditor must push his legal remedy before he will be listened to in a court of equity. To use it in 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the broader sense would necessitate including all questions of jurisdiction, pleading, and practice, as well as questions relating to the merits of the claim, which is altogether beyond the scope of a note of this kind. It is therefore assumed, in the cases selected, that the equity court has jurisdiction if the preliminary legal steps have been taken (Verdier v. Foster, 4 Rich. Eq. 227); that a valid claim exists (Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Jones, 89 Minn. 184, 94 N. W. 551; Bickerdike v. Allen, 157 Ill. 95, 29 L.R.A. 782, 41 N. E. 740); that the debt is due (Ware v. Seasongood, 92 Ala. 156, 9 So. 138; Freider v. Lienkauff, 92 Ala. 469, 8 So. 758; McGhee v. Importers' & T. Nat. Bank, 93 Ala. 192, 9 So. 734; Gibson v. Trowbridge Furniture Co. 93 Ala. 579, 9 So. 370; Evans v. Thornburg, 77 Ind. 106; Scott v. Thomas, 104 Va. 330, 51 S. E. 829; Simon v. Ellison, 2 Va. Dec. 203, 22 S. E. 860); and that a creditor having obtained a lien is not obliged to sell the property with a cloud upon it, created by a fraudulent conveyance (Planters & Merchants' Bank v. Walker, 7 Ala. 926; Chardavoyne v. Galbraith, 81 Ala. 521, 1 So. 771; Gaines v. National Exch. Bank, 64 Tex. 18). Cases will also be excluded where the question is whether special statutory remedies, such as acts relating to attachment, garnishment, and supplementary proceedings, should first be exhausted, before equitable relief will be granted (First Nat. Bank v. Steinway, 77 Fed. 661; Feidler v. Bartleson, 88 C. C. A. 194, 161 Fed. 30; Sheppard v. Iverson, 12 Ala. 97; Guyton v. Terrell, 132 Ala. 66, 31 So. 83; Wolters v. Rossi, 126 Cal. 644, 59 Pac. 143; Phillips v. Price, 153 Cal. 146, 94 Pac. 617; Gager v. Watson, 11 Conn. 172; Field v. Jones, 10 Ga. 229; Flint v. Webb, 25 Minn. 263; Ryan v. Maxey, 14 Mont. 81, 35 Pac. 515; Monroe v. Reid, 46 Neb. 316, 64 N. W. 983; Chamberlain Bkg. House v. Turner-Frazer Mercantile Co. 66 Neb. 48, 92 N. W. 172; Sabin v. Anderson, 31 Or. 487, 49 Pac. 870; Clapp v. Smith, 16 R. I. 717, 19 Atl. 330; White

Ziska, without consideration, and with the intent that the said F. M. Ziska should hold said land in trust for the said Frank R. Ziska, and for his use and benefit, and with the intent and design to hinder, defraud, and delay the plaintiff of her interest in said land in securing support and maintenance from defendant, and hinder, defraud, and delay plaintiff from collecting any judgment for alimony which might be awarded her thereafter; that said F. M. Ziska paid nothing for said land; that said F. M. Ziska has at all times been a resident of the state of Nebraska, and never took possession of said land, or resided upon and cultivated the same, or claimed ownership thereof, and defendant Frank R. Ziska has at all times prior to the filing of this action claimed to be the owner of said land; "that the defendant Frank R. Ziska is insolvent, and has been at all times since the 1st day of December, 1901, and has no property subject to execution out of which plaintiff can make her judgment except the land heretofore described; that said deed from Frank R. Ziska to F. M. Ziska to said land is an obstruction to the process of this court, and hinders and delays plaintiff in the collection of her said judgment, rendered in this court on the 21st day of November, 1904." Plaintiff's petition was followed by a prayer for a judgment canceling said deed, and for costs of suit. To this the defendant F. M. Ziska filed a demurrer setting out, among other things, that the petition showed on its face that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute Sewing Mach. Co. v. Atkeson, 75 Tex. 333, 12 S. W. 812; Meier v. Waco State Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 881; and cases in which the question is whether the remedy at law should be exhausted against a corporation before proceeding against stockholders (Bogardus v. Rosendale Mfg. Co. 4 Sandf. 89; Morgan v. Lewis, 46 Ohio St. 1, 17 N. E. 558; Barrick v. Gifford, 47 Ohio St. 180, 21 Am. St. Rep. 798, 24 N. E. 259; Ladd v. Cartwright, 7 Or. 329; Merchants' Bank v. Chandler, 19 Wis. 435; Henderson v. Turngren, 9 Utah, 432, 35 Pac. 495; Bickford v. McComb, 88 Fed. 428); and cases in which, where the representative of a decedent has wasted the estate of his intestate, the question is whether all legal remedies should be exhausted against him and his sureties, if they, or either of them, are solvent, before a creditor will be permitted to come into a court of equity to subject to his claim the estate which has passed into the hands of the heirs and distributees (Ledyard v. Johnston, 16 Ala. 548; Pyke v. Searcy, 4 Port. (Ala.) 52); and cases in which the question is whether partnership property must first be exhausted before the individual property of a partnership can be reached on a partnership claim (Hubble v. Perrin, 3 Ohio, 287); and cases in which the question is whether a creditor must first exhaust his securities before asking equitable aid to reach his debtor's property (Palmer v. Foote 7 Paige, 437); but aside from the limitations specified, the note will include all cases bearing upon the question of the legal steps prerequisite to creditors' remedies.

For cases, not included in this note, on "Exhausting remedies at law as a condition of the right of a judgment creditor to procure a receivership," see note to Minkler v. United States Sheep Co. 33 L.R.A. 546.

II. Basis of equitable relief.

The general rules relating to conditions precedent to equitable remedies of creditors are few and simple. They depend entirely upon the nature of the property sought to be reached in the first instance, and are modified 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

fied to some extent by special circumstances and by statutes. When relief is granted against property subject to execution, it is upon one theory, and when aid is extended to reach property not subject to execution, it is upon an entirely different theory; and the confusion that exists is wholly due to overlooking the reasons upon which the jurisdiction rests, and in supposing that the legal steps prerequisite to relief when the creditor is pursuing property not subject to execution are also necessary where he is after property subject to execution. The reason for the rule that equity will not grant relief where there is an adequate remedy at law applies to both of these cases, but is not the same as that responsible for the rule that, before equitable aid will be extended to a creditor in certain cases, he must exhaust his remedy at law. With these points kept in mind, it will be easy to reconcile some of the authorities and to see how the courts in many instances have fallen into error.

In McCaffrey v. Hickey, 66 Barb. 489, it was said that, in an action in aid of an execution,—that is, to set aside a fraudulent obstruction interposed by the judgment debtor or other person, to the satisfaction of the debt out of the property of the debtor, which, the fraudulent obstruction being removed, was liable to be seized and sold for the payment of the debt,—the power of the court of chancery to grant the relief did not rest upon the statutory provision, but was part of the common-law jurisdiction of the court.

In other words, where the creditor has acquired a lien on property subject to execution, he has the right to sell it, but where the debtor has fraudulently transferred it to another, the title is thereby beclouded. The creditor, therefore, although entitled to sell, cannot dispose of the property at good advantage because of the fraudulent acts of the debtor. Equity here steps in, and on the ground of fraud, which is part of its common-law jurisdiction, removes the cloud upon the title so that a fair price may be realized.

On the other hand, there was formerly a cause of action in favor of plaintiff and against the defendant. This demurrer was overruled, to which defendant reserved an exception. He thereafter filed an answer denying every material allegation in plaintiff's petition, admitting the suit in which plaintiff secured a judgment and attachment, which are the basis of this suit, but averring that the defendant F. M. Ziska was not a party to said suit, and that no summons was ever served on him, nor was he given any notice of the pendency of the said suit, and that none of his rights were litigated therein; that he was the owner in fee simple of the land above set forth, and has been ever since the 30th day of November, 1901, and that the levy of said attachment on said land was an apparent cloud upon the title. This answer was followed by a prayer asking the court to render judgment in his favor, declaring the title to said premises to be in him, free and clear of any encumbrances, lien, or cloud caused by said suit, judgment, or attachment. Frank R. Ziska made no defense or appearance in this case. On the trial to the court, a demurrer was sustained to the evidence, to which plaintiff excepted, and the case is before us on petition in error and case made.

Mr. W. M. Wallace, for plaintiff in error:

On demurrer to the evidence, the court must treat as withdrawn the evidence which is favorable to demurrant.

much controversy in the courts over the question whether equity, in the absence of the usual grounds for equitable interference, had any jurisdiction whatever to aid creditors to reach property not subject to execution. For a few of the cases in which this subject is discussed, see Bayard v. Hoffman, 4 Johns. Ch. 450; Hadden v. Spader, 20 Johns. 554; Donovan v. Finn, Hopk. Ch. 59, 14 Am. Dec. 531; Edmeston v. Lyde, 1 Paige, 637, 19 Am. Dec. 454; Tarbell v. Griggs, 3 Paige, Ch. 207, 23 Am. Dec. 790; Bigelow v. Congregational Soc. 11 Vt. 283. It was probably in consequence of a conflict between the views of Chancellor Woodworth, in Hadden v. Spader, supra, and Chancellor Sanford, in Donovan v. Finn, supra, that the revisers in 1828 incorporated the provisions in the New York Revised Statutes giving the court of chancery jurisdiction in this class of cases.

In Erwin v. Oldham, 6 Yerg. 186, 27 Am. Dec. 458, the complainant obtained a judgment at law against the defendant, upon which an execution issued and was returned unsatisfied. He then filed a bill to subject certain stock of a corporation which the defendant had to the payment and satisfaction of his judgment. The single question raised by the pleadings was whether this stock could be reached in equity, and it was held that it could not be subjected to the complainant's judgment. The court said it was not pretended that there was any fraud or trust in the case to furnish a ground of equity jurisdiction; and the simple question was whether the court had power to cause stocks, credits, and rights of action by the debtor, without fraud, to be sold, or converted into money, or transferred to a creditor in payment of his debt.

In consequence of the decision of the court in the last-mentioned case, the Tennessee act of 1832, chap. 11, was passed to subject stock, choses in action, etc., to the satisfaction of the claims of creditors. Prior to that time, where the execution created no lien, the ancillary jurisdiction of chancery could not be successfully invoked. Ewing v. Cantrell, Meigs, 364.

In Pendleton v. Perkins, 49 Mo. 565, it 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

was held that a creditors' bill would lie to subject a fund or chose in action of the debtor, even without showing fraud or some other recognized ground of equitable jurisdiction. The court said that the affirmation of the proposition that a judgment creditor who has exhausted every ordinary means to satisfy his judgments should have the aid of the court, in analogy to his ancient chancery jurisdiction, to reach his debtor's funds, whether fraudulently withdrawn or concealed, or not, seemed to be necessarily inferred from the main object of chancery jurisdiction—to furnish a remedy when the strict rule of legal practice failed. Creditors ordinarily invoked its aid to pursue the effects of their debtors that were fraudulently withdrawn from their reach. But a debtor might be a money lender, and be accumulating wealth without having expressly withdrawn property from the reach of execution, and, in the absence of statutory remedies, he might defy creditors unless chancery could subject his credits.

And in Lorman v. Clarke, 2 McLean, 569, Fed. Cas. No. 8,516, in holding that a bill to reach choses in action would be entertained in a Federal court, where authority therefor was given by a statute of the state in which the court was located, the court said that it was also of the opinion that the bill was sustainable on the general principles of equity, independently of the statute; that it would be a reproach to the administration of justice if a debtor, by converting his estate into choses in action or stocks, or if his estate consisted of such property as could not be reached by execution, should be able to hold it in defiance of his creditors.

It is not purposed to go into this question any further here, the cases having been cited to show that the jurisdiction, aside from statutes, was at least considered doubtful. At the present time, however, all question has been removed by the passage of statutes granting jurisdiction in such cases. The significance of the remark in McCaffrey v. Hickey, supra, that the jurisdiction of chancery to grant relief in aid of execution was not statutory, is therefore apparent. In those authorities in which the jurisdiction

Edmisson v. Drumm-Flato Commission Co. 13 Okla. 440, 73 Pac. 958.

A creditor cannot attach a transfer of his debtor in property until he has recovered a judgment, and exhausted his remedy at law.

Blackwell v. Hatch, 13 Okla. 169, 73 Pac. 933; Parmenter v. Lomax, 68 Kan. 61, 74 Pac. 634.

Where the judgment debtor is insolvent and has no property subject to execution, the issuance and return of an execution unsatisfied is unnecessary to support a creditors' bill.

Towns v. Smith, 115 Ind. 480, 16 N. E. 811; Smalley v. Mass, 72 Iowa, 171, 33 N. W. 619; O'Brien v. Stambach, 101 Iowa, 40, 63 Am. St. Rep. 368, 69 N. W. 1133; Springfield Grocery Co. v. Thomas, 3 Ind. Terr. 330, 58 S. W. 557; Mueller v. Bruss, 112 Wis. 406, 88 N. W. 229; Sage v. Memphis & L. R. R. Co. 125 U. S. 361, 31 L. ed.

to reach property not subject to execution was maintained aside from statute, an important condition was imposed, and that was that the creditor must first exhaust his remedy at law, which meant only that he must first pursue property subject to execution; and the reason given for this was that the debtor ought not to be subjected to the expense of a chancery suit in an effort to reach his choses in action, when the simple inexpensive process of the law was open to the creditor to obtain tangible property. This is not the reason for the rule that equity will not interfere unless there is not an adequate remedy at law, which was of much earlier date. The place for the adequate remedy at law rule in connection with equitable remedies of creditors is pointed out in the next subdivision of the note. It should be remembered that the pursuit of the remedy at law rule arose with reference to actions to reach such property as choses in action, as just stated. When statutes came to be passed granting jurisdiction to equity courts, where jurisdiction was denied or considered doubtful, this condition was carried into these acts, and it was generally provided that relief might be granted only when execution had been issued and returned unsatisfied.

In Beck v. Burdett, 1 Paige, 305, 19 Am. Dec. 436, a leading case on the subject, the court said that there were two classes of cases where a plaintiff was permitted to come into a court of equity for relief after he had proceeded to judgment and execution at law without obtaining satisfaction of his debt. In the one case, the issuing of the execution gave to the plaintiff a lien upon the property, but he was compelled to come into equity for the purpose of removing some obstruction fraudulently or inequitably interposed to prevent a sale on the execution. In the other, the plaintiff came into equity to obtain satisfaction of his debt out of the property of the defendant which could not

694, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 887; 20 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 699, 700.

Messrs. Noffsinger & Hinch for defendants in error.

Dunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Under the facts in this case as disclosed by the record and the briefs of the parties, two propositions are raised for the consideration of this court. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of the district court sustaining a demurrer to the evidence and holding it insufficient to support the allegations of the petition, and argues at length the elements of fraud which it is contended are disclosed by the conveyance of the land attached. Defendant in error joins issue in his brief on this subject, and, in addition thereto, contends that the petition shows on its face that the cause of action is barred by the statute of limitation, by virtue of paragraph 4216, 2 Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. 1903.

be reached in an execution at law. In the latter case his right to relief depended upon the fact of his having exhausted his legal remedies without being able to obtain satisfaction of his judgment. In the first case the plaintiff might come into a court of equity for relief immediately after he had obtained a lien upon the property by the issuing of an execution to the sheriff of the county where the same was situated, and the obstruction being removed he might proceed to enforce the execution by a sale of the property, although an actual levy was probably necessary to enable him to hold the property against other execution creditors or bona fide purchasers. The court also said that the issuing of an execution, or even a formal levy, could create no lien upon a chose in action or a mere equitable interest in personal property, which was not liable to be sold on execution. In such cases the actual return of the execution unsatisfied was necessary to give the equity court jurisdiction to decree satisfaction out of the equitable property of the defendant.

The same distinction is pointed out in other cases, and these will be quoted at length, as the point cannot be too strongly emphasized.

In Williams v. Hubbard, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 28, it was said that there are two classes of cases in which a judgment creditor may come into equity for relief. First, in aid of his execution at law, as to set aside an encumbrance or a transfer of property made to defraud creditors; second, to have his judgment paid out of choses in action or other property of the debtor not liable to execution. Relief is given in these two classes of cases on different principles,—in the first class on the ground of fraud, and in the other on the ground that the complainant has exhausted his remedy at law and that it is inequitable and unjust for the debtor, under such circumstances, to refuse to apply any choses in action, or other which provides: "Civil actions other than for the recovery of real property can only be brought within the following periods after the cause of action shall have accrued, and not afterwards: . . . Within two years . . . an action for relief on the ground of fraud—the cause of action in such case shall not be deemed to have accrued until the discovery of the fraud." And, second, that the petition of plaintiff is insufficient to sustain her cause of action, for that there is no allegation that an execution issued on the judgment procured in Canadian county or elsewhere, and a return nulla bona, prior to the beginning of this suit to set aside this alleged fraudulent conveyance. We will first discuss the legal propositions in the order here stated.

property belonging to him not liable to execution, in payment of the judgment.

There are two classes of cases in which a judgment creditor is permitted to come into a court of equity for relief. First, in aid of his execution at law, as to set aside an encumbrance or a transfer of property made in fraud of creditors. The issuing and levy of the execution gives the complainant a lien upon the property, but he is compelled to come into a court of equity for the purpose of removing some obstruction fraudulently interposed to prevent a sale on execution. In this class of cases he may come into court immediately after he has obtained a lien by the levy of his execution, and, the obstruction being removed, he may proceed to the sale of the property under his execution, and subject the proceeds thereof to the payment of his debt. Second, to have his judgment paid out of choses in action, or other property of the debtor which cannot be reached by execution at law. Relief is given in these two classes of cases on different principles,—in the first class on the ground of fraud, in the second on the ground that the complainant has exhausted his remedy at law and that it is inequitable and unjust for the debtor, under such circumstances, to refuse to apply any choses in action, or other property belonging to him which cannot be reached by execution at law, in payment of the judgment. Vanderpool v. Notley, 71 Mich. 422, 39 N. W. 574.

In Wadsworth v. Schisselbauer, 32 Minn. 84, 19 N. W. 390, the court said there are two classes of cases both commonly called creditors' suits, which, although closely allied, are clearly distinguishable. The first, a creditors' suit, strictly so-called, is where the creditor seeks to satisfy his judgment out of the equitable assets of the debtor which could not be reached on execution. The general rule is that such an action cannot be brought until the creditor has exhausted his remedy at law by the issue of an execution and its return unsatisfied. This is required because equity will not aid the creditor to collect his debt until the legal assets are exhausted, for until this is done he may have an adequate remedy at law. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The deed which it is sought to have annulled was made on November 30, 1901. The suit in this case was begun on the 6th day of January, 1905, and it must be conceded, under the petition filed, that if the construction of the statute invoked by defendant is made applicable to this class and character of actions, then the cause of action is barred, for there is no allegation of a discovery which would take it out of its operation. As appears in the statement of facts, the basis of the claim which plaintiff makes against her husband, to defeat the collection of which the deed is charged to have been made, is the judgment secured by her in Nebraska in November, 1903. On this judgment, on the 7th of September, 1904, she filed her suit in the district court of Cana-

The second class of cases is where property legally liable to execution has been fraudulently conveyed or encumbered by the debtor, and the creditor brings the action to set aside the conveyance or encumbrance as an obstruction to the enforcement of his lien; for, though the property may be sold on execution notwithstanding the fraudulent conveyance, the creditor will not be required to sell a doubtful or obstructed title. In the latter class of cases the prevailing doctrine is that it is not necessary to allege that an execution has been returned unsatisfied, or that the debtor has no other property out of which the judgment can be satisfied; for that is not the ground upon which the court of equity assumes to grant relief in such cases, but on the theory that the fraudulent conveyance is an obstruction which prevents the creditor's lien from being efficiently enforced upon the property. As to him the conveyance is void, and he has a right to have himself placed in the same position as if it had never been made. The fact that other property has been retained by the debtor may be evidence that the conveyance is not fraudulent; but, if the grantee's title be tainted with fraud, he has no right to say that all other means to satisfy the debt shall be exhausted before he shall be disturbed.

In Schofield v. Ute Coal & Coke Co. 92 Fed. 269, the court said that a class of cases in which equity afforded relief embraced those cases in which the creditor had secured a lien or right at law, the enforcement of which was obstructed by some fraudulent conveyance or encumbrance. In this class of cases the lien or vested right of the property, and the fraudulent obstruction to the adequate enforcement of this lien or right, were the only essentials to the jurisdiction of the court of equity. Equity relieved not, as in other classes, because the remedy at law had created no lien and had no effect, but because the enforcement of the lien, secured by the legal remedy, was rendered so much less efficient by the fraudulent obstruction, that it was inadequate. It was the inadequacy, and not the utter futility, of the remedy at law, which conditioned the jurisdiction in this class of cases; and the

Edmisson v. Drumm-Flato Commission Co. 13 Okla. 440, 73 Pac. 958.

A creditor cannot attach a transfer of his debtor in property until he has recovered a judgment, and exhausted his remedy at law.

Blackwell v. Hatch, 13 Okla. 169, 73 Pac. 933; Parmenter v. Lomax, 68 Kan. 61, 74 Pac. 634.

Where the judgment debtor is insolvent and has no property subject to execution, the issuance and return of an execution unsatisfied is unnecessary to support a creditors' bill.

Towns v. Smith, 115 Ind. 480, 16 N. E. 811; Smalley v. Mass, 72 Iowa, 171, 33 N. W. 619; O'Brien v. Stambach, 101 Iowa, 40, 63 Am. St. Rep. 368, 69 N. W. 1133; Springfield Grocery Co. v. Thomas, 3 Ind. Terr. 330, 58 S. W. 557; Mueller v. Bruss, 112 Wis. 406, 88 N. W. 229; Sage v. Memphis & L. R. R. Co. 125 U. S. 361, 31 L. ed.

to reach property not subject to execution was maintained aside from statute, an important condition was imposed, and that was that the creditor must first exhaust his remedy at law, which meant only that he must first pursue property subject to execution; and the reason given for this was that the debtor ought not to be subjected to the expense of a chancery suit in an effort to reach his choses in action, when the simple inexpensive process of the law was open to the creditor to obtain tangible property. This is not the reason for the rule that equity will not interfere unless there is not an adequate remedy at law, which was of much earlier date. The place for the adequate remedy at law rule in connection with equitable remedies of creditors is pointed out in the next subdivision of the note. It should be remembered that the pursuit of the remedy at law rule arose with reference to actions to reach such property as choses in action, as just stated. When statutes came to be passed granting jurisdiction to equity courts, where jurisdiction was denied or considered doubtful, this condition was carried into these acts, and it was generally provided that relief might be granted only when execution had been issued and returned unsatisfied.

In Beck v. Burdett, 1 Paige, 305, 19 Am. Dec. 436, a leading case on the subject, the court said that there were two classes of cases where a plaintiff was permitted to come into a court of equity for relief after he had proceeded to judgment and execution at law without obtaining satisfaction of his debt. In the one case, the issuing of the execution gave to the plaintiff a lien upon the property, but he was compelled to come into equity for the purpose of removing some obstruction fraudulently or inequitably interposed to prevent a sale on the execution. In the other, the plaintiff came into equity to obtain satisfaction of his debt out of the property of the defendant which could not

694, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 887; 20 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 699, 700.

Messrs. Noffsinger & Hinch for defendants in error.

Dunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Under the facts in this case as disclosed by the record and the briefs of the parties, two propositions are raised for the consideration of this court. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of the district court sustaining a demurrer to the evidence and holding it insufficient to support the allegations of the petition, and argues at length the elements of fraud which it is contended are disclosed by the conveyance of the land attached. Defendant in error joins issue in his brief on this subject, and, in addition thereto, contends that the petition shows on its face that the cause of action is barred by the statute of limitation, by virtue of paragraph 4216, 2 Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. 1903.

be reached in an execution at law. In the latter case his right to relief depended upon the fact of his having exhausted his legal remedies without being able to obtain satisfaction of his judgment. In the first case the plaintiff might come into a court of equity for relief immediately after he had obtained a lien upon the property by the issuing of an execution to the sheriff of the county where the same was situated, and the obstruction being removed he might proceed to enforce the execution by a sale of the property, although an actual levy was probably necessary to enable him to hold the property against other execution creditors or bona fide purchasers. The court also said that the issuing of an execution, or even a formal levy, could create no lien upon a chose in action or a mere equitable interest in personal property, which was not liable to be sold on execution. In such cases the actual return of the execution unsatisfied was necessary to give the equity court jurisdiction to decree satisfaction out of the equitable property of the defendant.

The same distinction is pointed out in other cases, and these will be quoted at length, as the point cannot be too strongly emphasized.

In Williams v. Hubbard, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 28, it was said that there are two classes of cases in which a judgment creditor may come into equity for relief. First, in aid of his execution at law, as to set aside an encumbrance or a transfer of property made to defraud creditors; second, to have his judgment paid out of choses in action or other property of the debtor not liable to execution. Relief is given in these two classes of cases on different principles,—in the first class on the ground of fraud, and in the other on the ground that the complainant has exhausted his remedy at law and that it is inequitable and unjust for the debtor, under such circumstances, to refuse to apply any choses in action, or other which provides: "Civil actions other than for the recovery of real property can only be brought within the following periods after the cause of action shall have accrued, and not afterwards: . . . Within two years . . . an action for relief on the ground of fraud—the cause of action in such case shall not be deemed to have accrued until the discovery of the fraud." And, second, that the petition of plaintiff is insufficient to sustain her cause of action, for that there is no allegation that an execution issued on the judgment procured in Canadian county or elsewhere, and a return nulla bona, prior to the beginning of this suit to set aside this alleged fraudulent conveyance. We will first discuss the legal propositions in the order here stated.

property belonging to him not liable to execution, in payment of the judgment.

There are two classes of cases in which a judgment creditor is permitted to come into a court of equity for relief. First, in aid of his execution at law, as to set aside an encumbrance or a transfer of property made in fraud of creditors. The issuing and levy of the execution gives the complainant a lien upon the property, but he is compelled to come into a court of equity for the purpose of removing some obstruction fraudulently interposed to prevent a sale on execution. In this class of cases he may come into court immediately after he has obtained a lien by the levy of his execution, and, the obstruction being removed, he may proceed to the sale of the property under his execution, and subject the proceeds thereof to the payment of his debt. Second, to have his judgment paid out of choses in action, or other property of the debtor which cannot be reached by execution at law. Relief is given in these two classes of cases on different principles,—in the first class on the ground of fraud, in the second on the ground that the complainant has exhausted his remedy at law and that it is inequitable and unjust for the debtor, under such circumstances, to refuse to apply any choses in action, or other property belonging to him which cannot be reached by execution at law, in payment of the judgment. Vanderpool v. Notley, 71 Mich. 422, 39 N. W. 574.

In Wadsworth v. Schisselbauer, 32 Minn. 84, 19 N. W. 390, the court said there are two classes of cases both commonly called creditors' suits, which, although closely allied, are clearly distinguishable. The first, a creditors' suit, strictly so-called, is where the creditor seeks to satisfy his judgment out of the equitable assets of the debtor which could not be reached on execution. The general rule is that such an action cannot be brought until the creditor has exhausted his remedy at law by the issue of an execution and its return unsatisfied. This is required because equity will not aid the creditor to collect his debt until the legal assets are exhausted, for until this is done he may have an adequate remedy at law. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The deed which it is sought to have annulled was made on November 30, 1901. The suit in this case was begun on the 6th day of January, 1905, and it must be conceded, under the petition filed, that if the construction of the statute invoked by defendant is made applicable to this class and character of actions, then the cause of action is barred, for there is no allegation of a discovery which would take it out of its operation. As appears in the statement of facts, the basis of the claim which plaintiff makes against her husband, to defeat the collection of which the deed is charged to have been made, is the judgment secured by her in Nebraska in November, 1903. On this judgment, on the 7th of September, 1904, she filed her suit in the district court of Cana-

The second class of cases is where property legally liable to execution has been fraudulently conveyed or encumbered by the debtor, and the creditor brings the action to set aside the conveyance or encumbrance as an obstruction to the enforcement of his lien; for, though the property may be sold on execution notwithstanding the fraudulent conveyance, the creditor will not be required to sell a doubtful or obstructed title. In the latter class of cases the prevailing doctrine is that it is not necessary to allege that an execution has been returned unsatisfied, or that the debtor has no other property out of which the judgment can be satisfied; for that is not the ground upon which the court of equity assumes to grant relief in such cases, but on the theory that the fraudulent conveyance is an obstruction which prevents the creditor's lien from being efficiently enforced upon the property. As to him the conveyance is void, and he has a right to have himself placed in the same position as if it had never been made. The fact that other property has been retained by the debtor may be evidence that the conveyance is not fraudulent; but, if the grantee's title be tainted with fraud, he has no right to say that all other means to satisfy the debt shall be exhausted before he shall be disturbed.

In Schofield v. Ute Coal & Coke Co. 92 Fed. 269, the court said that a class of cases in which equity afforded relief embraced those cases in which the creditor had secured a lien or right at law, the enforcement of which was obstructed by some fraudulent conveyance or encumbrance. In this class of cases the lien or vested right of the property, and the fraudulent obstruction to the adequate enforcement of this lien or right, were the only essentials to the jurisdiction of the court of equity. Equity relieved not, as in other classes, because the remedy at law had created no lien and had no effect, but because the enforcement of the lien, secured by the legal remedy, was rendered so much less efficient by the fraudulent obstruction, that it was inadequate. It was the inadequacy, and not the utter futility, of the remedy at law, which conditioned the jurisdiction in this class of cases; and the 92 Iowa, 423, 60 N. W. 633. In that case the fraudulent conveyance was made eighteen years prior to the time plaintiff secured judgment upon his original claim, which was made the basis of the suit to set aside the conveyance, and, though the court held that, owing to the laches of plaintiff, he could not recover, its reasoning upon the question involved in this case is worthy of note, and in our judgment correctly states the law. "It has frequently been held by this court that the record of a deed is notice to the world of its contents, and that, where a deed which is fraudulent as against creditors is spread upon the public records, notice to the world is given of its character, or at least sufficient information is conveyed thereby, in the absence of special circumstances, to put creditors upon inquiry as to its contents and character. Gebhard v. Sattler, 40 Iowa, 152; Bishop v. Knowles, 53 Iowa, 268, 5 N. W. 139; Gardner v. Cole, 21 Iowa, 205; Hawley v. Page, 77 Iowa, 239, 14 Am. St. Rep. 275, 42 N. W. 193; Laird v. Kilbourne, 70 Iowa, 83, 30 N. W. 9; Francis v. Wallace, 77 Iowa, 373, 42 N. W. 323. Following these cases, we must hold that plaintiff discovered the fraud in these conveyances at the time they were recorded. At the time of the discovery of the fraud, however, plaintiff's right of action had not accrued. Before he could institute his action to subject the land to the payment of his claim, he must have had a lien upon it, either by attachment or judgment. Clark v. Raymond, 84 Iowa, 251, 50 N. W. 1068; Faivre v. Gillman, 84 Iowa, was prejudicial to them, that the debtor was not only insolvent, but that he had not sufficient property which they could reach on execution to satisfy their judgments, or that execution had been issued and returned unsatisfied.

The question as to the exhaustion of the remedy at law may well be presented by a concrete illustration. Let it be assumed that a debtor has two creditors who have obtained judgments against him, and that the debtor, in contemplation of these judgments, fraudulently transferred a valuable piece of real estate to a third person with knowledge of the circumstances, and that one of the judgment creditors has by levy acquired a lien on this property; that subsequently the debtor became the owner of another valuable tract of land sufficient to satisfy either or both judgments, and choses in action enough to wipe out either claim. Of course it is plain that neither creditor in this case can reach the choses in action because he must first exhaust his remedy at law,—in other words, he must first sell the real estate which the debtor acquired subsequent to that fraudulently transferred, and, this being sufficient to satisfy his claim, there would be no need for a resort to equity, to reach the choses in action. But how about the creditor who has acquired a lien on the property fraudulently conveyed? If he desires to remove the cloud from his title or clear the way for his lien, can he do so? Or must he, too, first sell the real estate subsequently acquired by the debtor and open to levy? In other words, must he exhaust his remedy at law? Manifestly this is what he would be likely to do rather than to bear the expense of the equitable proceeding; but is it necessary to the jurisdiction of the equity court that he do so? If what has been said as to the reason for the exhaustion of remedy at law rule is correct, he certainly would not be obliged to sell the second piece of realty before coming into equity to reach the first. This, however, has not always been the answer of the courts, as already shown and as will be seen by an examination of the cases in the following subdivisions of this note; indeed 29 U.R.A. (N.S.) it cannot be said to have been so answered in the majority of the cases, so prone have the courts been to remark, on almost every occasion, "without cause or provocation," that equitable relief can be afforded only when the creditor has exhausted his remedy at law. In the recent cases especially, the ancient landmarks seem to have been entirely lost sight of, the tendency of the modern authorities being to ignore the distinction pointed out by the earlier judges. This is not because of any disbelief in the soundness of that distinction, but because of the fact that it seems to have been forgotten. The better reasoned cases, however, adhere to the distinction and apply the exhaustion of the remedy at law rule only to actions to reach property not subject to execution. There are some subsidiary questions, relating to the establishment and maintenance of the lien, depending upon whether the property is realty or personalty, which will be discussed in their appropriate places; but these do not in any way complicate the problem, the solution of which ought to be made in any case without difficulty.

III. Extent to which legal remedy must be pursued.

a. As to judgments.

1. Necessity of.

The rule is elementary that a general creditor must obtain a judgment before he can have relief against his debtor in equity. Hatch v. Daugherty, 145 Mich. 569, 108 N. W. 986; State Bank v. Knox, 21 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. Eq.) 50; Bethell v. Wilson, 21 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. Eq.) 610.

The reason for this rule is the same as that which marks the limit of all forms of equitable jurisdiction—original as well as ancillary,—and that is that resort cannot be had to equity where there is an adequate remedy at law. This ancient rule has become so worn and axiomatic that the reason for it is well-nigh forgotten; and perhaps that reason might not be regarded with

573, 51 N. W. 46; Gwyer v. Figgins, 37 Iowa, 517; Gordon v. Worthley, 48 Iowa, 429; Pearson v. Maxfield, 51 Iowa, 76, 50 N. W. 77; Miller v. Dayton, 47 Iowa, 312; Taylor v. Branscombe, 74 Iowa, 534, 38 N. W. 400. As plaintiff's cause of action did not accrue until he obtained his judgment on September 15, 1891, the statute did not begin to run until that time, although he had knowledge of the fraud, which he complains was perpetrated nearly eighteen years before; and, as he commenced this suit within a few months after he recovered his judgment, the action, strictly speaking, is not barred. This is the holding in other states under similar statutes. Gates v. Andrews, 37 N. Y. 657, 97 Am. Dec. 764; Compton v. Perry, 23 Tex. 414; Eyre v. Beebe, 28 How. Pr. 333; Reynolds v. Lansford, 16 Tex. 286; Bump, Fraud. Conv. 2d ed. p. 547; Wilson v. Buchanan, 7 Gratt. 334, and authorities cited." In addition to the authorities cited, we call attention to the holding of the courts in the following cases, all of which support the proposition: Wagner v. Law, 3 Wash. 500, 15 L.R.A. 784, 28 Am. St. Rep. 56, 28 Pac. 1109, 29 Pac. 927; Stewart v. Thompson, 32 Cal. 261; Brown v. Campbell, 100 Cal. 635, 38 Am. St. Rep. 314, 35 Pac. 433; Ohm v. Superior Court, 85 Cal. 545, 20 Am. St. Rep. 245, 26 Pac. 244; Blackwell v. Hatch, 13 Okla. 169, 73 Pac. 933; Gates v. Andrews, supra; Watkins v. Wilhoit (Cal.) 35 Pac. 646; Rounds v. Green, 29 Minn. 139, 12 N. W. 454; Abbey v. Commercial Bank, 31 Miss. 434; Richardson v. Mounce, 19 S. C. 477.

the same respect now that it was once. Nevertheless, the reason still exists and, if it is borne in mind, will be of great assistance in solving some of the questions arising with reference to judgments as a condition precedent to equitable relief by creditors against their debtors. It will be recalled that the reason for the rule mentioned was this: that, while equity was a welcome refuge from the hard and fast rules of the common law, there was still one institution of the common law which was to be most zealously guarded, and that was, the right of trial by jury. Under no circumstances should a court of equity be allowed to swallow up that great privilege. So the rule was made that equity must not interfere where the remedy at law was adequate. The real basis of the rule that a judgment at law is a condition precedent to affirmative equitable relief on behalf of a creditor is, therefore, that the debtor has the right to have the issue of indebtedness determined by jury.

The rule requiring judgment as a condition precedent to negative relief, however, the right of a court of equity to interfere with a debtor's property pending the determination of the claim at law, rests upon a different basis. Here the question is one of policy. It is in such a case a choice between two evils,—one, the opportunity which a refusal to interfere gives the debtor to put his possessions out of reach of his creditors, and the other is the opportunity which the tying up of property before judgment would give unscrupulous creditors to harass honest debtors struggling to meet their obligations. The courts have simply said that it is better that the creditor shall be at the mercy of the debtor for this interval than that the debtor shall be at the mercy of the creditor. So the general rule is that, before a creditor can get help in equity, affirmative or negative, he must reduce his claim to judgment at law.

In Detroit Copper & Brass Rolling Mills v. Ledwidge, 162 Ill. 305, 44 N. E. 751, the court said that a claim which was purely legal involved a trial at law before a jury. To maintain a bill for the enforcement of such a claim, without requiring it to be reduced to judgment at law, would be to deprive the debtor of a jury trial upon a question where, by the rules of the common law, he would be entitled to such a trial.

In Kahn v. Salmon, 10 Sawy. 183, 20 Fed. 804, the court said that the rule requiring the claim of the creditor to be established by judgment was based on the idea that, a court of equity having no jurisdiction of the simple question whether A. owed B. or not, that fact must first be established in a court of law, where such matters were properly cognizable, before B. could invoke the aid of the court of equity, as the creditor of A. The power of equity to investigate the alleged fraudulent impediment to the application of the debtor's property in satisfaction of the creditor's claim, and to relieve against it, was admitted, but the fact—the indebtedness—upon which rested plaintiff's right to sue in the character of a creditor must be first and elsewhere established. The rule was a technical and arbitrary one, and had not always been regarded as inflexible, or its maintenance of more importance than the ends of justice.

In Tate v. Liggat, 2 Leigh, 91, it was said that the rule that a creditor at large could not come into a court of equity to impeach any conveyance made by his debtor, on the ground of fraud, was founded upon the principle of the common law essential to the enjoyment and circulation of property, that every debtor, until his property was specifically bound to the satisfaction of his debt, by his own agreement or by some judicial proceeding, had an absolute right to dispose of it at pleasure, to prefer one creditor to another, or even to waste and destroy it,—a power which no tribunal whatever had authority to control or limit. The obligation of a debtor was purely personal and in no way affected his property, or any portion of it; and, so long as his person was amenable to the process of the courts of justice, there were no means of reaching or affecting his property but through that medium, and after judgment or decree against him personally. At comjecting the land to the payment of Hatch's judgment. Execution was issued and returned nulla bona. On the case being appealed to the supreme court, its holding was: "It is true that more than two years elapsed from the conveyance of the land to Rosa Blackwell until the commencement of this action; but in a case like the one now under consideration it does not necessarily follow that the cause of action accrued at the time of the fraudulent conveyance, or even from the discovery of the fraud. It is a common expression that the statute of limitation runs from the discovery of the fraud, and this is the general rule. But, like all general rules, it has its exceptions. For instance, suppose that A. holds a note against B., which will mature in four years, and B. fraudulently conveys all of his property to a third person, to defraud A. The statute will not run against A. before the maturity of his note, because he would not be entitled to judgment in a court of law before that time; and a creditors' bill cannot be maintained until after judgment is recovered on the debt in a court of law, and an execution returned, 'No property found.' Counsel for appellant assume that the statute begins to run as soon as the fraudulent act is committed. This is not always true, as before stated. At any rate, the commission or even the discovery of the fraud does not start the statute to running, unless under the conditions then existing a creditor's cause of action accrues. It is true that in many cases the cause of action accrues when bill to remove a fraudulent encumbrance or other obstruction out of the way of a levy and sale under an execution as it is to support a simple creditors' bill. Ladd v. Judson, 174 Ill. 344, 66 Am. St. Rep. 267, 51 N. E. 838.

In Allen v. Montgomery, 48 Miss. 101, the court said that it was quite well settled that a creditor at large could not reach, in a court of equity, equitable assets of his debtor, nor could he assail a conveyance of his property fraudulently made as to him. In either case, the court administered relief in aid of the court of law or its judgment. In the former case, it was only after legal remedy had been exhausted, as by a return nulla bona, that the equity court took hold of equitable assets and applied them to pay the judgment. In the latter, it displaced the fraudulent conveyance so as to make bare and plain and sure satisfaction out of the property.

A general creditor cannot assail a foreclosure of a mortgage upon the ground that it was given to delay and defraud creditors, etc. Cox v. Fraley, 26 Ark. 20.

Simple-contract creditors cannot maintain a bill of review to set aside a foreclosure decree entered against the debtor. Neither can they convert such a bill into a creditors' bill. Horner v. Zimmerman, 45 Ill. 14.

Equitable rights established by state legislation may be enforced in Federal courts; but, in Smith v. Ft. Scott, H. & W. R. Co. 99 U. S. 398, 25 L. ed. 437, it was said that nothing is better settled than that a bill for such purpose must be preceded by a judgment at law establishing the measure and validity of the demand of the complainant for which he sought satisfaction in chancery.

Simple-contract creditors have no standing in a United States circuit court sitting as a court of equity, upon a bill to set aside and vacate an assignment for the benefit of creditors as fraudulent. Cates v. Allen, 149 U. S. 451, 37 L. ed. 804, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 883, 977.

A bill to set aside a sale of goods on the ground of a fraudulent preference cannot be maintained in the absence of a judgment at law upon the claim upon which it is based. Goembel v. Arnett, 100 Ill. 34.

And in Zimmerman v. Fitch, 28 La. Ann. 454, it was held that an action to annul an alleged fraudulent sale of the debtor's goods could not be maintained where, among other things, it appeared that the debt was unliquidated.

The statute authority to insert a bill in equity into a writ of attachment gives no jurisdiction in equity before judgment. Skeele v. Stanwood, 33 Me. 307.

A creditor, before judgment, and before he has a certain claim upon the property of his debtor, has not the right to call for a specific execution of the contract in his behalf. Griffith v. Frederick County Bank, 6 Gill & J. 424.

In East Sudbury v. Belknap, 1 Pick. 512, property was bequeathed to a town, the income of which was to be used for the support of the testator's children, grandchildren, and great grandchildren, if any of them should be in need of support, otherwise for the support of the poor of the town. A great grandchild of the testator was furnished support by the plaintiffs, who obtained judgment against the pauper for the amount, and then requested reimbursement from the town. It was held that the plaintiffs were entitled to reimbursement. But, in Marlborough v. Farmington, 13 Met. 328, a similar case, it was held that such relief would not be granted where the plaintiff had not recovered judgment. The court, in referring to the first-mentioned case, said that it was the only reported case in the Massachusetts reports where a similar application for relief by a sole creditor, as an unsatisfied judgment creditor, had been the subject of consideration by the court, although the principle was a familiar one in chancery courts. But it was required, as preliminary to the filing of such a bill, that judgment should have been obtained against the debtor.

A court of equity has no general jurisdiction of a bill by a creditor who has not acquired a valid judgment against his debtor, and whose debtor has ceased to exist,

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the fraud is discovered, or when a party is in law chargeable with notice thereof; but in a case like this one the statute commences to run when an execution is returned nulla bona, and not from the date of the fraudulent conveyance. In other words, equity will not reach out and collect a debt until the party has exhausted his remedy in a court of law. It was the duty of Hatch to commence suit on his claim against A. J. Blackwell when due, and to collect the same in the ordinary way, if possible. This he did, and found that the debtor had no property out of which it could be made. He was then entitled to commence this action within two years after the execution was returned, for his cause of action at that moment accrued. In other words, he could not maintain a creditors' bill before the execution was returned, but he could at any time within two years thereafter bring such action. A cause of action is deemed to accrue at the earliest moment when a creditor can commence the particular action." Hence it must follow that in this case the contention of defendant that the statute of limitations had run, and that the action was barred thereby, cannot be sustained.

The next proposition to which our attention is invited is that the petition is insufficient because it fails to aver that plaintiff had execution issued on her judgment and returned unsatisfied. In the case last cited, and from which we have quoted, it will be noted that the court, in discussing the question of the statute of limitations, incidently to apply to the payment of his debt property of the debtor in the hands of a third person. Thornton v. Marginal Freight R. Co. 123 Mass. 32.

A creditor cannot maintain a bill under the general jurisdiction of a court in equity to reach a patent right which the debtor refuses to apply to the payment of the debt, until he has obtained judgment. Carver v. Peck, 131 Mass. 291.

In Mizell v. Herbert, 12 Smedes & M. 547, it was held that a bill to subject the debtor's distributive share in an estate to the payment of a debt could not be maintained, where the debt had not been reduced to judgment, and the estate was insolvent.

Under a statute which was held not to create a lien in favor of a seller of goods, it was held that the seller had no right or interest in the goods sold which a court of equity, before a judgment for the purchase price, could lay hold of, and by means of which equitable relief could be made effectual. Spitz v. Kerfoot, 42 Mo. App. 77.

Contract creditors who have obtained no judgment against the debtor cannot maintain a creditors' bill to recover possession of property belonging to the debtor, and have it applied to the payment of their indebtedness. Cornell v. Savage, 49 App. Div. 429, 63 N. Y. Supp. 450.

A creditor, before judgment, cannot pursue his debtor and his debtor's debtor, jointly, either under the general powers of a court of equity, or under a statute providing that, where the debtor has not property sufficient to satisfy the judgment, any equitable interest which he may have in real estate and other property may be subject to the payment of such judgment. Hays v. New Baltimore & N. H. Turnpk. & Bridge Co. 1 Handy (Ohio) 281.

Under a statute providing that usurious interest may be subjected by the creditor to the satisfaction of the debt, it was held that this could not be done before the claim had been reduced to judgment. Battle v. Shute, 3 Head, 547.

In Scott v. Chambers, 62 Mich. 532, 29 N. W. 94, it was said that it was the settled law of Michigan that creditors could not attack the interest of third parties, alleged to have been obtained by fraud, until they had obtained a standing by legal proceedings; and, so far as the bonds sought to be reached in that case were concerned, they could be pursued only by judgment creditors.

In Weber v. Weber, 90 Wis. 467, 63 N. W. 757, mere creditors at large were denied the right to invoke the equity powers of a court to attack the validity of judgments, executions, and liens, on the ground that they were procured by collusion and fraud.

A simple-contract creditor cannot question the validity of a confessed judgment of his debtor. Williams v. Brown, 4 Johns. Ch. 682.

A creditor at large cannot come into equity to set aside alleged fraudulent judgments. Frothingham v. Hodenpyl, 135 N. Y. 630, 32 N. E. 240.

The rule that a simple-contract creditor, without a lien, cannot go into equity for the collection of his debt, applies to a claim for reimbursement for money advanced to pay for personal property sold at sheriff's sale, and left in the hands of the defendant in the execution, with the privilege of repurchasing, and which was thereafter repurchased in the manner, and with the funds, mentioned, although the bill of sale, without defendant's consent, was delivered to the plaintiff. Turney v. Morrow, 26 Ala. 339.

But, in Fink v. Patterson, 21 Fed. 602, it was said that an omnibus creditors' bill, not filed to annul a particular conveyance of property alone, but directed at all of the assets of the debtors, as well those existing in the form of tangible property as those in the form of open accounts, notes due, and choses in action, generally, for the ingathering for which a receiver was necessary, could be maintained by a general creditor.

Negative relief.

In Shufeldt v. Boehm, 96 Ill. 560, it was held that a judgment was necessary to entitle a creditor to restrain the sale of the debtor's property on an alleged fraudulent execution. The court said that while great lien on the property covered by a chattel mortgage cannot be permitted to assail the validity of the mortgage on the ground that it was made with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud the creditors of the mortgagors. In order to do so, he must not only obtain a judgment, but must have a valid execution against the property of the mortgagor." This case is not applicable to the facts in the case at bar, for the attachment sued out in this case established a lien against this property in favor of the plaintiff. The case of Taylor v. Bowker, supra, from the United States Supreme Court, is not in point on the proposition under discussion. At the outset of the opinion Justice Harlan says: "The only point seriously insisted upon in argument, or which is necessary to be considered, is that this suit was barred by limitation." The question in the case was: Did the cause of action accrue at the time of the conveyance or transfer of the property involved, or at the time of the return of the execution, which was issued on the judgment and returned unsatisfied? The case arose in Maine, and the statute of limitations of that state, in this character of cases, is six years. "The judgment against the company was entered more than six years before the commencement of this suit. It is insisted that appellee's cause of action accrued upon the entry of the judgment; while it is contended, in behalf of appellee, that, even if the foregoing limitation has any application in a suit in equity brought in the circuit court of the United States by a citizen of another debt is unsecured by lien or mortgage, on the plea that the corporation is insolvent, and is about to put out an issue of second mortgage bonds for purposes and on a scheme that would work an injury to the complainants as unsecured creditors. Atlanta & F. R. Co. v. Western R. Co. 1 C. C. A. 676, 2 U. S. App. 227, 50 Fed. 790.

The complainant is not entitled to an injunction to restrain the transfer of goods pending a trial at law, on the plea that a judgment cannot be obtained until a future term of the court, at which time the goods will be placed beyond the reach and benefit of complainants. Phelps v. Foster, 18 Ill. 309.

A lessor cannot enjoin a mortgagee under a fraudulent mortgage given by his tenant, from taking possession of property mortgaged, where he has not reduced his claim to judgment. Briggs v. Austin, 129 N. Y. 208, 29 N. E. 4.

Judgments "or" other conditions.

In some cases, in holding creditors not entitled to the relief asked, the courts have gone further than necessary, and have stated the rule in the alternative; asserting that complainants cannot come into equity where they have failed to reduce their claims to judgment, or to comply with other conditions precedent to the relief asked. These cases are authority only for the rule that judgment is necessary, and are not to be taken as holding that the other conditions mentioned would be a sufficient foundation for the action in the absence of judgment.

A bill for discovery and to set aside a fraudulent conveyance must show a judgment against the debtor, or an acknowledged debt, with interest in the property, or a lien thereon created by contract or by a distinct legal proceeding. United States v. Ingate, 48 Fed. 251.

A creditor who has no judgment or lien subsequent to a fraudulent transfer of the debtor's property cannot maintain an action for relief against such conveyance. Boyle v. Thomas, 1 Chester Co. Rep. 117. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A simple-contract creditor without a lien, except in cases provided for by statute, cannot invoke the aid of equity to compel the payment of his debt. Moses v. St. Paul. 67 Ala. 168.

A general creditor having no lien, and claiming under no trust, cannot obtain the aid of a court of equity in setting aside the deed of his debtor, alleged to be fraudulent, if this fact is brought to the attention of the court. Putney v. Whitmire, 66 Fed. 385.

Before simple-contract creditors seeking to set aside a deed of assignment for fraud, and to subject the effects to the payment of their debts, can obtain the aid of a court of equity, they must show either a lien, or that they have obtained a judgment at law, the collection of which they cannot enforce without the aid of equity. Reese v. Bradford, 13 Ala. 837; Dawson v. Coffey, 12 Or. 513, 8 Pac. 838.

A simple-contract creditor, without a lien or claim by a judgment, purchase, or otherwise, has no equitable right to attack the debtor's deed for the benefit of creditors, on the ground that it was defectively acknowledged. Kennewig Co. v. Moore, 49 W. Va. 323, 38 S. E. 558.

Creditors who have not recovered judgments on their claims, and who have no liens or interest in the debtor's property, cannot assail an attachment on the property, or the good faith of the appointment of a receiver therefor. Smith v. Sioux City Nursery & Seed Co. 109 Iowa, 51, 79 N. W. 457.

Simple-contract creditors who have no express lien by mortgage, trust deed, or otherwise, cannot come into a court of equity to obtain a seizure of the property of their debtor, and its application to the satisfaction of their claims. Hollins v. Brierfield Coal & I. Co. 150 U. S. 371, 37 L. ed. 1113 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 127.

A simple-contract creditor who has no judgment or lien upon the property of his debtor cannot enjoin the latter from selling it, or come into equity to ask its interference to preserve it until he can get a judgment. Peyton v. Lamar, 42 Ga. 131.

state, his cause of action did not accrue until the return of execution against the company, which occurred within six years prior to this suit." And the court held "that the complainant's cause of action should not be deemed to have accrued until the return of the execution; consequently his suit was not barred by the limitation of six years." In neither of the cases, Adsit v. Butler and Verner v. Downs, supra, does it appear that plaintiff sued out an attachment or in any other manner secured a lien upon the specific property which it was alleged had been fraudulently transferred, and which it was sought to subject to the payment of the judgment. The question of the effect of such a lien was not in either of these cases, nor was it considered or discussed by the court, and, to this extent, they are not authorities in the case at bar. The case of Burdsall v. Waggoner, supra, simply holds that a party, to maintain a bill of this character, "is usually required to show not only a judgment obtained, but an execution sued out with a return of nulla bona, or that the writ is unsatisfied in whole or in part;" and then states: "But, even where such return is not necessary, the complainant must, by proper averment, lay sufficient ground for the relief he seeks in a court of equity. The bill should show, not only that the debtor has made a fraudulent disposition of his property, but that such disposition embarrasses him in obtaining satisfaction of his debt or judgment; there must be an averment of want of property sufficient to Creditors who have not reduced their demands to judgments, and who have no lien otherwise, cannot, in the absence of statute, enjoin their debtor from selling or disposing of his property. Kimbrell v. Walters's Sons, 86 Ga. 99, 12 S. E. 305; Dodge v. Pyrolusite Manganese Co. 69 Ga. 669.

Simple-contract creditors without a lien have no standing in a court of equity to secure an injunction restraining a sheriff from paying money realized from an execution sale to the judgment creditor, whose demand is alleged to be fraudulent and collusive. Kelly v. Herb, 157 Pa. 41, 27 Atl. 559.

An indorser against whom a judgment at law has been obtained on an indorsed note cannot maintain an action in equity to reach real estate transferred by the maker to another indorser, and by the latter transferred as a gift to one of the maker's children, where he has not commenced an action against either the maker or the other indorser, and does not show that their estates are insolvent, or that there is no other property which can be reached by an execution at law, since, admitting all the averments of the bill to be true, he may still have a complete remedy at law. Cocumbe v. Meade, 2 Cranch, C. C. 548, Fed. Cas. No. 3,188.

A creditor whose debt has never been adjudicated, and who has never taken any steps to ascertain whether there is any other property out of which his debt might be made, and who shows no reason for having failed to take such steps, cannot come into equity to set aside a sale of negroes as fraudulent. Meux v. Anthony, 11 Ark. 411, 52 Am. Dec. 274. The court said that the reason and propriety of this rule were obvious. It was already premature on his part to ask the chancellor to set aside a contract for the purpose of enabling him to procure satisfaction of a debt until he had first had his claim adjudicated by a competent tribunal. Until his claim was so adjudicated, even admitting the transfer of the property to have been fraudulent, he had no right to complain of wrong done to him. The injury, if any, was conditioned upon an event which might never happen. Ordinari- ly there was no reason why he should desert the common-law courts, and ask a court of chancery first to pass upon a preliminary question upon which his equitable rights were made to depend. Nor was it less obvious that the purchaser, as between himself and the vendor, had a perfect right to retain his purchase unmolested, unless it should become necessary to rescind the contract for the benefit of creditors or others whose rights had been affected by the fraudulent contract.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

An action to have a certain instrument executed by the defendants decreed to operate as a deed of assignment for the benefit of all creditors cannot be maintained by a creditor at large, without any lien or trust in respect to the property in question. Dahlman v. Jacobs, 5 McCrary, 130, 16 Fed. 863. The court said that it could not be driven first to ascertain whether a creditor had a legal demand which belonged to common-law courts, and, thus having usurped common-law jurisdiction, proceed, after giving what was equivalent to a common-law judgment, to enter upon the other or equitable inquiry involved.

A bill by a creditor for an injunction and a receiver, based upon the allegation that the debtor is selling his goods and applying the proceeds to his own use and the use of others, without consideration, and thus and in other ways is wasting his resources, and is also sending large quantities of goods beyond the reach of his creditors, and also that he is insolvent, does not show sufficient ground for equitable interposition in behalf of a creditor who has no judgment, and who has not in any other manner acquired a lien upon the debtor's property. Rich v. Levy, 16 Md. 74.

A court of equity has no jurisdiction to aid a creditor at large, holding a legal demand, to reach and subject to the satisfaction of his claim an equitable interest not leviable at law, there being no trust, fraud, or lien, when such interposition is sought alone upon the allegation that the debtor is insolvent and that nothing can be made out of him at law. Under a statute permitting the creditor to proceed in equity to reach satisfy such debt other than the property which is alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed; for, if there be other property sufficient, then the resort to equity is unnecessary." The case of Botcher v. Berry, supra, is not applicable. On its being urged upon the court that the suit was in the nature of a creditors' bill, it said: "But there is no creditors' bill in this case. The questions discussed at the bar do not arise. Here the property had been seized. It was in the possession of the sheriff, and the question was: Did it belong to Botcher, the assignee, or to McLean & Company, the assignors? It was not necessary to wait until the claim of the attaching creditor ripened into a judgment, and the return of an execution unsatisfied, before this question could be decided." The foregoing are the authorities upon which defendant relies to sustain the proposition that, before plaintiff could sustain her action in this case, it was necessary that she have an execution issued upon her judgment and a return of the same unsatisfied, either in whole or in part.

A number of courts hold, as is seen by some of the authorities above cited, that the execution and its return unsatisfied must be pleaded, or facts showing insolvency of the alleged fraudulent debtor and the total absence of any property out of which the creditor may secure satisfaction of his judgment. Such, also, is the holding by the supreme courts in the states of Missouri and Iowa. Turner v. Adams, 46 Mo. 95; Gwyer v. Fig- equitable assets, judgment must have been first obtained. McKeldin v. Gouldy, 91 Tenn. 677, 20 S. W. 231.

3. Sufficiency, nature, effect. (a) In general.

If a judgment at law is a condition precedent to the right of a creditor to obtain equitable relief, the judgment must, of course, be a valid one. It must be against the debtor, if living; but it need not have been obtained before a fraudulent transfer of the debtor's property is made, if the claim upon which it is based existed at the time of the conveyance.

A void judgment is not such a judgment as is required to support a creditors' bill. Anderson v. Hawhe, 115 Ill. 33, 3 N. E. 566; Wilhelm v. Locklar, 46 Fla. 575, 110 Am. St. Rep. 111, 35 So. 6; Epstein v. Ferst, 35 Fla. 498, 17 So. 414.

So, a void attachment judgment is not a sufficient judgment upon which to base a bill to reach lands fraudulently conveyed by the debtor. Millar v. Babcock, 29 Mich. 526; Nugent v. Nugent, 70 Mich. 52, 37 N. W. 706.

But an irregular judgment is a sufficient foundation for a bill in aid of execution. Griffin v. McGavin, 117 Mich. 372, 72 Am. St. Rep. 564, 75 N. W. 1061.

To an objection to a creditors' bill, on a hearing, that the judgment upon which the complainant based the creditors' bill was irregular, the court, in Hone v. Woolsey, 2 Edw. Ch. 289, said that it was not necessary to examine such objections, that they more properly belonged to the court of law, wherein the irregularity, and the manner of obtaining it, or any fraudulent or collusive means resorted to, could have been examined into; that, if the defendant did not take such a course, but suffered the judgment to stand, a court of chancery would not inquire into its regularity.

That the debtor's written statement or confession of demand does not comply with the provisions of the Code in respect to confession of judgments will not stand in the way of a bill to set aside a fraudulent 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

conveyance of the debtor's real estate, where the debtor raises no question in regard to it, and the judgment must be deemed an honest one as to third parties, and fairly entered into as to the debtor, and standing upon his express authority and stipulation. Neusbaum v. Keim, 24 N. Y. 325.

A personal judgment or decree granted in a case in which the judgment debtor was never served with process, and never appeared, is an insufficient basis for a bill to reach real estate in the hands of a third person, even as against the latter. Tyler v. Peatt, 30 Mich. 63.

But a judgment in an attachment action or a money demand against a nonresident is sufficient to support a bill for setting aside an alleged fraudulent transfer of real estate, although the judgment is not based on personal service. Parmenter v. Lomax, 68 Kan. 61, 74 Pac. 634.

A judgment creditor cannot show himself to be a creditor of the surety's estate by merely showing judgment on final settlement against the estate of the principal, and cannot, on such showing, maintain a bill to set aside a conveyance to the surety's wife as fraudulent. State ex rel. Taaffe v. Goggin, 191 Mo. 482, 109 Am. St. Rep. 826, 90 S. W. 379.

Where the only effect of a judgment is to determine the ownership and legal effect of a contract, and is not, in any sense, a judgment for money, it is not such a judgment as will support an equitable action by the judgment creditor to set aside a conveyance of real estate. Miller v. Drane, 122 Wis. 315, 99 N. W. 1017.

A judgment against an executor de son tort is not a valid judgment against the estate he wrongfully represents, and such a judgment will not support a bill of a creditor of this estate against the executor, as executor of another estate. Gadsby v. Donelson, 10 Yerg. 371.

A judgment against a railway company in the same court wherein a receiver of the railway company had been appointed is sufficient to entitle the judgment creditor to the aid of equity to reach real estate of the railway company in proceedings taken gins, 37 Iowa, 517. In the Iowa case the court states in the syllabus: "A court of equity will not interfere to annul a voluntary conveyance claimed to be fraudulent as against judgment creditors, unless the insolvency of the debtor is shown by return of nulla bona or other satisfactory proof." In the Missouri case the court says the judgment creditor "must first exhaust his legal remedies, and this is usually done by obtaining judgment and execution, with return of nulla bona. But, where it is shown that the judgment debtor is insolvent, and that the issue of an execution would be of no practical utility, its issue may be dispensed with, and the attaching creditor may resort directly to chancery for his remedy against such judgment debtor, without such prior proceedings." This is also the rule adopted in the United States Supreme Court as declared in the case of Case v. Beauregard (Case v. New Orleans & C. R. Co.) 101 U. S. 688, 25 L. ed. 1004: "The rule is a familiar one that a court of equity will not entertain a case for relief where the complainant has an adequate legal remedy. The complaining party must therefore show that he had done all that he could do at law to obtain his rights. But, after all, the judgment and fruitless execution are only evidence that his legal remedies have been exhausted, or that he is without remedy at law. They are not the only possible means of proof. The necessity of resort to a court of equity may be made otherwise to appear. Accordingly the rule, though general, is not after the discharge of the receiver. Mather v. Cincinnati R. Tunnel Co. 3 Ohio C. C. 284.

A judgment against the personal representative of the deceased donor is binding on the donee for the purpose of establishing the right of the donor's creditor to maintain an action to set aside a gift as fraudulent. Chamberlayne v. Temple, 2 Rand. (Va.) 384, 14 Am. Dec. 786.

Justice-of-the-peace judgments founded upon attachments which were never served upon the defendant personally, and to which he did not appear, are not such judgments as will entitle the owners to equitable relief. Corey v. Cornelius, 1 Barb. Ch. 571.

It is not necessary that judgment should have been obtained prior to an alleged fraudulent transfer which the creditor seeks to set aside. It is enough if the claims existed at the time of the conveyance. National Bank v. Dreyfus, 14 N. Y. Week. Dig. 160.

A claim cannot be said to have been reduced to judgment when a bill in equity is filed, although the judgment is dated the day the bill was filed, where the judge had the bill before him in chambers before that date, and the bill is therefore still objectionable on the ground that the complainants have no judgment or lien on the property sought to be reached by the bill. Coates v. Allen, 71 Ga. 787.

(b) Judgments or decrees in equity.

Under statutes making decrees for the payment of money liens upon real estate, and for enforcing decrees by execution against the person and property of the defendant, the same rules apply as to conditions precedent to other equitable relief as would apply were the judgment rendered in a court of law. Geery v. Geery, 63 N. Y. 252. The court said that, previous to modern statutes on the subject, the only way of enforcing a decree in chancery was by attachment and sequestration. The defendant was deemed to be in contempt for not obeying the decree, and the first process against him for such contempt was a writ 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of attachment; and if, for any reason, he could not be taken and imprisoned upon the attachment, or if, being imprisoned, he still refused to perform, the writ of sequestration could be issued, under which the sequestrators could seize and sell his personal property, and take and receive the rents and profits of his real estate.

In Tate v. Liggat, 2 Leigh, 91, it was urged that the fact that execution on decrees in chancery was given by statutory provisions dictated the propriety of entertaining a bill in chancery in behalf of the creditor at one and the same time, to ascertain and decree the debt due him, award execution for it, and remove fraudulent conveyances out of the way of the decree and execution; but the court held otherwise, saying that it could not perceive how that could possibly have such effect, or enlarge the jurisdiction of a court of equity in any respect whatever. It was only substituting a more simple and direct means of enforcing decrees than the original remedy by sequestration, which, in effect, bound all the debtor's property, real and personal, to a greater extent than any common-law executions; the rents and profits of all his lands instead of a moiety, as under an elegit; personalty from the time of awarding the commission, instead of the time of delivering the process to the officer, as in the case of a fi. fa.; and it extended to subjects which could not be reached by any common-law execution, such as dividends of bank stock.

A chancery decree for alimony is a sufficient judgment to entitle the holder to the aid of equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate by the debtor. Hall v. Harrington, 7 Colo. App. 474, 44 Pac. 365. To the same effect is Cochran v. Cochran, 96 Minn. 523, 105 N. W. 183.

The fact that there has been no judgment and execution on an award of alimony will not stand in the way of an action by the wife to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate by the husband, made for the purpose of avoiding the decree. Twell v. Twell, 6 Mont. 19, 9 Pac. 537. The court said that it was immaterial whether a decree for alimony was called a judgment or not, to treat them as void is shown by attaching the property so conveyed, and such attachments, when levied, will become a lien upon the property with the same effect as if no fraudulent conveyances had been made."

The question now presented to us, since, as we have seen, the existence of an attachment upon this land created a lien in favor of plaintiff, is, What is the law in reference to the issuance of an execution and its return unsatisfied? Is this necessary? We conclude from an examination of the authorities that it is not. Level Land Co. No. 3 v. Sivyer, 112 Wis. 442, 88 N. W. 317; Scanlan v. Murphy, 51 Minn. 536, 53 N. W. 799; Francis v. Lawrence, 48 N. J. Eq. 508, 22 Atl. 259; Dawson v. Sims, 14 Or. 561, 13 Pac. 506. In the case of Level

Land Co. No. 3 v. Sivyer, supra, the court says: "One having a specific lien, by judgment or otherwise, may maintain suit to remove fraudulent or invalid obstacles standing in the way of its enforcement without showing issue of an execution and return thereof unsatisfied." In the case of Francis v. Lawrence, supra, the court speaks as follows: "A creditor who obtains a lien by levy of attachment on lands can maintain a creditors' bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance thereof." In the case of Dawson v. Sims, supra, the supreme court of Oregon holds that "the lien created by an attachment duly levied upon the property of the debtor is a sufficient foundation for the jurisdiction of a court of equity to aid, by means of a creditors' suit, in removing fraud-subscriptions, cannot be maintained before judgment and return of execution unsatisfied in the state of the forum. Rule v. Omega Stove & Grate Co. 64 Minn. 326, 67 N. W. 60.

A judgment and return of nulla bona in Tennessee were held not a sufficient foundation for an action in equity to charge choses in action in Mississippi. Dick v. Truly, Smedes & M. Ch. 557.

A judgment of a sister state is not available as a foundation for a bill by a creditor to impeach a deed of trust as fraudulent. Berryman v. Sullivan, 13 Smedes & M. 65.

A judgment of a court of a sister state will not support a bill in chancery to subject lands alleged to belong to the judgment debtor to the satisfaction of a judgment. Farned v. Harris, 11 Smedes & M. 366.

A judgment of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Nebraska will not be considered as a domestic judgment, for the purpose of the maintenance of a creditors' bill. First Nat. Bank v. Sloman, 42 Neb. 350, 47 Am. St. Rep. 707, 60 N. W. 589.

In New Jersey, a judgment of a United States court of the same district in which the state equity court is located is held to be a sufficient judgment to afford a basis for equitable relief; but a judgment of a court of a sister state is held to be insufficient.

In Vanderveer v. Stryker, 8 N. J. Eq. 175, it was held that a judgment obtained in the United States circuit court for the same district as that in which the equity court was located in which a bill was filed to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance of real estate complied with the requirement that a complainant must have a judgment as a condition precedent to equitable relief. It was said: "A judgment in the district court of the United States for New Jersey is as satisfactory evidence of the existence of a debt as the judgment of our supreme court; and an execution issued from the district court has the same power and territorial extent as an execution from our supreme court; and, if an execution from 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that court fails to yield to the plaintiff his judgment debt, it is as entire a failure as if his execution had issued from our supreme court. The ground of relief in this court is, that the complainant has obtained an execution at law, upon which any property in this state, tangible, or that can be reached by execution at law, might be reached and made available; that the defendant has no property which can be reached by execution at law, but that he has property which a court of equity will subject to the payment of the judgment and execution."

A creditor who has obtained judgment on his claim only in a sister state, and who has neither attachment nor other lien, cannot maintain an action in equity to reach real estate of his debtor. Davis v. Dean, 26 N. J. Eq. 436.

A judgment of a court of a sister state does not establish a lien on real estate of a living debtor, so as to afford a sufficient basis for an action in equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of the property. Guy B. Waite Co. v. Otto (N. J. Ch.) 54 Atl. 425.

In the last-mentioned case, Merchants' & M. Transp. Co. v. Borland, 53 N. J. Eq. 282, 31 Atl. 272, infra, V. g, 2, was relied on as changing the rule as to the effect of foreign judgments, declared in Davis v. Dean, supra, and as further deciding that, where a bill alleges that judgments recovered upon the debt were recovered in a court of a foreign state, and that the debt is due, and that there is no other estate or property on which to levy, and these allegations are admitted by general demurrer, complainant has a right to relief, and that the demurrer should be overruled. The decision, however, was held not to affect the decision in Davis v. Dean, supra, for, in the Borland Case, infra, the bill was filed against the estate of a deceased debtor who had died insolvent.

A return unsatisfied of an execution of the United States circuit court is not a sufficient exhaustion of the legal remedy to authorize an action in equity in a state court, and the fact that the court in which ulent impediments or conveyances which prevent the creditor from laying hold of the property and applying it to the payment of his debt." In Minnesota, in the case of Scanlan v. Murphy, supra, the court, giving the fraudulent conveyance act its full force, and holding the transfer as to the judgment creditor absolutely void, and the judgment rendered subsequent to the transfer a lien on the land, holds that "it is only necessary that the plaintiff shall have a lien by judgment on the real estate, subsequent to the fraudulent conveyance. . . . It is not necessary, therefore, for the creditor to follow his legal remedy further than to recover and docket his judgment." It will be observed that these authorities all sustain the proposition that, where there is a lien, then it is not necessary to pursue the action in a court of law further than the establishment of such lien. There are very many other respectable authorities holding that, where the bill or petition alleges that the debtor is insolvent and that the issuance of execution would be of no practical utility, he need not pursue his legal remedy further than to recover and docket his judgment, and this especially where a lien is thereby established.

There is no question but that, under the ancient practice as it obtained in England, and later in the United States, and still in some courts of this country, where the courts of law and equity are separate tribunals, and where the rule was observed that equity granted relief in those cases only where the

the judgment was rendered was sitting within the limits of the jurisdiction of the state court cannot give the plaintiff any better claim to equitable relief than he would have had if the judgment had been rendered in any other state or territory of the United States. Tarbell v. Griggs, 3 Paige, 207, 23 Am. Dec. 790.

The remedy at law is not exhausted as to the state jurisdiction on the judgment of a district United States court in New York by the issuance of an execution to the United States marshal, and the return of the execution unsatisfied. There must be a recovery of judgment in one of the courts of the state, and the return of the execution thereon unsatisfied. Davis v. Bruns, 23 Hun, 648.

A foreign creditor cannot invoke the aid of equity to reach property declared by statute to be a trust in favor of creditors until he has sued his judgment over and issued execution thereon, which has been returned unsatisfied. McCartney v. Bostwick, 31 Barb. 394, reversed in 32 N. Y. 61, but on the ground that the jurisdiction of the court in this class of cases is original. See infra, VI. d.

A judgment obtained in a sister state cannot be enforced in the courts of equity of South Carolina. McLure v. Benceni, 37 N. C. (2 Ired. Eq.) 513, 40 Am. Dec. 437.

In Broughton v. Slusher, 2 Tenn. Ch. App. 305, statutes giving judgment creditors whose executions have been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part, the right to reach equitable assets of their debtors in equity, were held not applicable to one who obtained judgment against the debtor in a sister state, and had execution returned unsatisfied there. The court said that a judgment debtor, under a judgment rendered in another state, with a return of nulla bona against him in such state, might have ample property to satisfy any judgments that might be obtained against him in the local state, and there could be no reason whatever for subjecting his property in such cases to this extraordinary sequestration. The court continued: "Let us suppose that one of our own citizens, during a visit to 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

another state, had suit brought against him and judgment rendered, and that he had property sufficient in this state, entirely free from encumbrance to satisfy such judgment. Should his property be subject to sequestration here because there was a return of nulla bona against him in another state? Obviously not."

But, in Watkins v. Wortman, 19 W. Va. 78, a judgment of a court of another state was held to be a debt, for the recovery of which the creditor was entitled to all the remedies applicable to other debts. It was therefore held to be unnecessary to bring an action at law upon such a judgment before instituting a chancery suit to avoid a fraudulent conveyance by the debtor, under a statute permitting action before a judgment, to set aside fraudulent conveyances.

In Ballin v. Merchants' Exch. Bank (Ballin v. J. & E. B. Friend Lace Importing Co. 78 Wis. 404, 10 L.R.A. 742, 47 N. W. 516, it was held that judgments of the United States courts of the Wisconsin districts were to be treated as domestic judgments of a superior court of the state, for the purpose of supporting an action by a judgment creditor of a corporation to sequester the property of the corporation.

And, under a statute providing that "judgments of courts of record of this state, and of courts of the United States, rendered within this state, shall be liens on the real estate of the debtor within the county in which the judgment is rendered," it was held that the judgment of the Federal court for the district of Kansas could not be regarded as that of a foreign court, and was therefore held a sufficient judgment to support a creditors' bill. Chicago & A. Bridge Co. v. Fowler, 55 Kan. 17, 39 Pac. 727.

And, in Bush v. Arnold, 50 Mo. App. 8, it was held that a proceeding in the nature of a creditors' bill to subject a legacy to the satisfaction of plaintiff's judgment could be maintained in a state court on a judgment of a United States court. The court said that it had no doubt that one who had recovered such a judgment was entitled to law, by reason of its universality, was not adequate, it was a practice to require the judgment creditor to have an execution issued and a return thereon nulla bona before equity would reach out its strong arm and render any assistance, and that this was the only proof that such courts would receive to show that the creditor was without remedy or had exhausted the same at law. But, under our modern practice, a great many of the old forms and proceedings are no longer observed, and in our courts to-day, where law and equity are both administered in one form of action and by the same courts, the reason for the rule is passed and gone, and, when the reason is gone, the rule should and does go with it. Such is the law, in our judgment, in this jurisdiction, and such do we believe to be its declaration by the best authorities. 20 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 726; Ryan v. Spieth, 18 Mont. 45, 44 Pac. 403; Bomberger v. Turner, 13 Ohio St. 263, 82 Am. Dec. 438; Lee v. Orr, 70 Cal. 398, 11 Pac. 745; Merry v. Fremon, 44 Mo. 518; Fleischner v. First Nat. Bank, 36 Or. 553, 54 Pac. 884, 60 Pac. 603, 61 Pac. 345. The text in 20 Cyc. Law & Proc. supra, is as follows: "It has been held that the creditor must aver, not only that he has reduced his claim to judgment, but that he has had a return of an execution thereon unsatisfied in whole or in part, and that the place of such averment cannot be supplied by an allegation of a total want of property. This is put upon the ground that courts of equity are not tribunals for the collection of debts.

prosecute in a state court any supplementary proceedings in equity to procure the satisfaction of such judgment, where the conditions were such that the state court would have jurisdiction of an ordinary action between the parties.

3. Proceedings at law affecting judgment.

Upon the granting of a new trial to a debtor, a defendant in an action upon which a creditors' bill had been based, such creditors' bill should be stayed until the final determination in the original case. Drew v. Dwyer, 1 Barb. Ch. 101.

In Butchers' & D. Bank v. Willis, 1 Edw. Ch. 645, the fact that a judgment upon which an execution had been issued and returned nulla bona, and a creditors' bill, based thereon, had been filed, was afterwards set aside, was held to be fatal to the creditors' bill. It was also held that the defect could not be cured by subsequently securing another judgment, and bringing the same to the attention of the court by a supplemental bill.

And where a judgment which was made the foundation of a creditors' suit was reversed and vacated on appeal, the creditors' suit based thereon and dependent upon it was dismissed. Kudrna v. Ainsworth, 65 Neb. 711, 91 N. W. 711.

But, the mere fact that a debtor has appealed from a judgment rendered against him does not present a sufficient ground to bar a creditors' bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by the debtor, based on the judgment appealed from, where the debtor, on appealing, did not obtain a stay of execution by filing a bond. Jenner v. Murphy, 6 Call. App. 434, 92 Pac. 405.

And in Barnett v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. (Tenn. Ch. App.) 48 S. W. 817, it was held that a judgment creditor having a judgment in a state court against an insolvent corporation, and from which an appeal is pending, may, nevertheless, successfully base thereon the right to intervene in a creditors' suit against the insolvent corporation, which is pending in the Federal court of the same district.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

b. As to execution, levy, and return.

1. As to property subject to levy.

(a) Necessity of lien.

(1) The general rule.

It having been determined that the general rule requires the creditor to reduce his claim to judgment before he can ask equitable aid to reach his debtor's property, of whatever name or nature, the next question arising is, What steps must he take, if any, after obtaining judgment, to get the help of a court of equity to reach his debtor's property? At this point it becomes necessary to consider the kind of property the creditor is after. As heretofore stated (see supra, II.), the rules governing relief where the property is subject to levy, and where it is not, are different. These two classes of property will be considered separately, and the rules relating to that subject to levy will be first taken up.

Whether the creditor wishes to satisfy his judgment out of real estate, or seeks to lay hold of tangible personal property, he must, in jurisdictions where the judgment itself is not made a lien by statute, take such additional measures as will perfect a lien, since the theory upon which relief is granted is that the creditor's title is obstructed or beclouded by the fraudulent acts of the debtor in conveying the property to another; and that the title ought to be cleared up to enable the creditor to enforce his lien by an advantageous sale. The lien, therefore, is, next to judgment, the great requisite in this class of cases. It is rightfully the only legal step required, since the rule as to exhaustion of the remedy at law does not apply here. Some of the apparent conflict in the authorities may be explained by the fact that the laws of different jurisdictions vary as to the steps necessary to perfect a lien upon real and personal property.

In Chamberlayne v. Temple, 2 Rand. (Va.) 384, 14 Am. Dec. 786, the court said that no creditor could be said to be delayed, hindered, or defrauded by any conveyance until some property out of which although resort may be had to them after all legal means have been exhausted. But, after all, the fruitless execution, although generally conclusive, is only evidence that the creditor has no adequate remedy at law, or that he has exhausted his legal remedy. It is not, however, the only possible means of proof. Ordinarily neither law nor equity requires a meaningless form. Accordingly it has been decided in many cases that a judgment creditor whose judgment would have been a lien on the property but for the fraudulent conveyance may proceed at once to have the conveyance set aside. If he alleges and proves that the debtor is insolvent and that the issuing of an execution would be of no practical utility, he need not show that he has pursued his legal remedy further than to recover and docket his judgment." The supreme court of the state of Oregon, in Fleischner v. First Nat. Bank, supra, holds: "The issuance and return of an execution is not a necessary preliminary to the right to maintain a creditors' suit to set aside conveyances by the debtor and to uncover assets, where the debtor is alleged to be insolvent." The case of Merry v. Fremon, supra, was one wherein it was sought to set aside certain conveyances because of their fraudulent character. The court says: "It is generally necessary to show the issuance of an execution and a return of nulla bona, but it may be dispensed with where it is shown that the debtor was insolvent." The supreme court of the state of Montana, in the case of Ryan v. Spieth, he had a specific right to be satisfied was withdrawn from his reach by the fraudulent conveyance. Such specific right did not exist until he had bound the property by judgment, and, in the case of personal property, by execution delivered to the sheriff, and had shown that he was defrauded by the conveyance, in consequence of not being able to procure satisfaction of his debt in a due course of law. Then, and then only, he acquired a specific right to be satisfied out of the property conveyed, and showed that he was a creditor, and was delayed, hindered, and defrauded by the conveyance. When a party had thus brought himself within the terms of the statute, he was entitled to the assistance of a court of equity to remove the impediment to his legal rights; and the lien, frustrated by fraud, would be considered as still subsisting in equity.

In Stephens v. Whitehead, 75 Ga. 294, on a bill by judgment creditors on whose judgment an execution had been issued and returned nulla bona, against different purchasers of goods from their debtor, which purchases were alleged to be fraudulent, the general doctrine was stated, although not applied, that, ordinarily, a lien is a necessary condition precedent to the maintenance of a creditors' bill.

In Balls v. Balls, 69 Md. 388, 16 Atl. 18, the court said that, except where changed by statute, it was an invariable rule that the holder of a debt cognizable at law could not obtain relief in equity until he had shown that his legal remedies were inadequate. If he sought to subject real or personal estate to the payment of his debt, he must obtain a lien upon it. When he had so acquired an interest in his debtor's property, he would be in a condition to ask the aid of a court of equity if, in other respects, he could show a case within its jurisdiction.

To sustain a bill on the theory that it is in aid of execution, a lien on the property sought to be reached must exist at the time the bill is filed. Blish v. Collins, 68 Mich. 542, 36 N. W. 731.

Before a creditor can reach tangible personal property in the hands of a fraudulent transferee, he must, in addition to the adjudicated claim, show that he has some lien upon the property, or some specific and definite rights in respect to it. Wilson v. Harris, 21 Mont. 374, 54 Pac. 46. The court quoted with approval the reason given by Mr. Bump, in his Treatise of Fraudulent Conveyances, § 535, as follows: "A creditor must establish his demand at law, and obtain a lien upon the property before the transfer interferes with his rights, or he has any title to claim relief in equity. No creditor can be said to be delayed, hindered, or defrauded by any conveyance until some property out of which he has a specific right to be satisfied is withdrawn from his reach by a fraudulent conveyance."

In Westheimer v. Goodkind, 24 Mont. 90, 60 Pac. 813, the court said that, in any case, and in all cases, whether the relief sought was legal or equitable, the creditor or other person who, as plaintiff or defendant, would avoid a sale or transfer for the reason that it was made with intent to defraud him of his demand, must have a lien or charge upon, or an interest in, the particular property which he desired to have subjected to the payment of his claim. As to a general creditor, such a sale was voidable in the sense that, when he should have acquired a lien upon the property affected, but not before, the sale would become inoperative as to him, not only from the date when the lien was interposed, but ab initio. So that, when it was said that a transfer made with intent to defraud creditors was void as to all creditors, nothing more was meant than that it was inoperative as to lien creditors who assailed it, and that, when successfully so attacked, the nullity related back to the time when the debts or obligations were unsecured.

Section 4490 of the Civil Code of Montana, providing that "every transfer of property . . . with intent to delay or defraud any creditor or other person, of his demands, is void against all creditors of the debtor . . ." is but declaratory of the common law. The transfer therein denounced as void is so only as to, and at the supra, involving the rule as to personal property and in which it was sought to set aside certain transfers on the ground that they were fraudulent, held: "A complaint in equity to reach and have applied to a judgment, property of the judgment debtor alleged to be fraudulently concealed, which shows that there is no property subject to execution and what has become of it, need not also allege, as a prerequisite to equitable relief, that an execution was issued and returned unsatisfied." Under these authorities, and under the facts in this case, the judgment creditor having secured a lien upon the property, and averring in her petition that "the defendant Frank R. Ziska is insolvent and has been at all times since the 1st day of December, 1901, and has no property subject to execution out of which plaintiff can make her judgment except the land heretofore described," we hold that it was unnecessary for her to allege and prove the issuance of execution and its return nulla bona, and that, cause of action not being barred, the petition states a cause of action.

This conclusion brings us to a consideration of the evidence introduced in the case by plaintiff to sustain her petition. The only evidence offered, aside from documentary proof, is found in the testimony of plaintiff and her former husband, the alleged fraudulent grantor. This has been carefully read by the entire court, and the majority thereof finds that, while there is no direct proof upon some material allegations of the petition, it cannot be said, from a consider-instance of, creditors having liens or charges upon, or special interest in, the property transferred. Ibid.

A creditor who would avoid in equity a sale or transfer by the debtor of his property, for the reason that it was made with intent to defraud him of his demands, must have a lien or charge upon, or interest in, the particular property which he desires to have subjected to the payment of his claim, or he must have exhausted his legal remedies. The mere fact that he is a creditor does not authorize him to attack an alleged fraudulent sale by the debtor, but, if he seeks the aid of a court of equity to enforce his rights, it must clearly appear that he has placed himself in a position to have the court enforce his rights, in subjecting the particular property to the payment of his demands, by the removal of obstacles fraudulently interposed, and that he is remediless in collecting his just claims in a court of law. Wyman v. Jensen, 26 Mont. 227, 67 Pac. 114.

In Arnett v. Coffey, 1 Colo. App. 34, 27 Pac. 614, the court said that where the creditor sought to remove a fraudulent obstruction to the collection of his judgment, and to enforce a claim against the property which ought to be subjected thereto, it was requisite that the judgment should be made a lien upon the property which was to be subjected to it. Where the writ was thus operative, the lien might possibly be acquired by the execution, but otherwise the judgment must be either a lien under the statute when entered, or must be made one by the taking of those steps which the statute pointed out. That, in some way, the lien must be acquired and existing at the time the bill was filed, was clearly settled. In the case at bar, the bill was to cancel alleged fraudulent conveyances, and the court held that, since the creditor had neither had the execution levied upon the interest, and the interest sold and the title transferred to him, nor had taken the necessary steps to make the judgment a lien, he was wholly without right to the relief which he sought.

A bill to set aside deeds alleged to have 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

been made for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding creditors cannot be maintained where the complainant had no lien on the property, no execution having been issued within one year from the date of the judgment. Newman v. Willetts, 52 Ill. 98.

In a proceeding to set aside a sale of real estate, there must exist a judgment lien by statute, in which case the title must be in the judgment debtor, or a lien by levy. Wells v. Dalrymple, Fed. Cas. No. 17,392.

Without a judgment at law binding the lands of the debtor, equity has no jurisdiction to entertain the bill of a creditor, filed to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of the debtor's lands, or to enable the creditor to reach the mere equitable estate of the debtor. The judgment lien is the necessary foundation of the equitable jurisdiction in either case, and equity lends its aid to make that lien effectual whenever it cannot be enforced by an execution at law. Vint v. King, Fed. Cas. No. 16,950.

Creditors who have never obtained a lien are not in a position to attack a chattel mortgage on a stock of merchandise, given to part of the defendants by the debtor's wife, to whom the goods had been sold. Krolik v. Root, 63 Mich. 562, 30 N. W. 339.

A bill to set aside a judgment against the debtor as fraudulent, and to reach property covered thereby, cannot be maintained, where it fails to show that the plaintiff has acquired a lien on the property, or that he has recovered judgment upon which an execution has been issued and returned unsatisfied. Castle v. Bader, 23 Cal. 76.

A creditor of a mortgagor cannot vacate and annul an order authorizing the receiver of the mortgagor to sell certain personal property to pay the liens thereon, and obtain an order requiring the receiver to pay the amount of a judgment obtained by the creditor, where the creditor has acquired no lien, either legal or equitable, upon the property, since the remedy, if any, is to obtain an order of the court, directing a disposition of the proceeds. Sullivan v. Miller, 106 N. Y. 635, 13 N. E. 772.

A creditor at large, or before judgment, ation of the entire testimony and the relationship to each other of all the parties to the suit, that there is no evidence, either direct or circumstantial, which tends in some degree to support the allegations. The rule in this state on the question presented is very clearly announced in the syllabus in the case of Edmisson v. Drumm-Flato Commission Co. 13 Okla. 440, 73 Pac. 958, where it is held: "A demurrer to the evidence admits all the facts which the evidence in the slightest degree tends to prove, and all the inferences or conclusions which may be reasonably and logically drawn from the evidence. On a demurrer to the evidence, the court cannot weigh conflicting evidence, but will treat the evidence as withdrawn which is most favorable to the demurrant."

With this for a measure by which to consider the evidence offered, it is our judgment that the trial court erred in sustaining the demurrer thereto, and the case is accordingly reversed. The writer hereof is unable to yield his assent to the conclusion reached by a majority of the court on the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the petition, and dissents from this portion of the opinion, concurring with the other Justices as to the balance.

Williams, Ch. J., and Hayes, Kane, and Turner, JJ., concur.

Dunn, J., dissents in part.

is not entitled to the interference of this court, by injunction, to prevent his debtor from disposing of his property in fraud of the creditor. In order to enable him to contest the validity of encumbrances of the debtor's property, he must have some specific claim or lien on such property. And a bill filed by a creditor of a firm, to restrain an execution creditor of an individual partner from enforcing his lien upon the partnership property, forms no exception to the general rule. Mittnacht v. Smith, 17 N. J. Eq. 259, 88 Am. Dec. 233.

In Haston v. Castner, 31 N. J. Eq. 697, the court said that, in the court of chancery, the wide rule, taken from Loomis v. Tift, 16 Barb. 541, appeared to have been adopted, that, if there had been a putting away of lands out of the reach of creditors, as equity had jurisdiction in case of frauds, relief would be afforded to this class of creditors, irrespective of the circumstance whether they had a lien on the land or not. But this was plainly a departure from the principle of all the decisions referred to in the opinion, in which, in this class of circumstances, the foundation of equitable intervention was expressly based on the existence of the creditor's lien on the property.

In Guy B. Waite Co. v. Otto (N. J. Ch.) 54 Atl. 425, the court said that it had always been the law of New Jersey that a creditor of a living debtor, who sought to set aside alleged fraudulent conveyances of land by his debtor, and to charge lands as held in trust for the debtor with the payment of his debt, must have a lien on the lands for the debt by judgment, attachment, or otherwise.

In Texas, the system of practice is one of blended law and equity. In Cassaday v. Anderson, 53 Tex. 535, it was said to be proper, under this practice, for a creditor to combine in one suit an action to recover a judgment upon his demand, and also to set aside a conveyance of land made by the debtor, on the ground that it was made in fraud of his rights as a creditor. Such a proceeding is sustained upon the ground that the remedy in equity would be more adequate, and the conveyance, unless set aside, would be a cloud upon the title, preventing the ultimate satisfaction of the judgment which might be obtained. The aid of the court is therefore invoked to remove the cloud caused by the alleged fraudulent conveyance as an obstruction to a fair sale in satisfaction of the judgment, rather than for the purpose of enforcing a lien on the land. But the vital question involved in this case, which was an action in trespass to try title, was whether the creditor, by filing such a blended action, thereby acquired a lien which would bind the property, so that, after judgment, a purchaser of the property at judicial sale would acquire priority over a purchaser at an execution sale under another judgment, pending the prior suit. And it was held that the equitable proceeding, to bind the property, must be based upon a lien; that is, that, while the fraudulent conveyance might be set aside before the creditor had acquired a lien, there must be a lien in order to bind the property as against judgment creditors who procure the property to be sold by execution pendente lite. So that, even in Texas, it would seem that the safer practice would be to proceed in the usual way to acquire a lien before invoking the aid of equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Noyes v. Brown, 75 Tex. 458, 13 S. W. 36, it was held that, where a creditor had garnished a chose in action belonging to the debtor, equity would not aid him to enforce it, since, under the Texas statute, no lien is created by such proceeding.

A court of equity will not grant its aid by appointing a receiver in favor of mere general creditors whose rights rest only in contract, and are not reduced to judgment, and who have acquired no lien upon the property of the debtor. Cahn v. Johnson, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 304, 33 S. W. 1000.

In this class of cases, the equitable relief sought rests upon the fact that the execution has issued and a specific lien has been acquired upon property of the debtor by its levy, but that the obstruction interposed prevents a sale of the property at a fair valuation. It is to remove the obstruction, and thus enable the creditor to obtain a full price for the property, that the suit is brought. Jones v. Green, 1 Wall. 330, 17 L. ed. 553.

In Lazarus Jewelry Co. v. Steinhardt, 50 C. C. A. 393, 112 Fed. 614, the court said that an examination of the last-mentioned case showed that the judgments in question did not constitute liens. That it was obvious that, if the judgments had created liens, the court would not have held that it was necessary to show the issuance and levy of the execution.

In Schofield v. Ute Coal & Coke Co. 92 Fed. 269, the court said that there were opinions, indeed, in which it was pertinently said, as it was said in Jones v. Green, supra, that the right of a judgment creditor to come into equity rested upon the fact that an execution had been issued and a specific lien had been acquired upon the property of the debtor by its levy. This was a true statement where the lien which the creditor sought to enforce was acquired by such a levy, but no case had been called to the attention of the court in which it had been held that it was necessary to issue an execution and make a levy which would create no lien, before a suit could be maintained to remove a fraudulent obstruction to the enforcement of a lien already created without the levy.

In Robison v. Gumaer, 43 Colo. 310, 95 Pac. 935, it was said that an issuance of an execution and the return unsatisfied were not a sufficient exhaustion of the remedy at law to enable a creditor to come into equity to subject real estate standing in the name of the debtor's wife to the payment of plaintiff's judgment, the rule in Colorado being that, save in the Federal court, the judgment does not, in itself alone, constitute a lien upon the realty of the judgment debtor even in the county where it is rendered; but he is required to go a step further, and secure a specific lien upon the interest of the judgment debtor in the real estate by means of which he seeks satisfaction, and this he may do in at least three ways; viz., by levy of an execution thereon in the manner provided by law, where the realty can be identified; by filing a transcript of the judgment in the office of the clerk and recorder of the county wherein the property is situated, and thus securing a statutory lien, which binds all interest in realty then owned or afterward acquired by the judgment debtor during the period of six years from the entry of the judgment; or by attachment of realty before judgment, and omission to merge the attachment lien through levy of execution or filing of the judgment transcript.

A creditor without a lien or right there-to upon chattels covered by a chattel mortgage, executed by his debtor, and in the absence of a judgment which might, by execution, be enforced against such chattels, cannot come into a court of equity to attack the mortgage on the ground that it lacks a statutory affidavit. Wolcott v. Ashenfelter, 5 N. M. 442, 8 L.R.A. 691, 23 Pac. 780.

But, in Schofield v. Ute Coal & Coke Co. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

supra, it was held that it is not necessary, in order to authorize a creditor to come into equity to remove a fraudulent obstruction to the enforcement of his lien on real estate, that he shall have acquired a specific lien fixed by the levy of an execution. A general statutory lien created by the filing of a transcript of a judgment is all that is required. The court said that, under the statutes of Colorado, and under those of many other states, the lien of the judgment attached to the real estate of the debtor when the judgment, or a transcript of it, was recorded or filed in the proper office in the county where the land was situated. The issue, levy, and return of the execution without the collection and payment of any part of the judgment neither increased nor diminished the force and efficacy of that lien.

And in Alnutt v. Leper, 48 Mo. 319, the court said that a specific judgment lien was not necessary in order to support a creditors' bill. In this case, the action was to reach real estate alleged to have been conveyed by the deceased debtor in his lifetime.

In Hunt v. Weiner, 39 Ark. 70, the court said that the general rule undoubtedly is that a court of chancery will not interfere in aid of the collection of a debt while a remedy at law exists. But there are exceptions as well established as the rule itself. One of these exceptions is the case of a creditor who has a lien for his debt; that is, for example, on real estate by judgment, or on personal property by suing out execution, and his debtor interposes a fraudulent encumbrance or transfer which obstructs and embarrasses the pursuit of the legal remedy, thus preventing a sale at a fair valuation. There equity will aid the legal right by removing the obstruction, and enabling the creditor to obtain a full price for his property.

But the fact that a conveyance of property sought to be set aside was made before the judgment became a lien upon the land does not stand in the way of equitable relief. Bennett v. Stout, 98 Ill. 47.

And, under the Iowa practice, judgment creditors whose debtor has made an assignment for the benefit of creditors are entitled to intervene in a mortgage foreclosure proceeding, and attack the validity of the mortgage, the mortgage being valid as to the assignee. They may do this, although their judgments are not liens upon the land which it is sought to foreclose, and they have not caused executions to be issued upon their judgments and returned nulla bona, since, when they obtained the judgments, they had a right to proceed in equity to establish a lien upon any property fraudulently conveyed by their debtor; and while a creditor may levy execution on property which a debtor has fraudulently conveyed, he is not obliged to do so, but may proceed in equity to have the property subjected to his judgment, as the relief sought does not conflict with any right of the assignee, and is not of a character which could be obtained through him. The right thereto is not in any manner affected by the assignment. Hitt v. Sterling-Goold Mfg. Co. 111 Iowa, 458, 82 N. W. 919.

Under statute 13 Eliz. chap. 5, to entitle a creditor to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by his debtor, it is not necessary that a creditor should have a lien or charging order on the property conveyed. Where, however, the creditor has no lien, he is not, in addition to such relief, also entitled to have the property applied in satisfaction of his claim. Reese River Silver Min. Co. v. Atwell, L. R. 7 Eq. 347.

A requirement that the creditor must have an interest in the property, or a lien created by contract, or by some distinct legal proceeding, is satisfied by the creditor's right of subrogation to the rights of a lienor. D. A. Tompkins Co. v. Catawba Mills, 82 Fed. 780.

As to necessity of lien, see also infra, III. b, 1 (b).

(2) Absence of lien; remedy at law.

The existence of a lien which is obstructed by the acts of the debtor, as has already been stated, is the foundation of equitable relief, where the property the creditor is after is subject to levy. There is an intimation in some of the cases that, in the absence of lien, the creditor may go into equity, provided he has exhausted his remedy at law. This is an unsound rule. It finds expression mostly in negligent remarks of the court in misapprehension of the reason for the rule as to the exhaustion of legal remedies. Even if the debtor has no other property and execution is returned unsatisfied, where the property sought to be reached is such that a lien may be acquired upon it, a lien must exist before a creditor may assert that his legal remedy is obstructed.

To entitle the judgment creditor to go into chancery to subject the equitable estate of his debtor to the satisfaction of the judgment, if he has no lien, he must exhaust his legal remedy; namely, cause execution to be issued and returned unsatisfied. Roper v. McCook, 7 Ala. 318.

A complainant must show either that he has acquired a lien on the property which is the subject of a creditors' bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, or that judgment has been rendered on which execution has been issued and returned nulla bona. Castle v. Bader, 23 Cal. 76.

Until a creditor in some manner obtains a lien on his debtor's property, or has exhausted his remedies at law, or has done what is equivalent thereto, he cannot question in equity a fraudulent conveyance or encumbrance of his property, made by such debtor, and have the same set aside. Goode v. Garrity, 75 Iowa, 713, 38 N. W. 150.

The issuance of an execution and its return nulla bona, in the absence of any lien, are necessary conditions precedent to equitable aid in behalf of the judgment creditor, if the facts do not bring his case within the statute as to fraudulent conveyances. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Kroger v. Roger Wheel Co. 1 Ky. L. Rep. 419.

Where it is sought to set a conveyance aside for fraud, and it does not appear that the creditor did or could obtain any specific lien upon the property by either a judgment or a levy under the execution, he must show that an execution was issued which had been returned unsatisfied at the time the suit was commenced. The creditor's right to relief depends upon his having exhausted his legal remedies, without being able to obtain satisfaction of the judgment. The issuing of an execution and its return unsatisfied are essential to his right to maintain the action. Hyde v. Chapman, 33 Wis. 391.

In Level Land Co. No. 3 v. Sivyver, 112 Wis. 442, 88 N. W. 317, it was said that the holder of a judgment which was not a lien, in order to set aside a fraudulent conveyance so that a lien might attach, must generally allege and show issue and unsatisfied return of an execution.

In Hyman v. Landry, 135 Wis. 598, 116 N. W. 236, it was said that, in the case of the existence of a fraudulent transfer of real estate, interfering with the collection of a judgment against the fraudulent grantor, the judgment creditor had two methods of obtaining relief: (a) By obtaining a lien upon the lands by levy under an execution issued upon the judgment, and then prosecuting an action in equity to remove the cloud upon such lien; (b) by exhausting the remedy at law to collect the judgment from leviable assets of the judgment debtor, if there be any, and then prosecuting an action in equity to annul the fraudulent transfer so far as to enable the judgment to attach to the land.

Failure of the complainant whose execution has been returned unsatisfied, and who is seeking to reach property of a corporation said to have been fraudulently conveyed, to allege that he has obtained a specific lien upon the property sought to be subjected to the satisfaction of his judgment, will not defeat the action. Klosterman v. Mason County C. R. Co. 8 Wash. 281, 36 Pac. 136. The court said that the complaint showed that the plaintiff had exhausted his legal remedies without avail, and that he was in a situation to perfect a lien on the property upon the removal of the alleged fraudulent deed, and that was all that was necessary to be set forth in a complaint in such action.

In Tarbell v. Millard 63 Mich. 250, 29 N. W. 722, it was held that, while a bill in aid of execution may be based upon the levy of the execution upon the real estate to which the bill relates, yet, as to personal property not levied upon, upon which property the complainant has no lien, a return of the execution unsatisfied is a necessary prerequisite to equitable relief.

Where, by statute, a judgment is not a lien upon land, and a complainant does not show that he has exhausted his remedies by an execution, or any reason why he did not enforce his judgment against his debtor, supra, involving the rule as to personal property and in which it was sought to set aside certain transfers on the ground that they were fraudulent, held: "A complaint in equity to reach and have applied to a judgment, property of the judgment debtor alleged to be fraudulently concealed, which shows that there is no property subject to execution and what has become of it, need not also allege, as a prerequisite to equitable relief, that an execution was issued and returned unsatisfied." Under these authorities, and under the facts in this case, the judgment creditor having secured a lien upon the property, and averring in her petition that "the defendant Frank R. Ziska is insolvent and has been at all times since the 1st day of December, 1901, and has no property subject to execution out of which plaintiff can make her judgment except the land heretofore described," we hold that it was unnecessary for her to allege and prove the issuance of execution and its return nulla bona, and that, cause of action not being barred, the petition states a cause of action.

This conclusion brings us to a consideration of the evidence introduced in the case by plaintiff to sustain her petition. The only evidence offered, aside from documentary proof, is found in the testimony of plaintiff and her former husband, the alleged fraudulent grantor. This has been carefully read by the entire court, and the majority thereof finds that, while there is no direct proof upon some material allegations of the petition, it cannot be said, from a consider-instance of, creditors having liens or charges upon, or special interest in, the property transferred. Ibid.

A creditor who would avoid in equity a sale or transfer by the debtor of his property, for the reason that it was made with intent to defraud him of his demands, must have a lien or charge upon, or interest in, the particular property which he desires to have subjected to the payment of his claim, or he must have exhausted his legal remedies. The mere fact that he is a creditor does not authorize him to attack an alleged fraudulent sale by the debtor, but, if he seeks the aid of a court of equity to enforce his rights, it must clearly appear that he has placed himself in a position to have the court enforce his rights, in subjecting the particular property to the payment of his demands, by the removal of obstacles fraudulently interposed, and that he is remediless in collecting his just claims in a court of law. Wyman v. Jensen, 26 Mont. 227, 67 Pac. 114.

In Arnett v. Coffey, 1 Colo. App. 34, 27 Pac. 614, the court said that where the creditor sought to remove a fraudulent obstruction to the collection of his judgment, and to enforce a claim against the property which ought to be subjected thereto, it was requisite that the judgment should be made a lien upon the property which was to be subjected to it. Where the writ was thus operative, the lien might possibly be acquired by the execution, but otherwise the judgment must be either a lien under the statute when entered, or must be made one by the taking of those steps which the statute pointed out. That, in some way, the lien must be acquired and existing at the time the bill was filed, was clearly settled. In the case at bar, the bill was to cancel alleged fraudulent conveyances, and the court held that, since the creditor had neither had the execution levied upon the interest, and the interest sold and the title transferred to him, nor had taken the necessary steps to make the judgment a lien, he was wholly without right to the relief which he sought.

A bill to set aside deeds alleged to have 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

been made for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding creditors cannot be maintained where the complainant had no lien on the property, no execution having been issued within one year from the date of the judgment. Newman v. Willetts, 52 Ill. 98.

In a proceeding to set aside a sale of real estate, there must exist a judgment lien by statute, in which case the title must be in the judgment debtor, or a lien by levy. Wells v. Dalrymple, Fed. Cas. No. 17,392.

Without a judgment at law binding the lands of the debtor, equity has no jurisdiction to entertain the bill of a creditor, filed to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of the debtor's lands, or to enable the creditor to reach the mere equitable estate of the debtor. The judgment lien is the necessary foundation of the equitable jurisdiction in either case, and equity lends its aid to make that lien effectual whenever it cannot be enforced by an execution at law. Vint v. King, Fed. Cas. No. 16,950.

Creditors who have never obtained a lien are not in a position to attack a chattel mortgage on a stock of merchandise, given to part of the defendants by the debtor's wife, to whom the goods had been sold. Krolik v. Root, 63 Mich. 562, 30 N. W. 339.

A bill to set aside a judgment against the debtor as fraudulent, and to reach property covered thereby, cannot be maintained, where it fails to show that the plaintiff has acquired a lien on the property, or that he has recovered judgment upon which an execution has been issued and returned unsatisfied. Castle v. Bader, 23 Cal. 76.

A creditor of a mortgagor cannot vacate and annul an order authorizing the receiver of the mortgagor to sell certain personal property to pay the liens thereon, and obtain an order requiring the receiver to pay the amount of a judgment obtained by the creditor, where the creditor has acquired no lien, either legal or equitable, upon the property, since the remedy, if any, is to obtain an order of the court, directing a disposition of the proceeds. Sullivan v. Miller, 106 N. Y. 635, 13 N. E. 772.

A creditor at large, or before judgment, regulated by statute. Were the statute giving the lien repealed, that would not affect the right of the creditor to have his judgment satisfied out of the debtor's property, or out of the property which the debtor might have fraudulently conveyed. If a lien were necessary in all cases as a foundation for proceedings in equity, creditors would be without remedy where their debtor should fraudulently convey his property, and then die before judgment could be had against him.

But the general observations in the last-mentioned case, to the effect that a lien is not a necessary prerequisite to equitable jurisdiction to reach real estate, probably are intended to apply to cases in which it is impossible to obtain a lien. Wherever it is possible for the plaintiff to obtain a lien, a lien is necessary, because, in such cases, an adequate remedy at law is provided.

Where judgment has been rendered in an attachment action against real estate, the fact that the judgment has become dormant will not stand in the way of a creditor's action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of the property, since the creditor is entitled to enforce a specific lien acquired by attachment. Coulson v. Saltsman, 71 Neb. 495, 98 N. W. 1055.

In Cincinnati v. Hafer, 49 Ohio St. 60, 30 N. E. 197, it was held that the fact that a judgment has become dormant for failure to issue execution thereon after the filing of a creditors' bill to enforce the judgment will not affect the right to maintain the bill.

As to the effect of a dormant judgment where the object of the bill is to reach equitable assets, see Brown v. Long, 36 N. C. (1 Ired. Eq.) 190, 36 Am. Dec. 43, infra, III. b, 2.

(b) Acquirement of lien.

(1) In general.

It may be stated as a general rule that, except where judgment is of itself a lien on the debtor's property, as it is in the case of real estate in some jurisdictions, a lien must be acquired by execution before a creditor can get equitable relief against his debtor. An exception is, however, made in the case of attachment liens in some jurisdictions. See infra, III. b, 1 (c).

In Tappan v. Evans, 11 N. H. 311, the doctrine was said to be laid down that, where property is subject to execution, a creditor who seeks to have a fraudulent conveyance or obstruction to a levy or sale removed may file a bill in equity as soon as he has obtained a specific lien upon the property, whether the lien be obtained by attachment, judgment, or the issuing of execution. Stone v. Anderson, 26 N. H. 506.

Failure to sue out an execution is fatal to the maintenance of a creditors' bill to set aside an assignment for the benefit of creditors as fraudulent. Heacock v. Durand, 42 Ill. 230.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The preliminary step required of a creditor before equity will aid to enforce a judgment at law by compelling a discovery and account against the debtor, or against any third person who may have possessed himself of the debtor's property, or placed it beyond the reach of execution at law, is that the judgment creditor should have made an experiment at law, and bound the property by actually suing out execution. Hendricks v. Robinson, 2 Johns. Ch. 283.

In Bassett v. St. Albans Hotel Co. 47 Vt. 313, it was held that the levy of an execution was a necessary condition precedent to a bill in equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of property by the debtor. The theory of that case is that, if the sale and conveyance were fraudulent, as alleged, the creditor should and could have taken the property in satisfaction of the judgment, and the court could decree a sale and conveyance of so much of the property as he had taken void. Without a levy, it is said that a court of chancery could not have granted him any relief on the ground of fraud, without setting aside the entire sale and conveyance. The court said: "For aught that is alleged or shown, that sale and conveyance might have been valid between the parties thereto, and only void as to creditors of the defendant company. Hence, the orator should have seized upon and set off in satisfaction of his debt a specific portion of the property, so that the court of chancery could have decreed the sale and conveyance void as to that portion only, and have allowed them to stand good between the parties as to the remainder of the property."

Failure of the judgment creditors to sue out executions on judgments is not fatal to the maintenance of an action in equity to subject a debtor's property to the satisfaction of the judgments, where a statute makes the judgment itself a lien on the debtor's property, real or personal. Lazarus Jewelry Co. v. Steinhardt, 50 C. C. A. 393, 112 Fed. 614.

(2) As to real estate.

Where the action is to remove fraudulent encumbrances upon real estate, the question whether a judgment creditor ought to issue execution should be considered in the first place with reference to the establishment of the lien. The foundation for relief in this class of cases being the lien, if the judgment is by statute made a lien upon the land, then the issuance of execution is unnecessary, except in those jurisdictions which erroneously hold that the remedy at law must be exhausted before resort can be had to equity in any case, or in those jurisdictions where personal property is by statute made the primary fund for the satisfaction of the execution. In some instances the issuance of execution is required for the purpose of perfecting the lien on the land by levy. The lien being necessary in all cases, such steps must be taken to perfect it, of course, as are required in the he cannot seek the aid of equity to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance of real estate by the debtor. Swayze v. Swayze, 9 N. J. Eq. 273.

But, in Spence v. Repass, 94 Va. 716, 27 S. E. 583, it was correctly held that the return of an execution unsatisfied was not sufficient to entitle a creditor to equitable aid to reach tangible personal property, in the absence of lien.

(3) Expiration of Lien.

A creditors' bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate cannot be maintained where the lien of the judgment has expired. Partee v. Mathews, 53 Miss. 140; Fleming v. Grafton, 54 Miss. 79.

Where the lien on the land has expired before the bringing of a suit, equity cannot be invoked to set aside a conveyance of the land, as against a debtor not shown to be insolvent. Smith v. Ellison, 80 Ark. 447, 97 S. W. 666.

The fact that the lien of a judgment had expired by reason of a period of more than ten years having elapsed since it was docketed, where no new lien upon the land had been acquired by the levy of an execution thereon, was held, in Evans v. Hill, 18 Hun, 464, to be fatal to the right of a judgment creditor to maintain a bill in equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate by the debtor.

In Miller v. Melone, 11 Okla. 241, 56 L.R.A. 620, 67 Pac. 479, it was said that when it appeared from the record that a judgment had become dormant, or what was known in common parlance as "outlawed," so that an execution could not be legally issued thereon, it would not support a creditors' bill.

An action under the Ohio statutes to reach equitable assets of the debtor was held not maintainable where based on a dormant judgment. Simpson v. Hook, 6 Ohio C. C. 27.

In Mullen v. Hewitt, 103 Mo. 639, 15 S. W. 924, it was held that a judgment more than ten years old, with execution unsatisfied, would not support a bill to set aside fraudulent conveyances by the debtor. The court said that, under the statutes of Missouri, no scire facias could issue to revive it, and that execution could not be issued upon it. The creditor was then in the position of a general creditor, and it was held necessary for him to sue on his judgment and reissue execution.

In Mellier v. Bartlett, 106 Mo. 381, 17 S. W. 295, the court was asked to overrule the last-mentioned case, but it refused to do so. The court said it had seen nothing to change its views of the law in the case before it. When the plaintiff suffered the time within which his judgment could be revived by scire facias to elapse, his judgment became a mere cause of action. It lost many, if not all, the essentials that characterized the judgment. The court held that when he instituted suit on this judgment after ten years, the defendants had a right to a jury trial. They might have shown that the judgment was paid, and were entitled to a jury on that issue. They could also have put in issue the assignee's title to the judgment under an assignment.

In Kirkpatrick v. Means, 40 N. C. (5 Ired. Eq.) 220, it was held that a court of equity cannot interpose in behalf of a legal demand until a creditor has tried the legal remedies and they have proved ineffectual. It is necessary, therefore, that the creditor should, in all instances, have reduced his demand to judgment, and that he should further show that he issued an execution, and either that it was returned nulla bona, or that the debtor had not a legal title to any property, but only the equitable property, out of which satisfaction is sought in equity. For this reason it was held that where, after the return of an execution nulla bona, the debtor became entitled to a distributive share of an estate, this could not be reached where no reason was shown why the judgment could not have been revived and satisfaction obtained by execution.

In Scoville v. Shed, 36 Hun, 165, it was said that when a judgment debtor transfers to a fraudulent transferee the legal title of property subject to sale on execution, a judgment creditor may disregard the conveyance, sell the property while in the hands of the fraudulent transferee under an execution, and, if possession is withheld from the purchaser, he may establish the fraudulent transfer, and recover the property in ejectment or replevin. This was the common-law remedy which had existed since the statute 13 Eliz. chap. 5. Instead of resorting to this legal remedy, a judgment creditor may maintain an action to set aside the fraudulent conveyance in aid of his execution; but if, by lapse of time, or for any cause, a sale cannot be had under the execution, such an action cannot be maintained.

But, in Merry v. Fremon, 44 Mo. 518, where the object of the bill was to reach property the deceased debtor had had conveyed to a third person in trust for the debtor while she lived, and, after her death, for the use and benefit of her children, it was held that the fact that the lien on the judgment had expired was not fatal to the action, where the claim had been allowed in the probate court, and the estate was insolvent. The court said it was doubtless true that the creditor in this class of cases, before resorting to chancery, must first exhaust his legal remedies, whatever they might be. In doing so, he might create a lien upon the property sought to be subjected. The creation of such a lien was perhaps an ordinary incident to such preliminary proceeding at law. But the lien was the incident, and not the object, of the proceedings. It was not necessary that he should show the existence of a lien upon the property proposed to be charged, although such lien might ordinarily exist in such cases as an incident to the judgment. The lien of the judgment was created and regulated by statute. Were the statute giving the lien repealed, that would not affect the right of the creditor to have his judgment satisfied out of the debtor's property, or out of the property which the debtor might have fraudulently conveyed. If a lien were necessary in all cases as a foundation for proceedings in equity, creditors would be without remedy where their debtor should fraudulently convey his property, and then die before judgment could be had against him.

But the general observations in the last-mentioned case, to the effect that a lien is not a necessary prerequisite to equitable jurisdiction to reach real estate, probably are intended to apply to cases in which it is impossible to obtain a lien. Wherever it is possible for the plaintiff to obtain a lien, a lien is necessary, because, in such cases, an adequate remedy at law is provided.

Where judgment has been rendered in an attachment action against real estate, the fact that the judgment has become dormant will not stand in the way of a creditor's action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of the property, since the creditor is entitled to enforce a specific lien acquired by attachment. Coulson v. Saltsman, 71 Neb. 495, 98 N. W. 1055.

In Cincinnati v. Hafer, 49 Ohio St. 60, 30 N. E. 197, it was held that the fact that a judgment has become dormant for failure to issue execution thereon after the filing of a creditors' bill to enforce the judgment will not affect the right to maintain the bill.

As to the effect of a dormant judgment where the object of the bill is to reach equitable assets, see Brown v. Long, 36 N. C. (1 Ired. Eq.) 190, 36 Am. Dec. 43, infra, III. b, 2.

(b) Acquisition of lien.

(1) In general.

It may be stated as a general rule that, except where judgment is of itself a lien on the debtor's property, as it is in the case of real estate in some jurisdictions, a lien must be acquired by execution before a creditor can get equitable relief against his debtor. An exception is, however, made in the case of attachment liens in some jurisdictions. See infra, III. b, 1 (c).

In Tappan v. Evans, 11 N. H. 311, the doctrine was said to be laid down that, where property is subject to execution, a creditor who seeks to have a fraudulent conveyance or obstruction to a levy or sale removed may file a bill in equity as soon as he has obtained a specific lien upon the property, whether the lien be obtained by attachment, judgment, or the issuing of execution. Stone v. Anderson, 26 N. H. 506.

Failure to sue out an execution is fatal to the maintenance of a creditors' bill to set aside an assignment for the benefit of creditors as fraudulent. Heacock v. Durand, 42 Ill. 230.

23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

The preliminary step required of a creditor before equity will aid to enforce a judgment at law by compelling a discovery and account against the debtor, or against any third person who may have possessed himself of the debtor's property, or placed it beyond the reach of execution at law, is that the judgment creditor should have made an experiment at law, and bound the property by actually suing out execution. Hendricks v. Robinson, 2 Johns. Ch. 283.

In Bassett v. St. Albans Hotel Co. 47 Vt. 313, it was held that the levy of an execution was a necessary condition precedent to a bill in equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of property by the debtor. The theory of that case is that, if the sale and conveyance were fraudulent, as alleged, the creditor should and could have taken the property in satisfaction of the judgment, and the court could decree a sale and conveyance of so much of the property as he had taken void. Without a levy, it is said that a court of chancery could not have granted him any relief on the ground of fraud, without setting aside the entire sale and conveyance. The court said: "For aught that is alleged or shown, that sale and conveyance might have been valid between the parties thereto, and only void as to creditors of the defendant company. Hence, the orator should have seized upon and set off in satisfaction of his debt a specific portion of the property, so that the court of chancery could have decreed the sale and conveyance void as to that portion only, and have allowed them to stand good between the parties as to the remainder of the property."

Failure of the judgment creditors to sue out executions on judgments is not fatal to the maintenance of an action in equity to subject a debtor's property to the satisfaction of the judgments, where a statute makes the judgment itself a lien on the debtor's property, real or personal. Lazarus Jewelry Co. v. Steinhardt, 50 C. C. A. 393, 112 Fed. 614.

(2) As to real estate.

Where the action is to remove fraudulent encumbrances upon real estate, the question whether a judgment creditor ought to issue execution should be considered in the first place with reference to the establishment of the lien. The foundation for relief in this class of cases being the lien, if the judgment is by statute made a lien upon the land, then the issuance of execution is unnecessary, except in those jurisdictions which erroneously hold that the remedy at law must be exhausted before resort can be had to equity in any case, or in those jurisdictions where personal property is by statute made the primary fund for the satisfaction of the execution. In some instances the issuance of execution is required for the purpose of perfecting the lien on the land by levy. The lien being necessary in all cases, such steps must be taken to perfect it, of course, as are required in the

erty which the debtor "may have at the time of docketing thereof," etc., judgments docketed subsequent to the transfers were not liens, and that, in the absence of a lien, the remedy at law must be exhausted. Two judges dissented, and Pinney, J., in an able opinion, maintained that such judgments constituted liens on land previously fraudulently transferred. This dissenting opinion is in accord with the weight of authority on the question.

The last-mentioned case was followed in French Lumbering Co. v. Theriault, 107 Wis. 627, 51 L.R.A. 910, 81 Am. St. Rep. 856, 83 N. W. 927, in which it was held that a judgment rendered and docketed after the fraudulent transfer of the debtor's real estate did not become a specific lien upon the property. It was said in the syllabus by Marshall, J., that, under such circumstances, "(a) a judgment creditor can obtain a specific lien on the real property of the judgment debtor by levy thereon under an execution issued on the judgment, and then equity will aid him to remove the impediment to an advantageous sale thereof and enforcement of the lien, created by the fraudulent transfer. (b) Equity will not aid a judgment creditor till he actually obtain a specific lien by attachment of the property under writ of attachment, or levy thereon under an execution, or he has exhausted all his legal remedies to collect his claim. The last condition mentioned being satisfied, equity will enforce the creditor's right to a lien on the property in an action to annul the fraudulent transfer of the property, so that the judgment may attach thereto. (c) If the fraudulent vendor die before a specific lien shall have been obtained on the property, the judgment cannot be enforced by execution . . . and a lien be thereby secured which equity will protect."

In Colorado, in order to entitle a creditor to the aid of equity to reach real property fraudulently taken in the name of another, in a different county from that in which the judgment was rendered, the creditor must have had a transcript of the judgment filed in the county where the land sought is located, since otherwise the judgment is not a lien on the property, and a lien is necessary to subject it to sale on execution through a creditors' bill. Barnes v. Beighly, 9 Colo. 475, 12 Pac. 906.

A creditor must sue out an elegit before he can go into equity to reach the equitable interest of his debtor in real estate. Neate v. Marlborough, 3 Myl. & C. 407. It was urged in this case that the issuance of the writ was unnecessary, because it was the judgment itself, and not the writ of elegit, which gave the lien upon the land. But the Lord Chancellor said, in reply to this, that it was not correct to say, according to the usual acceptance of the term, that the creditor obtained a lien by virtue of his judgment. What gave a judgment creditor a right against the estate was only the act of Parliament (13 Edw. 1, chap. 18). The act gave him, if he pleased, an option by the writ of elegit.—the very name implying that it was an option,—which, if exercised, entitled him to have a writ directed to the sheriff to put him in possession of a moiety of the lands. The effect of the proceeding under the writ was to give to the creditor a legal title which, if no impediment prevented him, he might enforce at law by ejectment. If there were a legal impediment, he then came into chancery, not to obtain a greater benefit than the law—that is, the act of Parliament—had given him, but to have the same benefit by the process of chancery which he would have had at common law if no legal impediment had intervened.

In Bennet v. Musgrove, 2 Ves. Sr. 52, the right of a creditor by elegit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance in equity was sustained.

In Manningham v. Bolingbroke, 2 Dick. 533, a creditor brought an action of debt and obtained a judgment, but, before he had sued out execution, the defendant conveyed his estate, to prevent the execution from having effect. A bill was then filed for discovery and relief. It was objected on demurrer that the plaintiff had not proceeded to an elegit, and was therefore premature. It was held that, the bill being to be relieved against fraud, the defendant must answer. This, however, is a very imperfect report of this case, as the writ of elegit was issued, but the demurrer went on the ground that there was no return of it.

But, in Taylor v. Spindle, 2 Gratt. 44, it was held that the issuance of an elegit is not a condition precedent to equitable relief.

The question has arisen whether an execution should be returned where the action is to reach real estate; but, since the lien is not preserved as to this class of property by keeping the execution outstanding, it is immaterial whether the writ be returned or not. For a consideration of this question with reference to personal property, see infra, III. b, 1 (b) (3).

In Kittel v. Augusta, T. & G. R. Co. 65 Fed. 859, the court said that when real property which would be subject to levy if it stood in the debtor's name had been fraudulently conveyed, it was necessary, in order to clear the title, to take out execution, but not to have the writ returned unsatisfied. In such case the creditor did not acquire a lien, strictly speaking, by the judgment alone, but, by virtue of the execution founded thereon, he acquired the right to obtain possession which was in the nature of a specific lien attached to, or an interest in, the property, or of a trust in his favor, by means of which he might remove the fraudulent or inequitable obstruction. As a levy in a suit at law would be unavailing, the ground of the equitable jurisdiction was merely to aid the legal right by removing the obstruction. In such a case the bill, coming in aid of the execution, enabled the creditor to obtain the full price for the property. When legal assets of the debtor had been fraudulentl-transferred, the foundation of the equitable jurisdiction was the specific right or equity in the property. This jurisdiction attached in cases of fraud in aid of the legal right. In such cases it was sufficient if the execution upon the judgment was either unsatisfied, or, after action brought in its aid, that it was outstanding.

An outstanding execution is not necessary to enable judgment creditors to maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent assignment by the debtor of a leasehold interest in land, and the fact that the execution has been returned unsatisfied before the commencement of the action will not therefore defeat it. Haswell v. Lincks, 87 N. Y. 637.

A judgment creditor, even after the return of an execution unsatisfied, may maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of, or encumbrance upon, the real estate of the debtor, or an interest therein, since it is not necessary that an execution should be outstanding to create or preserve a specific lien upon the land, as it is in the case of personal property, because the lien necessary to support the action is effected by the docketing of the judgment. Buswell v. Lincks, 8 Daly, 518.

In Royer Wheel Co. v. Fielding, 31 Hun, 274, it was said that it would be sacrificing substance to mere form if it should be held that the return of an execution during the pendency of the suit would deprive the creditor of the right to continue its prosecution as to the debtor's real estate when a further execution could be immediately issued to render the judgment effectual in case it resulted in setting aside the alleged illegal disposition of such property. This case was reversed on another point in 101 N. Y. 504, 5 N. E. 431.

Whether an execution was issued and returned unsatisfied is immaterial where the action is to set aside a fraudulent transfer of property upon which the judgment is, by statute, a specific lien. Cornell v. Radway, 22 Wis. 260.

(3) As to personalty.

A lien must be obtained on personal property by execution on the judgment. Balls v. Balls, 69 Md. 388, 16 Atl. 18; Post v. Roach, 26 Fla. 442, 7 So. 854; West v. McCarty, 4 Blackf. 244.

To bind personal property, the execution must be delivered to the sheriff. Chamberlayne v. Temple, 2 Rand. (Va.) 384, 14 Am. Dec. 786; Bishop v. Halsey, 3 Abb. Pr. 400; Mutual Assur. Soc. v. Stanard, 4 Munf. 539.

Prior to the act of 1835, chap. 380, the issuance of a fieri facias was necessary to the establishment of a lien on personal property. Wylie v. Basil, 4 Md. Ch. 327.

Prior to the act of 1849, when the property fraudulently conveyed and sought to be subjected was personal property, a creditor was required not only to obtain a judgment, but also to take out execution and have it levied or returned, so as to show that he had exhausted all legal remedies. Frye v. Milev, 54 W. Va. 324, 48 S. E. 135.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

If personal property liable to execution is pursued, the lien must be acquired by levy under such process. Greenwood v. Brodhead, 8 Barb. 595.

In Angell v. Draper, 1 Vern. 399, it was held that a bill for an accounting and a discovering of debtor's goods in the hands of a third person could not be maintained where the creditor failed to sue out execution before he brought his bill.

In Dunham v. Cox, 10 N. J. Eq. 437, 64 Am. Dec. 460, the court said that, if it was the personal property of the debtor which the creditor wished to reach and appropriate to the payment of his judgment, he must take out an execution upon his judgment before he could exhibit his bill; for it was by the execution, and not by his judgment, that he acquired a lien upon the personal property.

Where, until execution, no lien could be acquired on the property sought to be reached by the creditor, it was held that a bill in equity could not be maintained, where no execution had been issued. Clark v. Banner, 21 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. Eq.) 608.

An execution is necessary in order to create a lien on personal property of the debtor, to entitle the execution creditor to the aid of equity to interfere by an injunction to prevent the sale of the debtor's goods on a chattel mortgage alleged to be fraudulent. Glorieux v. Schwartz, 53 N. J. Eq. 231, 28 Atl. 470, 1134.

A cause of action for conversion in favor of a debtor, if considered as property, must be proceeded against by execution by the creditor before he can maintain a creditors' bill under a statute making all forms of property, real and personal, subject to levy. Raymond v. Blancgrass, 36 Mont. 449, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 976, 92 Pac. 648.

Relief will not be granted against the chattels of a debtor where the plaintiffs, when they file their bill, are simple-contract creditors of the defendant upon the promissory note which they are prosecuting at law, and when the only additional fact that appears in the case is that, since the filing of the bill, they have entered judgment upon their note, since one who seeks aid with respect to personal estate must show an execution giving him a legal preference or lien upon the chattels, and must have pursued it to every available extent. Brinkerhoff v. Brown, 4 Johns. Ch. 671. The court said that equity did not, as of course, assume jurisdiction in taking executions upon judgments at law into its own hands. Such power would be oppressive to the debtor and to the court. The presumption was that the court which rendered judgment was competent to enforce it; and it was only in special cases in which property could not be found to satisfy it that equity interfered to discover and reach property, but the legal remedy by execution must first be tried.

In Hendricks v. Robinson, 2 Johns. Ch. 283, the court said that the suing out of an execution is not, perhaps, sufficient of itself, and without some further act, to came in almost every case; and the experience of every practitioner would testify that a large percentage of attachments issued and levied finally failed. Attachment liens did not in Kansas, as in some states, require a judicial order for their creation. The mere affidavit of a creditor was sufficient, and that affidavit, too, alleging only in general terms the existence of one of the statutory grounds for attachment. Hence, while it was a specific lien, it was a lien for a very uncertain claim. It was also said that it would be no advantage to the creditor in the maintenance of the action save in the mere matter of time, and that to allow it would often occupy the time and attention of the court with useless litigation.

In Scales v. Scott, 13 Cal. 76, a bill to set aside a judgment alleged to have been fraudulently confessed was held maintainable by an attachment creditor, although he had obtained neither judgment nor execution.

And in Conroy v. Woods, 13 Cal. 626, 73 Am. Dec. 605, an attaching creditor was held to have a sufficient lien on the goods attached to authorize him to intervene in a creditors' bill brought by other creditors to determine the right of priority between partnership and individual creditors, and which affects the disposition of the goods attached.

But, in Aigeltinger v. Einstein, 143 Cal. 609, 101 Am. St. Rep. 131, 77 Pac. 669, in holding that an attachment of real estate fraudulently conveyed did not form a sufficient basis for a resort to equity by the attaching creditor to have the fraudulent conveyance set aside, it was said that "the claim of the creditor should be certain before he can concern himself with the debtor's frauds, and it cannot be made certain except by judgment. A claim that is merely asserted ought not to be sufficient. It may be conceded that an officer has the right to defend his possession of the attached property, and often the defendant's acts may be inquired into; but it does not seem to follow that, because an officer may do this, the plaintiff may prosecute an independent action, not to preserve the possession, but to clear up the title. When the claim has become certain, he may inquire into the title. Possession may be preserved to preserve the attachment lien, but nothing more is necessary until the claim is made certain. . . . Plaintiff has no right under his attachment beyond that of using such measures as may be necessary to preserve his security until he can reduce his claim to judgment; the attachment is but a provisional remedy, that can avail nothing beyond fixing a lien on the property pending the inquiry into the merits of the claim."

And in McMinn v. Whelan, 27 Cal. 300, it was held that a lien by attachment upon premises cannot be rendered effectual for the purpose of impeaching a conveyance thereon until judgment is obtained.

A fraudulent conveyance of land cannot be said to obstruct the enforcement by legal process of a creditor's right to take property affected by the transfer, within the meaning of a statute providing that a creditor can avoid the act or obligation of his debtor for fraud under such circumstances, where the creditor has acquired only an attachment lien, and has not yet proceeded to judgment. Aigeltinger v. Einstein, supra.

Simple-contract creditors of a corporation, claiming no title or interest in or lien upon the property of the corporation, save by attachment, cannot, in the absence of special equities, ask a court of chancery to interfere and take charge of its property, oust its officers of its management, control, and direction, place the same in the hands of a receiver to be sold, to await the decree upon their claims when established by judgment or decree, and that of other creditors. Dodge v. Pyrolusite Manganese Co. 69 Ga. 665.

The fact that a mere contract creditor has commenced an attachment suit upon his claim and caused an attachment writ therein issued to be levied upon a stock of merchandise belonging to the debtor, subject to executions of certain judgment creditors, does not authorize him to resort to a court of equity to enforce his demand. Detroit Copper & Brass Rolling Mills v. Ledwidge, 162 Ill. 305, 44 N. E. 751.

By commencing an attachment suit and the service of garnishee process the attaching creditor does not acquire such a lien upon property in the hands of the garnishee as will authorize a court of equity to interpose its restraining power to prevent him from disposing of it before a judgment and execution are had in the proceeding at law, where the statute has not in terms made such service a lien upon the effects of the debtor in the hands of the garnishee. Bigelow v. Andress, 31 Ill. 322.

In Clark v. Raymond, 84 Iowa, 251, 50 N. W. 1068, it was held that a creditor could not maintain a bill in the nature of a creditors' bill for the appointment of a receiver to have the lands levied upon, which had been fraudulently conveyed, and the rents, issues, and profits thereof, subjected to the payment of the judgment in an action at law when it was recovered. But this decision was based on the theory that the attachment of this real estate, as the property of the debtor, created no lien as against him, because he had no legal interest whatever in the property. The court adds: "If the attachment suit were to proceed to judgment against him, and a sale of the property had, on special execution, the sale and deed would convey no title. It would be necessary to resort to a creditors' bill to set aside the conveyances to his son, and the subsequent conveyance by his son to his daughter."

An attachment lien is only inchoate, and must be perfected by judgment before resort can be had to equity. Morton v. Grafflin, 68 Md. 545, 13 Atl. 341, 15 Atl. 298.

In Martin v. Michael, 23 Mo. 50, 66 Am. Dec. 656, an attaching creditor was held to stand in no better position than one who sues by the ordinary process of the court, with respect to his right to equitable aid to annul fraudulent judgments, and that he therefore was not entitled to such relief before judgment at law.

After the decision of the court in the last-mentioned case, a change was made in the law by the act of January 14, 1860, which has continued in force ever since, and is now found in § 448, Rev. Stat., whereby any attaching creditor may maintain an action for the purpose of setting aside any fraudulent conveyance, assignment, charge, lien, or encumbrance of or upon any property attached in any action instituted by him. Fisher v. Tallman, 74 Mo. 39.

But, in the absence of statute, an attachment creditor cannot maintain an action to redeem land covered by his attachment from a mortgage executed by the debtor, since an ordinary creditor before judgment and execution has no certain claim upon the property of his debtor, and has no concern with conveyances of any kind affecting such property. Ibid.

In Weil v. Lankins, 3 Neb. 384, it was held that the fact that the creditor had a lien by attachment would not enable him to maintain a creditors' bill in the absence of a judgment.

Before obtaining judgment on his demand, an attachment creditor cannot maintain an action in the nature of a creditors' bill to have an alleged fraudulent conveyance of real estate set aside. Weinland v. Cochran, 9 Neb. 482, 4 N. W. 67.

But, where the attachment action has proceeded to judgment, it is different. In First Nat. Bank v. Hollerin, 31 Neb. 558, 48 N. W. 392, it was held that where real estate of the debtor has been attached, and the action has proceeded to judgment, and an order of sale has been made, a creditor may proceed to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of the property.

An action may be maintained to subject real estate to the lien of an attachment and to the satisfaction of a judgment obtained thereon, although no execution has been issued on such judgment before the commencement of the proceedings. Grandin v. First Nat. Bank, 70 Neb. 730, 98 N. W. 70.

Where real estate has been attached and judgment has been rendered in the attachment action, a creditor may come into equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance thereof, although no execution has been issued on the judgment. Coulson v. Saltsman, 71 Neb. 495, 98 N. W. 1055.

The doctrine was enunciated in Talbott v. Randall, 3 N. M. 367, 5 Pac. 533, that the jurisdiction of equity to interfere by injunction with an alleged fraudulent conveyance of real estate could only be invoked in behalf of creditors who had established their claims by a judgment in a court of law, and would not be exercised on behalf of mere contract creditors, or creditors at large, whose claims were not reduced to judgment. The court said that this rule could not be avoided by suing out an attachment, since a creditor, by such a proceeding, did not establish his debt; that he only differed from other general creditors in that the law, for special reasons named in the suit, lent to him the auxiliary aid of a writ of attachment, but such a proceeding did not establish the debt, nor did it tend to establish the debt any more than did the ordinary sworn complaint of the plaintiff in an action at law tend to establish the debt for which the action was brought.

A lien obtained by attachment by a creditor whose claim was not reduced to judgment was held, in Artman v. Giles, 155 Pa. 409, 26 Atl. 668, insufficient to support a bill to prevent a creditor from proceeding at law to obtain satisfaction of his judgment.

Where a garnishment proceeding is begun under statutes which, like the Michigan statutes, had not contemplated the enforcement of a lien, but simply the application of the plaintiff's demand, when that is established, or, alternatively and contingently, the personal liability of the garnishee, the creditor does not acquire thereby a position which will entitle him to the aid of equity to reach alleged fraudulent conveyances made by the corporation. Childs v. N. B. Carlstein Co. 76 Fed. 86. The court said that even if it were conceded that the statutory proceeding, by the analogy of its effect upon the property of the debtor to that of a statutory or contract lien, appropriated the property to the use of the creditor sub modo, this would not avail the complainants, who sought to make it the foundation of equity jurisdiction, since the very completeness and amplitude was the strongest possible denial of complainant's right to supplement this proceeding by a concurrent suit in equity.

In New York the decisions are conflicting.

In Falconer v. Freeman, 4 Sandf. Ch. 565, it was held that the fact that the complainants were mere creditors at large would not prevent them from maintaining a creditors' bill where their remedy under the attachment pursuant to the statute against nonresident debtors was obstructed by alleged fraudulent transfers. The court said that it was as valid and effectual a lien in favor of all creditors as was made in favor of the plaintiff at law by issuing an execution which he was prevented by some fraud of his debtor from levying on movable property, and the court perceived no reason in principle why equity should not interfere to aid the enforcement of the lien under the attachment for the benefit of all the creditors, without preference, as it constantly did to aid the execution creditor in maintaining his priority over all others.

An action to set aside the fraudulent transfer of a debtor's property may be maintained when the creditor has acquired a lien on the property of the debtor by attachment, and has recovered judgment in the attachment action. Heye v. Bolles, 2 Daly, 231.

In Greenleaf v. Mumford, 19 Abb. Pr. 469, 30 How. Pr. 30, the court considered that it was not an open question whether, when an attachment was issued under the Code of Procedure, the plaintiff in the action obtained such a lien on the property attached as would entitle him to the intervention of the equitable jurisdiction of the court to remove or set aside all fraudulent claims and transfers, or any other fraudulent obstacle in the way of the realization of the lien in case the plaintiff should recover a judgment. It was held that the attachment entitled the plaintiff to proceed in equity.

In Mechanics' & T. Bank v. Dakin, 51 N. Y. 519, the plaintiff commenced an action on a promissory note against a nonresident, and attached the defendant's debt secured by a bond and mortgage. A judgment was obtained in the suit, and an execution was issued, but was not returned. After the giving of the note, but before the commencement of the suit, the bond and mortgage were assigned, and then the creditor's action to set aside the assignment as fraudulent was begun. It was urged that the execution should have been returned unsatisfied. It was held that the attachment created a lien, and that the creditor's action would lie. The court said that, while the proceeding was not technically what is called a creditors' bill, requiring a previous return of the execution unsatisfied, and asking for a general appropriation of the debtor's equitable assets for the payment of the debt, nor yet a bill in aid of the execution simply, where a levy had been made upon property liable to seizure and sale upon execution, it came within the range of well-settled principles. It was an action to enforce a specific lien. The plaintiff had a specific lien upon the mortgage in question. He had perfected his lien by a judgment settling the question of liability and the amount. He had issued an execution which would authorize the application of the mortgage to the payment of his debt but for the assignment. The court thought that the request that the assignment be declared in fraud of creditors was well made, and equity required it to be granted.

The last-mentioned case, however, was rendered by the court of appeals commission, and was argued prior to the decision in Thurber v. Blanck, 50 N. Y. 80, a similar case decided by the court of appeals, the court in the latter case reaching the opposite conclusion on different grounds. In the Thurber Case it was held that debts and choses in action were to be regarded as legal assets under the attachment laws whenever that process acted directly upon the legal title, but that, whenever they were so situated as to require the exercise of the equitable powers of the court to place them in that situation, they must be treated as they always had been, as equitable assets only; and therefore that, after the title was in a third person, they could not be attached. It was also held that the provisions of the Code with reference to attachment constituted a complete system for the collection of debts in the cases and manner therein specified. And the court said that the mode therein provided must be pursued, and that, unless property was so situated as to be attachable and convertible according to those provisions, it could not be attached at all. It was not competent to institute another action to make a proper case for issuing an attachment, or to place property in a situation to be subject to this process.

In other words, this is not a decision that an attachment lien may not be enforced in equity; but that, as to choses in action that have been fraudulently transferred, the remedy at law must be exhausted; that the action cannot be maintained in aid of the attachment, as the choses in action so situated cannot be attached.

In People ex rel. Cauffman v. Van Buren, 136 N. Y. 252, 20 L.R.A. 446, 32 N. E. 775, the court said that the impression seemed to have prevailed that there was an irreconcilable conflict between Thurber v. Blanck and Mechanics' & T. Bank v. Dakin, supra. In the Thurber Case the court was dealing with an attempt on the part of the attaching creditor to reach equitable assets, while, in the Dakin Case, the attaching creditor had, by the recovery of judgment and the issue of execution, acquired the right to have the attached property applied to the satisfaction of the execution; but, in the assertion of this right, he found the way obstructed by the interposition of a conveyance of the property by his debtor which was apparently valid, but which was in fact void.

In the Cauffman Case, it was held that an attaching creditor has the right to come into a court of equity to prevent the application of the attached property to the payment of prior liens created by the mortgage of an insolvent debtor's real property, and by the confession of alleged fraudulent judgments, and issuance of executions thereon, and a levy upon tangible property of the debtor. The court said that it must be apparent that, unless such a right existed, the remedy by attachment would be lost in many cases. The sheriff must sell the property under the prior executions, and apply the proceeds to their payment, and the plaintiff would be in no better condition than if his attachment had not been issued. It would seem to be illogical to accord to the plaintiff the right to attach property fraudulently transferred, and yet to deny him the right to have the lien preserved until he could merge his claim in a judgment, and issue final process for its collection. The court said the case would be different if executions had not been issued upon the fraudulent judgments. That the mere existence of a fraudulent transfer would not be sufficient to authorize a court of equity to entertain an action at the suit of an attaching creditor to set it aside, but that, when it was sought to make use of such a transfer for the purpose of removing the attached property from the jurisdiction of the officer who had it in his custody, it was found that nothing but the equitable arm of the court could prevent the consummation of the wrong.

In Whitney v. Davis, 148 N. Y. 256, 42 N. E. 661, the court said that all the Cauffman Case decided was that special circumstances might exist, and, if shown to exist, that they would authorize the granting of relief at the instance of an attaching creditor, though prior to judgment and execution, in order to preserve the debtor's property in a condition where a recovery by the attaching creditor could be made effective. It was not intended to hold that an equitable action was within the power of the attaching creditor to maintain ordinarily prior to judgment and execution, nor to introduce any innovation upon the settled rule. It was considered, however, that, where the debtor's property was about to be transferred beyond the reach of the sheriff in whose hands it was, a case was presented where the court might properly extend its equitable arm and stay the threatened transfer. It was held that the fraudulent transfer of real estate in the state by one non-resident to another, so as to prevent a levy of an attachment, was not such a circumstance as would authorize, on general equity powers, independent of statute, an action by an attachment creditor, suing on a money demand, to set aside such transfers, before he had established his claim against the debtor.

In Hart v. A. L. Clarke & Co. 127 App. Div. 679, 111 N. Y. Supp. 886, affirmed 194 N. Y. 403, 87 N. E. 808, it was held that an attaching creditor could not, independent of statute, maintain a bill in equity to bring under the lien of his attachment personal property alleged to have been transferred by his debtor to a third person, which was not in possession of the sheriff, and which was not subject to attachment by the sheriff as property capable of manual delivery. The court said that the Caffman Case and the Whitney Case, supra, must be read together, and, when thus read, they were not in conflict. That the Caffman Case had been followed only in those cases where the property which the plaintiff sought to bring under the lien of his attachment was capable of manual delivery to the sheriff by reason of the warrant of attachment under subdivision 2 of § 649 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and actually in his possession under executions alleged to have been issued on judgments fraudulent as against the plaintiff.

In Hart v. A. L. Clarke & Co. supra, it was held that an attachment on property capable of manual delivery will not authorize an action to set aside a transfer of it where it is claimed by a third person, and the statute provides that the plaintiff, by giving an undertaking, may compel the sheriff to retain it until the rights of the parties can be determined in the ordinary way.

In Bates v. Plonsky, 28 Hun, 112, it was said that if the property sought under attachment is of a tangible nature, such as the debtor's stock in trade of boots, shoes, and fixtures, the creditor may maintain an action to secure the priority of his rights under the attachment over an assignment executed by the debtor for the benefit of his creditors, and over other executions issued upon judgments confessed by him in favor of other defendants.

And an action to enjoin a sheriff and fraudulent transferees and fraudulent judgment creditors under confessed judgments from disposing of certain proceeds of a certain judgment until the plaintiffs, as attaching creditors, could obtain judgment on their claims, was held maintainable where the attachments had been levied on tangible property. Tannenbaum v. Rosswog, 22 Abb. N. C. 354, 6 N. Y. Supp. 578. To the same effect, Keller v. Payne, 22 Abb. N. C. 352, note, 1 N. Y. Supp. 148.

But, in Bowe v. Arnold, 31 Hun, 256, affirmed without opinion in 101 N. Y. 652, it was held that creditors, by seizing property claimed to be that of the debtors, could not, by force of their seizure alone, maintain, under the attachment statutes, an action to set aside an alleged fraudulent disposition previously made of it by the debtors. It was said that, to authorize the creditors to maintain such an action, it was necessary under the Code (§ 1871) that they should first recover judgment and cause an execution to be issued thereon and returned unsatisfied.

In the last-mentioned case it was said that it was not intended to be held in Bates v. Plonsky, supra, that creditors seizing property claimed to be that of the debtors could, by force of their seizure alone, maintain an action to set aside an alleged fraudulent disposition made of it by the debtors. All that was held was that the plaintiffs were entitled to enjoin the disposition of the proceeds until the action could be tried for the purpose of determining the conflicting rights of the different parties to such proceeds; and whether the action could be maintained was not a point before the court at that time for determination. All that was then presented and decided was that there was sufficient to enjoin the disposition of the proceeds until a final hearing and determination could be had.

In Mills v. Block, 30 Barb. 552, it was held that a levy under attachment does not give the attachment creditor such a lien as will authorize him to enjoin the disposition of proceeds that might arise through the sale of the debtor's property under an execution on a prior judgment.

In New Hampshire there is also an apparent conflict of opinion.

In Dodge v. Griswold, 8 N. H. 425, the doctrine was enunciated that an attachment bound the land upon which it was levied in such a manner that the creditor would have a right to hold all the interest which the debtor had at the time of the attachment to satisfy his debt, provided he obtained a judgment in the attachment suit, and, within thirty days thereafter, sued out an execution, delivered it to an officer, and caused the land to be seized by virtue thereof. It was said that the attachment gives no present interest in the land, no title passes, no right of possession is acquired, and no title to have the land applied to satisfy the claim. Whether such a right will ever accrue to a creditor depends upon a contingency. If he fail to obtain judgment and to have his extent commence within thirty days after judgment, his title under the attachment is lost. It is therefore said that his claim upon the land is very little, if anything, more than a mere expectancy, the probability of a future title depending upon events that may never happen. And it is held that, under such a state of facts, a bill cannot be sustained.

But, in Stone v. Anderson, 26 N. H. 506, it was held that an attachment levied upon property fraudulently conveyed by the debtor as against the attaching creditor was a sufficient lien thereon to maintain a bill to remove obstructions which the debtor had caused to be placed on the property attached. The court said that, although it had been held in England and New York, and probably in other jurisdictions, that a bill could not be filed to set aside fraudulent conveyances until the creditor had obtained a judgment, yet this doctrine was believed to be founded upon the fact that, where it prevailed, no attachment was made upon mesne process, as in New Hampshire, and no lien obtained on the property until judgment. The judgment operated as a lien, and, as soon as that was obtained, the bill might be filed. It was the lien upon the property which gave the party the right to his bill in equity.

The apparent conflict between these two New Hampshire cases may be explained by the fact that, at the time of the decision of Dodge v. Griswold, supra, it had not been held that an attachment was a lien. See brief in Stone v. Anderson, 26 N. H. 515.

Other courts, however, hold the attachment lien sufficient.

An attachment lien is sufficient to support an action in equity to set aside a fraudulent assignment of the property attached, especially under a statute providing that an attachment can issue only upon due proof of plaintiff's claim, but that, as to third persons, the attaching creditor shall be deemed to be a "purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration." Kahn v. Salmon, 10 Sawy. 183, 20 Fed. 804.

Where a judgment creditor has, by levy of an attachment, obtained a lien upon goods of the debtor, he may enjoin as fraudulent a sale under distress for rent. Cogburn v. Pollock, 54 Miss. 639.

In Montana Nat. Bank v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 19 Mont. 586, 61 Am. St. Rep. 532, 49 Pac. 149, it was held that a court of equity would interfere to protect an attachment lien where proceedings supplemental to execution would have been idle and inadequate.

An attachment lien is a sufficient basis for a bill in equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance. Rainbridge v. Allen, 70 N. J. Eq. 355, 61 Atl. 706.

In Hunt v. Field, 9 N. J. Eq. 36, 57 Am. Dec. 365, an attachment lien was held to be a sufficient lien to support an injunction bill to set aside as fraudulent certain confessed judgments and a conveyance of personal property, and to restrain the defendants from selling or disposing of the property conveyed and levied upon.

The last-mentioned case was followed on this question in Williams v. Michenor, 11 N. J. Eq. 520.

Any attaching creditor having a lien upon the property of his debtor by authority of statute may, prior to the recovery of judgment, maintain an action in equity to enforce his legal right. Robert v. Hodges, 16 N. J. Eq. 299.

Creditors who have filed with the clerk of the court out of which an attachment issued an affidavit of their debt, and who have been admitted by rule as creditors under the attachment, may maintain a bill to reach real estate of which the debtor is alleged to be the real owner. Curry v. Glass, 25 N. J. Eq. 108.

Where a statute provides that a writ of attachment, immediately upon its issue, becomes a lien on the lands of the defendant, and remains so until the debts of the plaintiff in attachment and other applying creditors are satisfied, or a judgment shall pass against them, it was held that a lien acquired by the suing out of the writ was sufficient to entitle the plaintiff in attachment to file a bill in equity to free the subject of his lien from all obstructions his debtor had created in fraud of his creditors. Cocks v. Varney, 45 N. J. Eq. 72, 17 Atl. 108.

In Francis v. Lawrence, 48 N. J. Eq. 508, 22 Atl. 259, it was held that where a creditor had obtained a lien by attachment on the debtor's property, neither the issue and return of execution, nor judgment, was a condition precedent to the maintenance of an equitable action to reach the assets of the debtor. The court said that the reason that the court of chancery would not take cognizance of a claim of a general creditor was that, until such claim had ripened into a judgment, the creditor had no lien to be enforced against the property. The court of chancery, in these cases, came in to aid the law in enforcing the lien, and, to this end, to sweep away any impediment which might have been interposed which would prevent the creditor from enjoying the fruits of his proceedings at law; and issuing a return of an execution unsatisfied was taken by the court as plenary proof, if any was required, not only that the plaintiff had exhausted his legal remedy, but that the defendant was without other property to answer the judgment. An attachment did the same thing. The issuing of an attachment was the resort of the creditor to his legal remedy, and the return of the attachment was a bringing into court of all the property of the defendant. It was there to answer the debt, not only of the plaintiff, but of the applying creditors.

But, in Melville v. Brown, 16 N. J. L. 367, which is out of harmony with the other New Jersey cases on the subject, in holding that an attaching creditor, before he obtains judgment, has no right to call in question the fairness of a judgment against his debtor, Hornblower, Ch. J., said that a judgment was a lien upon land and an execution upon personal property. But the plaintiff in attachment, before judgment, had no such lien. It was true the defendant in attachment could not recover the possession and control of the property without satisfying or securing the plaintiff; not, however, because the plaintiff had a lien, but because the statute had impounded the goods for the double purpose of compelling an appearance by the defendant, and ultimately satisfying the plaintiff, if anything was due him. The plaintiff in attachment, then, acquired no more right to inquire into the fraud of a prior judgment than one who had commenced his suit by capias or summons. He was, after all, only a suitor claiming to be a creditor, who might turn out not to be such; or, if a creditor, might have other resources from which he might receive satisfaction.

Dawson v. Sims, 14 Or. 562, 13 Pac. 506, is one of the leading cases wherein the doctrine is enunciated that an attachment lien is a sufficient basis to entitle a creditor to the aid of equity to set aside fraudulent obstructions to the sale of the property under the attachment or to protect his lien thereon prior to the recovery of the judgment. The court said that, while the property of a debtor ought not to be tied up or disturbed by a court of equity in behalf of a creditor who has not established the validity of his claim, nevertheless, this rule ought to be relaxed if it would be promotive of justice. A matter of practice is not of as much consequence as a proper administration of justice; and, if it appears that the debtor is about to dispose of his property before a judgment at law can be obtained, there can be no injustice, upon attachment proceedings commenced, to tie up the property of such debtor by injunction until the fraudulent impediments can be removed.

A creditor need not wait until his action in which the attachment was issued has ripened into judgment, and an execution thereon has been returned unsatisfied, before beginning his action to reach assets of his debtor which have been transferred for the purpose of defrauding creditors. An attachment lien is a sufficient basis. Bennett v. Minott, 28 Or. 339, 39 Pac. 997, 44 Pac. 288.

To support a creditors' bill, the lien of an attachment is sufficient, and it is not necessary to reduce the claim to judgment, issue an execution, and secure a return nulla bona. Benham v. Ham, 5 Wash. 128, 34 Am. St. Rep. 851, 31 Pac. 459. The court said that where a lien has been obtained by attachment on the property in controversy, and it appears by the bill that the debtor is insolvent, and the issuing of an execution will be of no practical utility, the obtaining of the judgment and the issuance of an execution thereon are not necessary prerequisites to equitable interference.

An attaching creditor, in order to protect his lien on the attached property, is entitled to an injunction restraining the foreclosure of an alleged fraudulent mortgage thereon before a judgment has been rendered in the attachment proceeding. Meacham Arms Co. v. Swarts, 2 Wash. Terr. 412, 7 Pac. 859.

And where, by statute (Rev. Stat. § 3186), every owner and holder of any lien or encumbrance on land is given the same right of action as the owner in fee and possession, to test the liability and validity of any other claim, lien, or encumbrance on such land, or any part thereof, a creditor having, by an attachment, acquired a specific lien upon land fraudulently conveyed, is, by such statute, given the right to maintain a bill in equity to test the validity of the conveyance. Evans v. Laughton, 69 Wis. 138, 33 N. W. 573.

A lien acquired by garnishment before a judgment is a sufficient foundation upon which to invoke equitable jurisdiction to remove fraudulent impediments which may stand in the way of laying hold of the property and applying it to the payment of the demands of attaching creditors. Matlock v. Babb, 31 Or. 516, 49 Pac. 873.

In Chandler v. Dyer, 37 Vt. 345, the court, in holding that an attaching creditor can come into equity to redeem land before judgment and levy, from a prior encumbrance, said that, practically, the attachment differs but little from a mortgage. Like a mortgage, it is no proof of a subsisting debt until adjudicated upon. The mortgagee, like the attaching creditor, is not obliged to resort to the lands mortgaged,—he may collect his debt out of other lands or property of his debtor;—his debt may be paid before a decree of foreclosure expires, and he may never get any legal title to the lands mortgaged. In short, a mortgage, like an attachment, is merely security for a debt. The main differences are that one arises from contract, the other, by proceedings in invitum; the one takes the whole land by foreclosure, if not redeemed; the other, by levy, takes only enough by appraisal to pay the debt; the one has a right to possession upon breach of condition; the other, only until six months after levy of execution. But, whatever the special difference by which the creation or processes of execution are perfected, their main object, their substantial ends, are the same,—the security of the debt.

A complainant who has instituted an attachment suit on a judgment of the United States court of a sister state, and has secured a lien on real estate by prosecuting his attachment suit to judgment, may resort to a court of equity to remove obstructions to the legal title to the property, and to subject the property to the payment of his debt, without first issuing an execution on the judgment, and having it returned nulla bona. Chicago & A. Bridge Co. v. Anglo-American Packing & Provision Co. 46 Fed. 584. The court said that the reason for the rule requiring judgment, etc., was that the claim must be rendered certain; otherwise, the proceeding to vacate the fraudulent transfer of title, and to remove obstacles placed in the way of the successful operation of the execution, might be entirely fruitless, if, after all, the creditor failed to obtain judgment on his claim. In the case at bar, the claim was not only certain, but it had back of it a judgment conclusive and binding; and, under the law of the forum where the attachment suit was instituted, the complainant had secured and fixed his lien upon the real estate. Why should the complainant be compelled to proceed to execution when all the purchaser could obtain by a sale thereunder would be a lawsuit before he could get rid of the legal title of the respondents?

(d) Exhaustion of remedy at law.

(1) In general.

When a creditor has obtained a judgment and taken every step necessary to establish a lien upon property of the debtor which has been fraudulently conveyed to a third person, or fraudulently encumbered, must he do anything more before going into a court of equity for relief? In other words, must he exhaust his remedy at law? When the reason for granting equitable relief as to property subject to levy is kept in mind, this question ought easily to be answered. But the courts have been so careless in stating the rule, even when the decision has been right, that the rule has often been inaccurately or incorrectly given, which, as already pointed out, has led to great confusion and much apparent, as well as actual, conflict in the cases. As stated supra, II., it is only where the creditor seeks to reach property not subject to levy that he is required to exhaust his remedy at law. If this had always been remembered there would have been need for no conflict in the decisions as to the conditions precedent to relief where the property pursued is such as is subject to levy. How the conflict has arisen will appear in the following subdivisions of the note.

In Case v. Beauregard (Case v. New Orleans & C. R. Co.) 101 U. S. 688, 25 L. ed. 1004, it was said that, whenever a creditor has a lien upon property for the debt due him, he may go into equity without exhausting legal process or remedies.

To set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real and personal property levied upon, it is not necessary that the creditor exhaust his legal remedies in his effort to obtain satisfaction of his judgment. Brainard v. Van Kuran, 22 Iowa, 261.

It is not necessary that creditors who are seeking to reach and subject the rights and interests of the debtor in certain real and personal property conveyed by the wife to a trustee, to the payment of their debts, which have been reduced to judgment, and upon which executions have issued, to show that they have exhausted their remedies at law. Hutchinson v. Maxwell, 100 Va. 169, 57 L.R.A. 384, 93 Am. St. Rep. 944, 40 S. E. 655.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Mississippi, a judgment creditor may resort to equity, not only for the purpose of subjecting property to his judgment which cannot be reached by execution, after he has pursued the remedy at law to a return of nulla bona on his execution, but also before he has exhausted his remedy at law, in order to remove obstructions to a fair sale of the property liable to execution. Lewis v. Cline (Miss.) 5 So. 112.

In Smith v. Muirheid, 34 N. J. Eq. 4, it was held that where the complainant comes into equity to obtain its assistance in aid of an attachment lien for the benefit of himself and other creditors, it is not necessary for him to show that the debtor, at the time of the filing of the bill, was insolvent.

In Wadsworth v. Schisselbauer, 32 Minn. 84, 19 N. W. 390, the court said that it had been held that, if an execution had not been returned unsatisfied, an execution must be issued and an action brought in aid of the execution then outstanding; but that the prevailing, and, as the court thought, on principle, the better rule was that the creditor need only proceed at law far enough to acquire a lien upon the property sought to be reached before filing his bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance. The extent to which he must proceed to do this would depend upon the nature of the property. If it were personal, there must be a levy; for, until this was made, he had no lien; if it were real estate, it was enough to obtain judgment and docket it in the county where the lands were situated.

Where a creditor has recovered judgment, sued out execution, and levied it on property in which his debtor has the equitable, but not the legal, estate, he is entitled to the aid of a court of equity to reach such property without going a step further, and compelling the debtor to assign his interest by ca. sa. Perry v. Nixon, 1 Hill, Eq. 335.

But, in Harris v. Taylor, 15 Cal. 348, in referring to an alleged fraudulent conveyance of an interest in ditch property, the court said that the conveyance, however fraudulent as to creditors, was valid as between the parties, and no one could impeach it without showing that he had been injured by it. He must show that he had been deprived of his remedy at law, and was compelled to resort to equity for relief. If the debtor had other property which might be reached by ordinary legal remedies, the court of equity would not interfere. It must be affirmatively shown that such remedies had been exhausted, or that a resort to them would be fruitless and unavailing.

And in Emery v. Yount, 7 Colo. 107, 1 Pac. 686, it was held that a bill to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance of real estate by a debtor, which fails to allege that the debtor is insolvent, or that he has not other property amply sufficient to satisfy plaintiff's judgment, and does not aver that an execution has been issued upon such judgment, or that any effort of any kind has ever been made to procure the satisfaction thereof, is fatally defective.

In Draho v. Kopesky, 132 Iowa, 497, 109 N. W. 1021, it was held that before a creditors' bill to subject real estate in the name of a third person to the satisfaction of a judgment could be maintained, there were at least two prerequisites: One, the insolvency of the judgment defendant; and two, the existence of the judgment lien, or a situation such that it would be established on setting aside the conveyance or sale.

In the absence of insolvency, fraud, or concealment, a creditor cannot, on the theory that he has a right to clear up doubts, make that which is remote or obscure, present, clear, and certain, and ascertain and fix the rights and interests of all persons claiming to own real estate upon which he asserts a lien, certain as a decree in equity can declare them before sale, maintain an action to have the interests of the debtor in certain lands assessed and set apart and subjected to payment of a judgment held by the plaintiff. Kalona Sav. Bank v. East, 133 Iowa, 190, 109 N. W. 887. The court said that the proposition was equivalent to saying that, without any allegation of insolvency, a judgment creditor might fix his eye upon certain real estate, the property in fee simple of his debtor, and respecting which such debtor had done no act in denial of or affecting his title, and might then go into equity and have the title of his debtor in such property bound and quieted by decree before taking any step to subject the same to the payment of his debt. It was held that the bill could not be maintained as a statutory creditors' bill except where the legal remedies had proved ineffectual, or there was an affirmative showing of insolvency.

A distinction is made in some of the cases as between actual fraud and constructive fraud; holding that, in the latter case, the remedy at law must be exhausted after the acquirement of lien.

Where the title of the defendants against whom an action is brought to set aside a conveyance of real estate is not alleged to be fraudulent, it is not enough that the plaintiff has recovered judgment which is a lien upon the property. His remedy at law must be followed up. Towle v. Janvrin, 61 N. H. 605.

In Miller v. Hughes, 33 S. C. 530, 12 S. E. 419, it was held that when a creditor files his complaint to set aside a conveyance for actual moral fraud committed by a combination and collusion of his debtor, who was alleged to be insolvent, with a third person, the failure to allege that he had recovered judgment, and obtained a return of nulla bona of his execution issued to enforce the same, was not fatal to the complaint on demurrer. The court said that fraud was peculiarly a matter of equitable cognizance, and that, when fraud was alleged, and the further allegation was made that such fraud was injurious to the creditor's rights, a court of equity had jurisdiction.

In such a case, the creditor did not ask the aid of equity upon the ground that he could obtain no relief at law, but his claim to the aid of equity was based upon the fraud which had been practised upon him, and from which the court of equity had jurisdiction to relieve him.

In Meinhard Bros. v. Youngblood, 37 S. C. 231, 15 S. E. 950, 16 S. E. 771, the decision in the last-mentioned case was approved, it being held that simple-contract creditors, suing for themselves and other creditors, may set aside attachments upon the ground of actual moral fraud in their inception. To the same effect, Meinhard v. Youngblood, 41 S. C. 312, 19 S. E. 675.

In Dunphy v. Gorman, 29 Ill. App. 132, on a bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate, it was said that a grantee whose title was tainted with fraud had no right to insist that all other means to collect a demand of the debtor should be exhausted before he was disturbed in his title to the real estate fraudulently conveyed to him, since the conveyance was made with the fraudulent intent of defeating creditors, and, in such case, it was void as to the creditor, who had the right to place himself in the same position he would have occupied had it never been made.

For other cases maintaining the necessity of exhaustion of the remedy at law, in addition to those cited under this general subdivision, see supra, II.

(2) Issuance of execution.

The rule adopted in the early New York cases is that, after the lien attaches to the debtor's real estate by judgment, an execution must be issued and placed in the sheriff's hands, after which the bill in equity may be filed. This is on the theory that personal property is the primary fund for the satisfaction of the debt. The execution need not be returned, as the presumption is that the sheriff will do his duty and satisfy the execution out of personal property if he can find it. This rule, that personal property must first be exhausted, is not the equivalent of the rule that the remedy at law must be exhausted, for there might be real estate standing in the name of the debtor, besides the property which he had fraudulently conveyed, and which the creditor was seeking to reach. The rule that the remedy at law must be exhausted would require the creditor to take this real estate and sell it before he could proceed in equity to set aside the fraudulent conveyance of the debtor's other property. The rule that personal property is the primary fund would not require him to do so.

There is no general equity rule, however, requiring the remedy at law to be exhausted as to personal property before the creditor is entitled to proceed against the debtor's real estate. This is not the theory upon which relief is granted. See supra, II. The statutory rule, however, in New York, is that personal property is the primary fund for the satisfaction of an execution. The sheriff is directed to satisfy the writ out of the personal property of the debtor, and, if sufficient personal property cannot be found, to satisfy it out of the debtor's real property. It is probably to clear the way for the execution to act upon the real property fraudulently conveyed, that the New York rule requiring execution to be issued, but not returned, was adopted. If personal property is, by statute, made the primary fund, this rule is sound, because, even if the fraudulent transfer of real estate were set aside, the execution could not be levied if there were personal property out of which it could be satisfied.

The mistake is made in supposing that the requirement that the execution issue is on the theory that the remedy at law must first be exhausted. To require the execution to be returned would be to require the remedy at law to be exhausted; that is, it would compel the sheriff, in lieu of personal property, to levy upon real estate other than that alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed. The execution, if returned, however, can do no harm, for the purpose of issuing the execution, where the creditor seeks to reach real property, is not to perfect the lien, but to get other property. The return, therefore, does not affect the lien, but only shows that there is no other property subject to levy; which, while not a condition precedent to an action to reach realty, would certainly not stand in the way of it.

As to outstanding execution, see supra, III., b, 1, (b), (2) and (3).

Before a judgment creditor is entitled to the aid of equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate, an execution must issue on his judgment, and be placed in the hands of the proper officer for collection, as personal property of the debtor is the primary fund for the payment of the judgment debt, and an execution to reach such property is the regular and known method of ascertaining whether it exists or not. It is presumed that the sheriff does his duty, and will levy upon personal property if it can be found; but, to raise this presumption, the writ must be in his hands. McCullough v. Colby, 5 Bosw. 477.

Where the bill is in aid of an execution at law to set aside an encumbrance of property, made to defraud creditors, an execution must have been issued, and it is not necessary that it should have been returned. Williams v. Hubbard, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 28.

A bill may be sustained as to fraudulent conveyances although the return of the execution was made before the return day, since, for this purpose, it is only necessary to show that execution has been issued. Beach v. White, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 495.

The creditor must exhaust the personal property of the judgment debtor before having recourse to real estate. It is essential to show that an execution has been issued. Buswell v. Lincks, 8 Daly, 518; North American F. Ins. Co. v. Graham, 5 Sandf. 197; Bishop v. Halsey, 3 Abb. Pr. 400; Parshall v. Tillou, 13 How. Pr. 7; Allyn v. Thurston, 53 N. Y. 622; Lichtenburg v. Herdtfel, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

der, 33 Hun, 57, affirmed in 103 N. Y. 302, 8 N. E. 526.

In Fox v. Moyer, 54 N. Y. 125, the court said that, in an action to have a conveyance of real estate declared fraudulent and void as to plaintiff's judgment, it has sometimes been held that the lien of the judgment alone gave the plaintiff his standing in a court of equity, without any execution. But the weight of authority seemed to be that the judgment, with an execution issued and not returned, was necessary to enable the plaintiff in such a case to maintain his action.

In Mechanics' & T. Bank v. Dakin, 51 N. Y. 519, the court said that where the debtor possessed property which, in its nature, was liable to seizure on sale upon execution, but that, by fraudulent encumbrances upon the same, the execution could not be enforced, the aid of the court of chancery was invoked to remove the encumbrances, that the process of the law might be effectually enforced in such case. It was indispensable that the execution should have been issued, but not that it should have been returned. Its return would be fatal to the relief sought.

In Adsit v. Butler, 87 N. Y. 585, a judgment creditor was held not entitled to equitable relief against the real property of a judgment debtor which had been fraudulently conveyed, until an execution had been issued upon the judgment, and an effort made to collect the same out of the property of such debtor. The court said that the execution must have been issued and returned unsatisfied, or must have been outstanding.

The last-mentioned case, on account of some general expressions used in the argument, has been supposed to hold that the remedy at law must be exhausted before an appeal can be made to equity. If this is what the court meant, what was said in that respect was obiter, for the question was whether relief could be granted where no execution had been issued.

In Easton Nat. Bank v. Buffalo Chemical Works, 48 Hun, 557, 1 N. Y. Supp. 250, it was held that an action to vacate a judgment which prevents plaintiff's judgments from becoming valuable liens upon the real estate of the debtor could not be maintained unless execution had been issued on the judgments, and was outstanding at the time the action was commenced, or had been returned unsatisfied.

The distinction between the issuance of an execution for the purpose of exhausting the remedy at law, and its issuance for the purpose of perfecting the lien, or of putting the creditor in position to sell the property when equity shall have cleared the title, should be kept in mind.

In Freedman's Sav. & T. Co. v. Earle, 110 U. S. 710, 28 L. ed. 301, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 226, it was said that, if the object of a bill is to obtain satisfaction of a judgment by a sale of the equitable estate, it must be alleged that execution has been issued. This requirement is not based wholly upon the ground of showing that the judgment cred itor has exhausted his remedy at law, for, if so, it would be necessary to show a return of the execution unsatisfied, which, however, is not essential. The execution, however, must be sued out, for, if the estate sought to be subjected is a legal estate, and subject to be taken on execution, the ground of the jurisdiction in equity is merely to aid the legal right by removing obstructions in the way of its enforcement at law. If the estate is equitable merely, and therefore not subject to be levied on by an execution at law, the judgment creditor is bound, nevertheless, to put himself in the same position as if the estate were legal; because the action of the court converts the estate so as to make it subject to the execution, as if it were legal. The ground of the jurisdiction, therefore, is not that of a lien or charge arising by virtue of the judgment itself, but of an equity to enforce satisfaction of the judgment by means of an equitable execution. And this it effects by a sale of the debtor's interest, subject to prior encumbrances, or, according to circumstances, of the whole estate, for distribution of the proceeds of sale among all the encumbrancers, according to the order in which they may be entitled to participate.

In Weightman v. Hatch, 17 Ill. 281, it was held not necessary for a creditor to have issued an execution before proceeding in equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of land. The court said that, the grantee's title being tainted by fraud, he had no right to say that all other means to satisfy the debt should be exhausted before he could be disturbed in his title.

And, in McCalmont v. Lawrence, 1 Blatchf. 232, Fed. Cas. No. 8,676, it was held that chancery has jurisdiction of a bill filed by a judgment creditor for relief against a conveyance of land by his debtor, made with intent to defeat the judgment lien, or to hinder or delay satisfaction of the judgment, whether execution has been issued thereon or not.

(3) Return of execution.

If the lien can be acquired only by execution or by execution and levy, and the lien has, in this manner, been perfected, must the execution be returned? The idea that execution should be returned nulla bona before a creditor may reach property subject to levy by an equitable action can arise only on the supposition that the remedy at law must first be exhausted before the court can interfere. As already stated, all the conflict and confusion in the cases on this question comes from failure to distinguish between the theory upon which relief is granted in this class of cases. The fallacy of the position that the remedy at law must always be exhausted before coming into equity is well shown when the effect of the return of execution on the life of the lien on personal property subject to levy is considered. See supra, III., b. 1, (b), (3). The dilemma in which the creditor is left by the rule that the remedy must be exhausted is this: He must have a lien to maintain his action. If he must exhaust his remedy at law,—the proof of his having done so being the return of execution unsatisfied,—what is he to do? If he has the execution returned, he loses his lien; therefore his action fails. If he does not have his execution returned, he saves his lien, but does not exhaust his remedy at law; therefore his action fails. So, whether he takes one course or the other, the creditor is bound to be turned out of court. Of course, the answer is that he is not bound to exhaust his remedy at law, and that the courts which hold that execution must be returned unsatisfied before the creditor can reach property subject to levy have misconstrued the fundamental principle upon which relief is granted in this class of cases.

In Logan v. Logan, 22 Fla. 561, 1 Am. St. Rep. 212, it was held that the return of an execution unsatisfied is unnecessary when the creditor seeks the aid of a court of equity for the satisfaction of a judgment out of the property of his debtor, the title to which property has been in the debtor, but has been fraudulently transferred, it being sufficient for the creditor to show a judgment at law and execution to entitle him to resort to equity to vacate such fraudulent conveyance.

A bill not filed for the purpose of reaching equitable assets not subject to levy and sale, but for the purpose of removing an obstruction which the complainant alleges has been fraudulently interposed to prevent a levy and sale of the property of the defendant in the judgment, which is subject to be seized and sold under execution in satisfaction of the judgment lien, may be maintained without a return of the execution nulla bona. Stephens v. Beal, 4 Ga. 319.

In Dillman v. Nadelhoffer, 162 Ill. 625, 45 N. E. 680, it was said to be well settled by the decisions of the courts of Illinois that a bill in equity to remove a fraudulent conveyance out of the way of an execution might be filed as soon as judgment was rendered, and without waiting until execution was returned. To the same effect are Andrews v. Donnerstag, 171 Ill. 329, 49 N. E. 558, affirming 70 Ill. App. 236; Scott v. Aultman Co. 211 Ill. 612, 103 Am. St. Rep. 215, 71 N. E. 1112, affirming 113 Ill. App. 581; Binnie v. Walker, 25 Ill. App. 82; Lane v. Union Nat. Bank, 75 Ill. App. 299, affirmed in 177 Ill. 171, 69 Am. St. Rep. 216, 52 N. E. 361; First Nat. Bank v. Chapman, 77 Ill. App. 105; Wisconsin Granite Co. v. Gerrity, 144 Ill. 77, 33 N. E. 31; Mohawk Bank v. Atwater, 2 Paige, 54.

The fact that executions, issued before the bill was filed to reach real estate, were not levied until one day after the bill was filed, was held not to affect the complainant's right to maintain the action. Redden v. Potter, 16 Ill. App. 265. The court said that the principle to be deduced from the cases was that the complainant must have tion. The sheriff is directed to satisfy the writ out of the personal property of the debtor, and, if sufficient personal property cannot be found, to satisfy it out of the debtor's real property. It is probably to clear the way for the execution to act upon the real property fraudulently conveyed, that the New York rule requiring execution to be issued, but not returned, was adopted. If personal property is, by statute, made the primary fund, this rule is sound, because, even if the fraudulent transfer of real estate were set aside, the execution could not be levied if there were personal property out of which it could be satisfied.

The mistake is made in supposing that the requirement that the execution issue is on the theory that the remedy at law must first be exhausted. To require the execution to be returned would be to require the remedy at law to be exhausted; that is, it would compel the sheriff, in lieu of personal property, to levy upon real estate other than that alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed. The execution, if returned, however, can do no harm, for the purpose of issuing the execution, where the creditor seeks to reach real property, is not to perfect the lien, but to get other property. The return, therefore, does not affect the lien, but only shows that there is no other property subject to levy; which, while not a condition precedent to an action to reach realty, would certainly not stand in the way of it.

As to outstanding execution, see supra, III., b, 1, (b), (2) and (3).

Before a judgment creditor is entitled to the aid of equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate, an execution must issue on his judgment, and be placed in the hands of the proper officer for collection, as personal property of the debtor is the primary fund for the payment of the judgment debt, and an execution to reach such property is the regular and known method of ascertaining whether it exists or not. It is presumed that the sheriff does his duty, and will levy upon personal property if it can be found; but, to raise this presumption, the writ must be in his hands. McCullough v. Colby, 5 Bosw. 477.

Where the bill is in aid of an execution at law to set aside an encumbrance of property, made to defraud creditors, an execution must have been issued, and it is not necessary that it should have been returned. Williams v. Hubbard, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 28.

A bill may be sustained as to fraudulent conveyances although the return of the execution was made before the return day, since, for this purpose, it is only necessary to show that execution has been issued. Beach v. White, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 495.

The creditor must exhaust the personal property of the judgment debtor before having recourse to real estate. It is essential to show that an execution has been issued. Buswell v. Lincks, 8 Daly, 518; North American F. Ins. Co. v. Graham, 5 Sandf. 197; Bishop v. Halsey, 3 Abb. Pr. 400; Parshall v. Tillou, 13 How. Pr. 7; Allyn v. Thurston, 53 N. Y. 622; Lichtenburg v. Herdtfeld, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

der, 33 Hun, 57, affirmed in 103 N. Y. 302, 8 N. E. 526.

In Fox v. Moyer, 54 N. Y. 125, the court said that, in an action to have a conveyance of real estate declared fraudulent and void as to plaintiff's judgment, it has sometimes been held that the lien of the judgment alone gave the plaintiff his standing in a court of equity, without any execution. But the weight of authority seemed to be that the judgment, with an execution issued and not returned, was necessary to enable the plaintiff in such a case to maintain his action.

In Mechanics' & T. Bank v. Dakin, 51 N. Y. 519, the court said that where the debtor possessed property which, in its nature, was liable to seizure on sale upon execution, but that, by fraudulent encumbrances upon the same, the execution could not be enforced, the aid of the court of chancery was invoked to remove the encumbrances, that the process of the law might be effectually enforced in such case. It was indispensable that the execution should have been issued, but not that it should have been returned. Its return would be fatal to the relief sought.

In Adsit v. Butler, 87 N. Y. 585, a judgment creditor was held not entitled to equitable relief against the real property of a judgment debtor which had been fraudulently conveyed, until an execution had been issued upon the judgment, and an effort made to collect the same out of the property of such debtor. The court said that the execution must have been issued and returned unsatisfied, or must have been outstanding.

The last-mentioned case, on account of some general expressions used in the argument, has been supposed to hold that the remedy at law must be exhausted before an appeal can be made to equity. If this is what the court meant, what was said in that respect was obiter, for the question was whether relief could be granted where no execution had been issued.

In Easton Nat. Bank v. Buffalo Chemical Works, 48 Hun, 557, 1 N. Y. Supp. 250, it was held that an action to vacate a judgment which prevents plaintiff's judgments from becoming valuable liens upon the real estate of the debtor could not be maintained unless execution had been issued on the judgments, and was outstanding at the time the action was commenced, or had been returned unsatisfied.

The distinction between the issuance of an execution for the purpose of exhausting the remedy at law, and its issuance for the purpose of perfecting the lien, or of putting the creditor in position to sell the property when equity shall have cleared the title, should be kept in mind.

In Freedman's Sav. & T. Co. v. Earle, 110 U. S. 710, 28 L. ed. 301, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 226, it was said that, if the object of a bill is to obtain satisfaction of a judgment by a sale of the equitable estate, it must be alleged that execution has been issued. This requirement is not based wholly upon the ground of showing that the judgment cred itor has exhausted his remedy at law, for, if so, it would be necessary to show a return of the execution unsatisfied, which, however, is not essential. The execution, however, must be sued out, for, if the estate sought to be subjected is a legal estate, and subject to be taken on execution, the ground of the jurisdiction in equity is merely to aid the legal right by removing obstructions in the way of its enforcement at law. If the estate is equitable merely, and therefore not subject to be levied on by an execution at law, the judgment creditor is bound, nevertheless, to put himself in the same position as if the estate were legal; because the action of the court converts the estate so as to make it subject to the execution, as if it were legal. The ground of the jurisdiction, therefore, is not that of a lien or charge arising by virtue of the judgment itself, but of an equity to enforce satisfaction of the judgment by means of an equitable execution. And this it effects by a sale of the debtor's interest, subject to prior encumbrances, or, according to circumstances, of the whole estate, for distribution of the proceeds of sale among all the encumbrancers, according to the order in which they may be entitled to participate.

In Weightman v. Hatch, 17 Ill. 281, it was held not necessary for a creditor to have issued an execution before proceeding in equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of land. The court said that, the grantee's title being tainted by fraud, he had no right to say that all other means to satisfy the debt should be exhausted before he could be disturbed in his title.

And, in McCalmont v. Lawrence, 1 Blatchf. 232, Fed. Cas. No. 8,676, it was held that chancery has jurisdiction of a bill filed by a judgment creditor for relief against a conveyance of land by his debtor, made with intent to defeat the judgment lien, or to hinder or delay satisfaction of the judgment, whether execution has been issued thereon or not.

(3) Return of execution.

If the lien can be acquired only by execution or by execution and levy, and the lien has, in this manner, been perfected, must the execution be returned? The idea that execution should be returned nulla bona before a creditor may reach property subject to levy by an equitable action can arise only on the supposition that the remedy at law must first be exhausted before the court can interfere. As already stated, all the conflict and confusion in the cases on this question comes from failure to distinguish between the theory upon which relief is granted in this class of cases. The fallacy of the position that the remedy at law must always be exhausted before coming into equity is well shown when the effect of the return of execution on the life of the lien on personal property subject to levy is considered. See supra, III., b. 1, (b), (3). The dilemma in which the creditor is left by the rule that the remedy must be exhausted is this: He must have a lien to maintain his action. If he must exhaust his remedy at law,—the proof of his having done so being the return of execution unsatisfied,—what is he to do? If he has the execution returned, he loses his lien; therefore his action fails. If he does not have his execution returned, he saves his lien, but does not exhaust his remedy at law; therefore his action fails. So, whether he takes one course or the other, the creditor is bound to be turned out of court. Of course, the answer is that he is not bound to exhaust his remedy at law, and that the courts which hold that execution must be returned unsatisfied before the creditor can reach property subject to levy have misconstrued the fundamental principle upon which relief is granted in this class of cases.

In Logan v. Logan, 22 Fla. 561, 1 Am. St. Rep. 212, it was held that the return of an execution unsatisfied is unnecessary when the creditor seeks the aid of a court of equity for the satisfaction of a judgment out of the property of his debtor, the title to which property has been in the debtor, but has been fraudulently transferred, it being sufficient for the creditor to show a judgment at law and execution to entitle him to resort to equity to vacate such fraudulent conveyance.

A bill not filed for the purpose of reaching equitable assets not subject to levy and sale, but for the purpose of removing an obstruction which the complainant alleges has been fraudulently interposed to prevent a levy and sale of the property of the defendant in the judgment, which is subject to be seized and sold under execution in satisfaction of the judgment lien, may be maintained without a return of the execution nulla bona. Stephens v. Beal, 4 Ga. 319.

In Dillman v. Nadelhoffer, 162 Ill. 625, 45 N. E. 680, it was said to be well settled by the decisions of the courts of Illinois that a bill in equity to remove a fraudulent conveyance out of the way of an execution might be filed as soon as judgment was rendered, and without waiting until execution was returned. To the same effect are Andrews v. Donnerstag, 171 Ill. 329, 49 N. E. 558, affirming 70 Ill. App. 236; Scott v. Aultman Co. 211 Ill. 612, 103 Am. St. Rep. 215, 71 N. E. 1112, affirming 113 Ill. App. 581; Binnie v. Walker, 25 Ill. App. 82; Lane v. Union Nat. Bank, 75 Ill. App. 299, affirmed in 177 Ill. 171, 69 Am. St. Rep. 216, 52 N. E. 361; First Nat. Bank v. Chapman, 77 Ill. App. 105; Wisconsin Granite Co. v. Gerrity, 144 Ill. 77, 33 N. E. 31; Mohawk Bank v. Atwater, 2 Paige, 54.

The fact that executions, issued before the bill was filed to reach real estate, were not levied until one day after the bill was filed, was held not to affect the complainant's right to maintain the action. Redden v. Potter, 16 Ill. App. 265. The court said that the principle to be deduced from the cases was that the complainant must have Burdsall v. Waggoner, 4 Colo. 256. This was said with reference to an action to reach real estate.

In Kentucky it has been uniformly held that the return of execution unsatisfied is a condition precedent to equitable relief in this class of cases.

In Wickliffe v. Lyon, 5 J. J. Marsh. 84, the court said that the doctrine is too well settled to permit it to be doubted that fraudulent conveyances are obligatory on the grantor, and are bad as to two descriptions of persons only,—purchasers for a valuable consideration without notice, and creditors; and that, to enable a creditor, as such, to procure a decree canceling deeds of conveyance as fraudulent, he must, if his demand is purely legal, show his judgment and execution returned no property found.

A bill to restrain a debtor from making fraudulent transfers of his property and choses in action cannot be maintained before the creditor has obtained judgment and has had execution returned nulla bona. Wooley v. Stone, 7 J. J. Marsh. 302.

In Halbert v. Grant, 4 T. B. Mon. 580, it was held that a bill to set aside transfers of land, slaves, and other estate of the debtor could not be maintained where it was not shown that any execution was issued on the judgments and returned unsatisfied. The court said that the rule was so well settled that a creditor must not only obtain a judgment, but issue execution and procure its return in a case where his demand was purely legal, before he could apply to a court of equity for redress against fraudulent encumbrances on the estate of the debtor, that it need not discuss the subject nor review the cases where the principle had been adjudicated.

The doctrine that a return nulla bona must be alleged and shown before a court of equity will entertain a petition to set aside a voluntary or fraudulent conveyance of real estate in order to satisfy a legal demand was said by the court, in Martz v. Pfeifer, 80 Ky. 600, to be too well settled in Kentucky to admit of controversy.

Suits in equity by creditors to set aside fraudulent conveyances by their debtor, if commenced before a judgment has been recovered and an execution has been issued and returned nulla bona, are premature and cannot be maintained. Napper v. Yager, 79 Ky. 241.

Where the demand is purely a legal one, the creditor cannot invoke the aid of a court of equity to assail as fraudulent a conveyance made by his debtor, or one made by a third person at the debtor's instance, of property really belonging to him, save in two ways. He must first obtain a judgment and a return nulla bona; or, if he desires to proceed against the property at the outset, then he can do so only by suing out and prosecuting an attachment, as provided by the Code of Practice. Kyle v. O'Neil, 88 Ky. 127, 10 S. W. 275.

A petition to reach real estate transferred by the debtor to his wife, on the ground that such conveyances were voluntary, cannot be maintained, where it fails to show that the creditor has exhausted his remedy at law by obtaining judgment, suing out execution, and having a return of no property found. Evans v. Reay, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 193.

Before a creditor can maintain an action in equity to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, he must have a judgment against his debtor, and a return of no property. Cundiff v. Bross, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 893; Disney v. Sawyers, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 896; Hill v. Cannon, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 591; Brewer v. Hill, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 329; Meyer v. Ruff, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 254, 16 S. W. 84.

A creditor has no right to proceed against his debtor's debtor otherwise than as garnishee until after the latter has failed to make a response satisfactory to the plaintiff, unless the plaintiff proceeds upon a judgment and execution returned no property found as to all or part of his debt. Brown v. Ferguson, 5 Ky. L. Rep. 420.

A return of no property must, in the absence of grounds for attachment, be alleged and shown before a court of equity will entertain a petition to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent. Buckler v. Wells, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 78.

Prior to the act of 1896, a fraudulent conveyance could not be set aside by a creditor unless he had procured an attachment, or had execution on the judgment returned nulla bona. Johnson v. Bonfield, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 300, 40 S. W. 697.

In an action to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance, and subject the property conveyed to satisfy the plaintiff's debt against the grantor, when no attachment on the ground of nonresidence has been levied, a general demurrer should be sustained to the petition if there has not been previously a personal judgment against the debtor, and an execution thereon returned "no property found." Beadles v. Jones, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 986, 7 S. W. 916.

Creditors who have not shown themselves to be creditors by judgment and execution are not entitled to impeach in equity a deed of real estate on the ground that it is fraudulent. Allen v. Camp, 1 T. B. Mon. 231, 15 Am. Dec. 109.

In Howe v. Whitney, 66 Me. 17, an action was brought by a judgment creditor who had had an execution issued, but not placed in the hands of a sheriff, to set aside a transfer of real estate as fraudulent. It was held that, in the absence of a return nulla bona, the action could not be maintained. In this case, after the judgment, the debtor died, and eight months afterwards an alias execution was issued and returned unsatisfied. The court said that the judgment creditor could not enforce the execution against his deceased debtor. Nor could it be made to appear by the return of an officer eight months after the death of the judgment debtor that the execution could not have been collected from him while living, unless a return that no property of the deceased debtor could be found to satisfy the execution, eight months after his decease.

is to be deemed equivalent to the return nulla bona in an execution against one in full life and vigor.

In Brown v. Bank of Mississippi, 31 Miss. 454, it was said that it would be universally agreed that a creditor could not go into a court of equity to subject equitable assets or choses in action of his debtor to the payment of his debt until he had first obtained a judgment at law upon his debt, and issued execution, and had a return nulla bona; and that the same rule was well established with regard to a creditor proceeding to subject the property alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed.

The rule is the same in South Carolina. In Verner v. Downs, 13 S. C. 449, it was held that execution and return nulla bona were conditions precedent to a right of the creditor to maintain a bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate. The court said that it was only when the creditor had exhausted his legal remedy without satisfying his debt that he could demand the aid of a court of equity. The highest evidence of the exhaustion of such remedy was the record evidence offered by the return of the sheriff upon the execution. The plaintiff, in producing such return of nulla bona, was not required to give independent proof of the insolvency of his debtor. Enjoying the advantages arising from the simplicity and inexpensiveness of this means of exhibiting the condition of his debtor's estate, it was unreasonable to permit him to disregard these simple means of proof, and cast upon the court and the party the onerous issue of the insolvency of the defendant on general evidence. Hence it was that the courts of equity have held as a rule of convenience, founded on the clearest reason and equity, that the plaintiff must issue his execution and procure its return before applying to the court of equity for aid.

In McMahan v. Dawkins, 22 S. C. 314, it was held that an action to set aside a debtor's voluntary conveyance of real estate could not be maintained unless the creditor had exhausted his legal remedies. The court said that this was the only ground upon which he could come into equity, and that, while it was not necessary to allege in the complaint a return nulla bona, yet that was sufficient evidence of the fact that all legal remedies had been exhausted. It was, too, one of the probative facts which showed the necessity under which the plaintiff was to resort to the property covered by the deed which he sought to set aside, and it was the foundation for the charge of legal fraud on account of which such deeds were frequently assailed. It must appear, therefore, in the evidence, or the action would fail.

In Compton v. Patterson, 28 S. C. 152, 5 S. E. 470, it was held that a return of execution nulla bona was necessary to the maintenance of an action to set aside a transfer of real estate alleged to have been purchased by the debtor, and transferred to his wife and children.

In Ryttenberg v. Keels, 39 S. C. 203, 17 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

S. E. 441, the rule was recognized that only a creditor who has sued out execution on his judgment, and had the same returned nulla bona, is in a position to maintain a bill in equity to set aside a fraudulent assignment for creditors by his debtor, and subject the assigned property to the payment of his judgment.

In Rose v. Lloyd, 1 Clark (Pa.) 333, it was held that a discovery of personal property would not be compelled until an execution has been issued and returned nulla bona.

In Beidler v. Douglas, 35 Ill. App. 124, it was said that, in order to sustain a creditors' bill to reach the property of the debtor in the hands of a third person, the existence of a judgment and the return of an execution unsatisfied are essential jurisdictional facts; and, unless they are made to appear in some manner, a court of equity is without authority to grant relief. In this case there was no judgment, so that the decision is correct; but the general rule stated is not in accord with the Illinois decisions.

In Brown v. John V. Farwell Co. 74 Fed. 764, it was held that the issuance of an execution was a condition precedent to an action to set aside the fraudulent transfer of real and personal property. The court said that the great weight of authority was to the effect that the creditor should have issued execution and had it returned nulla bona before bringing his bill to reach the assets of the debtor.

The rule that the jurisdiction of chancery to subject equitable interests in realty to the satisfaction of a judgment was originally strictly ancillary, and depended upon the exhaustion of the legal remedy, was relaxed in Tennessee, in the cases of M'Nairy v. Eastland, 10 Yerg. 310; Stark v. Cheatham, 2 Tenn. Ch. 300.

In M'Nairy v. Eastland, supra, it was held that where a creditor sought to reach real estate, the legal title to which was in a third person, but the equitable estate of which was in the debtor, the issuance and return of execution were unnecessary. The court said that, as a question affecting merely the jurisdiction of a court of chancery, it was believed that the principle, traced to its origin, would be found to be this: that a creditor who went into a court of chancery to obtain satisfaction of a merely legal demand must show that he had proceeded to such extent at law as to give him title to proceed in equity; that, in the earlier cases, it seemed to have been held necessary that, if satisfaction was sought to be obtained out of the equitable title in personal assets, there must be not only a judgment, but an execution issued and put in the hands of the sheriff in the county where the equitable assets were situated. The actual issuance of the execution and its reception by the sheriff in the proper county were necessary to give a lien, and the lien authorized the party having it to go into chancery. So, if a creditor sought to obtain satisfaction of his legal demand in a court of equity, but that he may proceed in the first instance to set aside the fraudulent conveyance and reach that particular property, and it would be no defense to an action of that kind by a creditor to set forth that there was other property available, without the aid of equity, sufficient to discharge the indebtedness.

The right of a creditor to subject to the payment of his debt the property of his debtor fraudulently conveyed does not depend upon the question of the insolvency of the debtor. Halfpenny v. Tate (W. Va.) 64 S. E. 28. The court said that insolvency was often an element going to show fraud, but that the creditor's right to pursue the property fraudulently conveyed was not controlled thereby. While a different rule might prevail in different jurisdictions, it was not the law of West Virginia, that the creditor must first exhaust the debtor's other property. The statute of West Virginia against fraudulent conveyances gave an absolute right to creditors to a suit in equity to annul a fraudulent conveyance, and they were not compelled first to subject other property of the debtor to execution or otherwise.

On the contrary, in Meux v. Anthony, 11 Ark. 411, 52 Am. Dec. 274, an action to set aside the sale of negroes as fraudulent, the court, after showing the necessity of judgments as a preliminary step to equitable relief, said obiter that it was but just that the creditor should show also that he had failed in the ordinary mode of collection to make his debt, and that, independent of the property so conveyed in fraud of his rights, there was not sufficient to satisfy his debt. For, if there was other property sufficient for that purpose, it was an act of capricious intermeddling with the contracts of others to permit him to interfere to set it aside. As between the vendee and vendor, the contract was valid, and he who came to rescind it and take from the possession of the vendee the property so purchased, on the ground that he was a creditor whose rights were affected by such transfer, must show that he had a debt adjudged to be due him, and that, after having resorted to the ordinary process for that purpose, he had failed to make his debt; or he must by distinct averments and allegations show such circumstances as would excuse him for having failed to do so.

In Stephens v. Parvin, 33 Colo. 60, 78 Pac. 688, the court said that the rule regarding an allegation of insolvency was based upon the proposition that if a debtor was solvent, he might do with his property what he would, unless by conveying it he rendered himself insolvent; and the purchaser or donee of the property should not be subjected to litigation if the debtor had other property out of which the creditor could be paid.

And in Baugh v. Boles, 35 Ind. 524, it was held that an action by a surety in which he asks judgment for the amount he was compelled to pay on the bond of his principal, and that a transfer of real estate by the latter to his infant child be set aside as fraudulent, cannot be maintained where it is not shown that the principal had not and has not property out of which the debt can be made without interfering with the property conveyed to the infant; and an allegation that at the time of the transfer the principal was greatly involved in debt, and had not sufficient means to pay, does not sufficiently show the necessity of selling the land.

In Morgan v. Olvey, 53 Ind. 6, it was held that one seeking to set aside an alleged fraudulent transfer of real estate must show that the debtor did not have other property subject to levy and sale with which his judgment might have been satisfied, in order to make the necessity of resorting to the property in question proper.

In Brucker v. Kelsey, 72 Ind. 51, the court said that the same reason on which the rule was founded which required it to be averred that the grantor in an alleged fraudulent conveyance had not other property at the time of the conveyance, out of which the debt could be made, required a corresponding averment in reference to the time of the commencement of the action. The court said that the conveyance was valid between the parties thereto, and third parties were not allowed to attack it unless it was necessary to do so in order that justice be done. If there was other property in the hands of the debtor when the conveyance was made, ample to pay all his debts, or if, when the suit was commenced, he had other property subject to sale on execution, out of which the plaintiff's debt could be made, justice did not require or permit that the conveyance be set aside in order that resort might be had to the real estate so conveyed. The principal rule of pleading was that the complaint show affirmatively a complete right to resort to the land for the satisfaction of the debt, and that could not be unless, when made, the conveyance was fraudulent as against creditors, and unless the right of action which then arose was shown to continue to exist at the time when the suit was brought.

In a suit by a creditor to set aside a conveyance of property on the ground that it was made to defraud creditors, an averment, at the time the suit was brought, that the debtor had no property out of which the debt might be collected, or an averment equivalent thereto, is material and necessary, and its omission is fatal. Brumbaugh v. Richcreek, 127 Ind. 240, 22 Am. St. Rep. 647, 26 N. E. 664. The court said that a creditor was not authorized to interfere with any disposition which his debtor might make of his property so long as he was not injured thereby. The debtor might convey his property with the intention of defrauding his creditors, but, if he still retained property subject to execution out of which the debt might be collected, the creditor could not complain. So, also, if the debtor conveyed all his property with like fraudulent purpose, retaining nothing, but, when the creditor sought to collect the debt of him, he had acquired and had property subject to execution from which the claim could be made, the creditor had no ground for interfering with the fraudulent conveyance.

Plaintiff must show in such a case not only that the grantor in such conveyance had no other property subject to execution at the date of the conveyance, but that he had no such property at the time of the commencement of the action and filing of the complaint. Taylor v. Johnson, 113 Ind. 164, 15 N. E. 238; Winstandley v. Stipp, 132 Ind. 548, 32 N. E. 302; Slagle v. Hoover, 137 Ind. 314, 36 N. E. 1099; Vansickle v. Shenk, 150 Ind. 413, 50 N. E. 381.

So, an omission to find facts showing that the grantor had no property other than the land out of which the debt sued for might have been made, either at the time of the conveyance, or from that time up to the time the suit was brought, was held fatal to a judgment setting aside a conveyance of real estate at the suit of the creditor. Hartlepp v. Whiteley, 129 Ind. 576, 131 Ind. 543, 28 N. E. 535, 31 N. E. 203.

And a complaint failing to allege that the fraudulent grantor had no property subject to execution at the time the suit was brought is fatal. Line v. State, 131 Ind. 468, 30 N. E. 703; Jackson v. Sayler, 30 Ind. App. 72, 63 N. E. 881.

In Parrott v. Crawford, 5 Ind. Terr. 103, 82 S. W. 688, it was held that the defendant who, by way of cross relief, seeks to have a conveyance to plaintiff set aside as fraudulent, must aver that the indebtedness was contracted prior to the alleged fraudulent conveyance, and that the debtor is insolvent, and that he had no property subject to execution at the time the suit was commenced.

It was said in Hill v. Denney, 106 Iowa, 726, 77 N. W. 472, that, if it is the rule that an attachment creditor, before judgment, may under some circumstances proceed in equity to remove encumbrances from real estate, he must at least show that the relief which the action at law would afford would not be adequate, and that, where there was nothing in the petition to justify the conclusion that the interest of the debtor in the land subject to the mortgage was not sufficient to satisfy the claims of the plaintiffs, or that they might not be satisfied from other property owned by him, it was held to be insufficient.

In Riddick v. Parr, 111 Iowa, 733, 82 N. W. 1002, it was said to be a familiar rule of the law that, unless a judgment debtor was insolvent, the judgment creditor might not invoke the aid of equity to set aside an alleged fraudulent deed of real estate.

A bill in equity to set aside a fraudulent encumbrance or conveyance of real estate by a debtor cannot be maintained until it has first been ascertained that, at the date of the institution of such proceeding, the alleged fraudulent grantor was not, outside of the property so conveyed, possessed of sufficient estate which could be seized for the satisfaction of the claim in question. If the payment of such claim can be enforced without resort to a court of equity to have a trust declared, or conveyance of real estate set aside as fraudulent, resort to that court is not proper. Therefore, where there is no showing on such a bill at the time of its filing that the deceased did not have ample means subject to execution with which to satisfy in full the claims of all his creditors, equity will not entertain jurisdiction of the bill. Bradley v. Larkin, 5 Kan. App. 11, 47 Pac. 315.

In Smith v. Ratcliff, 1 Ky. L. Rep. 316, it was said that the ordinary legal remedies must be resorted to by a creditor without success, before he is entitled to resort to equity to reach real estate.

In Martz v. Pfeifer, 80 Ky. 600, the court said that one of the principal reasons for the chancellor disclaiming jurisdiction where the demand against the debtor was purely legal was that the remedy at law was ample for coercing payment and that, the conveyance being good as between the parties to it, that remedy must be exhausted before the rights of third parties would be interfered with for the purpose of satisfying the creditor's demand. This was an action to reach property subject to execution.

In Zimmerman v. Fitch, 28 La. Ann. 454, it was held that an action to annul an alleged fraudulent sale of the debtor's goods could not be maintained where, among other things, it appeared that it was not alleged in the petition that there was not property enough of the debtor's left to pay the plaintiff's claim. Citing Civil Code, art. 1972 (1967) and art. 1971 (1996).

In Morsell v. Baden, 22 Md. 391, it was held that, before a creditor could vacate a deed of manumission, he must have exhausted the real and personal estate of the debtor, and have shown its insufficiency for the payment of the debts.

In Dunham v. Cox, 10 N. J. Eq. 437, 64 Am. Dec. 460, it was held that a creditor could not have a conveyance of property made for the purpose of defeating his judgment set aside if the debtor was still in possession, and was still the owner of property enough to satisfy the judgment, which had been levied upon and was at the disposal of the sheriff, since the assistance of a court of equity was not necessary to aid the complainant in his legal remedy to obtain satisfaction of his judgment.

A creditors' bill to reach property fraudulently conveyed is defective if it simply alleges that the execution was returned "no personal property out of which to be collected," if the bill contains no allegation that there is no real estate on which to levy. Bayley v. Bayley, 66 N. J. Eq. 84, 57 Atl. 271. The court said that, if the debtor had other property subject to a judgment and execution sufficient to satisfy the debt, there was no necessity for the creditor to resort to equity. If his debt could be satisfied out of the property upon which his judgment was a lien, it was inviting only useless litigation for him to question con-reached by an execution, an execution must be issued upon the judgment, for the purpose of making the amount upon the property of the debtor liable to execution, if such might be found, and returned unsatisfied if none could be found. This was a necessary preliminary. All the cases agreed that no such bill could be sustained until the remedy at law had been exhausted by the return of an execution unsatisfied.

In Schofield v. Ute Coal & Coke Co. 92 Fed. 269, the court said that one class of cases in which equitable relief will be afforded includes cases in which the creditor's remedy at law is utterly ineffectual to reach the property of his debtor, or to fasten any lien or claim upon it, as where a creditors' bill is exhibited to reach choses in action, equitable interests, or property of the judgment debtor that has been fraudulently conveyed beyond the reach of the judgment and execution. The utter failure of the remedy at law is the sole ground of the jurisdiction in equity, and hence it is that it has sometimes been held that the return of an execution unsatisfied, as proof of this futility, is essential to the maintenance of the suit.

Where an action in the nature of a creditors' bill is brought to reach equitable assets and choses in action, it is essential to show execution returned unsatisfied; and this is necessary in order to prove that the creditor's legal remedy is exhausted. Buswell v. Lincks, 8 Daly, 518; Grenell v. Ferry, 110 Mich. 262, 68 N. W. 144; Davidson-Wesson Implement Co. v. Parlin & O. Co. 72 C. C. A. 525, 141 Fed. 37; Taylor v. Gillean, 23 Tex. 508.

Equitable assets can be reached only after the remedy at law has been exhausted, the evidence of which is the return of an execution unsatisfied. Harvey v. Brisbin, 143 N. Y. 151, 38 N. E. 108.

A creditors' suit to reach equitable property cannot be commenced until the creditor has exhausted his remedy at law by the issuing of an execution to the proper county, and having same duly returned unsatisfied. Parshall v. Tillou, 13 How. Pr. 7.

A creditors' bill to reach assets of a debtor which are not subject to execution cannot be maintained until the recovery of a judgment, the issuance of an execution thereon, and its return unsatisfied. Herrlich v. Kaufmann, 99 Cal. 271, 37 Am. St. Rep. 50, 33 Pac. 857; Baxter v. Moses, 77 Me. 465, 52 Am. Rep. 783, 1 Atl. 350; Russell v. Chicago Trust & Sav. Bank, 139 Ill. 538, 17 L.R.A. 345, 29 N. E. 37.

This rule was recognized in Darcey v. Lake, 46 Miss. 109.

If choses in action are pursued, the execution must be returned unsatisfied. Greenwood v. Brodhead, 8 Barb. 595.

A bill to reach choses in action cannot be maintained while the execution is still out. Vanderpool v. Notley, 71 Mich. 422, 39 N. W. 574.

To reach mere choses in action not liable to seizure and sale under execution, the legal remedy must first be exhausted by the 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

return of an execution unsatisfied. Parish v. Lewis, Freem. Ch. (Miss.) 299; Bishop v. Halsey, 3 Abb. Pr. 400.

Where an execution is still out and active at the time a creditors' bill is filed, no necessity is legally apparent for seeking the aid of equity to discover and subject to judgment any nonleviable interest of the debtor; therefore, as to such interests, no relief will be given in equity on a bill in aid of an execution levied upon real estate alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed by the debtor, although, as to such real estate, relief is given. McCullough v. Day, 45 Mich. 554, 8 N. W. 535.

A bill to recover assets not within reach of execution, if considered as a creditors' bill in the ordinary sense, should allege that execution has issued upon the judgment and has been returned unsatisfied. Moyer v. Riggs, 8 Kan. App. 234, 55 Pac. 494.

In Allen v. McRae, 91 Wis. 226, 64 N. W. 889, it was said that, where a bill is not brought in aid of an existing levy, it cannot be maintained unless it appears that the claim has been reduced to judgment, and that an execution has been returned unsatisfied.

In Chicago, D. & V. R. Co. v. St. Anne, 101 Ill. 151, it was held that judgment must be recovered and execution returned unsatisfied to entitle complainants to maintain a creditors' bill under the statute.

A creditor cannot come into equity to reach the equitable assets of his debtor while he causes the debtor's body to be held in custody, since his right to proceed against the property of the debtor by execution is thereby suspended and his remedy at law is not thereby exhausted. Tappan v. Evans, 11 N. H. 311.

Failure to show that there is no attachable property in the state is fatal to the maintenance of an action in the nature of a creditors' bill by a nonresident creditor against a nonresident debtor, to reach funds in the hands of the clerk of a district court, since it must be made to appear that the legal remedy is exhausted. Weaver v. Cressman, 21 Neb. 675, 33 N. W. 478.

A bill cannot be maintained in equity by a bondholder of a corporation to reach moneys alleged to have been converted by the president of the company to his private use, where the complainant has not obtained judgment on his bond against the company, and execution has not been issued and returned unsatisfied. Van Weel v. Winston, 115 U. S. 245, 29 L. ed. 387, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 22.

To entitle a judgment creditor to invoke the aid of equity to attack the validity of an assignment by his debtor of a judgment in favor of the debtor, he must cause an execution to be issued and a return nulla bona to be made thereon. Henderson v. McVay, 32 Ala. 471.

An action to reach lands to which the defendant is supposed to have only an equitable title cannot be maintained unless execution has been issued and returned unsatisfied. Bevans v. Henry, 49 Ala. 123.

A bill to reach a debtor's equity of redemption in real estate must aver that an execution has been issued and duly returned nulla bona, and such fact must appear before a court of equity has jurisdiction over the property of the debtor sought to be sold by a creditor. Shea v. Dulin, 3 Mac-Arth. 339.

In Moshier v. Meek, 80 Ill. 79, where a bill to enforce a vendor's lien failed because there was no lien, the court said that relief could not be granted on the ground simply that the complainant was a creditor, where he had not shown that he had resorted to and exhausted his legal remedies. The statute required that the claim should be pushed to a judgment, and the return of nulla bona, before equity would aid in reaching equitable interests and rights.

In Tobin v. Wilson, 3 J. J. Marsh. 63, it was said that a fieri facias on a replevin bond must be returned "no property" to authorize a bill to subject the debtor's choses in action to the creditor's claims.

When a creditor comes into equity to reach the equitable interests of his debtor in land, he must show a judgment which would, in case the legal title to the property were in the debtor, be a legal lien thereon, and an execution returned unsatisfied; but it is not necessary, in such a case, to show a levy of an execution on the land which he seeks to reach. Bigelow Blue Stone Co. v. Magee, 27 N. J. Eq. 392.

A creditor must bring his action at law, and establish his legal demand, and issue a fieri facias, to show that satisfaction can in no other manner be had, before he can have the aid of equity to reach the debtor's equitable assets. Frost v. Reynolds, 39 N. C. (4 Ired. Eq.) 494.

To entitle a creditor to the aid of equity to subject to the payment of his demand equitable assets of the debtor, he must first establish the indebtedness by a judgment at law, and second, he must establish that the debtor has no property that can be reached by a fieri facias, by a return nulla bona, or, under special circumstances, by some other sufficient proof. Hook v. Fentress, 62 N. C. (Phill. Eq.) 229.

In Meissner v. Meissner, 68 Wis. 336, 32 N. W. 51, the court said that if a proceeding by petition and by motion of one creditor to reach money in the hands of a court, apparently belonging to another creditor of a common debtor, might take the place of a creditors' action, it was of the opinion that the petitioning creditor must show that he had exhausted his remedy at law against the common debtor, or he must show a specific lien upon the particular property or money sought to be reached, either by an attachment, or execution levied upon the same, or upon the property from the sale of which the fund had arisen.

A creditors' bill to set aside an assignment of, and to reach the proceeds of, a policy of insurance, cannot be maintained where no execution has issued on the judgment on which the suit is founded, since the creditor must first exhaust his remedy 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) at law by the recovery of a judgment and the issuing of an execution thereon, and the return of the same unsatisfied. Genesee River Nat. Bank v. Mead, 18 Hun, 303.

In McCaffrey v. Hickey, 66 Barb. 489, the court, in holding that a sum of money representing the value of a colt could not be reached in an action in aid of an execution, said that, to authorize the commencement of a creditors' suit, strictly so called, not only must a judgment have been recovered, but an execution upon it must have been issued and returned unsatisfied, in whole or in part.

One who has obtained a judgment for alimony cannot maintain a creditors' bill to reach the income of a trust fund created for the benefit of the judgment debtor until an execution has been issued to the proper county and returned unsatisfied; since a judgment for alimony, under the New York Code, is a judgment for a sum of money, which will be enforced by execution. Miller v. Miller, 7 Hun, 208.

In Humphreys v. Atlantic Mill. Co. 98 Mo. 542, 10 S. W. 140, the general rule was recognized that a claim in the shape of an open account will not support a creditors' bill to reach the proceeds of a draft. It was said that, in such a case, a creditor, before appealing to equity, must show that he has exhausted his power at law. In general, it must be shown that judgment has been recovered, and that execution has been issued and returned nulla bona.

In Dunlevy v. Tallmadge, 32 N. Y. 457, an action to reach equitable assets, it was held that a judgment creditor of individual members of an alleged insolvent partnership could not maintain an action in equity to adjudge an assignment of personal property null and void, where execution was not issued until seven days after the suit was begun, which was returned nulla bona a month after the case was at issue. The court said that the return of the execution unsatisfied was essential, though there was nothing that could be reached by an execution at law.

An attachment or judgment lien is not necessary to enable a judgment creditor of a corporation to go into equity to reach its assets which have been transferred to a stranger, where the assets are equitable, and he has exhausted his remedies at law. Williams v. Commercial Bank, 49 Or. 492, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 857, 90 Pac. 1012, 91 Pac. 443.

In Del Valle v. Hyland, 40 N. Y. S. R. 924, 15 N. Y. Supp. 901, the rule stated in Buswell v. Lincks, 8 Daly, 518, that, before equity will assist a judgment creditor to reach personal property fraudulently conveyed, an execution must be outstanding in the hands of an officer for service, was held not to apply where the objects sought to be reached were choses in action, because of an express provision of statute (Code, §§ 1871, 1872), making the return of execution nulla bona necessary. But the court might have said that the rule did not, independent of statute, apply to choses in action. The rule that the execution must be outstanding applies only to personal property subject to levy.

For demand before return of execution, see infra, IV., d, 5.

IV. What amounts to exhaustion of remedy at law.

a. In general.

In the cases under this subdivision of the note, the question before the court was whether the necessary steps had been taken to acquire a lien or to exhaust the remedy at law, the assumption being that the exhaustion of the remedy at law is a condition precedent to the maintenance of the equitable action.

The exhaustion of legal remedies is evidenced by the issuance of execution and its return unsatisfied. Harvey v. Brisbin, 143 N. Y. 151, 38 N. E. 108.

In Manchester v. McKee, 9 Ill. 511, the court also said that a creditors' bill whereby the complainant sought to subject certain lands which he could not reach by execution to the payment of judgments against the debtor was sufficient if it showed the recovery of the judgments, and that executions had been issued upon the judgments, which had been returned unsatisfied excepting as to a small amount of each. This, said the court, showed prima facie that he had exhausted his legal remedy.

In Gates v. Boomer, 17 Wis. 456, creditors whose executions had been returned unsatisfied sought to set aside, as fraudulent, a deed executed by the debtor before judgment was rendered. The action was held maintainable.

A creditor cannot be said to have failed to have exhausted his remedy at law because of the fact that he holds certain warehouse receipts as security for his debt at the time of the filing of the bill, where it also appears that the court had enjoined the warehouse keeper from surrendering them, and that the creditor, to obtain them, had given a bond conditioned that he would account for their value, since a permission to take the goods upon giving of the bond to account for their value was in no sense giving him an opportunity to avail himself of his security, but was merely constituting him a trustee or a receiver, acting under leave of the court. Johnson v. Miller, 50 Ill. App. 60.

The issuance of an execution and its return nulla bona is sufficient to entitle a judgment creditor to the aid of equity in removing fraudulent obstructions upon the debtor's real estate, calculated to make an execution sale unproductive. The objection to the maintenance of the action was that the legal remedies had not been exhausted. First Nat. Bank v. Gibson, 60 Neb. 767, 84 N. W. 259.

A creditors' bill showing the issuance of an execution, and its return nulla bona, together with an allegation that the debtor did not have property subject to execution, 23 L.R.A. (N.E.)

either at the time of the conveyance made, or the action brought, out of which a creditor's claim could be collected, sufficiently shows that an ordinary legal remedy would not afford relief, and entitles a creditor to the aid of equity to subject lands of the debtor, alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed, to the payment of his judgment, although the complaint does not show the value of the real estate conveyed. Sherman v. Hogland, 73 Ind. 472.

Proof that the debtor has some property subject to execution, but not enough to satisfy the judgment of the creditor, is not sufficient to show the failure on the part of the creditor to exhaust his legal remedies. McConnell v. Citizens' State Bank, 130 Ind. 127, 27 N. E. 616.

A bill to reach land conveyed by a corporation, which neither alleges insolvency of the defendant at the date of the suit, nor existence of no property, cannot be maintained, it not appearing that the land conveyed was land owned by defendant, or that the officer made any attempt to find or levy on any lands, equities of redemption, or stock, as commanded by the writ. Kittel v. Augusta, T. & G. R. Co. 65 Fed. 859.

The issuance of an alias execution after the first execution has been issued to the proper county and returned unsatisfied will not prevent the maintenance of a creditors' bill based on the original execution unless it appears that sufficient property may be realized on the alias to satisfy the judgment, where it appears that the purpose of the bill is to reach property not liable to execution. Thomas v. McEwen, 11 Paige, 131. The court said that, to prevent the right of the creditor to proceed in equity upon the return of the first execution merely, while an alias fieri facias was in the hands of the sheriff, it must distinctly appear that the sheriff had levied, or, at least, that he could levy, upon sufficient property under the execution in his hands to satisfy the whole of the complainant's debt.

Where the original execution was returned unsatisfied, and a second execution was levied on property of the debtor insufficient to satisfy the claim, it was held that the return of the first writ was not so far disproved by the second, or the inference of insolvency which would be authorized by the first so far contradicted by the last, that the first return could no longer be regarded as proper ground for equitable relief. It was held that the bill could be maintained on the first return. Helm v. Hardin, 2 B. Mon. 231.

The recovery of a second judgment by a judgment creditor is not a bar to his maintaining a creditors' bill on an execution issued and returned nulla bona on the first judgment. Howard v. Sheldon, 11 Paige, 558.

In Willis v. Moore, Clarke, Ch. 150, the vice chancellor intimated that when an execution issued to the counties where the defendants resided had been returned unsatisfied, and another execution was out in the hands of a sheriff of another county, a creditors' bill could not be filed until the return of such other execution, unless the complainants alleged in their bill that there were some fraudulent obstructions to the collection of the debt under such execution, or that the property in such county would, in any event, be insufficient to pay the judgment debt.

An execution having been issued to the proper county, and returned unsatisfied, the creditor, upon the issuing of another execution to a different county, may bring his creditors' bill without waiting until the return of the second execution unsatisfied, unless there has been a levy on the property of the debtor under the second execution, sufficient to satisfy the judgment. Cuyler v. Moreland, 6 Paige, 273. The court said that where the right to file a creditors' bill once exists by the return of an execution unsatisfied, if the defendant had either real or personal property which was a proper subject of sale on execution, but which was fraudulently transferred or encumbered for the purpose of protecting it from the execution of the creditor, and had other property which could be reached only by the aid of the court, the judgment creditor might sue out a second execution, so as to obtain a specific lien upon the property which was subject to sale thereon, and might file a bill in equity for the double purpose of removing the obstruction which had been fraudulently interposed against the execution at law, and also to reach other property of the defendant which could not be sold under such second execution.

An averment that a judgment debtor is in possession of the property sought to be reached by a creditors' bill, on its face shows the right to make a levy thereon, and such a bill is, therefore, defective, in that it does not comply with the rule requiring a creditor first to exhaust his legal remedies for the collection of his judgment, or show that such remedies are inadequate before seeking relief in equity. Wilkinson v. Goodin, 71 Mo. App. 394.

In Williams v. Sexton, 19 Wis. 43, it is held that the fact that a debtor has real estate subject to execution shows that the creditor has not exhausted his legal remedies, and is therefore fatal to his right to relief in equity.

In Starr v. Rathbone, 1 Barb. 70, a motion for a receiver in a creditors' action was denied on the ground that the bill alleged that the defendant was the proprietor of a hotel entertaining numerous guests, and receiving money from them from time to time, and that he had a large amount of furniture and other personal property in his hotel, it therefore appearing that the remedy at law was not exhausted, because of the fact that the defendant had property which, from aught that appeared, might be reached by an execution at law.

While the question of exhausting the legal remedy relates strictly to the steps necessary to be taken after judgment, still.

the obtaining of the judgment is generally considered as a step in the process of exhausting the remedy at law. Considered as such, see supra, III., a, 2 and 3, as to what amounts to exhaustion as to judgment.

b. Regularity of proceedings at law.

It is not intended in this note to go into questions of practice, but a few cases are here grouped as bearing in some degree on the question of whether the remedy at law has been exhausted, the contention being that the remedy was not exhausted, because of irregularity of proceedings at law.

In a creditors' bill, regularity of the complainants' proceedings in obtaining their judgment at law, or in issuing and returning an execution, or in executing the same, will not be considered, since the defendant must apply to a court of law for relief in that respect. Barnard v. Darling, 1 Barb. Ch. 218.

An irregularity in the issuance of an execution or its return must be taken advantage of by motion to set aside, made to the court from which it issued. It cannot be made in an equitable proceeding by a creditor to reach the assets of the debtor. How v. Kane, 2 Pinney (Wis.) 531, 2 Chand. (Wis.) 222, 54 Am. Dec. 154.

Return of an execution to the office of a wrong clerk will not stand in the way of an application for the appointment of a receiver in a creditors' bill against the judgment debtors, since the remedy at law is exhausted by the sheriff's return upon an execution, which is all that is necessary to give a court of equity jurisdiction. Clark v. Dakin, 2 Barb. Ch. 36.

In order to support a creditors' bill based upon the issuance and return of an execution unsatisfied, the execution must be returned and filed with the clerk of the court from which it issued, where a statute so requires. Winslow v. Pitkin, 1 Barb. Ch. 402.

That the sheriff improperly returns an execution unsatisfied when he is notified by the judgment debtors that they are the owners of certain land which they request him to advertise and sell, but which he refuses to do, will not prevent the creditor from filing his bill, where there is no fraud or collusion between the creditor and the sheriff. Stoors v. Kelsey, 2 Paige, 418.

Failure of the sheriff to file an execution until after the creditor's action is brought, where it has been indorsed as unsatisfied before the action is begun, will not defeat the action, on the theory that it was begun before the execution was returned. Iselin v. Henlein, 16 Abb. N. C. 73, 2 How. Pr. N. S. 211.

Where a creditors' bill is based on the return of an alias fi. fa., it is not necessary that it should appear upon the face of the bill that the first execution was regularly issued and returned. Williams v. Hubbard, 1 Mich. 446.

A fraudulent assignee of land cannot object to the execution upon which a creditors' suit was founded, because the writ was issued within thirty days after the recovery of a judgment, since this renders the writ voidable on the application of the judgment debtor, but does not impair its force as to strangers. Green v. Burnham, 3 Sandf. Ch. 110.

In Warmoth v. Dryden, 125 Ind. 355, 25 N. E. 433, on an appeal to equity by a creditor to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate by the debtor, proof of the issuance of an execution, and its return nulla bona, was held to establish prima facie the insolvency of the debtor, although the clerk failed to affix the seal of the court to the execution.

Where a scire facias is sued out to revive a judgment, praying an award of execution therefor, which writ is returned nihil, and a second or alias writ is sued out upon the return of the first, which is also returned nihil, and judgment is awarded and execution is sued out, to which the sheriff returns "no property found," and a bill is filed to set aside a fraudulent sale made by the debtor, the bill is not open to the objection that a proper judgment and execution at law are not shown. Barrow v. Bailey, 5 Fla. 9. The court said that the proceedings on the scire facias were strictly regular, according to the rules of law, and consequently the writ of scire facias awarded thereon was a legal and valid process, and being returned nulla bona by the proper officer, a creditor was well entitled to seek the aid of a court of equity.

An execution cannot be impeached on the ground that it directed the sheriff to levy upon the defendant's land whereof he was seised on February 1st, when directions might have been given from January 26th, since, if the day had been wholly omitted, the sheriff would have been authorized to take all the lands the defendant had when he received the execution; so that the legal remedy was exhausted by the issuing and return of the process. Green v. Burnham, supra.

Although an execution is extremely defective, and subject to be vacated and set aside on motion for informality, it cannot be questioned collaterally on a creditors' bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate by the debtor. Wright v. Nostrand, 94 N. Y. 31. The court said that the official return of the officer upon the execution furnished sufficient evidence of the exhaustion of legal remedies against the debtor to authorize the institution of a suit to reach other property to satisfy it.

But, where a statute requires the return of an execution unsatisfied, in whole or in part, an execution issued on a judgment docketed January 12, directing a levy on real estate possessed by the debtor on January 13, is not sufficient to form a basis of a creditors' bill, where another statute provides that executions, to authorize the sale of real estate, shall command the officer to whom they are directed to cause the amount of the judgment to be made of the real estate of the person against whom the judgment was rendered, which such person shall have had at the time of the docketing of the judgment, specifying such time, or at any time afterwards, in whose hands soever the same may be. Manning v. Merritt, Clarke, Ch. 98.

And it was held that an execution issued without leave of the court, after the expiration of five years from the rendition of the judgment on which it was issued, would not support a creditors' bill, in Aultman & T. Co. v. Syme, 23 App. Div. 344, 48 N. Y. Supp. 231; but, on appeal, it was held that such an execution was not void, but voidable. S. C. 163 N. Y. 54, 79 Am. St. Rep. 565, 57 N. E. 168.

c. County to which execution must be sent; return.

The usual requirement is that the execution must be sent to the county of the debtor's residence, and that an attempt must be made to levy on property there before the remedy at law can be said to have been exhausted.

The execution must be directed to the county where the judgment debtor resided at the time the execution was issued. Smith v. Fitch, Clarke, Ch. 265.

Or it must be issued to the county in which some of them reside, if there are judgment debtors. Wilbur v. Collins, Clarke, Ch. 315.

Because a statute does not specify to what county an execution shall be issued, it does not follow that it is only necessary to issue it to the sheriff of the county in which judgment is rendered to entitle the creditor to equitable relief. Durand v. Gray, 129 Ill. 9, 21 N. E. 610. The court said that, the purpose of the issuance of the execution being to establish a material fact, namely, that the defendant had or had not property whereon an execution might be levied, it was manifest, first, that, if the plaintiff in execution knew that the defendant in execution had property in a particular county, he should send an execution to that county; second, that the execution should be sent also to any and every county in which there was a legal presumption that the defendant in execution had property. If the person resided and did business in the same county, it was legally presumed that he had property there liable to execution, for ownership was presumed from possession, and insolvency was exceptional, and must always be proved.

In Crabb v. Hill, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 44, 30 S. W. 415, it was said that, under the Kentucky statutes, in order that a creditor may maintain a creditors' bill on an execution returned nulla bona, he must show that the execution was issued to the county of the debtor's residence, or the county in which the judgment was rendered.

The fact that the debtor had property in the county to which the execution was directed, which was not the county in which the judgment was rendered, nor the county in which the debtor resided, does not excuse noncompliance with the statute. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mattingly, 101 Ky. 219, 40 S. W. 673.

In Tanner v. Howard, 1 Ky. L. Rep. 343, it was held that, in equitable proceedings to reach real estate of the debtor, the petition must allege that the execution of the common-law judgment was directed to the county in which the judgment was rendered, and returned, as required by the Code.

Since the remedy for subjecting choses in action by bill in equity is purely statutory, the statute must be complied with; and where the statute requires a fieri facias upon a judgment or decree to be returned "no property," a bill cannot be maintained where the writ is not sent to the proper county, and therefore is not returned by the proper officer. Moore v. Young, 1 Dana, 516.

The issuance of an execution to the county where the debtor resided, and its return "no property found," and the issuance of an execution also to the county wherein the judgment was rendered, and its return "no property found," together with proof that the debtor had no real estate subject to execution, is sufficient to authorize a court of equity of the county wherein a debtor resided to grant to the creditor equitable aid in subjecting to the payment of his judgment the debtor's property, under the Kentucky Code, § 70. Martin v. Byrd, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1030, 42 S. W. 1112.

A failure to show that an execution was issued either to the county wherein a firm was situated, or to the county of the residence of any member of the firm, together with a failure to show the time of the return, is fatal to the right of a creditor to equitable relief. Preston v. Wilcox, 38 Mich. 578.

A judgments creditors' bill based on a judgment obtained in the supreme court should show that the defendant resided in the county at the time when, and to which, the fi. fa. was issued. Hope v. Brinckerhoff, 3 Edw. Ch. 445.

In an ordinary creditors' bill under the statute, it would be necessary to allege that the plaintiff had issued the execution to the county where the judgment debtor resided, and that it had been returned nulla bona. Cooper v. Clason, 2 Edm. Sel. Cas. 320.

The complainant has not sufficiently exhausted his legal remedy in an action in the supreme court, where the execution can issue to any part of the state, where the execution is issued and returned unsatisfied only in the county where the venue is laid, if the defendant has available property in the county where he resides at the time, out of which the execution can be satisfied. Child v. Brace, 4 Paige, 309.

An execution must be issued to the county where the defendant resides at the time of its issuance. Merchants' & M. Bank v. Griffith, 10 Paige, 519.

Where an execution may be sent to another county of the state, it must be sent to the county where the judgment debtor resides at the time of the issuance of the writ, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

in order to exhaust the legal remedy. Wheeler v. Heermans, 3 Sandf. Ch. 597. The court said that, as a general proposition, a man's personal property is presumed to be at the place of his residence. Hence, the necessity of showing in creditors' suits a return of an execution issued to the county where the defendant resides.

In Reeder v. Wheaton, 7 Paige, 663, 34 Am. Dec. 366, it was said that where the judgment is in the supreme court, so that an execution may be issued to any part of the state, or where the bill is founded upon the decree of the court of chancery, the process of which court may also be sent into any county, the complainant who comes into equity for relief upon the ground that he has exhausted his remedy by execution on the judgment or decree must show that he has issued his execution to the sheriff of the county where the defendant resided at the time such execution was issued, or he must show a sufficient legal excuse for not doing so.

In Bowe v. Arnold, 31 Hun, 256, affirmed without opinion in 101 N. Y. 652, the court said that an action may be maintained by judgment creditors after the issuing of an execution upon their judgment against the property of the debtor, to remove obstructions and set aside fraudulent dispositions of the debtor's property, preventing the execution from being made effectual. In this class of cases the court interposes under its general equitable authority to relieve creditors where no adequate legal remedy can be applied at law for that purpose. But this jurisdiction extends no further than to authorize the interference of the court after a judgment has been recovered and an execution issued upon it to the proper county, against the property of the debtor.

Where the purpose of the bill was to obtain the cancelation of prior judgment liens on the land, under the claim that such judgments had been paid, and an execution was issued to the county in which the defendant resided, and returned nulla bona, it was held that the plaintiff did not need to have executions issued to the counties in which the lands were situated, in order to entitle him to the equitable relief sought. Shaw v. Dwight, 27 N. Y. 244, 84 Am. Dec. 275.

If a debtor is a nonresident, an execution should issue to the county wherein the judgment roll was filed, where a statute makes this a condition precedent to equitable relief. Campbell v. Foster, 16 How. Pr. 275.

In Minkler v. United States Sheep Co. 4 N. D. 507, 33 L. R. A. 546, 62 N. W. 594, it was held that a creditor was not entitled to have a receiver of a corporation appointed, in the absence of a showing that execution had been issued to the county of its proper place of business, as fixed by the charter. The court said that the law had gone upon the theory that a debtor's possessions will be found in the county of his residence, and not elsewhere, and that the simple issuance of the execution to the sheriff of any county other than that of the defendant's residence did not show any bona fide attempt on the part of the creditor to collect the debt through the process of the lower courts. By the appointment of a receiver, the debtor was at once stripped of his property. It was taken from his control, passed into the hands of an instrumentality of the court, and was thenceforth devoted to such purposes as the court directed. The remedy was at once harsh and somewhat oppressive. It was no hardship to the creditor that, before he could avail himself of any remedy that stripped his debtor of control of his own property, he should be compelled to show that he had exhausted unsuccessfully all milder means.

In Embree v. Reeve, 6 Humph. 37, a return of an execution made by the sheriff of the county wherein the judgment was rendered was held sufficient to entitle a creditor to the aid of equity to discover and reach a beneficial leasehold interest of the debtor in a different county. The objection in this case was not that the remedy at law had not been exhausted, but that it was necessary to acquire a lien on the property, and that this could be done only by sending the execution to the county where the property was located.

In Riddle v. Motley, 1 Lea, 468, it was held unnecessary to send execution to the county where the chose in action sought to be reached was located. It was held a sufficient exhaustion of the legal remedy to have execution returned nulla bona in the county in which the judgment was recovered.

The issuing of executions against each of several judgment debtors in the counties of their residence, and the return of the same unsatisfied, will entitle the creditor to seek the aid of equity to reach the debtor's real estate, title to which is held by a third person. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co. v. Hanrahan, 9 S. D. 520, 70 N. W. 656.

In Northwestern Iron Co. v. Central Trust Co. 90 Wis. 570, 63 N. W. 752, 64 N. W. 323, it was held that the issuance of an execution to a county which was not the place of residence of the debtor, and where the creditor had no reason to expect to find property of his debtor, did not show an effort in good faith to collect the debt by execution. The court said that this was especially true where the creditor knew that, in another county, the debtor had a place of residence and business, and a large amount of property subject to levy under his judgment.

But the fact that an execution was not issued to the county where the debtor resided is wholly immaterial where the action is to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate, since it is not necessary, in such a case, to issue an execution at all. Wadsworth v. Schisselbauer, 32 Minn. 84, 19 N. W. 390.

The fact that the execution is not sent to the county of the debtor's residence is not a valid objection, unless the debtor shows that he had visible property in that county, subject to levy. Rugely v. Robinson, 19 Ala. 404.

Where the debtor removes after rendition of judgment, the issuance of an execution to the original county, together with proof that the debtor had no property whatever subject to execution, is sufficient to authorize a court of equity to give to the judgment creditor equitable aid in reaching a judgment in which the debtor has an interest. Sayre v. Thompson, 18 Neb. 33, 24 N. W. 383.

It is no objection to a bill for discovery that execution was not delivered to any sheriff in the judicial district in which the action was brought, where the statute provides that, "whenever an execution shall have been issued, etc., but shall have been returned unsatisfied, in whole or in part," and there is nothing in it defining the county to which the execution must have issued. The execution in this case was issued to the county in which the defendant resided, and no suggestion was made that there was anything fraudulent or collusive in the return. Bay State Iron Co. v. Goodall, 39 N. H. 223, 75 Am. Dec. 219.

Where it is sought by a creditors' bill to set aside an assignment by the debtor, it is not necessary to show that an execution was issued to the county where the debtor resided, and returned nulla bona. Cooper v. Clason, 2 Edm. Sel. Cas. 320.

That the execution was not issued to the county where the defendant resides will not constitute a good objection to an application to appoint a receiver of the property of the judgment debtor. Strange v. Longley, 3 Barb. Ch. 650.

The issuance and return of an execution to the county wherein a judgment was rendered is a sufficient exhaustion of the legal remedy to authorize a creditor to seek the aid of equity to reach equitable property of the debtor. Riddle v. Motley, 1 Lea, 468.

And where the statute prescribes, as indispensable to equitable jurisdiction to reach choses in action, that there shall be a return "by the proper officer" of "no property" on a fieri facias, a return by an officer of a different county from that in which the judgment is rendered, there being no suggestion that the defendant resides in the county in which the return is made, is insufficient to justify equitable relief. The court said the statute should certainly be understood as contemplating a return by an officer of the county of the defendant's residence or domicil, or of the county in which the judgment was rendered, when it does not appear that the defendant resided elsewhere. Rhodes v. Cobb, 4 Dana, 23.

d. Return of execution.

1. Sufficiency of.

A return of an execution must expressly show that the debtor had no property subject to levy, in order that a creditors' bill may be based thereon. Therefore a return showing that the sheriff had levied on certain property of the defendant, and that the same was released by instructions of the attorney for the plaintiff, and "the same is returned unsatisfied," will not authorize a resort to equity by the creditor. Buckeye Engine Co. v. Donau Brewing Co. 47 Fed. 6.

It is not an objection to a creditors' bill to reach the debtor's equitable interest in real estate that there was no return nulla bona upon executions issued on complainant's judgment, where the executions were returned "wholly unsatisfied," especially where a statute, in express terms, authorizes the plaintiff in execution, when his execution against the property of the defendant has been returned "unsatisfied in whole or in part," to file a bill in chancery to discover and subject any property of the defendant to the payment of such judgment. Alexander v. Tams, 13 Ill. 221.

In Scheubert v. Honel, 152 Ill. 313, 38 N. E. 913, the following indorsement appeared on the execution: "The sheriff will return this writ no property found and no part satisfied forthwith," signed by the plaintiff's attorney, followed by the indorsement of the sheriff to the effect that there was no property found, and the execution was in no part satisfied. This was held insufficient to authorize a creditors' bill. The court said that the return failed to show that the creditor had exhausted his legal remedies, but that, on the contrary, it appeared that the sheriff had made no effort whatever to collect the judgment. That the return was, in substance, the act of the creditor's attorney, and that, in making it, the sheriff exercised no responsibility whatever. The court held that it must be shown that the execution was returned by the sheriff by reason of his inability to find property whereon to levy.

Where it appeared that the sheriff had levied upon a considerable amount of personal property as belonging to the defendants, and all that was shown in regard to it was a statement in the sheriff's return that such property had been taken from him by the coroner by writs of replevin, and that, by direction of the plaintiff's attorney, he returned the writs no part satisfied, and the sheriff did not say he demanded any property of the defendants, it was held that the complainant should have shown that, without any fault of the sheriff or the plaintiff in execution, or by some instrumentality of the defendants, the property so levied upon could not have been made available to the payment of the respective judgments, in full or in part. Gauler v. Wohlers, 12 Ill. App. 594.

The fact that an officer's return to an execution includes the words "returned with schedule" is not sufficient to impeach the return by raising the presumption that the debtor had property as to which the legal remedy was not exhausted. Thompson v. Yates, 61 Ill. App. 262.

An execution returned which shows no property found as to a partnership, and that there exists property which may be subject to the payment of the debt, belonging to some individual composing the firm, is a sufficient return nulla bona for a creditors' bill under a statute requiring the return nulla bona before a creditor can come into a court of equity and demand relief. Ticonic Bank v. Harvey, 16 Iowa, 141.

A return of an execution, "This writ came in my hands for service January 28, 1908. No property being found, this writ is returned unsatisfied. (Signed) J. H. G.," is not sufficient to authorize a creditors' bill, as it does not appear that the writ related to the debtor, neither does it show that he did not have sufficient property to satisfy it, nor that it was returned by one having authority. Baxter v. Pritchard, 113 Iowa, 422, 85 N. W. 633.

And an objection that the return of a deputy sheriff was insufficient, on the ground that it was evidence only that the debtor had no property in his bailiwick, which is less than the county, was held untenable, in Dana v. Banks, 6 J. J. Marsh. 219. The court said that it did not appear from the bill or the return of the officer that the authority of the officer who made the return was circumscribed by boundaries less than the limits of the county.

A return of an execution nulla bona by a coroner when the execution was not directed to that officer is void, and thereafter will not support a creditors' action to set aside a conveyance of land, where, as in Kentucky, a return nulla bona is required before equity will interfere for such a purpose. Johnson v. Elkins, 90 Ky. 163, 8 L.R.A. 552, 13 S. W. 448.

The return by a sheriff, indorsed on an execution, that he has property on hand that he cannot sell, for want of bidders, will not support an injunction restraining disposition by a debtor of his property, granted at the request of a judgment creditor in a creditors' bill proceeding. Eldred v. Camp, Harr. Ch. (Mich.) 162.

A return upon an alias execution that the defendants had no goods or chattels, lands or tenements, etc., is a sufficient return upon which to found a creditors' bill, although it does not in terms negative the fact that either of them had any separate property. Williams v. Hubbard, 1 Mich. 446.

In Albright v. Texas, S. F. & N. R. Co. 8 N. M. 422, 46 Pac. 448, where certain property of a corporation had been levied on, after which the president of the company claimed that the property did not belong to it, whereupon the sheriff, upon the refusal of the creditor to give an indemnifying bond, returned the execution with the statement of such facts, it was held that this statement was not equivalent to a return nulla bona, in the absence of any statement to the effect that the officer had made a diligent search, and had been unable to find other property of the debtor.

A return that the sheriff could find no goods, chattels, or real estate of the within-named defendants in his bailiwick out of which the execution could be collected was held sufficient to show that complainant had suit was founded, because the writ was issued within thirty days after the recovery of a judgment, since this renders the writ voidable on the application of the judgment debtor, but does not impair its force as to strangers. Green v. Burnham, 3 Sandf. Ch. 110.

In Warmoth v. Dryden, 125 Ind. 355, 25 N. E. 433, on an appeal to equity by a creditor to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate by the debtor, proof of the issuance of an execution, and its return nulla bona, was held to establish prima facie the insolvency of the debtor, although the clerk failed to affix the seal of the court to the execution.

Where a scire facias is sued out to revive a judgment, praying an award of execution therefor, which writ is returned nihil, and a second or alias writ is sued out upon the return of the first, which is also returned nihil, and judgment is awarded and execution is sued out, to which the sheriff returns "no property found," and a bill is filed to set aside a fraudulent sale made by the debtor, the bill is not open to the objection that a proper judgment and execution at law are not shown. Barrow v. Bailey, 5 Fla. 9. The court said that the proceedings on the scire facias were strictly regular, according to the rules of law, and consequently the writ of scire facias awarded thereon was a legal and valid process, and being returned nulla bona by the proper officer, a creditor was well entitled to seek the aid of a court of equity.

An execution cannot be impeached on the ground that it directed the sheriff to levy upon the defendant's land whereof he was seised on February 1st, when directions might have been given from January 26th, since, if the day had been wholly omitted, the sheriff would have been authorized to take all the lands the defendant had when he received the execution; so that the legal remedy was exhausted by the issuing and return of the process. Green v. Burnham, supra.

Although an execution is extremely defective, and subject to be vacated and set aside on motion for informality, it cannot be questioned collaterally on a creditors' bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate by the debtor. Wright v. Nostrand, 94 N. Y. 31. The court said that the official return of the officer upon the execution furnished sufficient evidence of the exhaustion of legal remedies against the debtor to authorize the institution of a suit to reach other property to satisfy it.

But, where a statute requires the return of an execution unsatisfied, in whole or in part, an execution issued on a judgment docketed January 12, directing a levy on real estate possessed by the debtor on January 13, is not sufficient to form a basis of a creditors' bill, where another statute provides that executions, to authorize the sale of real estate, shall command the officer to whom they are directed to cause the amount of the judgment to be made of the real estate of the person against whom the judgment was rendered, which such person shall have had at the time of the docketing of the judgment, specifying such time, or at any time afterwards, in whose hands soever the same may be. Manning v. Merritt, Clarke, Ch. 98.

And it was held that an execution issued without leave of the court, after the expiration of five years from the rendition of the judgment on which it was issued, would not support a creditors' bill, in Aultman & T. Co. v. Syme, 23 App. Div. 344, 48 N. Y. Supp. 231; but, on appeal, it was held that such an execution was not void, but voidable. S. C. 163 N. Y. 54, 79 Am. St. Rep. 565, 57 N. E. 168.

c. County to which execution must be sent; return.

The usual requirement is that the execution must be sent to the county of the debtor's residence, and that an attempt must be made to levy on property there before the remedy at law can be said to have been exhausted.

The execution must be directed to the county where the judgment debtor resided at the time the execution was issued. Smith v. Fitch, Clarke, Ch. 265.

Or it must be issued to the county in which some of them reside, if there are judgment debtors. Wilbur v. Collins, Clarke, Ch. 315.

Because a statute does not specify to what county an execution shall be issued, it does not follow that it is only necessary to issue it to the sheriff of the county in which judgment is rendered to entitle the creditor to equitable relief. Durand v. Gray, 129 Ill. 9, 21 N. E. 610. The court said that, the purpose of the issuance of the execution being to establish a material fact, namely, that the defendant had or had not property whereon an execution might be levied, it was manifest, first, that, if the plaintiff in execution knew that the defendant in execution had property in a particular county, he should send an execution to that county; second, that the execution should be sent also to any and every county in which there was a legal presumption that the defendant in execution had property. If the person resided and did business in the same county, it was legally presumed that he had property there liable to execution, for ownership was presumed from possession, and insolvency was exceptional, and must always be proved.

In Crabb v. Hill, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 44, 30 S. W. 415, it was said that, under the Kentucky statutes, in order that a creditor may maintain a creditors' bill on an execution returned nulla bona, he must show that the execution was issued to the county of the debtor's residence, or the county in which the judgment was rendered.

The fact that the debtor had property in the county to which the execution was directed, which was not the county in which the judgment was rendered, nor the county in which the debtor resided, does not ex-case noncompliance with the statute. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Mattingly, 101 Ky. 219, 40 S. W. 673.

In Tanner v. Howard, 1 Ky. L. Rep. 343, it was held that, in equitable proceedings to reach real estate of the debtor, the petition must allege that the execution of the common-law judgment was directed to the county in which the judgment was rendered, and returned, as required by the Code.

Since the remedy for subjecting choses in action by bill in equity is purely statutory, the statute must be complied with; and where the statute requires a fieri facias upon a judgment or decree to be returned "no property," a bill cannot be maintained where the writ is not sent to the proper county, and therefore is not returned by the proper officer. Moore v. Young, 1 Dana, 516.

The issuance of an execution to the county where the debtor resided, and its return "no property found," and the issuance of an execution also to the county wherein the judgment was rendered, and its return "no property found," together with proof that the debtor had no real estate subject to execution, is sufficient to authorize a court of equity of the county wherein a debtor resided to grant to the creditor equitable aid in subjecting to the payment of his judgment the debtor's property, under the Kentucky Code, § 70. Martin v. Byrd, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1030, 42 S. W. 1112.

A failure to show that an execution was issued either to the county wherein a firm was situated, or to the county of the residence of any member of the firm, together with a failure to show the time of the return, is fatal to the right of a creditor to equitable relief. Preston v. Wilcox, 38 Mich. 578.

A judgments creditors' bill based on a judgment obtained in the supreme court should show that the defendant resided in the county at the time when, and to which, the fi. fa. was issued. Hope v. Brinckerhoff, 3 Edw. Ch. 445.

In an ordinary creditors' bill under the statute, it would be necessary to allege that the plaintiff had issued the execution to the county where the judgment debtor resided, and that it had been returned nulla bona. Cooper v. Clason, 2 Edm. Sel. Cas. 320.

The complainant has not sufficiently exhausted his legal remedy in an action in the supreme court, where the execution can issue to any part of the state, where the execution is issued and returned unsatisfied only in the county where the venue is laid, if the defendant has available property in the county where he resides at the time, out of which the execution can be satisfied. Child v. Brace, 4 Paige, 309.

An execution must be issued to the county where the defendant resides at the time of its issuance. Merchants' & M. Bank v. Griffith, 10 Paige, 519.

Where an execution may be sent to another county of the state, it must be sent to the county where the judgment debtor resides at the time of the issuance of the writ, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

in order to exhaust the legal remedy. Wheeler v. Heermans, 3 Sandf. Ch. 597. The court said that, as a general proposition, a man's personal property is presumed to be at the place of his residence. Hence, the necessity of showing in creditors' suits a return of an execution issued to the county where the defendant resides.

In Reeder v. Wheaton, 7 Paige, 663, 34 Am. Dec. 366, it was said that where the judgment is in the supreme court, so that an execution may be issued to any part of the state, or where the bill is founded upon the decree of the court of chancery, the process of which court may also be sent into any county, the complainant who comes into equity for relief upon the ground that he has exhausted his remedy by execution on the judgment or decree must show that he has issued his execution to the sheriff of the county where the defendant resided at the time such execution was issued, or he must show a sufficient legal excuse for not doing so.

In Bowe v. Arnold, 31 Hun, 256, affirmed without opinion in 101 N. Y. 652, the court said that an action may be maintained by judgment creditors after the issuing of an execution upon their judgment against the property of the debtor, to remove obstructions and set aside fraudulent dispositions of the debtor's property, preventing the execution from being made effectual. In this class of cases the court interposes under its general equitable authority to relieve creditors where no adequate legal remedy can be applied at law for that purpose. But this jurisdiction extends no further than to authorize the interference of the court after a judgment has been recovered and an execution issued upon it to the proper county, against the property of the debtor.

Where the purpose of the bill was to obtain the cancelation of prior judgment liens on the land, under the claim that such judgments had been paid, and an execution was issued to the county in which the defendant resided, and returned nulla bona, it was held that the plaintiff did not need to have executions issued to the counties in which the lands were situated, in order to entitle him to the equitable relief sought. Shaw v. Dwight, 27 N. Y. 244, 84 Am. Dec. 275.

If a debtor is a nonresident, an execution should issue to the county wherein the judgment roll was filed, where a statute makes this a condition precedent to equitable relief. Campbell v. Foster, 16 How. Pr. 275.

In Minkler v. United States Sheep Co. 4 N. D. 507, 33 L. R. A. 546, 62 N. W. 594, it was held that a creditor was not entitled to have a receiver of a corporation appointed, in the absence of a showing that execution had been issued to the county of its proper place of business, as fixed by the charter. The court said that the law had gone upon the theory that a debtor's possessions will be found in the county of his residence, and not elsewhere, and that the simple issuance of the execution to the sheriff of any county other than that of the defendant's residence did not show any bona exhausted his remedy at law. The objection was that the return showed that there was merely no joint property out of which the debt could be collected, and did not preclude the idea that there might be separate property of either of the defendants from which the debt might be made. Winchester v. Crandall, Clarke, Ch. 371.

The objection that the execution was returned by the sheriff before the expiration of sixty days from its receipt is not available where the return indorsed on the writ bears date within the sixty days, but where the writ was not filed until after that term had expired, since the return speaks from the date of its filing. Green v. Burnham, 3 Sandf. Ch. 110.

Under a statute providing that when the judgment debtor has not property subject to levy sufficient to satisfy the judgment, any equitable interest which he may have in lands and other property shall be subject to the payment of such judgment by action, the return of execution "no goods" was held insufficient to authorize equitable relief, since it did not show that there were no lands subject to execution. State Bank v. Oliver, 1 Disney (Ohio) 159.

A return of no personal property and a levy upon an equitable interest of the debtor in land is a return of the execution unsatisfied. Since the levy upon the equity is a nullity, its return will be treated as surplusage. Such a return is therefore not open to the objection that it negatives merely the existence of personal property. It therefore justifies the filing of a creditors' bill. House v. Swanson, 7 Heisk. 32.

Under a statute providing that whenever an execution against the property of a judgment debtor shall have been issued upon a judgment for the payment of money, and shall have been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part, the judgment creditor may commence an action against the judgment debtor, or any other persons, for a discovery and to reach equitable assets, it is not necessary that the return on the execution be set forth in hac verba, so that the court can determine whether or not the execution was unsatisfied, the allegation that the sheriff returned the execution wholly unsatisfied being sufficient. Daskam v. Neff, 79 Wis. 161, 47 N. W. 1132.

2. Conclusiveness of.

When an execution has been returned nulla bona, may the remedy at law be said to be exhausted, or rather, is this sufficient proof of the exhaustion of the legal remedy? Or, in addition to that, is the creditor obliged to show that the debtor actually had insufficient property out of which the execution could be made? The rule is that when the execution issuing to the proper court has been returned unsatisfied, the way is open to the creditors' action.

The return of the sheriff on an execution nulla bona is conclusive of the question that the creditor has exhausted his legal remedies, and is entitled to maintain his equitable action. Coffield v. Parmenter, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 42, 96 N. W. 283.

In Baxter v. Moses, 77 Me. 465, 52 Am. Rep. 783, 1 Atl. 350, the court said that, to remove all uncertainty, the official return is conclusive evidence that the creditor has exhausted all legal remedies without succeeding in collecting his debt. It is a benefit to both parties.

In Hall v. McGregor (W. Va.) 64 S. E. 736, it was held that an officer's return of no property found on the execution is conclusive between the parties as a basis of a suit in equity to enforce a judgment against real estate, unless in case of fraud and collusion in the procurement of such return for the purpose.

In order to maintain a bill to set aside fraudulent deeds, it is only necessary for the plaintiff to allege and prove, for the purpose of maintaining the action, that execution has been issued on his judgment and returned unsatisfied. He thereby establishes the insolvency of the defendant, and shows prima facie that he has exhausted his legal remedy. Quinn v. People, 146 Ill. 275, 34 N. E. 148, affirming 45 Ill. App. 547.

When a creditor has issued execution upon his judgment, and the same is returned by the proper officer unsatisfied, the requirement that a creditor must exhaust all legal remedies to collect his judgment before he can invoke the aid of equity by a creditors' suit is complied with. Hopkins v. Joyce, 78 Wis. 443, 47 N. W. 722.

In Jones v. Green, 1 Wall. 330, 17 L. ed. 553, it was said that the court looked only to the execution and the return of the officer to whom the execution was directed. The execution showed that the remedy afforded at law had been pursued, and, of course, was the highest evidence of the fact. The return showed whether the remedy had proved effectual or not, and from the embarrassments which would attend any other rule the return was held conclusive. The court would not entertain inquiries as to the diligence of the officer in endeavoring to find property upon which to levy. If the return were false, the law furnished to the injured party ample remedy.

A return nulla bona is a sufficient reply to the contention that the creditors could have enforced their judgments,—that the value of the property upon which they have special liens is ample to pay off the debts,—since the court will not entertain inquiries as to the diligence of the officer endeavoring to find property on which to levy. Bidwell v. Huff, 103 Fed. 362.

It is not necessary to show that the marshal into whose hands an execution comes has searched for the property, if he returns that he can find no property. Suydam v. Beals, 4 McLean, 12, Fed. Cas. No. 13,653.

Where the execution has been returned nulla bona, it is not necessary for the complainant seeking equitable relief against his debtor to show that the latter had not, at the time the suit was instituted, any property out of which the debt might be collected. Wyatt v. Wyatt, 31 Or. 531, 49 Pac. 855.

The issuance of an execution and its return nulla bona is always evidence that the legal remedy has been exhausted, and dispenses with any other proof that the debtor is without property other than that which the creditor seeks to reach by his bill. Goddard v. Fishel-Schlichten Importing Co. 9 Colo. App. 306, 48 Pac. 279.

The return of an execution nulla bona before return day, based on a denial of property subject to levy by the debtor, is sufficient, and the debtor will not thereafter be permitted to attack the validity of the return on the ground that he has had property subject to levy. Lewis v. Lanphere, 79 Ill. 187.

In Randolph v. Daly, 16 N. J. Eq. 313, it was said that it was not necessary to aver that a debtor firm was insolvent in order to entitle the complainants to subject to the judgment of the creditors the individual property of one of the partners, alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed. The court said that the partnership property might be amply sufficient to satisfy all the debts of the firm, yet it might be so covered up or placed beyond the reach of process as not to be amenable to execution at law, and to render the interference of equity essential to the ends of justice. All that could be required was that it should appear by the bill that the complainant had exhausted his remedy at law, and that the aid of equity was necessary to enable him to obtain satisfaction of his judgment.

In Williams v. Kemper, 99 Minn. 301, 109 N. W. 242, it was said that, in Spooner v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 76 Minn. 311, 77 Am. St. Rep. 651, 79 N. W. 305, a statement not necessary to the conclusion reached, to the effect that, in an action in the nature of a creditors' suit to reach equitable assets, the complaint must allege that the debtor is insolvent, and has no other property from which the creditors' debt may be satisfied, was not an accurate statement, where the complaint alleged the fact that judgment had been recovered and execution issued and returned unsatisfied, because the conclusion that the creditor had exhausted all legal remedies necessarily followed from the allegation of such ultimate fact, which was the best evidence that the debtor was insolvent and had no other property out of which judgment could be paid.

Where the plaintiff in an action in the nature of a creditors' suit to reach property, the legal title of which is held in trust by a third person for the use and benefit of the debtor, alleges that judgment has been recovered against the debtor, and that execution has been issued and returned unsatisfied, it is sufficient without further setting out that the debtor is insolvent and has no other property. Williams v. Kemper, supra.

The return of an execution nulla bona in Kansas also gives a judgment creditor a standing in equity to set aside conveyances by his debtor which tend to defeat the collection of his debt, and therefore, when such a return is made, it is unnecessary to allege the insolvency of the debtor. Breitkreutz v. National Bank, 70 Kan. 698, 79 Pac. 686.

The insolvency of a debtor is sufficiently established by showing that executions had been issued upon a judgment against several joint debtors, and had been duly returned "no property found," to authorize a creditor to seek the aid of equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate by one of the debtors. Quinn v. People, 146 Ill. 275, 34 N. E. 148.

It is not necessary to aver in a creditors' bill based on a return of execution nulla bona that, at the time of any conveyance or transfer by the debtor with intent to hinder and delay creditors, he did not retain enough property to pay his debts, since the return is sufficient prima facie to establish the insolvency of the debtor, and the absence of property subject to execution. Dimond v. Rogers, 203 Ill. 464, 67 N. E. 968.

The return of an execution that the defendants, who were partners, are not, either in their partnership name or as individuals, seised or possessed of any real estate or personalty which could be seized or taken by virtue of the execution, is prima facie evidence of a want of property subject to levy, both as individuals and as a partnership; and is sufficient to give a creditor a standing in a court of equity to obtain satisfaction of his judgment out of the individual property (real estate) of one of the partners, which is alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed by such partner. Randolph v. Daly, 16 N. J. Eq. 313.

In Montgomery v. Turney, 85 Ky. 55, 2 S. W. 562, it was held that the fact that the debtor might have had other property outside of that fraudulently conveyed, subject to execution, sufficient to pay the debt, and that the creditors, while the execution was in the hands of the sheriff, had it, but failed or refused to have it levied upon, and contrived to have the land in question subjected to the payment of the debt in order to deprive the husband of the grantee of his marital rights, would not stand in the way of an equitable action to reach the same.

The return of an execution "no property found" makes a prima facie case, and authorizes the bringing of an action in the nature of a creditors' bill to reach property fraudulently conveyed, notwithstanding the execution defendant may have had some property subject to execution which was not found by the sheriff, but not enough to pay all his debts, or all of his debt to the plaintiff. Lee v. Lee, 77 Ind. 251.

Under a statute providing that, when execution is returned "no property found," the creditor may resort to his equitable action to subject any "equitable or legal interest, and all other property" of the debtor to the satisfaction of the judgment, he is not required to know that the return of which might be found before the day fixed by law for its return; and that, this not having been done, it could not be held that the complainant had exhausted his legal remedy. But it was held that whether the execution was prematurely or improperly returned were questions belonging to another forum, in a proceeding against the sheriff.

The return of an execution on the return day, where a creditors' bill based thereon is not filed until after the return day, is sufficient. Williams v. Hogeboom, 8 Paige, 469.

A return of an execution before the return day is not an obstacle in the way of a creditors' bill. Barth v. Heider, 7 D. C. 71; Field v. Chapman, 15 Abb. Pr. 443; Suydam v. Beals, 4 McLean 12, Fed. Cas. No. 13,653.

A return of execution may be made before the return day if there is no property out of which to satisfy the same. Whitehead v. Hellen, 74 N. C. 679.

The legal remedy may be exhausted before the expiration of the time allowed by law for the return of the execution, and therefore a return of an execution before that time is not fatal to the maintenance of a creditors' bill. Bassett v. Orr, 7 Biss. 296, Fed. Cas. No. 1,095.

In Bowen v. Parkhurst, 24 Ill. 257, the court said that all executions from the circuit court were, by law, returnable in ninety days from and after their date. The officer having it in charge had that time in which to find property to levy upon. He must make his levy within that time, and after that the writ was powerless. In general, it was his duty to hold the writ during all that time, but he might take the responsibility of making an earlier return to it of nulla bona, especially after he had made a personal demand upon the defendant to turn out property, and he had refused so to do. When the return was made and the execution was unsatisfied, in whole or in part, and the defendant had no property out of which it could be satisfied, a case had arisen for the interposition of a court of chancery. His return became a matter of record, and was conclusive as between the parties to the judgment and the officer, only to be questioned in an action for a false return. It showed prima facie that the creditor had exhausted his legal remedy, and chancery had jurisdiction. A return could not be compelled before the expiration of ninety days, but the sheriff might take the responsibility of making it at an earlier day.

The sheriff need not return the execution before the expiration of the time allowed by law, but, if he takes the responsibility, and does return it before that time, the creditor may, under the statute, exhibit his bill. Young v. Clapp, 40 Ill. App. 312, affirmed in 147 Ill. 176, 32 N. E. 187, 35 N. E. 372.

The return of an execution before the return day, where the creditors' bill is not filed until after the return day, is only an irregularity, and an objection thereto must be made in the court wherein the execution was issued. The complainant, after the return day has passed, has a right to consider his remedy at law as exhausted, and to file his bill in equity to reach the effects of the defendant which cannot be levied on by the sheriff. Platt v. Caldwell, 9 Paige, 386.

It is not a good objection to a creditors' bill that the execution was made returnable in less than sixty days, since the defect in the writ makes it irregular, and not void, and the defendant's remedy is by motion to set it aside in the court whence it is issued. Rider v. Mason, 4 Sandf. Ch. 351.

In Forbes v. Logan, 4 Bosw. 486, it was held, Bosworth, Ch. J., dissenting, that a creditors' suit to set aside an alleged fraudulent assignment could be maintained although it was begun on the sixtieth day after the receipt by the sheriff of the execution on the judgment on which it was founded, and although the execution was, at the request of plaintiff's attorney, returned on the seventh day after its receipt by the sheriff, and the complaint was verified on the fifty-fourth day after the execution was received.

The doctrine that a creditors' bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of personal property may be based on the return of the execution nulla bona before return day is also established in the District of Columbia as to creditors' bills to reach personal property. It was applied in Mehler v. Cornwell, 3 App. D. C. 92; Clark v. Walter T. Bradley Coal, Lime, & Cement Co. 6 App. D. C. 437. In the Mehler Case it was also held that the fact that the execution was returned nulla bona before the return day by the order of the attorney for the judgment creditor would not be sufficient to bar the creditor's right to equitable relief.

In Mississippi the doctrine also obtains that the return of an execution by a sheriff on his own motion before return day is sufficient. Ward v. Whitfield, 64 Miss. 754, 2 So. 493. The court said that if there was no property subject to execution while the writ remained in the sheriff's hands, there existed no presumption that the condition of the debtor would be changed before the return day. A creditor was not bound to desist from an effort to subject the equitable assets of his debtor in the hope or expectation that, by some chance, he might thereafter acquire legal assets.

In Steward v. Stevens, Harr. Ch. (Mich.) 169, it was said, on the contrary, that, until the return day of the execution, it was the duty of the officer to seize and sell any property of the defendant found within his county, and that the execution could not therefore be considered as legally returned unsatisfied until that day.

And in Thayer v. Swift, Harr. Ch. (Mich.) 430, a return of an execution before the return day was held to be insufficient to authorize a creditors' bill.

And in Smith v. Thompson, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 1, it was held that the return of an execution on the day before it was returnable was insufficient to support a creditors' bill.

The return of execution more than a month before the return day will not support a creditors' bill, although the bill itself was not filed until after the return day. Stafford v. Hulbert, Harr. Ch. (Mich.) 435.

A bill to reach choses in action cannot be maintained where the execution was returned before the return day. Beach v. White, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 495.

But, in Williams v. Hubbard, 1 Mich. 446, it was held that the fact that a levy might be made on the return day of the execution did not make return of the execution on the return day a day too soon to be the basis of a bill to reach equitable assets. The court said that, although the sheriff might keep the writ in his hands until the last moment of that day, for the purpose of making search for property upon which to levy, yet, he was required to return it upon that day, and, if the officer were given full credit for a faithful performance of his duty under the law, the writ might well be presumed to have been returned on the last moment of that day.

In Field v. Hunt, 22 How. Pr. 329, 13 Abb. Pr. 320, it was said that, had the objection been urged that sixty days had not elapsed between the issuing of the executions upon the judgment at law and the commencement of the equitable actions, the court would have felt constrained to hold the objection well taken.

In Forbes v. Waller, 25 N. Y. 430, the court said that, before resorting to the equitable powers of the court to compel the satisfaction of a judgment out of the choses in action of a debtor, it was fit and proper that the legal remedy should be exhausted, not only in form, but in reality and in good faith. Hence, the courts held that the debtor could not be subjected to the costs and annoyance of a creditors' bill under a statute providing for filing of such bills, until not only an execution against the property of the debtor had been issued to the proper county and had been returned unsatisfied, but until the return day of the execution had passed.

Of course, much may depend upon the language of the statutes relating to the return of the execution.

Where, by the Code, an execution is to be returned after sixty days, it can hardly be said, declared the court, in Knauth v. Bassett, 34 Barb. 31, that, under the Code, an execution has a return day.

In Howe v. Cobb, 3 McLean, 270, Fed. Cas. No. 6,767, it was held that, under the Michigan statute of 1838, providing that whenever an execution against the property of the defendant shall have been issued on a judgment at law, and shall have been returned unsatisfied, in whole or in part, the party suing out such execution may file a bill, etc., the return of execution unsatisfied before the return day was sufficient to authorize a creditors' bill. It was said that, if there was a false return, the officer was responsible.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Where the statute provides that execution shall be returned "within" a certain number of days, the creditor is not obliged to wait until the expiration of the time mentioned before proceeding in equity to set aside a fraudulent deed to real estate. Reeves v. Sherwood, 45 Ark. 520. The court said that when it became apparent that the effort to raise the debt by execution would be fruitless, it would be unreasonable to require the creditor to hold his other remedies in abeyance until the return day of the writ, and thereby afford the debtor the opportunity of effecting measures to evade all subsequent proceedings.

Where the Code provides that an execution is returnable "within sixty days after its receipt by the officer," and the statutes provide that, whenever an execution against the property of a defendant shall have been issued on the judgment at law, and shall have been returned unsatisfied, in whole or in part, the party suing out such execution may file a bill in chancery against such defendant, to compel a discovery of any property or thing in action belonging to the defendant, etc., it is sufficient if the execution is returned within the sixty days allowed, provided it is returned without collusion between the sheriff and the creditor. Renaud v. O'Brien, 35 N. Y. 99. The court said that the time allowed for the return of an execution was for the benefit of the sheriff, to prevent an action or compulsory proceedings against him before he had had a reasonable time to execute the process. If the sheriff had made an honest return that he could find no property of the defendant in his county, there could be no reason for staying the proceedings of a creditor in resorting to a court of equity for relief against the fraudulent disposition of property by a judgment debtor.

Under the statute making execution returnable "within sixty days," a return before the expiration of such time is sufficient to support a creditors' action. Davelaar v. Blue Mound Invest. Co. 110 Wis. 470, 86 N. W. 185.

Under a statute providing that a bill may be filed "whenever" an execution shall have been issued and returned unsatisfied, the sheriff may return the execution before the period allowed by law therefor, and such a return will support the bill. First Nat. Bank v. Gage, 79 Ill. 208.

Under the statute authorizing a creditors' suit "whenever" an execution against a judgment debtor shall have been issued and returned unsatisfied, in whole or in part, a judgment creditors' bill will not be retained if filed before the return day of the execution, nor will it be retained if the execution is returned unsatisfied before the return day. Second Nat. Bank v. Dwight, 83 Mich. 192, 47 N. W. 111.

A return of an execution is not objectionable because made before the day named in it for the return. Dana v. Banks, 6 J. J. Marsh. 219. The court said that the only object of the law in requiring that there should be at least thirty, and not more than ninety, days between the teste and return day of the execution, was to secure the interest of the creditor by allowing full time for the officer to levy it, and yet preventing a long and unnecessary delay. But this provision did not prevent the officer from acting under the execution immediately.

Where, by statute, executions may be made returnable at any time not less than twenty nor more than ninety days from the time an execution shall be issued, a creditors' bill will not lie, where it appears from the return that, including the day of delivery and the return day, there were not nineteen days in which the marshal might have levied. Second Nat. Bank v. Dwight, supra.

A creditors' bill cannot be filed until after the return day of an execution has passed, although it is returned unsatisfied before that time; since the court cannot legally know or presume, previous to the return day of the execution, that the judgment will not be satisfied. Cassidy v. Mcacham, 3 Paige, 311.

4. Effect of collusion as to.

While creditors' bills may now generally be based on executions returned before the return day, there must be an effort made in good faith to find property on which to levy. Any collusive return of the writ would be fatal to relief in equity.

A creditors' bill will be dismissed where it appears that the creditor has issued an execution upon his judgment, and procured its immediate return unsatisfied, when in fact no effort whatever has been made by the officer to find the property, and when in fact the debtor has tangible visible property from which the amount of the judgment can be realized. Bassett v. Orr, 7 Biss. 296, Fed. Cas. No. 1,095.

In Congden v. Lee, 3 Edw. Ch. 304, the court refused to require the tenants of certain real estate on which complainant's judgment was a lien to attorn and pay their rents to a receiver theretofore appointed, where it appeared that the complainant and the sheriff who had the execution in charge and had returned it nulla bona, both knew of the real estate, upon which it could have been levied.

A bill to reach choses in action cannot be maintained where the execution has been returned at the direction of the execution creditor. Williams v. Hubbard, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 28.

Stirlen v. Jewett, 165 Ill. 410, 46 N. E. 259, also holds that the return of an execution by a sheriff at the request of the execution creditor, without having made any bona fide effort to find any property of the debtor on which to levy, will not support a creditors' bill.

An execution returned by a sheriff on the order of the plaintiff's attorney was also held insufficient in Hartley v. Atkins, 64 Ill. App. 502.

It is a good defense to a creditors' bill to obtain satisfaction of a judgment out of the equitable interests and choses in action of the debtor, that such debtor had property out of which the judgment might have been satisfied, in whole or in part, and that the sheriff had omitted to levy on such property by collusion with the plaintiff. The fraudulent act of the plaintiff vitiates the return of the execution, and deprives him of his action in the nature of a creditors' bill. Forbes v. Waller, 25 N. Y. 430.

Where a judgment creditor seizes, on an execution directed to the county wherein the judgment was obtained, property of the debtor apparently sufficient to satisfy his judgment, and he prevents the sheriff from selling it, and thereafter causes another execution to issue to another county, a return of nulla bona on the latter execution, under the foregoing facts, will not bring him within the rule authorizing creditors whose execution has been issued and returned nulla bona to seek equitable aid by way of a creditors' bill. Canaday v. Nuttall, 37 N. C. (2 Ired. Eq.) 265.

But, the fact that the sheriff is directed by the creditor's attorney to return the execution unsatisfied before the time for returning it has fully expired does not matter if the officer has made a personal demand on the defendant in the writ to turn out money or property to satisfy it, which demand is refused, and the sheriff is unable to find any property of the debtor. Illinois Malleable Iron Co. v. Graham, 55 Ill. App. 266; Pecos Irrig. & Improv. Co. v. Olson, 63 Ill. App. 313. To the same effect is Howe v. Babcock, 72 Ill. App. 68.

5. Demand before return.

A demand on a debtor for the payment of the execution is not necessary before making a return thereon, where the sheriff returns the execution "no property found," on his own responsibility, and not at the instance of the creditor or his attorney. Thompson v. Marsh, 61 Ill. App. 269.

But, in Metz v. McAvoy Brewing Co. 98 Ill. App. 584, it was said that it is a grave question whether the remedy at law is exhausted without a demand having been made of a defendant who is shown to be a resident of the county where the execution issues, where the defendant has the right, under the statute, to turn out his real estate before his personalty is taken.

In Reinhardt v. Kennedy, 106 Ill. App. 96, however, it was held that a creditors' bill may be filed upon the return of an execution nulla bona, although it does not appear that any demand was made upon the defendant, and the return was made by the officer upon the day the execution was received by him.

e. Necessity of issuing new execution.

In Storms v. Ruggles, Clarke, Ch. 148, where more than five years had elapsed since the rendition of the judgment and the return of the execution, it was held that a creditors' bill could not be maintained until another attempt had been made to collect the judgment by the issuance of a new execution. The court said that, "in this country, a man who was a bankrupt five years ago may, owing to the mutations of property, be a rich man to-day; and, as the law does not favor an accumulation of costs in legal proceedings, it would seem to be right that, after a judgment has stood for a period of three years or more, the plaintiff should try again with an execution to collect it before he incurs the costs of filing a bill in this court. I do not mean to say that there may not be exceptions to this rule, but, if there is anything in the circumstances of a particular case, after so much delay, to render it necessary to file a bill without issuing a new execution, it should be stated in the bill."

So, a delay of nine years without taking out a new execution was held fatal. Gould v. Tryon, Walk. Ch. (Mich.) 353.

In Park v. Moore, 3 Edw. Ch. 234, a motion for a receiver made in a pending creditors' bill was denied where the bill showed that a writ of fieri facias had not been issued in three years, and that the debtor had property subject to execution, the court saying that all the creditor had to do was to issue another writ and to levy.

But, in Clark v. Davis, Harr. Ch. (Mich.) 227, it was held that the issue of a new execution after the return of one nulla bona would not affect the right of the execution creditor to base a creditors' bill on an original execution and its return nulla bona.

Under a statute providing that a party suing out an execution may file a bill, etc., one who purchases a judgment upon which execution has been returned unsatisfied cannot file a creditors' bill founded thereon, in his own name, unless he shall have caused an execution to be issued upon such judgment after his purchase. Fitch v. Baldwin, Clarke, Ch. 106.

In Wakeman v. Russel, 1 Edw. Ch. 509, the court expressed the strongest doubt whether an assignee of a judgment upon which execution had been returned unsatisfied could maintain a creditors' bill without the issuance of a new execution, under a statute providing that the party suing out the execution should file the bill. The court said that where three years had elapsed since execution was issued by the original parties, and the assignee had taken out no fresh process, he had not exhausted his legal remedies.

But, in Gleason v. Gage, 7 Paige, 121, it was held that, where the bill was filed by the assignee of a judgment, it was not necessary to take out a second execution, the court saying that the vice chancellor in the last-mentioned case misapprehended the spirit and intent of the statutory provision upon the subject of creditors' bills. The object of the revisers and of the legislature was not to establish as a technical rule that the execution should have been taken out by the same individual who filed the bill, but it was to establish and declare the great principle that the creditor, after the remedy against the tangible property of the debtor had been exhausted by the return of an execution unsatisfied, might come into equity for the purpose of obtaining a discovery and payment out of the property of the debtor which could not otherwise be reached. There was no good reason for requiring him to go through the mere formality of taking out a new execution and having it returned unsatisfied when the ink was scarcely dry upon a similar return made by the sheriff upon the execution which had been issued at the instance of the party from whom he purchased the judgment.

In Strange v. Longley, 3 Barb. Ch. 650, it was also held that the fact that, after an execution has been issued and returned nulla bona, the judgment was assigned, would not render it necessary for the assignee thereof to cause another execution to be issued and returned nulla bona before he could file a creditors' bill.

And, in Dimond v. Rogers, 203 Ill. 464, 67 N. E. 968, although the question was not properly raised, the court said that it was of the opinion that it was not necessary for the assignee of a judgment to issue a new execution before the filing of a creditors' bill. To the same effect is Rankin v. Rothschild, 78 Mich. 10, 43 N. W. 1077.

Where an execution on a judgment in an action on a promissory note is satisfied by an indorser, who takes an assignment of the judgment, an indorsement of the sheriff on the execution, that it is satisfied out of the property of the indorser, but returned nulla bona as to the other defendants, is not sufficient to authorize a creditors' bill by the indorser against the other defendants, another execution and its return unsatisfied being necessary for that purpose. Bostwick v. Scott, 40 Hun, 212.

Where, under a statute, legal remedies must be exhausted before the maintenance of a bill to reach real estate alleged to be held in trust for the debtor, and it appears by the allegations of the bill that whether execution was issued within seven years after the rendition of the judgment is wholly conjectural, and it is certain that no execution was issued after the judgment was revived on scire facias, the bill cannot be maintained. Crawford v. Cook, 55 Ill. App. 351.

In Gilmore v. Miami Exporting Co. 2 Ohio, 294, a proceeding under § 59 of the chancery law to charge debts due from certain defendants to the debtor to the payment of a creditor's claim, a demurrer on the ground that the bill did not charge that execution had been issued and returned nothing to be found was overruled without opinion. In this case, upon one judgment no execution had been sued out, upon the other execution had issued, was returned nulla bona, and levied upon real estate, which, upon a vendi., had been sold for a very small sum. No new fi. fa. had been taken.

f. Pursuit of joint debtors.

It has generally been held that, before a creditor may proceed against the property of one joint debtor, he must exhaust his legal remedy against all the others. It would seem that the rule as to joint debtors ought to be the same as it is in the case of several debtors; that is, that where the property sought to be reached is subject to levy, the remedy at law need not be exhausted; but that, when the creditor pursues property not subject to levy, the remedy at law as against all the other debtors should be exhausted.

A creditor cannot set aside a fraudulent conveyance of the property of one of the debtors until he has pursued his legal remedy against the others. Eller v. Lacy, 137 Ind. 436, 36 N. E. 1088.

One who brings a joint action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate by one of the debtors must show that all the debtors are insolvent. Geiser Mfg. Co. v. Lee, 33 Ind. App. 338, 66 N. E. 701; Riddick v. Parr, 111 Iowa, 733, 82 N. W. 1002.

A bill in equity to subject the assets of an absent debtor to the payment of the creditor's claim cannot be maintained where he has a perfect remedy at common law against the joint debtor. Lupton v. Lupton, 3 Cal. 120.

Where the judgment in a court of a justice of the peace is against two defendants, and the bill in equity is against but one, and there is no allegation that the other has no real estate, the bill cannot be maintained. Wilson v. Dale, 5 Ind. 163.

In Kyle v. Frost, 29 Ind. 382, it was held that a suit to subject real estate held by the wife of one of the judgment debtors could not be maintained, where the return did not show that the other defendants were insolvent, or give any reason why judgment could not be made out of them by the ordinary process of execution, except that one of them had no property in the county.

On a general creditors' bill it was held, in Howard v. Sheldon, 11 Paige, 558, that the creditor's remedies against all the joint debtors must be first exhausted and an execution issued and returned unsatisfied as to all of them before he would be entitled to the aid of equity.

In Voorhees v. Howard, 4 Abb. App. Dec. 503, the court said that it was always necessary, both before and after the adoption of the Revised Statutes, that the bill should show affirmatively that an honest attempt had been made to collect the debt by the issuing and return of an execution against the judgment debtor; and that, where there were several defendants jointly liable thereon, that such effort had been made and such remedy exhausted against all the judgment debtors before jurisdiction would be entertained in chancery.

Where there are two or more joint debtors, the remedy at law must be exhausted as to all before a statute requiring a bona fide attempt to collect the debt can be said to have been complied with. Field v. Hunt, 22 How. Pr. 329, 13 Abb. Pr. 320. The court said that, if there was any excuse for not proceeding to final execution against one or more of the joint debtors, as that he was out of the jurisdiction of the court, a bankrupt, a surety, or the like, the facts relied upon should be stated in the complaint in the equitable action.

But, in Hiler v. Hetterick, 5 Daly, 33, a judgment and return of execution unsatisfied as against one of two joint debtors was held a sufficient foundation for a creditors' bill to reach real estate purchased by the debtor, and conveyed to a third person in fraud of creditors.

Where a statute requires execution to be issued to the county in which the judgment is rendered, or to the county of the residence of the debtor against whom equitable proceedings are directed to reach equitable assets, the fact that there are several defendants, and that an execution has been directed to the county of the residence of some of them, does not obviate the necessity of compliance with the statute as to the defendant against whom it is purposed to institute proceedings, since, the remedy being statutory, the statute must be strictly pursued. Proctor v. Bell, 97 Ky. 98, 30 S. W. 15.

Where there are several defendants who are jointly liable for the payment of the plaintiff's debts, he should exhaust his legal remedy by executions against the property of all before he applies to equity for relief, except where, perhaps, one of the defendants is a mere surety, although a statute provides that whenever an execution against the property of the defendant shall have been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part, the party suing out such execution may file a bill in chancery, etc., since the statute means that the plaintiff in the judgment shall have made a bona fide attempt to collect his debt by execution against the property of the defendant. Child v. Brace, 4 Paige, 309.

On the other hand, it was held, in Dawson v. First Nat. Bank, 228 Ill. 577, 81 N. E. 1128, that it is not a condition precedent to an action to set aside a conveyance of real estate as fraudulent that the creditor satisfy his claim by means of executions against the property of a cojudgment debtor.

Under the Kentucky act of 1796, permitting a creditor to proceed in equity to reach choses in action of an absent debtor, it was held that the creditor was not obliged to exhaust his remedy at law against a resident debtor before going into equity after the absentee's property. The court said, "We will not clog the operations of the statute by fabricating conditions which may render the remedy altogether useless." Curd v. Letcher, 3 J. J. Marsh. 443.

The levy of an execution on the land of one joint debtor is sufficient to give equity jurisdiction to remove fraudulent encumbrances placed by the debtor upon the land levied upon, and a complainant need not show the insolvency of the other debtors, or the exhaustion of his remedies at law as to them. Hodge v. Gray, 110 Mich. 654, 68 N. W. 979. The court said that the rule which obtains in respect to judgment creditors' bills does not obtain in bills in aid of execution.

Where the statute makes conveyances of property with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors "clearly and utterly void" as against the creditors affected thereby, the fact that one seeking to set aside such a conveyance fails to show the insolvency of two of the defendants in the original judgment will not stand in the way of his action. Vasser v. Henderson, 40 Miss. 519, 90 Am. Dec. 351. The court said that the right of the judgment creditor to levy his execution upon the property so conveyed, and to proceed at law to subject it to sale for the satisfaction of his debt, could not be denied, without any reference to the question whether the debtor possessed other property, or whether there were other defendants having property liable to the same judgment. In other words, it was not necessary, in order to justify the levy of an execution upon the property fraudulently conveyed, that the plaintiff should show or that the fact should exist, that neither the party who had made such conveyances, nor his codefendants in the judgment, had other property upon which a levy could be made.

Where, as between the judgment debtors and the plaintiff, each is bound to pay the whole debt, it is no ground for complaint that the creditor may see fit to collect the debt out of the property of one, and not out of that of the other. Davelaar v. Blue Mound Invest. Co. 110 Wis. 470, 86 N. W. 185.

Where the return of the sheriff shows that there are no partnership assets, and it is also shown that there are certain lands belonging to one of the members of the firm which ought to be subjected to the payment of the judgment, but which, in fraud of complainant's rights, are so situated that they cannot be sold, a bill in equity to ascertain the true state of the title may be filed, although the complainant has not first, by scire facias, given the above-mentioned defendant an opportunity to show cause why his property should not be made liable to pay the judgment. Ticonic Bank v. Harvey, 16 Iowa, 141.

But the allegation that the judgment was recovered upon the debts of the defendant against whom alone execution issued and was returned unsatisfied is insufficient to bring the case within the exception to the rule requiring the legal remedy to be exhausted as to all of the joint debtors made, as pointed out in Baker v. Potts, 73 App. Div. 29, 76 N. Y. Supp. 406 (infra, h), in the case where debtors were not liable in equal degree, or in the case of principal and surety. Egan v. Hagan, 119 App. Div. 189, 104 N. Y. Supp. 247.

In Burne v. Kunzman (N. J. Ch.) 19 Atl. 667, it was held that where the judgment was against two persons, and the complainants had made a levy on some property of one of them, and, for aught that appeared, the property covered by the levy might be sufficient to pay complainants' debt, a bill could not be maintained to set aside a mortgage and sale as fraudulent.

g. Several claims; exhaustion of remedy as to one.

Where there are several creditors and the remedy at law has been exhausted as to one, or where one creditor has several claims, and has exhausted his remedy as to one, is that a sufficient exhaustion of the remedy as to others to permit them to come in under the equity action, or to permit the other claim to be disposed of in the equitable action? Certainly, if one creditor establishes that the debtor has no property subject to levy, it would be a misconception of the reason for the rule as to the exhaustion of the remedy at law to require the other creditors to issue executions, and have them returned unsatisfied. The same may be said of requiring a creditor to exhaust his remedy as to two claims. But, as to requiring the claim to be reduced to judgment at law, another situation is presented. Has the debtor the right to have the question of indebtedness tried by jury? If he has, then the fact that one creditor has reduced his claim to judgment and exhausted his remedy, or that one claim has been reduced to judgment and the remedy exhausted as to that, would be no excuse for not reducing other claims to judgment before the equitable action. If the debtor has not the right to have the indebtedness determined at law, then, even a general creditor might come into equity, where the remedy at law had been exhausted by another creditor. To require other creditors to exhaust their remedy at law where one creditor had done so would be a useless formality; but to require them to obtain judgment at law would not be a mere formality, if there is any virtue in the right of trial by jury. It has, however, been held that where one claim has been reduced to judgment and the remedy at law exhausted, even a judgment is not a condition precedent to equitable relief on another claim.

In Carp v. Chipley, 73 Mo. App. 22, it was held that where the fact that the remedy at law was unavailing was established by the return of the execution nulla bona on the judgment of one creditor, other creditors should be allowed to intervene in a creditors' action, although their claims had not been reduced to judgment. The court said that, under such circumstances, the other creditors should not be turned away and required to sue at law in order to make proof of a fact already in evidence.

Where the claims of general creditors were consolidated with that of a judgment creditor who had established a clear right to equitable relief by having execution on his judgment returned unsatisfied, it was held that the claims of the general creditors in the action would not be postponed until they had obtained judgments and had executions returned unsatisfied. Haskell v. Wynne, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 54.

Where an action to subject the interest of a debtor in the assets of a partnership to the payment of a debt is based upon two claims, one of which is reduced to judgment, upon which execution has been returned nulla bona, the fact that the second claim is on an overdue note will not stand in the way of the bill as to the latter claim. A. G. Edwards & Son Brokerage Co. v. Rosenheim, 74 Mo. App. 621. The court said that the proof which a court of equity required that a suit at law would be inadequate was the production of a judgment on the debt sought to be enforced, and a return of nulla bona to an execution issued thereon. When these facts were made to appear in one count in the petition, it would seem to be a vain and useless thing to send liquidated claims contained in other counts to a court of law, to be there reduced to judgments, before they could be considered in an equitable proceeding of this character. A court of equity would not require such a useless ceremony before entertaining jurisdiction.

An allegation in a bill seeking the aid of equity to reach equitable assets of the debtor, that he is insolvent and has no property subject to execution, and that executions on other judgments against the debtor had been issued and thereafter returned nulla bona, presents sufficient excuse for a creditor not first causing an execution to issue and be returned nulla bona. Tabb v. Williams, 57 N. C. (4 Jones, Eq.) 352.

Where a creditors' bill is filed by a judgment creditor in behalf of himself and all other creditors, it is not necessary that all, or any, of the other creditors, in whose behalf the action is brought, should be judgment creditors. State v. Foot, 27 S. C. 340, 3 S. E. 546. The reason for the rule was said to be that, if any one of the creditors is in a position to institute the action, he has the right to do so; and, if the action results in making equitable assets, then all the others, even simple contract creditors, are entitled to share therein, and hence the action may be brought for their benefit, even though they might not be in a position to enable them to institute the action on their own behalf. "If the person named as the plaintiff is a judgment creditor, and has exhausted his legal remedies, then he may maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent deed whereby property has been placed beyond the reach of his execution, and when such deed is set aside the other creditors, as a matter of equity, are entitled to share in the proceeds of the property thus subjected to the payment of debts, and hence the action may be instituted by the judgment creditor on his own behalf as well as on behalf of the other creditors, who, though not entitled to bring such an action, are, nevertheless, equitably entitled to share in its fruits."

In Enright v. Grant, 5 Utah, 334, 15 Pac. 268, it was held that showing a return of execution upon the judgment of one of the plaintiffs was sufficient proof that the debtor had no other property upon which execution could be levied to authorize other creditors to reach equitable assets of the debtor, in view of the allegation that the plaintiffs knew of no property upon which execution could be levied, and that judgment must remain wholly unsatisfied unless they could resort to equity.

But, in M'Kinley v. Combs, 1 T. B. Mon. 105, it was held that a creditor whose claim is of a purely legal character, and therefore cognizable in a court of law, must, in order to place himself in an attitude to take advantage of a deed on the ground of its being fraudulent, pursue it at law, and recover judgment and issue execution thereon; and when such a claim is combined with one merged in a judgment upon which execution has been issued and duly returned nulla bona, the bill as to such demand must be dismissed.

And, in Bardstown & G. River Turnp. Road Co. v. Caldwell, 8 B. Mon. 36, it was held that a return nulla bona on another judgment in favor of other sureties was not sufficient under a statute which gives jurisdiction upon a return of an execution upon the judgment sought to be enforced.

h. Exhaustion as to surety, principal, indorser.

It is not necessary that the creditor should have exhausted his rights and remedies against an indorser of a note upon which the claim is founded before proceeding in equity to set aside a fraudulent transfer of the property of the principal debtor. Ramsey v. Voorhees, 38 N. J. Eq. 282.

An administrator de bonis non who obtains a judgment against his predecessor for the wrongful converting of the assets of the estate may set aside a fraudulent transfer of the latter's property without first exhausting his remedy against the sureties. Duffy v. State, 115 Ind. 351, 17 N. E. 615. The court said that there was neither equity nor justice in the demand of the grantees. They occupied positions unfavored by courts of chancery. Property which they sought to wrest from creditors by fraud was equitably and legally subject to a lien of the relator's demand, and the court could conceive no reason for permitting them to dictate to him what course he should pursue. There was no merit in the claim that the relator should leave their wrong undisturbed and compel the sureties to pay the judgment. It was not for them fraudulently to hold the property and demand that the relator should proceed against the sureties.

The last-mentioned case was followed in Harvey v. State, 123 Ind. 260, 24 N. E. 239.

It does not lie with the principal debtor or his fraudulent grantee to object to a creditors' bill to reach property he has fraudulently transferred, on the ground that his creditor has not first exhausted his legal remedies as against his surety. It would be an unnecessary burden on a judgment debtor who is a surety to compel his hand to be sacrificed, at the instance of the prinprincipal debtor, before attacking fraudulent transfers made by him. Baker v. Potts, 73 App. Div. 29, 76 N. Y. Supp. 406.

Where the original decree awarded execution in the first instance against the separate property of the principal debtor, it was held unnecessary that the complainant should have exhausted his remedy against the surety also before proceeding by a creditors' bill against the principal debtor alone. Speiglemyer v. Crawford, 6 Paige, 254.

Where the action is to reach real estate of the surety, it is unnecessary for the creditor first to exhaust his legal remedies against the sureties and the principal. State Bank v. Belk, 68 Neb. 517, 94 N. W. 617. In this class of cases the prevailing doctrine was said to be that it is not necessary to allege that an execution has been returned unsatisfied, nor that the debtor has no other property out of which the judgment can be satisfied; for that is not the ground upon which the court of equity assumes to grant relief in such cases, but upon the theory that the fraudulent conveyance is an obstruction which prevents the creditors' lien from being efficiently enforced upon the property. As to the creditor, the conveyance was void and he had a right to have himself placed in the same position as if it had not been made. The fact that other property had been retained by the debtor might be evidence that the conveyance was not fraudulent, but, if the grantee's title was tainted with fraud, he had no right to say that all other means to satisfy the debt should be exhausted before he should be disturbed.

1. Exhaustion of remedy as to debtor and third person.

In Baxter v. Moses, 77 Me. 465, 52 Am. Rep. 783, 1 Atl. 350, it was held that, with respect to the rule requiring the return of execution nulla bona before the granting of equitable relief to the creditor, no distinction was to be made between a case in which the bill complained against the principal debtor and some third person, and a bill which complained against the principal debtor alone. The court said that the distinction did not appear to have been before taken. Many of the cases where a return of nulla bona was required were against debtors alone. There was more reason for an application of the rule to the debtor than to parties associated in a bill with him. It was especially for his protection that the rule existed. It was his business that the creditors' bill usually wound up. The forms of creditors' bills in the books were of both descriptions, and the rule was the same.

2. Proceedings on inferior court judgments.

A return nulla bona upon an execution issued by a justice of the peace will not support a creditors' bill, since the return is no evidence that the defendant has not real estate subject to execution. Wilson v. Dale, 5 Ind. 163.

A creditors' bill based on a return nulla bona on an execution issued by a justice of the peace on a judgment rendered before him does not sufficiently show insolvency of the debtor, or that he did not have enough property subject to execution to pay his debts when the action was commenced. As such an execution is not leviable upon real estate, the power of the officer having custody of the same is exhausted when he fails to find personal property upon which to levy. Stuckwisch v. Holmes, 29 Ind. App. 512, 64 N. E. 894.

A judgment of a justice of the peace will not support a creditors' bill to reach real estate fraudulently conveyed, especially where the land sought to be subjected lies in another county from that in which the judgment was obtained. State Ins. Co. v. Prestage, 116 Iowa, 466, 90 N. W. 62.

The return of "no property" on an execution issued on a judgment of a justice of the peace is not sufficient to entitle a judgment creditor to the aid of equity to subject to the payment of his judgment lands of the debtor to which he had the legal title, since he could have reached such lands by execution from circuit court. Weatherford v. Myers, 2 Dur. 91.

Under the Kentucky statutes, § 6, act of 1821, and the general execution law of 1828, a return of the execution on a judgment of a justice of the peace of over £5 was sufficient to authorize equitable relief against the debtor's real estate. Newdigate v. Jacobs, 9 Dana, 18.

The remedy must be exhausted as to real estate as well as personal property before a creditors' bill can be filed. Therefore a bill cannot be founded on a justice-of-the-peace judgment, the execution having been directed against personal property only. To complete the remedy the complainant must docket his judgment in the county clerk's office and take out executions there so as to reach the real as well as the personal property of the defendant, if he has any in the county. Dix v. Briggs, 9 Paige, 595. To the same effect, Henderson v. Brooks, 3 Thomp. & C. 445; Crippen v. Hudson, 13 N. Y. 161.

A creditors' bill to reach real estate cannot be founded upon a return nulla bona of an execution on an attachment judgment of a justice of the peace without personal service of process, where the statute does not authorize such attachment to be served upon the real estate of the defendant, and does not authorize the execution issued in a suit commenced by attachment where the defendant was not personally served with process and does not appear therein, or levy upon the goods and chattels of the defendant generally, and does not make the filing of the transcript of such judgment in the county clerk's office a lien upon the real estate of the defendant, and authorize the county clerk to issue execution against such real estate founded upon the filing of the transcript, and where the statute also provides that such judgments shall be only prima facie evidence of the indebtedness in any suit that may be brought thereon, and may be repelled by the defendant, and also provides that he shall not be barred from any set-off, since the remedy of the owner of such judgments is to bring new suits thereon, and, after he obtains new and general judgments in these suits, to exhaust his remedy against real as well as the personal estate of the defendant on such new judgments. Corey v. Cornelius, 1 Barb. Ch. 571.

A creditors' bill to reach real estate cannot be maintained in the Iowa district court on a judgment in the superior court, since, a judgment of that court not being a lien upon real estate, the creditor has no lien, and is not in a position to perfect one and subject it to the payment of his judgment upon the removal of the obstacle presented by the fraudulent transfer, and since he has not exhausted his remedy at law by filing a transcript with the clerk of the district court so as to make the judgment a lien upon real estate. Peterson v. Gittings, 107 Iowa, 306, 77 N. W. 1056.

Under a statute providing that judgments in the city superior court may be made liens upon real estate in the county in which the city is located, by filing transcripts of the same in the district court, where a transcript of a judgment of a superior court of one county was not filed in the district court of that county, but was filed in another county in which the real estate of the debtor was situated, it was held that this did not create a lien on the property, and therefore would not support a creditors' bill. Drahos v. Kopesky, 132 Iowa, 497, 109 N. W. 1021.

A judgment of a city superior court, a transcript of which is indorsed as filed and signed by the clerk, is not a sufficient basis for a creditors' bill. Green v. Forney, 134 Iowa, 316, 111 N. W. 976.

An execution and the return of "no property" from a quarterly court is not sufficient to give a court of equity jurisdiction to set aside a fraudulent conveyance. Grover v. Smith, 5 Ky. L. Rep. 250.

Upon the issuance of an execution from a quarterly court merely, and a return thereon of nulla bona, the creditor cannot resort to a proceeding in rem to subject to sale the real estate of his debtor. He must first exhaust his legal remedies. Mansfield v. Wilkinson, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 276, 27 S. W. 808.

Issuing an execution on the judgment of a quarterly court, and a return nulla bona thereon, will not entitle a creditor to seek the aid of equity to subject the debtor's real estate to the payment of his debts. An allegation that no transcript of the judgment had been lodged with the clerk of the circuit court, and no execution sued out thereon, for the reason that the debtor had no other real estate than that sought to be sold in the equitable proceeding, does not meet the requirement that the remedy at law must be exhausted before a creditor can successfully apply to equity. Mansfield v. Wilkinson, supra. Such a judgment, however, is sufficient where it is sought only to make it the basis for reaching equitable assets of the debtor. Jones v. Jeffress, 11 Bush, 636.

In Clements v. Waters, 90 Ky. 96, 13 S. W. 96, the court said that, as land cannot be levied upon under an execution from a quarterly or justices' court, the statute authorizing the filing of a transcript in the circuit court of the proceedings in those courts showing a return of "no property," and the issual then of an execution by the clerk of the circuit court, was a proper one. It saved the costs and trouble of a second suit. A creditor was not allowed therefore to resort to an equitable action upon his judgment to reach the land of his debtor until he had failed to make his debt by suing out execution from the circuit court in the manner provided by the statute.

Under a statute providing that land cannot be levied on or sold under an execution from a quarterly court, if the creditor's judgment is in a quarterly court, he must, after an execution issued upon it has been returned "no property," obtain a transcript of the proceedings, file them in the clerk's office of the circuit court, and have an execution issued therefrom as provided by § 723 of the Code, and returned "no property;" a return of a quarterly-court execution nulla bona is not sufficient to authorize the creditor to set aside the conveyance of real estate. Behan v. Warfield, 90 Ky. 151, 13 S. W. 439.

An execution issued upon a judgment rendered in an inferior court, which cannot be levied upon real estate, is not sufficient to entitle a creditor to equitable aid to subject real estate of the debtor to the satisfaction of the judgment. It is necessary first to have such judgment transferred to the circuit court, and execution issued from that court, under the Kentucky Code. Alexander v. Mullins, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 31.

In Leggett v. Hopkins, 7 Paige, 149, it was held to be sufficient if the execution was issued in the county wherein the judgment was rendered, where the jurisdiction of the court of record in which the suit was brought did not extend beyond that county. It was held to be unnecessary for the complainant to bring another suit upon the judgment in the county where the property of the defendants was situated, or where they resided before he was authorized to proceed against them in equity.

V. Exceptions to general rules; excuses for noncompliance.

a. Where claim is admitted or allowed.

If the debtor is in default so that a judgment may be entered up against him, or if the debt is admitted or duly allowed against the debtor's estate by his representatives, it would seem that the reason for the rule requiring judgment as a condition precedent to equitable relief fails, and that under such circumstances the judgment may be dispensed, unless an exhaustion of the remedy at law is also required, which of course would necessitate judgment before an execution could be issued.

Where property of the debtor has been attached and the debtor has defaulted, a bill in equity may be maintained to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate. Dodge v. Griswold, 8 N. H. 425. The court said that the default was an admission of record that the creditor had a just claim against the debtor in that suit. And upon this admission, the creditor had at least prima facie a right to enter up judgment against the debtor, sue out execution, and extend the same upon the lands attached. The creditor had then, at the time of filing his bill, prima facie a present subsisting title, and right to have the attached land applied in satisfaction of the debt demanded in the attachment suit. This seemed to the court equivalent to the lien created by judgment at law.

A creditor need not reduce his claim to judgment before proceeding in equity to subject real estate fraudulently conveyed to the payment of the demand, where there is no dispute as to the claim, and where the debtor died notoriously insolvent. Nieters v. Brockman, 11 Mo. App. 600.

The rule that the debtor has a right to have the amount of his debt determined in a court of law is satisfied without proceeding at law to judgment, where the debt is acknowledged by the debtor. D. A. Tompkins Co. v. Catawba Mills, 82 Fed. 780.

In Burnham, M. & Co. v. Smith, 82 Mo. App. 35, the principle was enunciated that, if a claim is undisputed, and the assets sought to be reached to be applied in payment thereof are not subject to execution or garnishment, and the debtor is insolvent, equity will take jurisdiction although the creditor's claim is not reduced to judgment. It is, however, recognized that there may be cases where the debt is disputed, and where there are issues of fact in respect thereto, which the debtor is entitled to have submitted to a jury. A court of equity would refuse in that event to further entertain jurisdiction of the cause. The question is discussed on principles applicable to creditors' bills, and the doctrine announced is sound in that aspect of the case. It should also be noted, however, that the action, described as being "in the nature of a creditors' bill," was for an accounting of a trustee in deeds of trust. This would seem therefore to be a case of which equity could take original jurisdiction, and that it was therefore one in which the remedy at law is not required to be exhausted. See infra, VI.

Although a creditor assailing a deed of assignment is not a judgment creditor, yet, where his claim is recognized in the deed and the amount of the debt is also recognized therein, equity has jurisdiction since there is no necessity of judgment to fix that amount. Cohen v. Morris, 70 Ga. 313.

Where the creditor's debt is conceded, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

judgment and execution are not conditions precedent to relief against insolvent partners of a dissolved partnership, by way of injunction and receivership to protect the partnership assets. Dillon v. Horn, 5 How. Pr. 35.

Where a partnership is, by the acts of the copartners, terminated, and the partners and partnership are insolvent, and all their assets, firm and personal, are covered by mortgages, and are being disposed of by sale, and scattered beyond the reach of their creditors, irrevocably, and the claims of the complainant creditors are expressly admitted, both in mortgages and in the pleadings in the case, and such creditors are made defendants to a petition by one of the mortgagees to marshal the assets, and for distribution of the funds covered by the mortgage,—such facts are sufficient to authorize an exception to the general rule that, before equitable aid can be sought by a creditor, a judgment is necessary; and such creditors have a proper standing in such proceeding, by a cross petition in the nature of a creditors' bill, to impeach the validity of these mortgages, which stand in the way of their just participation in the assets of the co-partnership. Taylor v. Riggs, 8 Kan. App. 323, 57 Pac. 44.

Where the bill was to enjoin proceedings to sell on execution on the alleged fraudulent judgment, and the debt and insolvency of the defendant, as well as every other material allegation of the bill, except that of fraud, were confessed by the answer, it was said by the court, in Heyneman v. Dannenberg, 6 Cal. 376, 65 Am. Dec. 519, that it would be requiring the plaintiffs to do a vain act if they should be compelled to await their judgment at law, and a return of execution, when it was acknowledged that the only effect would be a return of nulla bona, and that the property which they had attached in the meantime would have passed in the hands of a bona fide purchaser under color of a judicial sale, and be lost to them forever. Fraud is one of the primary subjects of equity jurisdiction, and it is not to be supposed that a court of chancery would refuse to entertain jurisdiction in a case like the one at bar, where the sole issue is one of fraud and where, by such refusal, the fraud complained of would be most successfully consummated.

"An action in the nature of a creditors' bill is properly based on an order of a probate court, upon the settlement of an administrator's accounts, to the administrator for the payment of money." Warner v. York, 25 Ohio C. C. 310.

Presentation, allowance, and approval of claims in an insolvency court is the equivalent of a judgment for the purpose of enforcing the creditor's rights against fraudulent or void acts of the insolvent. Ruggles v. Cannedy, 127 Cal. 290, 46 L.R.A. 371, 53 Pac. 911, 59 Pac. 827.

In Plume & A. Mfg. Co. v. Baldwin, 87 Fed. 785, it was said that a judgment in a court of law is not always indispensable to the bringing of a creditors' bill, and it was held that it should not be required where the claim upon which the equitable action was based is verified and allowed in insolvency proceedings following an assignment by the debtor.

Where an assignee of a debtor adjusted the creditor's claim, ascertained and allowed the amount due, and gave him a certificate therefor, which adjudication, under the statute, was as final as if rendered by a court, it was held to furnish a sufficient establishment of the claim to support a bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate. Roan v. Winn, 93 Mo. 503, 4 S. W. 736.

But, if the filing with the assignee under an assignment, of a claim to which no exceptions are filed within the time allowed by statute for the same, can be said to constitute an adjudication of the same, this cannot avail a complainant who files his bill before the expiration of that time, since the adjudication cannot be said to become effectual until the expiration of the time for filing exceptions. Austin v. Bruner, 169 Ill. 178, 48 N. E. 449.

And the requirement that a claim be reduced to judgment is not satisfied by the allowance of a creditor's claim against the estate of the debtor under a void assignment, since this leaves him in the position of a general creditor. McCoy v. Connecticut F. Ins. Co. 87 Mo. App. 73.

A mere finding that the creditors have a valid claim against the congregation of an unincorporated church, which they are entitled to recover from it, is not a sufficient basis for a proceeding in aid of execution. Males v. Murray, 7 Ohio N. P. 614.

An award of arbitrators is no sufficient basis for a bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of the debtor's property. Duberry v. Clifton, Cooke (Tenn.) 328.

But, in Sanborn v. Maxwell, 18 App. D. C. 245, it was held that a judgment is not necessary to the enforcement of an equitable lien where the complainant's demand has been liquidated by an award under an arbitration agreement, since the award is as conclusive of the demand, both in respect to its validity and amount, as a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction would be.

For allowance of claims against a decedent's estate, see infra, V., g, 2.

b. Where compliance with rules would be a mere matter of form.

The impossibility, impracticability, or futility of exhausting the remedy at law has been held to be a sufficient excuse for not doing so. When a statute, however, in positive terms directs the return of execution nulla bona, it has been held that that condition cannot be dispensed with.

In Dahlman v. Jacobs, 5 McCrary, 230, 16 Fed. 614, the fact that a debtor was a married woman, and that she had encumbered her property in favor of one creditor to the prejudice of others, was held to be sufficient to entitle a creditor at large to the aid of equity to compel an equal division of her property, since, under the Missouri statutes, the creditor cannot proceed at law to reduce his claim to judgment.

In Guaranty Title & T. Co. v. Pearlman, 144 Fed. 550, while recognizing that ordinarily, before a creditor may take steps to avoid the disposition by a debtor of his property as fraudulent, a judgment and execution against the property alleged to have been fraudulently disposed of are conditions precedent, it is held that, where such a course is not practicable, as where a statute makes sales of stocks of goods in bulk void at the instance of creditors, and requires proceedings to be begun within ninety days after the sale, which period of time is so limited as to render it impossible in the ordinary course of affairs for a creditor first to reduce his claim to judgment before seeking equitable aid given by this statute, equity will lend its aid to enforce the provisions of the statute in behalf of a creditor at large who has not reduced his claim to judgment.

In National Tradesmen's Bank v. Wetmore, 124 N. Y. 248, 26 N. E. 548, it was held that the fact that there had been neither execution nor judgment upon the creditor's debt could not stand in the way of an action to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance of real estate, where the creditor had begun action against the debtor in a sister state, and the debtor had died during the pendency of the suit, and where the creditor sought to revive the execution against the administrator, and the court ordered the action to abate on the ground of the debtor's insolvency, since the case presented was one in which the plaintiff could recover upon his claim, no judgment entitling him to have an execution issued and returned. The court said that the general rule requiring judgment, execution, etc., before complainant is entitled to relief in equity, is not so unrelenting as to deny to a party the interposition of the equity powers of the court when the situation is such as to render impossible the aid of the court of law, there to take the preliminary steps, and produce what ordinarily might be treated as the condition precedent to the application for equitable relief.

But, in Clinton v. South Shore Natural Gas & Fuel Co. 61 Misc. 339, 113 N. Y. Supp. 289, it was said that it is a general principle of law and equity that a creditors' bill cannot be maintained until a judgment has been issued and been returned unsatisfied, and that it has become the settled rule of New York not to dispense with these preliminaries although it might be made to appear by evidence that no benefit could result to creditors from them.

And the opinion of a creditor that an execution or an attachment would be unavailing was held not to dispense with the necessity of exhausting legal remedies before seeking relief in equity. Kraemer v. Williams, 115 N. Y. Supp. 721.

In Mixon v. Dunklin, 48 Ala. 455, it was held that, where the statute requires an execution to be unsatisfied before the maintenance of a bill to subject the real estate to the payment of the creditor's claim, the complainant is not excused from compliance therewith because of the fact that, by reason of certain military orders, he could not have execution at law on his judgment.

So, insanity of the judgment debtor will not authorize the maintenance of a creditors' bill before judgment, where a statute provides that an action by equitable proceedings to subject property must be after judgment. Faivre v. Gillman, 84 Iowa, 573, 51 N. W. 46.

That the return of an execution would be a mere matter of form will not relieve a creditor from having it returned, where the statute in express terms requires its return unsatisfied preliminary to equitable relief. McElwain v. Willis, 9 Wend. 548.

In Thompson v. Caton, 3 Wash. Terr. 31, 13 Pac. 185, it was held that a court of equity will not interfere in aid of a creditor without a judgment, merely on the ground that he cannot collect his debt by the ordinary process of law.

In Cleveland v. Chambliss, 64 Ga. 352, the fact that a creditor of an insolvent estate was under an injunction not to sue his claim was said to afford a sufficient ground for not obtaining a judgment before resorting to equity, especially where the amount of the creditor's claim was established by a decree of the court in the suit in which the injunction was granted, which was brought before the court, in the case involving a creditors' bill, by way of amendment to the bill, and where the estate of the debtor was insolvent, and where the objection was raised on the merits, and not on demurrer.

That inability to sue because of a restraining order may be a sufficient ground for equitable jurisdiction over a creditors' bill by a creditor at large was recognized in Brown v. Barker, 68 App. Div. 592, 74 N. Y. Supp. 43; but relief was denied in this case because of an insufficient showing as to the validity of the order, and that it was against the consent of plaintiff. While recognizing that such circumstances might afford a basis of equitable jurisdiction, the right of the defendant to have his indebtedness determined in an ordinary action at law, wherein he could enjoy his constitutional right of a jury trial, unless such course was clearly impossible to plaintiff, was declared. It was further said that the courts are not inclined to extend the cases in which a plaintiff will be excused from pursuing the ordinary course of obtaining a judgment.

In Case v. Beauregard (Case v. New Orleans & C. R. Co.) 101 U. S. 688, 25 L. ed. 1004, the court said that after all the judgment and fruitless execution are only evidence that the creditor's legal remedies have been exhausted, or that he is without remedy at law. They are not the only possible means of proof. The necessity of a resort to a court of equity may be made otherwise to appear. Accordingly the rule, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) though general, is not without many exceptions. Neither law nor equity require a meaningless form, Bona sed impossibilia non cogit lex. When the debtor's estate is a mere equitable one, which cannot be reached by any proceeding at law, there is no reason for requiring attempts to reach it by legal process, and whenever a creditor has a trust in his favor, or a lien upon the property for the debt due him, he may go into equity without exhausting legal process or remedies.

In Williams v. Kemper, 99 Minn. 301, 109 N. W. 242, it was said that, in exceptional cases where it is impossible to obtain a personal judgment and the return of execution nulla bona, the rule seems to be that an allegation that the debtor is insolvent, or a nonresident and has no property within the state, is sufficient without alleging the recovery of a judgment and the return of execution unsatisfied.

An assignment by an insolvent debtor of all his property to an assignee, in fee for certain creditors, is sufficient to entitle a general creditor to the aid of equity to set same aside as fraudulent, since a judgment at law would create no lien upon the equitable assets. To issue execution in such a case would plainly be only an idle ceremony. Talley v. Curtain, 4 C. C. A. 177, 8 U. S. App. 347, 54 Fed. 43, rehearing denied in 7 C. C. A. 1, 8 U. S. App. 424, 58 Fed. 4.

It is unnecessary for a judgment creditor of a railroad company to sue out an execution before coming into equity to ask for the appointment of a receiver to operate the road, where, according to the facts and admissions of the parties, the suing out of an execution would have been an idle ceremony. Sage v. Memphis & L. R. Co. 125 U. S. 361, 31 L. ed. 694, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 887.

A judgment creditor who sues out a ca. sa. to secure satisfaction of a judgment, by virtue of which a debtor is committed to jail, from which he thereafter escapes without paying the debt, need not thereafter attempt to enforce the judgment by the issuance of an execution thereon, and its return nulla bona, before seeking the aid of equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by the debtor of his personal property. Poague v. Boyce, 6 J. J. Marsh. 70.

In Consolidated Tank Line Co. v. Kansas City Varnish Co. 45 Fed. 7, it was held that it was not necessary to the maintenance of a creditors' bill to set aside a deed of trust made by a corporation preferring certain creditors, that the complainant should be a judgment creditor, and have secured a return of nulla bona on executions, where the debtor's estate was a mere equitable one, which could not be reached by any proceeding at law.

A dormant judgment is no objection to equitable aid to reach equitable assets, especially where it appears that it would be futile to issue execution. Brown v. Long, 36 N. C. (1 Ired. Eq.) 190, 36 Am. Dec. 43.

c. Where law and equity are administered by same court.

In some states it is held that, where law and equity are administered in one tribunal, the rules governing the old practice as to conditions precedent do not obtain.

In Connecticut a bill by a creditor to enforce the payment of a debt out of the property of a debtor, where the circumstances were such as to impede or render impossible the collection of the debt by the ordinary process of execution, was sustained without the formality of a judgment, on the ground that law and equity were administered by the same tribunal, and that therefore a judgment could be rendered in the very action in which the equitable relief was asked. Vail v. Hammond, 60 Conn. 374, 25 Am. St. Rep. 330, 22 Atl. 954; Huntington v. Jones, 72 Conn. 45, 43 Atl. 564.

Before the passage of the Georgia uniform procedure act of 1887, Civil Code, § 4937, a creditor without a lien, under ordinary conditions, could not first maintain a bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of his debtor. The act of 1887, however, said the court in Booth v. Mohr, 122 Ga. 333, 50 S. E. 173, made a great innovation in the law, and "now a suitor in the same action may join legal and equitable causes and obtain appropriate relief. Creditors in one suit may proceed for judgment on their debts, and to set aside fraudulent conveyances made by their common debtor."

In De Lacy v. Hurst, 83 Ga. 223, 9 S. E. 1052, it was held that the rule requiring the creditor, before invoking equitable aid, to reduce his claim to judgment, and have execution returned nulla bona, has been abolished in Georgia. The court said that the act conferred upon superior courts jurisdiction to hear and determine all causes of action, whether legal or equitable, or both. If the plaintiff has a purely legal action, he can bring it in that court; if he has a purely equitable action, he must bring it in that court; if he has an action both legal and equitable, he must bring it in that court. The court under the circumstances conceived no reason for compelling a plaintiff to apply first to the superior court, and obtain a judgment, and have an execution issued and returned nulla bona, and then apply to the same court to aid him in enforcing the judgment, which that court had previously granted. There being now but one court, the court of equity being abolished, the reason for the rule falls, and therefore the rule falls.

The last-mentioned case (83 Ga. 229) was approved in Vaughn v. Georgia Co-op. Loan Co. 98 Ga. 288, 25 S. E. 441. To the same effect, Kruger v. Walker, 111 Ga. 383, 36 S. E. 794.

It is held in North Carolina that the Code provisions by which the powers of both law and chancery courts are committed to a single tribunal render it unnecessary for a creditor first to obtain judgment before seeking equitable aid to reach property fraudulently conveyed by the debtor, but that full relief may be had in a single action. Dawson Bank v. Harris, 84 N. C. 206. The court asked why a plaintiff should be compelled to sue for and recover his debt, and then to bring a new action to enforce payment out of his debtor's property in the very court that ordered the judgment? Why should not full relief be had in one action when the same court is to be called on to afford it in the second? The policy of the new practice, and one of its best features, is to furnish a complete and final remedy for an aggrieved party in a single court, and without needless delay or expense.

So, under the new practice the issuance of an execution and return nulla bona are not conditions precedent to an action to follow the debtor's funds in certain lands, and to have the same sold for the satisfaction of the demands of creditors. Mebane v. Layton, 86 N. C. 571.

In Miller v. Hughes, 33 S. C. 530, 12 S. E. 419, to the contention that the claim of the plaintiffs, being a plain legal demand, should first be established by a judgment at law before the aid of equity could be invoked, the court replied that, whatever embarrassment this might have offered under the former system of judicature, when law and equity were administered by different tribunals, it could not be felt now under the present system, especially after the Code had provided that both legal and equitable causes of action might be united in the same complaint. The court did not see, therefore, why the plaintiffs might not demand judgment for the amount alleged to be due them on the law side of the court, and, in the same action, ask relief on the equity side from the fraud which they alleged would render their action fruitless.

Under the blended system of law and equity administered in the Texas courts, a simple contract creditor may maintain a suit to avoid a fraudulent conveyance by his debtor. Shirley v. Waco Tap R. Co. 78 Tex. 131, 10 S. W. 543.

In Ward v. McKenzie, 33 Tex. 317, 7 Am. Rep. 261, it was held that a nonresident creditor who had obtained a judgment in a sister state could subject the property of a nonresident debtor in the hands of a fraudulent grantee to the payment of his claim, by a single action instituted by attachment, in which equitable aid to set aside a fraudulent conveyance was asked. The court said that the attachment put the specific property in custody of the law, under the control of the court, by the diligence of the creditor; that then, having jurisdiction of the subject, like all courts of equity, it had full power to grant the relief sought. It was urged in this case that equitable relief could not be granted before judgment. As to the effect of the judgment, the court said that the levy operated as a lien, and would hold the property until judgment and until execution could issue, and, if it were in a forum which dispensed both law and equity in the same suit, every obstacle and obstruction to the satisfaction of the judgment, to the full extent of the property attached, could be removed out of the way.

A creditor at large may in one action reduce his demand to judgment, and invoke equitable aid to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by the debtor of real estate. Waddell v. Williams, 37 Tex. 351.

But, in Marion Deposit Bank v. McWilliams, 2 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 142, it was held that, since it is a condition precedent to an action in the nature of a creditors' bill, that the creditor shall have reduced his claim to judgment, an action under the Code to recover judgment, joined with one in the nature of a creditors' bill, is demurrable for misjoinder.

In Raxter v. Moses, 77 Me. 465, 52 Am. Rep. 783, 1 Atl. 350, it was held that the rule requiring the return of an execution nulla bona applies as well to the "enlarged" jurisdiction of chancery as to its limited jurisdiction, since no chancery jurisdiction, however enlarged, takes upon itself the collection of legal debts before the legal remedies are exhausted.

The actual return of an execution unsatisfied was essential to the maintenance of such a creditors' bill both before and after the enactment of the Revised Statutes of New York, and the place of such an averment could not be supplied by an allegation of the total want of property; and the union of legal and equitable jurisdiction in the supreme court furnishes no reason for departing from the well-established rule. Crippen v. Hudson, 13 N. Y. 161.

d. Where debtor is a nonresident, or is absent.

The fact that a debtor is a nonresident of the state, or has absconded, has generally been held a sufficient ground for relaxing the rule as to conditions precedent to equitable relief.

Where a debtor is a nonresident, so that a personal judgment cannot be obtained against him, this fact creates an exception to the rule requiring a judgment, the issuance of an execution, and a return thereof nulla bona, before seeking equitable aid. A bill may therefore be maintained, under such circumstances, to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate by such debtor to a nonresident, without first reducing the claim upon which the bill is based to judgment. First Nat. Bank v. Eastman, 144 Cal. 487, 103 Am. St. Rep. 95, 77 Pac. 1043, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 626.

In Livingston v. Swofford Bros. Dry Goods Co. 12 Colo. App. 320, 56 Pac. 351, it was held that judgment and execution are unnecessary prerequisites to equitable relief against the estate of an absconding, insolvent debtor where it is evident that such steps would be fruitless and would involve needless expense. The court said that such steps were unnecessary to prove the claims of plaintiffs because the indebtedness to them had been admitted, and besides it appeared that the defendants were fraudulently wasting the estate so that it would have been probably entirely dissipated before even those creditors who had instituted suit, and procured service upon the debtor before he had absconded, could have secured final judgment and issuance of an execution. Those creditors who had not secured service before the debtor had absconded would be remediless. The validity of the claims of such creditors, upon which suit had been instituted against the debtor, had been, so far as he was concerned, as fully established and proven by the entry of his default as if final judgment had been entered. To all intents and purposes, therefore, the object of the rule requiring judgment first to be had before a creditors' bill could be maintained had been attained as to them. Issuance of execution and return of nulla bona could not have accomplished nor shown anything further than was done by the allegation of the bill and by proofs, to entitle the creditors to the aid which they sought in a court of equity.

In Kipper v. Glancey, 2 Blackf. 356, it was held that where a debtor absents himself from the state, but leaves real estate to which he is entitled in equity, his creditors may maintain a bill to reach the property before judgment, on the theory that a debtor, by absconding from the state, prevents a proceeding against him at law, and that his creditors should therefore be permitted to apply to a court of chancery to the same extent as though a judgment had been previously obtained, or the debtor was deceased; that where the only property left is of an equitable nature, not subject to levy, creditors may unite in a bill in chancery to liquidate their claims and to effect their common object of establishing the liability of the property.

The rule requiring judgment and execution to be secured by the creditor before resorting to equity does not apply as to a nonresident debtor, against whom it is impossible to obtain personal judgment. Quarl v. Abbett, 102 Ind. 233, 52 Am. Rep. 662, 1 N. E. 476.

The nonresidence of the debtor will render it unnecessary for a creditor to first obtain judgment before applying to equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by such debtor of his real estate in Iowa. Commercial Exch. Bank v. Applegate, 91 Iowa, 411, 59 N. W. 268.

Where the creditor is unable to obtain judgment because of the nonresidence of the debtor, he may obtain equitable relief against his debtor without judgment if his claim is of such a character as would have enabled him to obtain a judgment. Anderson v. Bradford, 5 J. J. Marsh. 69.

Where, on account of the absence of the debtor from the country, the creditor is unable to establish his demand at law, he will not be required to do so as a condition precedent to equitable relief, and the fact that the debtor returns after the bill is exhibited against him cannot affect the

The nonresidence of a debtor is no excuse for a creditor not first exhausting all available legal remedies, including suit in the state of his residence, before seeking to subject the debtor's property in the hands of and claimed by a third person, to the payment of his claim, in a proceeding in equity, where the insolvency of the debtor is not alleged. Ballou v. Jones, 13 Hun, 629.

A creditors' bill by a creditor without judgment or lien cannot be supported upon the ground that the debtor resides in another state. Smith v. Moore, 35 Ala. 76.

e. Where property is situate beyond jurisdiction.

As a condition to equitable relief, it is not necessary that a judgment creditor should exhaust his legal remedies as to lands of the debtor located in another state. O'Brien v. Stambach, 101 Iowa, 40, 63 Am. St. Rep. 368, 69 N. W. 1133.

In order to be entitled to equitable aid to reach property fraudulently conveyed, a creditor need not search beyond the jurisdiction of the court wherein the judgment was rendered for unencumbered property of the debtor, out of which to collect his judgment. Rohrer v. Snyder, 29 Wash. 199, 69 Pac. 748.

f. Effect of insolvency; lack of property subject to execution.

There is a distinction made in some of the cases, as to the necessity of judgment, between impossibility of obtaining judgment and uselessness of obtaining judgment, the courts holding that equitable aid may be afforded a general creditor where it would be impossible for him to obtain judgment; but that it would not be extended to him where his only excuse for not having obtained judgment is that the debtor is insolvent, and that it would be useless to obtain judgment. It is said that insolvency may be an excuse for not issuing execution, but not for not obtaining judgment.

But there is a serious objection to allowing the insolvency of the debtor to excuse the exhaustion of the remedy at law, and that is that a debtor may be unable to meet his obligations, and still be possessed of enough tangible property to satisfy the creditor's claim. The fact that the debtor has no property subject to levy might well excuse the issuance of execution; but the mere fact that the debtor is insolvent ought not to obviate the necessity of pursuing property subject to levy before resorting to property not subject to levy. An insolvent debtor has really more reason for not being subject to the burden of the equitable proceeding to reach his choses and equitable assets when his legal assets are open to the creditor, than has the solvent debtor. It is not a question of insolvency at all, for the debtor might have no property subject to levy and still be possessed of property enough not subject to levy to render him solvent. In that case, the fact that he was solvent would not stand in the way of an equitable action to reach his equitable assets. If, however, by insolvency is meant that the debtor has no property subject to levy, then the exception to the rule, which excuses issuance and return of execution, is proper.

In Brucker v. Kelsey, 72 Ind. 51, it was held that an allegation that the judgment debtor had no other property subject to execution, sufficient to pay his debts, or any part thereof, was a sufficient averment of insolvency.

It might well have been held, as already stated, that the allegation that the debtor has no property subject to execution was a better allegation than the allegation of insolvency, since it shows sufficient reason for not requiring issuance and return of execution, while the allegation of insolvency does not.

However, in Armstrong v. Keifer, 39 Ind. 225, an allegation of insolvency was held equivalent to a statement that the debtor has no property subject to execution. This, as pointed out, is a mistake.

The admission by the defendants that the debtor died insolvent is sufficient to satisfy the rule requiring a deficiency of legal assets to appear before equity will aid a creditor at large to reach property of the deceased debtor. Battle v. Reid, 68 Ala. 149.

The fact that creditors have not reduced their debts to judgment is no objection to the maintenance of a creditors' bill to reach property held under a trust deed, where the debtor is wholly insolvent except as he has interest under such deed. Kempton v. Hallowell, 24 Ga. 52, 71 Am. Dec. 112.

In Springfield Grocery Co. v. Thomas, 3 Ind. Terr. 330, 58 S. W. 557, it was held that a creditor whose debtor has made conveyances in trust for his creditors, including the creditor in question, may, without judgment, proceed in equity to set aside the deed, and for the appointment of a receiver.

Failure to issue execution on a judgment is of no consequence where it appears that the debtor is insolvent. Fleischner v. First Nat. Bank, 36 Or. 553, 54 Pac. 884, 60 Pac. 603, 61 Pac. 345.

In Taylor v. Dunlap Stone & Lime Co. 38 Kan. 547, 16 Pac. 751, it was said that the objection made, that it was not averred that execution had been returned unsatisfied, was not of much force in the face of the allegation that the debtors were wholly insolvent, and that, unless the plaintiff could levy upon and sell the real estate sought to be reached, he would be wholly without remedy, and would lose his entire claim.

In Austin v. Morris, 23 S. C. 393, the court said, obiter, that there was no law requiring a return of nulla bona against the debtor as an indispensable prerequisite to seeking equitable relief, but that it had been adopted by the courts as the most satisfactory manner of proving that which was indispensable to such relief, that is, the fact that the party had no adequate remedy at law, that the debtor was insolvent, and, outside of the property in controversy, had not the means from which payment might be made. This was the very purpose for requiring judgment and a return nulla bona. If that was shown by other proof or admissions of the party, the court could never see why judgment should be insisted on as an indispensable prerequisite. Why insist upon that evidence if there was other perfectly satisfactory evidence of the fact in question, especially if the circumstances were such that the delay in getting judgment might be fatal to the relief sought.

So, failure to take out a fi. fa., or to have it returned nulla bona, was held not to be fatal to equitable relief where a ca. sa. was issued,—the latter being considered the better test of whether the debtor was possessed of other property than that which he had conveyed away than a fi. fa. would have been. Pettus v. Smith, 4 Rich. Eq. 200.

The doctrine that the issuance of an execution and its return nulla bona are excused by the insolvency of the debtor is also stated in Stahlman v. Watson (Tenn. Ch. App.) 39 S. W. 1055.

There must be either an allegation of insolvency, or an allegation of the issuance of an execution and return of nulla bona, which implies insolvency. McAvoy v. Jennings, 44 Wash. 79, 87 Pac. 53; Bruker v. Kelsey, 72 Ind. 51.

The issuing of an execution and a return nulla bona thereon are considered sufficient evidence of the insolvency of the judgment debtor and that the judgment creditor is remediless at law; but they are not the only evidence of that fact. A bill in equity to set aside or postpone a conveyance of real property on which the plaintiff's judgment is, as against his debtor, a lien, without an execution, may be maintained on proof of the unsatisfied judgment and fraudulent conveyance, and the insolvency of the debtor, which may be proven by a return nulla bona on an execution, or by any other competent evidence. Failure to issue execution is not therefore necessarily fatal to the bill. The Holladay Case, 27 Fed. 830.

The averment that the debtor was wholly insolvent is sufficient without the usual further averment that he has and had no property subject to execution, etc. Lammert v. Stockings, 27 Ind. App. 619, 61 N. E. 945.

In Alford v. Baker, 53 Ind. 279, an allegation that the debtors had no property subject to execution was held to be a sufficient allegation of insolvency, and therefore showed a sufficient reason for seeking to reach and subject certain property to execution, alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed by the debtors.

In Postlewait v. Howes, 3 Iowa, 365, the court said that, if the creditor could charge in his bill, and prove on the hearing, that the debtor was in fact insolvent, and that an execution, if issued, must necessarily be returned unsatisfied, it saw no reason for requiring him to go through the fruitless form of exhausting his legal remedy by return of execution, "no property found." Under such circumstances there was no legal remedy to exhaust, for he showed that he had none. It was true that such return of nulla bona might in legal contemplation be the most satisfactory method of establishing the facts of insolvency, but practically it would be scarcely more conclusive or convincing to the mind of the chancellor than if proved by other means or in other ways. Yet doubtless the current of authorities held such return to be necessary.

In O'Brien v. Stambach, 101 Iowa, 40, 63 Am. St. Rep. 368, 69 N. W. 1133, it was held that neither law nor equity required the doing of entirely useless things, and that, in suits to subject lands to the payment of judgments where it was shown that the judgment debtor was insolvent, the creditor was not compelled to incur the expense and delay incident to the issuance and return of an execution nulla bona as a condition precedent to the right to maintain his suit.

So, it was held that the fact that no execution was issued on plaintiff's judgment would not stand in the way of an action to reach real estate, where the insolvency of the judgment debtor was otherwise shown. Gordon v. Worthley, 48 Iowa, 429.

In an action to reach real property of the judgment debtor, it is unnecessary to show a return of the execution nulla bona. It is sufficient if the plaintiff otherwise shows his inability to collect the judgment by execution. In this case the question was whether the report of the referee showed that there was sufficient property to satisfy the judgment other than that sought to be reached in the equitable action, and it was held that it did not. The action was therefore held maintainable. Miller v. Dayton, 47 Iowa, 312.

Where it appears that the debtor has no property subject to execution, execution and return nulla bona are not essential prerequisites to equitable relief to reach property fraudulently disposed of and concealed by the debtor. Ryan v. Spieth, 18 Mont. 45, 44 Pac. 403.

A bill to set aside a fraudulent chattel mortgage, which alleges only issuance of execution from the county court and the return of nulla bona is sufficient to support a creditor's action, where it alleges that the goods taken under the assailed mortgage constituted all the property, and that they were the sole means of the debtor for the payment of his debts, and that the property had been sold and disposed of before the commencement of the action, since it shows that, when the suit was begun, there was nothing to attach or levy upon. Chamberlain Bkg. House v. Turner-Frazer Mercantile Co. 66 Neb. 48, 92 N. W. 172.

In Payne v. Sheldon, 63 Barb. 169, it was held that an execution was not required where the relief sought was against the real estate of the debtor, who had no other property out of which the judgment could be satisfied. The court said that the lien on the land and the right to sell it on exehis claim. Beardsley Scythe Co. v. Foster, 36 N. Y. 561.

On a creditors' bill to reach the property of a deceased debtor, where no execution had been issued on a judgment which formed the basis of the bill, relief was denied in Lawson v. Grubb, 44 Ga. 466, as the only reason presented for not causing an execution to be issued was the insolvency of the debtor, and this was held not to be sufficient.

That the debtor has made an assignment and is insolvent, and that to obtain judgment would therefore be a useless formality, was held, in Austin v. Bruner, 169 Ill. 178, 48 N. E. 449, not to be a sufficient ground to permit a creditor to proceed in equity to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance before obtaining judgment on his claim.

An allegation that the debtor had no property subject to execution will not take the place of a statutory requirement that an execution be issued and returned unsatisfied before the maintenance of a creditors' bill. Albright v. Herzog, 12 Ill. App. 557.

In Wickliffes v. Lyon, 5 J. J. Marsh. 84, it was said that the fact that the real property sought to be reached in equity was all that the debtor had, so that it would be useless to sue at law and recover judgment, would not authorize a court to lend equitable aid before judgment. As to the uselessness of proceeding at law, the court declared that the same might be said as to most cases of fraudulent conveyances, because the property conveyed in fraud of creditors was usually all that the grantor had which could be reached by execution.

In Stone v. Westcott, 18 R. I. 517, 28 Atl. 662, it was held that the rule requiring the issuance of an execution and a return unsatisfied before a creditor can maintain a bill to reach equitable assets is not excused by an allegation that the debtor has no property or estate on which the execution could be levied.

In the absence of a return nulla bona, an averment that the debtor has no property subject to execution at law is not sufficient, as the only evidence admissible to show that the creditor is without remedy at law is the return nulla bona by the proper officer. Shea v. Dulin, 3 McArth. 339.

A creditor at large, before judgment and execution thereon, and its return nulla bona, is not entitled to injunction restraining a debtor from disposing of a county warrant for money due to him from the county, although it is alleged that such warrant constitutes the debtor's entire property. Crowell v. Horacek, 12 Neb. 622, 12 N. W. 99.

In Taylor v. Gillean, 23 Tex. 508, it was held that the mere allegation in a creditors' bill of the insolvency of the debtor was not a sufficient ground for equitable jurisdiction, since this fact might be true and yet the debtor have tangible property, real and personal, subject to execution, in reference to which the creditor should have exhausted his legal remedy before seeking the aid of equity.

This question was discussed in Barrick v. Gifford, 47 Ohio St. 180, 21 Am. St. Rep. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

798, 24 N. E. 259, an action to enforce statutory liability of stockholders arising after the corporation property has been exhausted. The question was whether the rule that the liability of stockholders could be resorted to only after the assets of the company had been exhausted could be dispensed with while the company was insolvent in the sense that the company was indebted in a sum greater than its assets. It was held that the insolvency in this sense would not be sufficient to dispense with this prerequisite. The court said that such a rule would be not only uncertain, but deceptive to the creditor. The right to commence the action would be a matter of speculation. It could not be determined before bringing the action and taking an account whether the company was indebted in a sum greater than its assets would pay or not. A rule of certainty applicable to such cases should be adopted. A true rule, and that which was usually adopted while the company had property and continued to do business, was to require the creditor first to obtain a judgment against the corporation and cause an execution to be issued, and, if it was returned "not levied for want of goods," then the creditor had the right to commence suit against the stockholders upon their individual liability.

Upon this point, see also Randolph v. Daly, 16 N. J. Eq. 313, supra, V., d. 2.

g. Effect of debtor's death.

1. In general.

An exception to the general rules in relation to conditions precedent to equitable relief on behalf of creditors is made when the legal remedies are obstructed by the laws relating to the administration of decedents' estates.

Thus, in O'Brien v. Coulter, 2 Blackf. 421, it is said an exception to the general rule that, to reach the equitable interest of the debtor in real estate by a suit in chancery, the creditor should first obtain a judgment at law, and to reach personal property, both a judgment and execution, is made in a case of a deceased debtor.

But, in Tate v. Liggat, 2 Leigh, 91, the court said that the right of a creditor to resort originally to a court of equity, against his debtor's property in the hands of his heirs or personal representatives, was not an exception to the rule, for in those cases there was no longer anyone personally responsible to the creditor, or anyone who had a right to dispose of the property at pleasure. The creditor had a right to satisfaction out of the specific property in the hands of the heir or executor, who was liable only in respect to such property, which, though not strictly a lien, was so far in the nature of one that the creditor could follow the property in the hands of a fraudulent alienee of the debtor, or of his heir, or executor.

In Pennsylvania, by statute, creditors at large become lien creditors upon the death of their debtor. This lien is held to give them a standing in a court of equity for relief against fraudulent conveyances of real estate made by the debtor in his lifetime. Fowler's Appeal, 87 Pa. 449.

Chancery will not subject the personal assets of an estate to the payment of a creditor's claim unless there has been not only a judgment against his debtor, but an execution with a return of nulla bona. Morgan v. Crabb, 3 Port. (Ala.) 470.

Where a fund is accessible only to the court of chancery and cannot be reached at law, and where the debtor is dead, creditors may resort to chancery in the first instance without first having recovered a judgment at law. Steere v. Hoagland, 39 Ill. 264.

But, in Houston v. Maddux, 179 Ill. 377, 53 N. E. 599, it was held that a creditor cannot maintain a bill to reach a trust fund belonging to a deceased insolvent debtor where his claim has not been allowed against the estate. The court said that the Steere Case, supra, was substantially overruled in Scripps v. King, 103 Ill. 469, in which it was said that, when a claim is against an insolvent estate, the creditor must have it properly allowed against the estate before he can remove a fraudulent conveyance to reach the property to subject it to his demand.

The rule requiring a return of execution nulla bona has no fair or legitimate application when the proceeding is against the estate of a decedent. Postlewait v. Howes, 3 Iowa, 365.

The fact that the debtor is deceased forms no legal excuse for failure to issue the execution. Lichtenberg v. Herdtfelder, 33 Hun, 57, affirmed in 103 N. Y. 302, 8 N. E. 526.

A statute which authorizes an action in equity against heir or devisee, to subject any property "descended or devised," does not apply to property held by a conveyance. Anderson v. Avery, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 363.

If the debtor is dead, the creditor may proceed in equity without first obtaining judgment. Tharp v. Feltz, 6 B. Mon. 6.

A creditor who has not reduced his claim to judgment, or presented it to the executrix of the estate of the deceased debtor, under the statute, is not in a position to assert such a conveyance of the debtor as fraudulent. Rutherford v. Alyea, 54 N. J. Eq. 411, 34 Atl. 1078.

In Nill v. Phelps, 20 Misc. 488, 46 N. Y. Supp. 662, it was said that, independent of a statute expressly providing that it was necessary for the creditor of a deceased, insolvent debtor, suing for the benefit of himself and other creditors interested in the estate, to obtain judgment in order to set aside certain transfers as fraudulent, such a step was unnecessary to the maintenance of such an action.

A bill to charge the real estate of a deceased debtor may be maintained by a simple contract creditor. Birely v. Staley, 5 Gill & J. 442, 25 Am. Dec. 303.

The doctrine that a creditor at large may maintain a bill in equity to reach real estate fraudulently conveyed by his debtor, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

since deceased, was also enunciated and applied in Shell v. Boyd, 32 S. C. 359, 11 S. E. 205.

It is unnecessary to issue execution on an insolvent, deceased debtor's estate before proceeding in equity to subject real estate entered by the debtor with his own funds in the name of his infant child, where a statute provides that execution cannot issue on a judgment against an administrator and requires that it must be paid in the due course of administration as all other claims against the estate. McDowell v. Cochran, 11 Ill. 31.

Where no administration was granted upon the estate of a deceased debtor for more than a year after his death, a return of nulla bona on the creditor's common-law judgment was held, in Treadway v. Turner, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 949, 10 S. W. 816, not to be a necessary condition precedent to invoking the aid of equity by a creditor at large to reach real estate fraudulently conveyed by the debtor in his lifetime, since there was no one against whom execution could issue.

A creditor who has obtained a judgment against the administratrix of a deceased debtor, and whose execution has been returned nulla bona, may proceed in equity against the debtor to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate made by the debtor, although the judgment being against the administratrix was not a lien upon the land. Snodgrass v. Andrews, 30 Miss. 472, 64 Am. Dec. 169. The court said that, if the creditor had established his claim by judgment and exhausted all the means in his power at law to obtain satisfaction of his debt without success, he was entitled to the aid of a court of equity, according to the circumstances of the case, in such mode as would enable him to enjoy his legal right.

Because creditors of a deceased debtor did not, in his lifetime, obtain judgment against him, a court of equity would not refuse aid to subject real estate fraudulently conveyed to the payment of debts, if the creditors have exhausted their remedies against the estate. Haston v. Castner, 29 N. J. Eq. 536.

A creditor may file a bill to reach real estate alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed by his deceased debtor, without waiting for the disposal of his exceptions to the accounting of the administratrix of the debtor's estate, where the account shows that the assets amount to less than the judgment. The court said that, if the administratrix, who was friendly with the estate and interested in holding the lands, could not discover any other personal estate, it would be quite inconsistent for the court to say that the judgment creditor must further try to make discovery. Foster v. Knowles, 42 N. J. Eq. 226, 7 Atl. 290.

The fact that the complainant has not exhausted his remedy against a person against whom his judgment was recovered will not stand in the way of his proceeding in equity to reach real estate of a decedent liable for the debt, since the lien which the statute gives against the lands of which his possession. The creditor must exhibit and prove his claim in the county court before he is entitled to payment.

Where the only proof of a debt is a judgment against an administrator of the deceased debtor, such judgment will not sustain a creditors' bill to reach assets of the debtor in the hands of his donees. The only effect of such a judgment is to bind the administrator to the amount of the assets of the deceased debtor coming into his hands, since he cannot be considered as having represented the donees. Bridges v. Moye, 45 N. C. (Busbee, Eq.) 170.

Failure of a creditor to bring his action at law, or to take any proceedings for the recovery of his demand against the debtor or his estate, was held in Willetts v. Vandenburg, 34 Barb. 424, fatal to the maintenance of an action against the heirs' assignee to compel the latter to account for the assigned property and for other equitable relief.

A creditors' bill against a representative of a deceased debtor, to enforce a judgment, cannot be maintained during the pendency of actions scire facias to revive a judgment and of debt on the same judgment, to each of which the statute of limitations has been interposed. Mann v. MacDonald, 3 App. D. C. 456.

Creditors of the estate of a decedent are not, under the Tennessee statutes, required to proceed against the property of the estate before asserting their rights against a fraudulent grantee. Armstrong v. Croft, 3 Lea, 191.

In Tennessee, in order to subject a legacy in the hands of executors, which is equitable personalty, to the payment of the debt, the bill in chancery must show, first, a judgment, execution, and a nulla bona; or second, one of the grounds on which an original attachment in chancery may issue, prescribed by the statute law; or third, a conveyance or device made, as to the property sought to be subjected, to hinder and defraud creditors. The last two mentioned conditions precedent are based upon statutory provisions with reference thereto. Harrison v. Hallum, 5 Coldw. 525.

A creditor of a deceased debtor may maintain an action against the executor and grantee, to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of his debtor's property, without previously obtaining judgment. In Tennessee, general creditors are permitted by statute to maintain bills to set aside fraudulent conveyances. See Spencer v. Armstrong, 12 Heisk. 707.

2. Allowance of claim against estate.

Under the Arkansas statute, a creditor cannot proceed to set aside encumbrances upon the estate of a deceased debtor, and subject the property to the payment of his debts, until he has presented his claim to the administrator and had it allowed and classified. Williamson v. Furbush, 31 Ark. 539.

Where the administrator of the estate of a debtor has allowed a creditor's claim, and the probate court has allowed and classified it, and ordered and adjudged that the same stand as a claim against the estate, it is not a necessary prerequisite to equitable relief that execution be issued upon it. The court said that, if an execution upon a judgment obtained in the circuit court could not be enforced against an estate, it could see no reason why it would be necessary for a creditor to proceed to obtain an execution in the probate court after he had had his claim allowed and classified. Wright v. Campbell, 27 Ark. 637.

Where the judgment creditor has probated his claim and had the same allowed against the estate of a deceased debtor, he may maintain a bill in chancery to set aside a conveyance of land, and subject the same to the payment of his claim. Chambers v. Sallie, 29 Ark. 407.

Under a statute providing that "personal property shall in all cases be subject to execution on a judgment against the purchaser for the purchase price thereof; and shall in no case be exempt from such judgment and execution, except in the hands of an innocent purchaser for value, without notice of the existence of such prior claim, for the purchase money," a vendor cannot come in to equity to have a lien declared and enforced as to property sold a deceased vendee until he has had his claim allowed against the estate. Woolfolk v. Kemper, 31 Mo. App. 421.

Any creditor is entitled to maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, but he must be a creditor whose claim has been allowed by the administrator, or is evidenced by a judgment. Ohm v. Superior Court, 85 Cal. 545, 20 Am. St. Rep. 245, 26 Pac. 244.

That creditors of a deceased debtor have not exhausted their remedy at law by execution is not an objection to equitable aid to reach property fraudulently transferred. Creditors of a deceased person who have had their general judgments allowed by the probate court against his estate, which is insolvent, need do nothing further to lay the foundation for equitable relief against the fraudulent grantee. Lyons v. Murray, 95 Mo. 23, 6 Am. St. Rep. 17, 8 S. W. 170.

A creditor at large may set aside a fraudulent conveyance of a deceased debtor's lands where his claim was, by statute, made a lien thereon, and where the claim has been presented according to statutory regulation, to the administrator under oath, and part of it has been paid by him, so that it was as conclusively established in a legal mode as though its validity had been passed upon by a court. Haston v. Castner, 31 N. J. Eq. 697.

Filing a claim by a creditor against the estate of a deceased debtor is a sufficient exhaustion of legal remedies to entitle a creditor to the aid of equity to enforce his debt out of assets of the estate. First Nat. Bank v. White, 60 N. J. Eq. 487, 46 Atl. 1092. It was urged in this case that a creditor at large could not reach the property of his debtor fraudulently assigned, but that only such creditors as had judgments and execution could reach the personal property of the debtor. But the court said that, upon the death of the debtor, the right of his creditors who had filed their claims against the estate, to pursue such property, was enlarged. Such creditors could file a bill to follow real estate which the deceased debtor had fraudulently assigned, by virtue of the lien given by the statute upon the lands of the deceased, to pay his debts.

In Harvey v. McDonnell, 113 N. Y. 526, 21 N. E. 695, it was held that the rule that a creditor at large or a simple contract creditor must sue at law to establish his debt, and then exhaust, by such proceedings as the law allowed, the real estate on which the judgment is a lien, and the personal property liable to execution, before seeking equitable aid to set aside transfers of real and personal property, did not apply where a creditor at large was a claimant against the estate of his deceased debtor, and his claim had been allowed, and the representatives of the decedent had exhausted the property of the estate, both real and personal, which had come to their hands, by applying it on the debts of the intestate, among which was plaintiff's claim, but not wholly satisfying such debts, and the creditor pointed to other property held by the administratrix, which it was claimed was fraudulently conveyed to her by the debtor in his lifetime, since it was apparent that the administratrix had an adverse interest to the creditors of the estate. It was said that such circumstances require an exception to the general rule stated, that the creditor stands in the place of a trustee, and it is immaterial that he is not a judgment creditor; that the relation he sustains to the estate entitles him to payment in common, and in just proportion with other creditors.

But, where there is neither allowance of claims or judgment, a creditor is not in position to come into equity to discover and apply the property of a deceased debtor to the payment of his claim. Mesmer v. Jenkins, 61 Cal. 151. The court said that perhaps an allowance of the claims by the administrator might be treated as the equivalent of a judgment upon it, for the purpose of enabling the creditors to maintain a creditors' bill, if there were no other obstacles in the way of their maintaining it.

A simple contract creditor, such as a surety, who has neither obtained judgment against a debtor in the latter's lifetime, nor has had his claim allowed against the estate, cannot maintain a bill in equity to set aside a conveyance of real estate made by the debtor for the purpose of defrauding creditors. Mugge v. Ewing, 54 Ill. 236.

But, it is not an obstacle to equitable relief against the fraud of a deceased debtor, that the creditor has not issued execution on his judgment, or has not presented a claim upon the judgment against the personal representative of the debtor, since deceased, where the debt is admitted by the personal representative and the deficit of assets in his hands appears. Merchants' & M. Transp. Co. v. Borland, 53 N. J. Eq. 282, 31 Atl. 272.

Since the law will not permit a creditor of an estate, on recovering judgment against the administrator, or on having his claim allowed in probate court, to sue out an execution thereon, proof of the allowance of the claim and the insolvency of the estate will be regarded as an exhaustion of the creditor's legal remedies, and will entitle him to equitable aid. White v. Russell, 79 Ill. 155.

h. Actions against corporations.

1. Effect of insolvency.

There should be no difference between a corporation and a natural person so far as the effect of insolvency on the general rule as to conditions precedent to equitable relief is concerned, except so far as the corporation property may be regarded as a trust fund. The cases on that point will be found, infra, VI., e, 1.

A creditors' bill against a corporation, merely showing that the complainant was a contract creditor, does not allege grounds for equitable interference even if it appears that the company is insolvent. Nesbit v. North Georgia Electric Co. 156 Fed. 979.

Where a party claiming an indebtedness from a corporation by open account, having no specific lien therefor by contract or otherwise, files a bill in equity to collect his debt, which the corporation disputes, the only pretext for maintaining a bill being that the company is hopelessly insolvent and is wasting its assets,—statements not satisfactorily sustained by the evidence,—the case is not one of which the court has jurisdiction. Marble City Land & Furnace Co. v. Golden, 110 Ala. 376, 17 So. 935.

In Suydam v. North Western Ins. Co. 51 Pa. 394, it was held that a bill by a judgment creditor to reach funds of an insolvent corporation in the hands of a third person must show the issuance of an execution and its return nulla bona. It was held in this case that the insolvency of the corporation was not enough to warrant equitable relief. The court said it was quite possible that a judgment debtor might be insolvent, and yet an execution against him result in enforcing the payment of a single debt in judgment. The ordinary meaning of the term "insolvency" was the state of a person who had not property sufficient for the full payment of his debts. Under the English bankrupt law, a trader was in insolvent circumstances who was not in a condition to pay his debts in the usual and ordinary course of trade and business, and such was the common understanding of the term "insolvent." A general averment of insolvency might therefore be made truthfully against a corporation defendant while a judgment creditor complainant had a speedy and adequate remedy at law for the collection of the debt. Hence it had become an established rule that, when a judgment creditor sought the aid of a court of equity to enforce the payment of his debt, he must aver that a fi. fa. had been issued, and that it had been returned unproductive.

In Bickford v. McComb, 88 Fed. 428, it was said that a judgment creditor who sought to reach assets of an insolvent corporation in the hands of a creditor or stockholder must show the issuance of an execution against the corporation, and its return nulla bona, where the corporation was not made a party to the suit, in the absence of a statute permitting such an action without requiring the exhaustion of legal remedies.

The fact that a corporation, the maker of certain bonds, is insolvent, and the fact that another corporation which has guaranteed the bonds has been dissolved on the ground of its insolvency, will not render it unnecessary for the bondholder of the former corporation to exhaust his remedy at law before coming into equity to set aside a foreclosure sale of the guarantor's property, on the ground of fraud, since the plaintiff's claim is equitable only, and creditors at large are not favored in equity, and are not encouraged in their attempts to reach property and assets of their debtors, and subject the same to the payment of their demands, until they have exhausted all legal remedies by judgment and execution against the debtors themselves and their property. Herring v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 63 How. Pr. 497.

In Streight v. Junk, 8 C. C. A. 137, 16 U. S. App. 608, 59 Fed. 321, the court said that it was well settled when a complainant instituted a suit to subject the assets of an insolvent corporation to the payment of debts due to him and other creditors in whose behalf he sued, he must be a judgment creditor. He must have reduced his claim to a judgment, and have exhausted his remedy at law as a creditor, before he could resort to the equitable remedies of the creditors' bill to reach equitable assets in the debtor's hands.

That an insolvent corporation has fraudulently conveyed its property in contravention of the statute is not a sufficient ground for equitable interposition in favor of a creditor at large, to enforce the payment of his demand, the insolvency not affecting the rule that, until a creditor has obtained a judgment at law for his demand against the debtor and the return of the execution unsatisfied, an action in equity will not lie to reach assets and apply them to the payment of a money demand arising upon the contract. Adee v. Bigler, 81 N. Y. 349.

But, in Blair v. Illinois Steel Co. 159 Ill. 350, 31 L.R.A. 269, 42 N. E. 895, it was held that, where the debtor is an insolvent corporation in the hands of a receiver, the issuance of an execution and its return nulla bona will not be required of a creditor before he will be allowed equitable relief.

In Comstock-Castle Stove Co. v. Baldwin, 169 Ill. 636, 48 N. E. 723, it was held that a judgment creditor could intervene in receivership proceedings for the winding up of an insolvent corporation, without first having an execution issued on his judgment and a return thereon of nulla bona, the original bill being filed not simply to enforce complainant's judgment upon which execution had been returned unsatisfied, but others as well, and it appearing that the court had made an order not only that the intervening creditor be admitted as a defendant, but also all other creditors of the company having an interest in the suit be so admitted.

And in Blanc v. Paymaster Min. Co. 95 Cal. 524, 29 Am. St. Rep. 149, 30 Pac. 765, it was held that, if the debtor corporation is insolvent and a new corporation is organized by the officers of the stockholders of the old company, for the purpose of taking and holding its property and as part of a scheme to defraud and cheat the plaintiff and other stockholders of the old company, and a transfer of the property is made without consideration in pursuance of this scheme,—resort may be had to equity to reach such property and satisfy the indebtedness on a promissory note, although no valid judgment has been obtained by the plaintiff. The court said that, upon this state of facts, a court of equity would regard the defendant corporation as a mere continuation of the former corporation under a different name, and would hold it liable for the indebtedness of the old company, at least to the extent of the value of the property which it received from it without consideration and under the circumstances stated. Nominally the two corporations might be different, but as viewed in equity they were the same, and the plaintiff was not prevented from asserting such identity in fact.

Where the creditor does not sue in behalf of himself and other claimants to have the assets of an insolvent insurance company distributed among the creditors pro rata, and there is no lien or trust in his favor, he does not bring himself within the rule that such relief is sometimes granted by a court of equity out of the property of an insolvent or defunct corporation without requiring the demand first to be reduced to judgment. McCoy v. Connecticut F. Ins. Co. 87 Mo. App. 73.

In Patterson v. Lynde, 112 Ill. 196, it was said that undoubtedly creditors under proper circumstances were not compelled to wait for the winding up of insolvent corporations before proceeding to subject unpaid stock subscriptions to the payment of their claims, but to do so they must first recover a judgment at law in the courts of the state, and have such execution returned unsatisfied.

In Harrigan v. Gilchrist, 121 Wis. 127, 99 N. W. 909, the rule was recognized that it was essential to a cause of action in equity by creditors to administer the property of an insolvent corporation for their benefit by statutory regulation and otherwise that it be alleged that all legal remedies for the collection of the moving creditor's claim have been exhausted by the establishment thereof at law, the issuance of an execution thereon in a good-faith attempt to collect the same, and a return of such execution unsatisfied.

Of course, one not a judgment creditor of a corporation, who has no lien on its property, and does not allege the insolvency of the corporation, is not entitled to the aid of equity to set aside a transfer of a portion of its property by the corporation. Berford v. New York Iron Mine, 24 Jones & S. 236, 21 N. Y. S. R. 439, 4 N. Y. Supp. 836.

As to the effect of insolvency in working dissolution of corporation, see Ready v. Smith, 170 Mo. 163, 70 S. W. 484, next subdivision.

2. Effect of dissolution or abandonment.

Where, because of the dissolution of a corporation, no action at law can be maintained against it by creditors at large, they may resort to equity by way of a creditors' bill without first having obtained a judgment. Pullman v. Stebbins, 51 Fed. 10. The court said that, if a creditors' bill could be maintained for the purpose of discovering the assets of an absconding, absent, or deceased debtor, without first having obtained judgment a fortiori, it ought to be maintained when a corporation has been dissolved or become insolvent, except where it had property which it had conveyed away before its dissolution, in fraud of its creditors.

But the mere insolvency of a corporation will not ipso facto work a dissolution so as to relieve a creditor from pursuing the ordinary legal remedies before going into equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance. Ready v. Smith, 170 Mo. 163, 70 S. W. 484.

An action cannot be maintained as a creditor's suit, to reach the funds of a corporation paid out to stockholders before its dissolution, where there has been no valid judgment and execution against the corporation or its successors, or where the creditor's remedies have not first been exhausted against the property remaining in the hands of the corporation, or received by its trustees on its dissolution. Sturges v. Vanderbilt, 73 N. Y. 384.

The fact that an insolvent corporation which was the guarantor of bonds no longer exists, and that the corporation which was the maker of the bonds is insolvent, will not authorize a bondholder who is only a creditor at large to come into a court of equity for the purpose of setting aside an alleged fraudulent sale of the dissolved corporation's property, on the ground of fraud, where the corporation was not dissolved until three years after defaults in the payment of interest on the bonds. Herring v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 63 How. Pr. 497.

Where it appears that a corporation proceeded against is insolvent, has ceased to do business, and has been abandoned by its officers and directors, and has no one to administer its affairs or realize on its assets and apply the same to the satisfaction of its debts, a simple contract creditor who has not reduced his claim to judgment and who has no lien may sue the corporation in equity. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ty, have a receiver appointed, take charge of its assets, and have them administered and applied to the payment of his debts. Nunnally v. Strauss, 94 Va. 255, 26 S. E. 580.

But, in Walser v. Seligman, 21 Blatchf. 130, 13 Fed. 415, it was held that the practical dissolution of an insolvent nonresident corporation is not a sufficient ground for failure to exhaust legal remedies before coming into an equity court, since it cannot be doubted that a corporation is capable of being sued until it is formally dissolved. The court said: "It will not be seriously contended that the futility of the proceeding will justify a relaxation of the strict rule requiring the creditor to exhaust his legal remedy. It does not follow, because a corporation is so far in nubibus that it need not be made a party to an action, that a creditor will be excused from pursuing it at law before resorting to a creditors' bill. If a creditors' bill can be maintained in this jurisdiction whenever it appears that the debtor has no leviable property, and, like this corporation, is moribund, it can be also when the debtor is shown to be beyond the reach of the process by the court. It would, doubtless, be convenient for creditors in many instances if they were permitted to maintain a creditors' bill upon such a theory, but, in the absence of legislation or any satisfactory precedent, the right to do so cannot be recognized."

4. Actions against partners.

1. In general.

In Reyburn v. Mitchell, 106 Mo. 365, 27 Am. St. Rep. 350, 16 S. W. 592, the court said that the general rule that, before a creditor could call upon a court of equity to interfere in his behalf in the collection of his debt, he must show that he has a demand certain, ascertained by having been reduced to a judgment at law, and that he had exhausted all his legal remedies, applied to claims which were purely legal, and for the satisfaction of which the creditor had no lien or equitable claim upon the specific property; while the creditors of a partnership, strictly speaking, have no lien on the assets of the firm simply as creditors, they have the equitable right, however, to have the proceeds appropriated to the payment of their debts in preference to the creditors of the individual partners. This right can be determined and enforced only in equity. Equity, therefore, having primary jurisdiction of the subject-matter, its aid may be invoked also to remove obstructions from the title of the partnership to its property, so as to adjust the equities between the parties, and subject the property accordingly.

It was, however, held, in Blackwell v. Rankin, 7 N. J. Eq. 153, that a quasi lien of the creditors of a partnership on its property, as against creditors of individual members of the partnership, gives a court of equity jurisdiction for the purpose of protecting creditors of the partnership.

But, in Young v. Frier, 9 N. J. Eq. 465, it was held that the fact that the execution creditor was seizing upon partnership property to pay an individual debt could not give a general creditor a standing in equity to set aside judgments and restrain sales under execution, on the ground that the judgments were fraudulent. Blackwell v. Rankin, supra, was expressly overruled. The court said: "A great deal was said on the argument about the quasi lien of the creditors of a partnership on its property as against creditors of individual members of the partnership, and, in the case of Blackwell, the chancellor says, it is this quasi lien which gives this court jurisdiction for the purpose of protecting the creditors of the partnership. But, is any lien which such creditors may have against creditors of individual members of the partnership, any more sacred, or better entitled to the protection of the court, than the lien or claim, or whatever you may please to call it, which any creditor has on the property of his debtor, as against a wrongdoer?"

A partnership creditor, before judgment, has no such quasi lien on the partnership property as to entitle him to the aid of the court in protecting and enforcing his claim, either against the individual partners or against a creditor of a partner. Mitnacht v. Smith, 17 N. J. Eq. 259, 88 Am. Dec. 233.

In Lawton v. Levy, 2 Edw. Ch. 197, it was said that there might be cases in which a bill could be sustained by simple contract creditors at large against their debtors and thus, if the parties concerned in a partnership had dissolved and had made a disposition of the property which was illegal and fraudulent as to creditors of the partnership, the court would sustain a bill filed by the latter, even though they might be only simple contract creditors, and cause the partnership property to be applied for partnership purposes according to law and equity. But it was held that, in the case at bar, as there was no distinct allegation of a dissolution of the partnership, or of a direct misapplication or diversion of partnership property, a bill to set aside a trust of a deed of assignment as fraudulent could not be maintained.

An action to impound assets of a partnership, pending resort by creditors to involuntary proceedings in bankruptcy, falls within the rule that a judgment must be procured, execution issued and returned unsatisfied, before equity can be resorted to for the purpose of reaching assets fraudulently conveyed. Ideal Clothing Co. v. Hazle, 126 Mich. 262, 85 N. W. 735.

To enable a creditor to interfere adversely in the administration of partnership assets, he must in the first place acquire an equitable lien by exhausting his legal remedy, or in some other way. A creditor at large has no standing in court on such a question. Crippen v. Hudson, 13 N. Y. 161.

A simple contract creditor of a partnership cannot recover of a creditor of the firm moneys obtained by the latter in fraud and violation of a compromise agreement. Viall v. Dater, 13 N. Y. Week. Dig. 54. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Creditors at large of a partnership cannot come into equity for the purpose of controlling the disposition of partnership property, since, to authorize any person to demand the aid of an equity court in directing the application of the partnership property, he must have a lien, either legal or equitable, upon it, or must be in a situation to assert such a lien. Greenwood v. Brodhead, 8 Barb. 595.

An action to set aside assignments, pledges, and conveyances of partnership assets by the surviving partner, as fraudulent, cannot be maintained by a creditor who has not reduced his claim to judgment. Fairbanks, M. & Co. v. Welshans, 55 Neb. 362, 75 N. W. 865.

A bill cannot be maintained as a bill for the administration of the assets of an insolvent firm, by creditors who have not obtained a judgment. Gore v. Kramer, 117 Ill. 176, 7 N. E. 504. The court said that, to enable complainants to maintain a bill of this character, they must in the first place acquire an equitable lien by exhausting their legal remedy, or in some other way. A creditor at large has no standing in court upon such a question.

A nominal partner of a dissolved partnership cannot come into equity for the purpose of having the property of a new and different partnership, which took over the effects of the old firm, applied to the payment of claims due him, alleged to have grown out of previous liabilities of the old firm, without having first established any legal claim against the new firm. Stone v. Manning, 3 Ill. 530, 35 Am. Dec. 119.

2. Failure to exhaust remedy as to all the partners.

An execution and return nulla bona as to all of several defendants is a sufficient exhaustion of legal remedies to sustain a creditors' bill to set aside an assignment of partnership property, although the judgment on which the execution was issued was not in form entered against all the partners, it appearing, however, on the face of the judgment roll, that it was founded upon a joint obligation, and should have been entered in form against all. Produce Bank v. Morton, 67 N. Y. 199.

Where an action is brought on a partnership debt after one of the partners has in good faith transferred his interests in the partnership property to the other partner, and process is not served upon the surviving partner, an action in equity cannot be maintained on this judgment to set aside a transfer of the partnership property by the surviving partner to another person, since the partnership assets are then the individual property of the surviving partner, and as to him the remedy at law is not exhausted. Field v. Chapman, 15 Abb. Pr. 443.

In Tuthill v. Goss, 69 N. Y. S. R. 454, 35 N. Y. Supp. 136, it was held that a bill in equity by a creditor of a partnership, to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of individual property by one of the partners, since deceased, need not show the exhaustion by him of his legal remedies as to the surviving partner as a condition precedent to equitable aid to reach property fraudulently conveyed by the deceased debtor, since the judgment upon which the suit was founded created a joint and several obligation against each defendant.

The issuance of an execution against a partnership, and its return nulla bona as to one of the partners, is a sufficient exhaustion of legal remedies as to such partner, to entitle a creditor to sustain a bill in equity to reach real estate fraudulently purchased by such partner in the name of a third person. Bates v. Cobb, 29 S. C. 395, 13 Am. St. Rep. 742, 7 S. E. 743.

Where judgment was taken on a partnership note indorsed by a third person, against one of the partners, and execution was duly issued on this judgment, it was held not necessary to the maintenance of an action to set aside an alleged fraudulent transfer of his real estate, that the legal remedy against the other parties to the note be exhausted, since the partner against whom the judgment was taken was individually liable on the note, and judgment could be taken against him alone. Clarkson v. Dunning, 22 N. Y. S. R. 73, 4 N. Y. Supp. 430.

In King v. Baer, 31 Misc. 308, 64 N. Y. Supp. 228, service of process in a suit against a partnership, upon one of the partners, wherein judgment was taken against both partners and execution was issued upon such judgment directed against both partners, and returned nulla bona as to both, was held sufficient to authorize a creditors' bill, the object of which was to set aside a fraudulent assignment by the partnership.

j. Actions by sureties; promissory notes.

As a surety has a right to sue in chancery for money which he has paid for his principal, he may, when looking exclusively to a court of equity and filing a bill for a decree for his money, add a prayer for an auxiliary decree for removing obstructions fraudulently interposed to defeat or embarrass the remedial action of the court. Waller v. Todd, 3 Dana, 503, 28 Am. Dec. 94.

It is not an objection to equitable relief against the principal debtor, in favor of a surety who has paid a judgment on the original debt, that the surety has procured no judgment against his principal, since a surety, upon paying the debt of the principal, has a clear right to be substituted in the place of the creditor as to all securities held by the latter, and to have the same benefit he would have had therein. Dunphy v. Gorman, 29 Ill. App. 132.

In Clark v. First Nat. Bank, 57 Mo. App. 277, it is held that a surety, when he has paid the debt of his principal, may invoke in equity the doctrine of subrogation, the right to do so not being dependent upon whether he has recovered judgment against his principal and issued thereon execution which has been returned nulla bona.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

On the other hand, in Peeples v. Tatum, 36 N. C. (1 Ired. Eq.) 414, it was held that a surety who has paid a debt of the principal obligor on a bond should establish his claim by judgment before proceeding in equity to reach property transferred by his principal.

The general doctrine that a creditor must first exhaust his legal remedies before he can sustain a creditors' bill applies to the surety of a partnership, who pays a debt of the partnership. McConnel v. Dickson, 43 Ill. 99.

A surety who pays a judgment rendered against himself and his debtor stands in the position of a simple contract creditor, with reference to the enforcement of his claim in equity. Mugge v. Ewing, 54 Ill. 236.

A surety who has paid a judgment against his deceased principal, but who has never obtained judgment against the principal in his lifetime, nor had his claim allowed against his estate, is not in position to ask the aid of equity to set aside a transfer of property made by the principal. Ibid.

In Stump v. Rogers, 1 Ohio, 533, it was held that a security might ask a court of chancery to aid in subjecting the estate of the principal to the payment of the debt without first advancing or paying the money, as he must do before he could sue an action at law.

But, in Ellis v. Southwestern Land Co. 108 Wis. 315, 81 Am. St. Rep. 909, 84 N. W. 417, it was said that the statement of the case in the syllabus showed that the action was brought by a surety to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance, but there was no discussion of the right in the opinion, and the decision tested by the syllabus was of little weight. In the Ellis Case it was held that a surety who has not paid the debt of his principal cannot maintain an action in equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by the latter, since he is in no better position than that of the creditor. The court said that the true principle seemed to be that a surety paying the debt of his principal was subrogated to the rights of his creditor. Until such payment he had no right enforceable against third parties. He might compel his principal to exonerate him from liability by applying the property to payment of the debt. But, when the principal had put his property beyond his power to use it for that purpose, the surety must be content to follow it along the same lines that a creditor might follow it.

The holder of a note who is entitled to subrogation to the rights of indorsers, who are secured by a trust deed given by the maker, may maintain an action for an accounting, although he has not obtained judgment at law, where the debt is acknowledged. D. A. Tompkins Co. v. Catawba Mills, 82 Fed. 780.

k. Miscellaneous grounds for noncompliance with general rules.

That a creditor has acquired an equity by obtaining a judgment and issuing execution, etc., subsequent to the filing of his bill, is of no avail. Edgar v. Clevenger, 3 N. J. Eq. 258.

Where property has been fraudulently conveyed, a subsequent deed by the debtor to creditors will not authorize a bill in equity to reach such property, since the creditors thereby get nothing more than the debtor's interest in the property, the fraudulent deed being good as between the parties. A creditor, in order to reach property which has been conveyed by a fraudulent deed, void as to him, must "take hold" of the property by getting a judgment, and having it seized under execution. Until that is done, the debt is merely personal, and gives no lien upon the property. Grimsley v. Hooker, 56 N. C. (3 Jones, Eq.) 4, 67 Am. Dec. 227.

It does not operate to modify the doctrine that judgment must be obtained, that an action at law is pending which may result in a judgment and execution in favor of the creditor. Post v. Roach, 26 Fla. 442, 7 So. 854. In this case the action was pending when the bill was filed, but, before the suit at bar was determined, there was a judgment in favor of the creditor for the amount claimed, and an execution issued which was returned unsatisfied.

In Carr v. Parker, 10 Mo. App. 364, it was held that, when a judgment creditor is unable to maintain the lien obtained by the levy of an execution on personalty owned by the debtor, but claimed by a third person, because unable to give the bond required in such a case by statute, he has done all toward exhausting his legal remedies that equity will require before giving relief.

A supplemental bill setting forth the issue of an alias execution after suit brought, and its return unsatisfied, will not give the court jurisdiction of a creditors' bill. Grenell v. Ferry, 110 Mich. 262, 68 N. W. 144.

Where property of the debtor transferred to another has been levied on under execution, at the instance of the creditor, and has afterwards been replevied by the transferee, the creditor must pursue his replevin action to the end; he cannot, upon the taking of the property on a replevin bond, maintain an action to set aside the transfer as fraudulent. Rodgers, S. & Co. v. Kinsey, 8 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 308.

In Brown v. M'Donald, 1 Hill, Eq. 297, it was held that the general rule in equity that a creditor, to entitle himself to relief, must not only have recovered a judgment at law, but must show also that he has proceeded at law to the extent necessary to give him a complete title, applies only to cases where the court is called on to aid a creditor with his legal remedy. It has no application where the court is called on to aid a creditor in giving effect to its own judgment.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

VI. Necessity of exhausting remedy at law where equity jurisdiction is original.

a. In general; special equities.

In discussing the question of whether a creditor must pursue his remedy at law before coming into equity for relief, where the jurisdiction of equity is original, the only cases taken are those in which the point was made that the creditor should first resort to law. Conditions precedent to equitable relief, in the sense that the term is used in this note, that is, the legal steps necessary to be taken before equitable relief can be had, do not exist in this class of cases. Here the creditor goes into equity at once, on the theory that the remedy at law is not adequate.

In McKeldin v. Goulby, 91 Tenn. 677, 20 S. W. 231, the court said that the original jurisdiction of courts of equity to aid a creditor holding a legal demand was limited to those cases in which there was some element of fraud affecting the remedy at law as to assets subject to execution but for the interposition of fraud, and to those cases where there was some element of trust peculiarly entitling the creditor to subject a specific asset to the satisfaction of his demand; but, where neither trust nor fraud appeared, such courts had no jurisdiction to aid such a creditor, even though he had exhausted his remedy at law.

An exception to the general rule that, to reach the equitable interests of the debtor in real estate by a suit in chancery, the creditor should first obtain a judgment at law, and to reach personal property, both a judgment and execution, is made where the claim is to be satisfied out of a fund accessible only by the aid of a court of chancery. O'Brien v. Coulter, 2 Blackf. 421.

In Russell v. Clark, 7 Cranch, 87, 3 L. ed. 278, Chief Justice Marshall said: "If a claim is to be satisfied out of a fund which is accessible only by the aid of a court of chancery, application may be made in the first instance to that court, which will not require that the claim should be first established in a court of law."

In Kent v. Curtis, 4 Mo. App. 121, it was said that the dictum of Chief Justice Marshall in the last-mentioned case referred to cases where the legal remedy was not open to the creditor; otherwise the dictum did not seem to be supported by the adjudged cases. It was not easy to see how a distinction could be made on the ground that there was a fund accessible only by the aid of the court of chancery. Equity did not regard the mere form which property might happen to take; and, whether the property was real estate or money, it might with equal propriety be said that there was a fund accessible only by the aid of a court of chancery. The cases where property of the debtor had been attached were expressly put upon the ground that the creditor had acquired a lien, and this fact gave jurisdiction.

In Mifflin County Nat. Bank v. Fourth Street Nat. Bank, 22 Pa. Co. Ct. 495, it was held that, where there is no adequate remedy at law, or a trust exists in favor of a creditor and relief can be available only in a court of equity, the court will not require a creditor at large to obtain an empty judgment and fruitless execution before entertaining a bill to reach such funds. This was an action to reach a bank deposit which the assignee of the debtor refused to pursue. It was urged that the action could not be maintained because the plaintiffs were not judgment creditors.

But, in Ladd v. Judson, 174 Ill. 344, 66 Am. St. Rep. 267, 51 N. E. 838, it was held that the mere fact that the assets of a debtor, out of which satisfaction is sought, can be reached only through a court of equity, will not give that court jurisdiction in the absence of a judgment at law. The court said that, if a case could arise in which relief might be sought in equity in the first instance, it must appear that the complainant's demand was of such an equitable character that it could be established only in a court of equity; otherwise the right of the defendant to a trial by jury upon a legal claim would be taken away, and the reason for the rule destroyed.

A bill for contribution against the distributee of an insolvent corporation, to compel him to refund, for the benefit of a creditor who has not received his share of the insolvent assets, whatsoever part may belong to him as surplus over and above that which the said distributee ought to have received upon the equitable distribution of the assets, may be maintained although the complainant has not issued execution on his judgment and had same returned nulla bona. Bickford v. McComb, 88 Fed. 428.

In Moore v. Baker, 34 Fed. 1, in sustaining the right of a surety to maintain a bill in equity against a cosurety, to compel contribution and to set aside certain conveyances of real estate alleged to have been fraudulent, and subject the property to the payment of the judgment sought, it was said that, as the complainant could properly file his bill on the equity side of the court to enforce contribution by his cosurety, to this extent the case was one as to which a court of equity had undoubted jurisdiction and could be rightfully brought in that court in the first instance. Under such circumstances, it was said that, as original relief in equity might be rightfully sought by the complainant to compel a cosurety to pay his contributive share, as an incident to such relief, or supplementary to it, and in order to satisfy a demand properly enforceable in equity in the first instance by averments of the cosurety's insolvency, aid might also be had to reach property which it was alleged the cosurety had caused to be fraudulently conveyed. That "to hold that he cannot, for the reason that he must first exhaust his legal remedy against Baker [the cosurety], is in effect to deny to the complainant the right in the first instance to bring his suit in a court of equity, to compel Baker, as a cosurety, to pay his contributive share of the indebtedness of all the sureties to the city. If the complainant, without having brought a suit at law against Baker, has the right to institute an original proceeding in a court of equity to enforce the payment by Baker of his alleged contributive share of the liability which all the sureties have incurred, then it must follow that he has the right in the same proceeding, upon alleging and showing that he cannot otherwise collect his demand against his cosurety, to pursue the property of that cosurety which it is alleged has been fraudulently conveyed to a third party, who is made a defendant in the suit. That part of the relief sought which relates to the application of certain property to the satisfaction of the complainant's demand, because of the alleged insolvency of Baker, may be said to be incidental to the principal recovery prayed in the bill; and, as a court of equity has jurisdiction to grant the principal relief asked, without reference to the fact that a court of law may have concurrent jurisdiction, it may proceed, upon suitable allegations made, to dispose of the whole controversy."

But, in Jewett v. Maytham, 59 Misc. 56, 109 N. Y. Supp. 1000, it was held that a member of a Lloyd's insurance company, who pays a judgment against himself and other joint debtors, acquires only a right of contribution, and, until the amount has been determined by judgment in his favor, and execution has been issued and returned unsatisfied on such judgment, he is in no position to maintain an action in the nature of a creditors' bill, to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance of the property of one of the joint debtors from whom contribution is had.

A bill against a railroad construction company, which charges a violation of trusts, and dissipation and concealment of assets, and conspiracy, confederation, and fraud on the part of its officers and stockholders for the purpose of despoiling the company of its assets and leaving its creditors without redress, which allegations are not denied, may be maintained by general creditors. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Chattanooga Constr. Co. 53 Fed. 314.

Indebtedness for goods sold and delivered amounts to no such equitable element as will allow a resort to equity by the creditor before obtaining judgment. Detroit Copper & B. Rolling Mills v. Ledwidge, 162 Ill. 305, 44 N. E. 751.

In Joseph v. McGill, 52 Iowa, 127, 2 N. W. 1007, it was held that a creditor was entitled to an injunction to prevent the disposition of real estate of the debtor in the hands of a fraudulent grantee, pending the determination of an attachment suit. This was put upon the ground that, since the attachment would not prevent a fraudulent grantee from disposing of the property to an innocent purchaser for value, and as this was about to be done, to refuse the relief asked might amount to a denial of justice to the plaintiff.

In Cotes v. Bennett, 183 Ill. 82, 55 N. E. 661, affirming 84 Ill. App. 33, it was said that, conceding that the mortgagee's claim against a vendee of the mortgagor, who assumes the debt, is equitable in its nature, it is not enforceable independently in a court of equity, by a bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance. The right of the mortgagee to recover on the contract was held to be by a proper action at law.

In Oakley v. Pound, 14 N. J. Eq. 178, it was held that equity would restrain a married woman from disposing of her property at the suit of a creditor before judgment, where she had created an equitable lien upon her separate estate by charging it with her debts. The court said that, if the bill could be maintained upon the ground that the indebtedness was an equitable charge upon her separate estate, it seemed clear that equity would protect such equitable lien by injunction.

In Brittain v. Quiet, 54 N. C. (1 Jones, Eq.) 328, 62 Am. Dec. 202, the plaintiff, a surety for the defendant, paid the debt, and afterwards the defendant obtained a judgment for a larger amount against the plaintiff on another claim, and had execution issued. In the meantime the defendant had removed from the state, leaving no property therein. The prayer of the plaintiff was to enjoin the defendant from collecting any more of his judgment than the difference between the amount of the judgment and the amount of the plaintiff's claim against the defendant on account of the payment of the suretyship debt. The objection was that the plaintiff had no judgment at law to prove his debt. The court said that the rule as to the exhaustion of the remedy at law was confined to creditors who were seeking the aid of equity in the collection of their debts, having no other ground for coming into equity than the fact that they were not able to enforce collection at law. Under these circumstances the court of equity would not give relief until the debt was established by a judgment, and in most cases not until the fact that collection could not be enforced at law was established by having an execution returned nulla bona. The rule was not a general one, but applied only to particular cases. In the case at bar, the very ground of the plaintiff's equity was that in the meantime the defendant had removed to another state, leaving no property behind him, so that the plaintiff had no remedy against his person or property unless he were allowed in equity to retain of the fund which he owed the defendant the amount that the defendant owed him, so as to consider the difference between the two sums as the amount actually due. To require him to take a judgment at law before he could come into equity would be in effect to deny the equity.

b. Fraud.

Inability to obtain relief at law, fraud, and collusion between a deceased debtor and his wife, who holds title to the debtor's 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

property and who is at the same time administratrix of the deceased, are facts sufficient to give an equity court jurisdiction at the instance of the creditor at large to reach real estate fraudulently conveyed by the debtor to his wife through a third person. Spicer v. Ayers, 2 Thomp. & C. 626.

An order of a court of equity requiring a defendant to pay certain alimony, and, as a security for the payment of the same, that he execute a real estate mortgage to the complainant upon certain real estate, will be enforced in a court of equity, by that court inquiring into and setting aside a fraudulent conveyance of such real estate made by the debtor for the purpose of escaping a compliance with the order of the court, although the plaintiff has no judgment or lien against the premises sought to be reached, where the plaintiff is remediless at law. Kamp v. Kamp, 46 How. Pr. 143. The court said that jurisdiction of courts of equity to grant relief in cases of fraud and trusts was not abolished by the statute which instituted a creditors' bill upon a judgment and execution returned unsatisfied.

A creditor who has released an original note in reliance upon renewal notes that were forgeries as to a surety, but binding upon the principal, is entitled to seek the aid of equity to relieve him from the fraud and forgeries by which he was induced to surrender his prior claim. The claim, therefore, being of equitable cognizance, he has the right to combine with his prayer for judgment a further prayer to subject property fraudulently conveyed by his debtor to the payment of his debt, although he has not obtained a return of "no property found." McMakin v. Stratton, 82 Ky. 226.

Where the bill is not what is termed "a creditors' bill," but is one which seeks to charge the defendants in the original proceeding as members of a fraudulent association or copartnership, the complainant is not required to conform to the rules applicable to creditors' bills. Wheeler v. Clinton Canal Bank, Harr. Ch. (Mich.) 449.

The distinction between a creditor's suit to enforce a legal demand and one to enforce an equitable demand was drawn in Wiltshire v. Marfleet, 1 Edw. Ch. 654, wherein the right of creditors to file a bill in equity to subject property of the debtor alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed to the payment of their demands, which were for goods sold, before such demands were reduced to judgment, was denied. It was sought, in this case, to sustain the jurisdiction of the court by alleging that the debtor purchased goods with the fraudulent intention of not paying for them. On this subject the court said that, if the creditors' bill had shown the fraud in the purchase of goods, and that no valid sale had taken place,—in fact, had considered the goods as still being the property of the complainants,—it might have been enough to entitle the complainants to relief, by way of injunction in restraining the disposition of the goods as their goods, or the proceeds thereof, but that, because the bill was not framed on this theory, but on the theory of a sale induced by fraud, it was demurrable because the remedy at law had not been exhausted when it was filed. Enough appeared to entitle the complainants to relief as owners, but not as creditors.

A judgment is not necessary to entitle general creditors to the aid of equity to reach property fraudulently transferred, where a fraudulent conspiracy exists between the debtor and his grantee to defraud the debtor's grantors, and the property conveyed (stock of goods) is being rapidly disposed of by the grantee, since these are special circumstances which render the general rule inapplicable. Albany & R. Iron & Steel Co. v. Southern Agri. Works, 76 Ga. 135, 2 Am. St. Rep. 26.

Where a creditors' bill shows that the debtor had fraudulently procured property from the plaintiff, with the intention not to pay for it, and that the vendee and nominal possessor thereof knew of this, in equity the property will still be regarded as the property of the original owner, and he will not be required to obtain judgment before receiving equitable aid to restrain the disposition of the goods. Cohen v. Meyers, 42 Ga. 46.

But, in Johnson v. Farnum, 56 Ga. 144, on a creditors' bill to have a lien declared on personalty for the purchase price thereof, on the ground that such goods were fraudulently purchased by the debtor, relief was denied, the court applying the doctrine that creditors at large, without a lien or judgment, are not entitled to the aid of equity to interfere by injunction or receiver, with the debtor's property, whether in his possession or in the possession of his assignee. The court said that the seller of goods undoubtedly has a right to rescind for fraud; but he must at least claim the right, if not exercise it, before a court of equity would treat the sale as rescinded or subject to rescission.

Where the claim is based upon a debt owed for goods sold a partnership, the claim does not contain an equitable element such as will take the case out of the general rule requiring that the remedy at law be first exhausted before resort can be had to equity. Dormueil v. Ward, 108 Ill. 216. The court said that there was no claim that the debt itself had any equitable element in it that was not found in any other just debt. All the equitable features of the case consisted of the fraudulent acts of the debtors in their efforts to defeat the collection of the creditor's claim. These were not sufficient to give a court of equity jurisdiction.

In Thurmond v. Reese, 3 Ga. 449, 46 Am. Dec. 440, the court recognized the rule that, before a creditor could come into a court of equity to subject the equitable estate of his debtor to the payment of his demand, he must have pursued his legal remedy to every available extent without being able to obtain satisfaction, and said that, "for the most obvious reasons, why ask the aid of chancery to enforce legal process while there are legal assets liable to seizure and sale?" The court then continued: "But this is not the case made by this bill; it is filed to set aside fraudulent conveyances made for the express purpose of defeating the collection of complainant's debt, and to annul a sale in which the property of the debtor was sacrificed by the improper use of these covinous instruments. The bill makes a clear case of actual fraud, and a strong case." The court therefore was held to have jurisdiction in remedying the fraud.

The last-mentioned case was followed in Lathrop v. McBurney, 71 Ga. 815.

In Hart v. Hart, 52 Ga. 376, it was held that a creditors' bill to set aside a voluntary conveyance by the debtor alleged to have been made for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, and to restrain by injunction the sale of the property held by the debtor under such voluntary conveyance, cannot be supported upon a demand not reduced to judgment, by the allegation of fraud, when the fraud alleged is the execution of such conveyance without notice to creditors.

And in Detroit Copper & B. Rolling Mills v. Ledwidge, 162 Ill. 305, 44 N. E. 751, it was held that a bill in equity will not lie for the purpose of procuring relief against fraud at the suit of a creditor who has never reduced his demand to judgment.

c. Trusts in general.

Where the object of a bill is the enforcement of a trust, the case falls within the original equity jurisdiction, and therefore the exhaustion of the remedy at law is unnecessary.

In Miller v. Davidson, 8 Ill. 518, 44 Am. Dec. 715, after referring to the rule which requires a creditor seeking to reach equitable assets to have his execution returned unsatisfied, and the rule which allows him to come into equity to remove obstructions in the way of his execution, which does not require the return of execution nulla bona, the court said that there were some peculiar cases in which a party seeking a satisfaction of his debt directly might come into chancery in the first instance without obtaining a judgment. The court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter in all cases of trust, and it was abundantly competent itself to inquire whether the party claiming to be a cestui que trust was so or not.

In Case v. Beauregard (Case v. New Orleans & C. R. Co.) 101 U. S. 688, 52 L. ed. 1044, it was said that, whenever a creditor has a trust in his favor, he may go into equity without exhausting legal process or remedies.

A judgment is not necessary to enable a creditor to maintain a bill in equity to reach security in his favor in the hands of a trustee. Wyman v. Wallace, 201 U. S. 230, 242, 50 L. ed. 738, 741, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495.

Where the aid of chancery is sought to reach real estate of a debtor by virtue of a charge of his debts, by his will, upon such estate, there is no necessity to exhaust the remedies at law, or to allege the facts which exonerate that proceeding, since this is an inherent and original case of a trust, which it is the peculiar province of chancery to enforce. Darrington v. Borland, 3 Port. (Ala.) 9.

A fund specifically appropriated by the debtor for the payment of certain bills and promissory notes is a trust fund, which may be reached under the original jurisdiction of a court of equity without the exhaustion of legal remedies on the bills. Toulmin v. Hamilton, 7 Ala. 362.

The directors of a banking corporation are, in the management of its affairs, trustees for its creditors and stockholders, and are bound to administer its affairs according to the terms of its charter, and in good faith. If they fail in either respect, they are liable to the party in interest who is injured thereby for a breach of trust, and they may be required to account to him in a court of chancery, although such creditor has no judgment, and has not in other respects exhausted his legal remedy. Bank of St. Marys v. St. John, 25 Ala. 566.

The doctrine that a party seeking the aid of equity to subject equitable assets to the payment of a lawful demand must first exhaust his legal remedy by judgment, execution, and return nulla bona, was also held, in Prewett v. Land, 36 Miss. 495, not to be applicable to equitable demands such as the enforcement of a trust, where the creditor is without legal remedy, and must therefore resort to a court of equity in the first instance.

And in Chautauque County Bank v. White, 6 N. Y. 236, 57 Am. Dec. 442, this distinction is also drawn, the court saying that, as to creditors' bills, strictly so-called, a condition precedent to relief is that the remedy of the creditor be exhausted at law, that is, an execution must be returned unsatisfied, but that the common-law powers of the court in reference to fraudulent trusts and conveyances are not touched by the provisions of the statute relating to creditors' bills. "Fraud and trust were familiar heads of equity jurisdiction, independent of the statute. The creditor invoking the aid of the court must establish his title to its interposition by alleging a lien, or quasi lien, upon the real or personal property which was the subject of the trust; and he would then be entitled to relief, notwithstanding he had a remedy at law by levy and sale upon execution."

A judgment creditor may, on general equitable principles, maintain an action to subject the equitable effects of his debtor before execution, where the case is so connected with trusts and equities, and involves such a variety of interests, that a plain and adequate remedy cannot be had at law. Piatt v. St. Clair, 6 Ohio, 227.

While it is true as a general proposition that a creditor at large, or before judgment, cannot proceed by creditors' bill to reach assets, even if there is nothing liable to attachment or execution at law, yet to this rule there are exceptions. Thus, if the creditor is entitled to payment out of a specific trust fund, a petition in the nature of a creditors' bill may be maintained without judgment. So, if a creditor's claim is a lien or charge upon the income of a debtor or railroad company, or if the corporation is a trustee of that fund for his benefit, he may, without judgment, enforce the lien or trust, and it matters not whether it was created, or exists, without his privity or with it. Darst v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 3 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 199.

Creditors of a cestui que trust who have not recovered judgment against him cannot, although the claim be for necessities, maintain an action in equity to reach the trust property. Armstrong v. Pitts, 13 Gratt. 235.

In Kent v. Curtis, 4 Mo. App. 121, it was said that, if the primary purpose of the bill presented in itself a cause of equity cognizance, the case was obviously not within the rule requiring judgment. Thus, where, by the direction of the debtor, the property had been conveyed in trust, for the general benefit of his creditors, to one of the defendants, and the bill was filed for all the creditors, to establish the trust, these facts constituted the ground of jurisdiction.

In Fink v. Patterson, 21 Fed. 602, where an insolvent firm, in violation of a compromise agreement with its creditors, was paying many of its debts in full, it was held that a general creditor might have a receiver appointed to administer the assets of the firm for the benefit of all the creditors, on the ground that the assets, under the compromise agreement, formed a trust fund for the benefit of the creditors.

In Early Times Distillery Co. v. Zeiger, 9 N. M. 31, 49 Pac. 723, under a statute making transfers of property of an insolvent debtor, made with intent to prefer certain creditors, operative as an assignment for the benefit of all of his creditors, it was held that such a trust arises as will authorize a creditor without judgment to resort to a court of equity in the first instance for relief under the statute.

The last-mentioned case was followed in Grunsfeld Bros. v. Brownell, 12 N. M. 192, 76 Pac. 310.

It is unnecessary that a creditor have execution returned nulla bona before proceeding in equity to enforce the satisfaction of a judgment out of a trust fund created by an assignment, since a court of equity is able to inquire for itself whether one claiming to be a cestui que trust is so or not, and, if it establishes that the person holding the property is trustee for the creditors, then a complainant, if he is one of them, thus shows himself to be a cestui que trust, and establishes his right to invoke the aid of a court of equity to prevent the trustee from abusing the trust. Beach v. Bestor, 45 Ill. 341.

A bill by a partnership creditor, where the partnership has made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, will be sustained against the assignee therein and his assigns, for the enforcement of the trust created by the assignment, and an accounting, although such creditor has not reduced his claim to judgment. Brockett v. Lewis, 144 Mich. 560, 108 N. W. 429. The court pointed out that this was not a creditors' bill, but an application by the cestui que trust to compel a proper application of the trust property. The case therefore comes under the trust jurisdiction of equity.

Equity will assume jurisdiction in behalf of an unpreferred creditor named in a deed of assignment, to restrain the trustee from improperly using and wasting the trust property, since the creditor is a cestui que trust, and equity has jurisdiction of this class of trusts, as of all others. Cohen v. Morris, 70 Ga. 313.

In Baker v. Bartol, 6 Cal. 483, it was said that a simple contract creditor could enforce a trust in his favor, created by an assignment by the debtor, by asking for a distribution. There was no more necessity for his being a judgment creditor in such a case than there was in the case of a foreclosure of a mortgage.

Upon the refusal of an assignee for the benefit of creditors, to maintain an action to set aside judgments as constituting an unlawful preference under an assignment statute, a creditor, for the benefit of himself and other creditors, may maintain an action to set the judgments aside in order to secure the property for the benefit of the assignee to be distributed according to the terms of the assignment, although the plaintiffs are not judgment creditors, and have no lien on the property seized under executions issued on the judgments. Spelman v. Freedman, 54 Hun, 409, 7 N. Y. Supp. 698, affirmed in 130 N. Y. 421, 29 N. E. 765.

Where creditors, by a general assignment for the benefit of all creditors, are thereby invested with a lien on the property assigned, they have the right to invoke the aid of equity for the purpose of removing an obstacle in the way of the execution of the trust for their benefit, without first exhausting their legal remedies. Holt v. Bancroft, 30 Ala. 193.

But, where creditors have not obtained judgment, or, as required by statute, presented their claims to the assignee under an assignment for the benefit of creditors, they are not entitled to attack, in aid of the assignment, a fraudulent conveyance of the assignor. Kalmus v. Ballin, 52 N. J. Eq. 290, 46 Am. St. Rep. 520, 28 Atl. 791. The court said that the assignee became a trustee for the benefit of creditors, and entitled to attack fraudulent transfers of property in the interest of creditors and to the extent necessary to satisfy their claims. But that obviously he owed a duty in this regard only to the creditors with whom the trust relation was established. He was no doubt a trustee for all the creditors who might, within the prescribed time and in the required mode, present their claims, which thus became prima facie ascertained and fixed. But, until a creditor presented his claim, he was a stranger to the assignee, and could not impose on him the burden of a trust in his favor. When a creditor presented his claim, the trust relation with the assignee came into existence. The assignee owed to such a creditor a duty to attack, on proper request, fraudulent transfers of property necessary to satisfy such claims. Upon the neglect or refusal of the assignee to comply with such a request, such a creditor acquired a status to act in the assignee's stead.

d. Statutory trusts.

When property is purchased by the debtor and conveyed to a third person, an interesting question arises with reference to conditions precedent to equitable relief, under statutes making an equitable trust result in favor of creditors under such circumstances. Does this trust invest the chancery court with original jurisdiction to reach this property? Or is this merely to be regarded as an equitable asset of the debtor which can be got at only after the creditor has obtained judgment and exhausted his remedy at law? The courts have usually taken the latter view, but the former is more in accord with the decisions upholding the original jurisdiction of courts of equity to enforce nonstatutory trusts in favor of the cestui que trust.

It is not necessary for a foreign judgment creditor to sue over in the courts of New York a judgment against a debtor, and, after recovery, to cause execution to be issued and returned unsatisfied in a suit to enforce a statutory trust in favor of creditors against the grantee of lands purchased with the debtor's moneys and conveyed to his wife by the vendor, and afterwards transferred by her to the defendant with full knowledge of the facts, since, under the New York statute, the common-law rule as to the resulting trust in favor of the party paying the consideration, and of those claiming in his right, has been annihilated by the statute of uses and trusts, which vests the absolute title as between the original parties in the nominal grantee, but declares a new and independent resulting trust in favor of the general creditors of the party paying the consideration in every case where the conveyance is fraudulently made to another with his assent. Porter, J., said that one of the most familiar of the inherent powers of the courts of chancery is that of granting equitable relief in cases of fraud by enforcing rights springing from mere trusts, whether created by will, by deed, or by operation of law. It is a jurisdiction entirely independent of that exercised under a special authority of the statute to grant ancillary relief to judgment creditors in aid of the remedies at law. The right of the party who invokes the exercise of this anterior and general jurisdiction depends upon his establishing the relation of trustee and cestui que trust. The right of the judgment creditor to the ancillary relief of a court of equity depends upon his compliance with the statutory condition which requires him first to exhaust his legal remedy. In one case the party has no remedy at law; in the other, he has none in equity until his remedies at law are exhausted. McCartney v. Bostwick, 32 N. Y. 53.

Under Revised Statutes of New York, 2 Rev. Stat. 173, 174, §§ 38, 39, a judgment creditor may file a bill in chancery against a judgment debtor, or any other person, to compel the discovery of any property or thing in action belonging to the judgment debtor, or of any property, money, or thing in action due or held in trust for him, whether the same might or might not have been originally taken on execution. Under this statute it was held that a judgment creditor could maintain a bill to reach property of the debtor, title to which had been taken by a third person, notwithstanding the judgment never was a legal lien on the land, and notwithstanding the fact that more than ten years had elapsed since it was received. Scoville v. Shed, 36 Hun, 165. This is, of course, on the theory of an action to reach property not subject to levy, and assumes the exhaustion of the remedy at law.

And in Estes v. Wilcox, 67 N. Y. 264, following Allyn v. Thurston, 53 N. Y. 622, a creditor at large was denied the right to maintain a creditors' bill to enforce a resulting trust in lands purchased and paid for by his debtor, since deceased, and by his direction conveyed to another person. The death and insolvency of the debtor, in and of itself, was held not to be a sufficient ground for equitable interposition, since the creditor had the right to prosecute his demand to judgment against the personal representatives of the deceased debtor; and while such a demand would not be conclusive against the debtor's heirs or grantees, the court said it would conclude the creditor as to the amount of his debt.

It is not essential to equitable jurisdiction that a judgment creditor, in order to invoke the aid of equity to reach specific real estate purchased by the debtor and fraudulently conveyed to a third person, must cause an execution to issue to the county of its situs, since the action is one in personam against the grantee, to enforce a statutory trust declared to result in such cases. (See Stat. 1898, §§ 2077, 2078.) State Bank v. Bienfang, 133 Wis. 431. 113 N. W. 720.

In Alabama, a creditor without judgment is entitled to equitable aid to reach real estate purchased by a debtor, title to which was taken in a third person. McAnally v. O'Neal, 56 Ala. 299.

On the other hand, it was held in Griffin v. Nitcher, 57 Me. 270, that there must be a return nulla bona to lay the foundation for a suit in equity to reach real estate paid for by the debtor and fraudulently conveyed to his wife.

In Corey v. Greene, 51 Me. 114, it was said: "If the debtor at any time has had the legal title to the estate, and, after the debt was contracted, conveyed it for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, such deed is void, in contemplation of law, and the creditor may still levy his execution upon it, and then establish the fraud by proceedings in equity. In such a case a levy is necessary; and, without it, a court of equity will make no inquiry into the question of fraud. . . . But, in cases where the debtor has never had the legal estate, but has paid the purchase money and caused the land to be conveyed by the grantor to a third person, whether the deed be regarded as valid or invalid, he has never had any title that could be seized on execution. A levy in such case is therefore unnecessary. A return of nulla bona is all that is required to lay the foundation for a suit in equity." Followed in Des Brisay v. Hogan, 53 Me. 554, as to real estate purchased by the debtor in the name of his wife. Levy held unnecessary.

But, in Gray v. Chase, 57 Me. 558, it is held that where a statute provides that property purchased by a husband and conveyed to his wife may be taken for the existing debts of a husband as if it were his property, and the courts hold that, where the husband never held the legal title, the property must be reached by process in equity, the fact that the husband has other property which may be reached by another process of the court does not make it necessary for the creditor to pursue such property before resorting to equity under the statute.

Under a statute providing that, when a conveyance for a valuable consideration is made to one person, and the consideration therefor is paid by another, a trust shall result in favor of creditors of the latter, a creditor cannot, before his claim has been reduced to judgment, proceed in equity to reach property so transferred. State Bank v. Chatten, 59 Kan. 303, 52 Pac. 893.

A creditor's right to the aid of equity to reach property of such a character that it cannot be taken on execution at law depends upon the fact of his having exhausted his legal remedies without being able to obtain satisfaction; and the best, if not the only, evidence of this, is the actual return of an execution unsatisfied. In this respect there is a distinction between a bill seeking to reach land which the debtor once had legal title to, and a bill seeking to reach land to which the debtor never had the legal title, he having fraudulently purchased it in the name of a third person. In the former case, a levy of the execution upon the land is sufficient; and, in the latter, the execution must be returned nulla bona. Robinson v. Springfield Co. 21 Fla. 203.

Where the object of a creditors' bill is to reach and subject to the payment of a judgment real estate which the judgment debtor has bought and paid for, having title thereto taken in the name of a third person, a judgment creditor must have exhausted his remedy at law by suing out execution and having a return of nulla bona made thereon by the proper officer; since, as to such property, the legal title thereto never vested in the judgment debtor, and a judgment against him would not, therefore, be a lien thereon. Neubert v. Massman, 37 Fla. 91, 19 So. 625.

An attachment levied on lands bought by the debtor and conveyed to a third person in fraud of creditors will not support a creditors' bill, since such levy, followed by judgment, is not a sufficient basis for a bill to reach such property. Trask v. Green, 9 Mich. 358.

A levy on real estate which the debtor has purchased and caused to be conveyed to a third person in fraud of creditors is not a sufficient basis for a bill to subject it to the payment of a creditors' bill, under a statute providing that no trust shall result in favor of the debtor, but that a trust shall result in favor of the creditors of the debtor. Such a trust can be reached only after the return of the execution unsatisfied. Maynard v. Hoskins, 9 Mich. 485.

In Moffatt v. Tuttle, 35 Minn. 301, 28 N. W. 509, a bill to enforce a statutory trust in favor of creditors as to real estate paid for by the debtor and transferred to a third person, it was held that the exhaustion of the legal remedies was a condition precedent to the action, on the ground that the interest secured to the creditors by this statute was an equitable one.

In Holdrege v. Gwynne, 18 N. J. Eq. 26, it was held that a court of equity would not enjoin the disposition of property purchased by a deceased insolvent debtor in his wife's name, at the suit of a creditor who had no judgment or other claim that would be a lien on the property if the title were in the debtor.

Where real estate is purchased by the debtor and conveyed to a third person, in fraud of the debtor's creditors, a levy is not a necessary basis for equitable interference, since the legal title is never in the judgment debtor. Fairbairn v. Middlemiss, 47 Mich. 372, 11 N. W. 203.

In Arbuckle Bros. Coffee Co. v. Werner, 77 Tex. 43, 13 S. W. 963, it was also held that a lien is not necessary in order that a judgment creditor be entitled to the aid of equity to reach real estate fraudulently purchased by his debtor in the name of a third person.

Where a judgment creditor has filed a transcript of the judgment docket with the county clerk, thus creating a lien, he may maintain an action to subject property to the levy of execution upon his judgment where his complaint alleges that certain real estate was purchased with the money of the judgment debtor, and was held in trust for him, and that the conveyance was made by agreement with the holders of the property, for the purpose of hindering and delaying and embarrassing him in the collection of his judgment, without first exhausting his legal remedies, and without alleging a return nulla bona of an execution, or alleging insolvency of the judgment debtor. Stephens v. Parvin, 33 Colo. 60, 78 Pac. 688.

In Alabama, a general assignment in favor of creditors invests them with a lien which enables them, or any one of them, for himself and all others who may join in bearing the burdens of the suit, who choose to come in and prove their debts upon a reference to the master, to file a bill in chancery to compel an execution of the trust thus created for their benefit. Crawford v. Kirksey, 50 Ala. 590.

e. Trust-fund theory.

1. As to corporations.

An effort has been made in the case of debtor corporations to dispense with the usual conditions precedent to equitable aid to creditors on the theory that a corporation's property is a trust fund for the benefit of creditors. The attempt to get into chancery on this theory has, however, generally been unsuccessful.

The fact that a corporation's property is a trust fund for the payment of its debts, and that, whenever it has been wrongfully and fraudulently conveyed, creditors may reach and have it applied to the payment of their debts, will not authorize a creditor at large to come into equity to set aside an alleged fraudulent foreclosure sale, for the purpose of reaching equitable assets. Herring v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 63 How. Pr. 497.

An insolvent corporation's property purchased at an alleged fraudulent foreclosure sale, and transferred to a new corporation, is not so peculiarly a trust fund in the hands of the new corporation, for the benefit of creditors of the insolvent corporation, afterwards dissolved, as to render it unnecessary for a creditor at large to exhaust his legal remedies before coming into equity to set aside a sale. Ibid.

The assets of a corporation do not constitute a trust fund of so sacred a nature that general creditors may set aside any disposition of such assets to secure an antecedent indebtedness in favor of one or more of its officers, where made while the corporation is still a going concern, though financially embarrassed. Childs v. N. B. Carlstein Co. 76 Fed. 86.

Mere corporate insolvency neither forces on creditors any lien on the corporate assets, nor renders such assets a subject of a trust in favor of creditors so as to authorize equitable aid to a general creditor. Whatever trust may exist is "rather a trust in the administration of the assets after possession by a court of equity, than a trust attaching to the property, as such, for the direct benefit of either creditor or stockholder." Jones v. Mutual Fidelity Co. 123 Fed. 506.

The capital stock and assets of a corporation do not constitute such a trust fund for the benefit of creditors as will give the latter a specific lien or direct trust in such assets, so as to authorize a simple contract creditor of the corporation to go into equity without exhausting his legal remedies. Hollins v. Brierfield Coal & I. Co. 150 U. S. 371, 37 L. ed. 1113, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 127.

In McKee v. City Garbage Co. 140 Mich. 497, 103 N. W. 906, it was held that the fact that the debtor is a corporation, is insolvent, and is in no expectation of continuing business, will not relieve a creditor from establishing his claim at law by judgment before proceeding in equity to compel a reconveyance of transferred assets of the corporation, and the distribution of the same among the creditors and other persons entitled thereto. The court said that the principle underlying the exceptional cases in which this condition has been dispensed with is that, when a corporation becomes insolvent and unable to carry on its business, each creditor is entitled to his pro rata share of its assets; that the creditor, under such circumstances, has an equitable lien on the assets. That principle has been deliberately repudiated in Michigan.

In Atlas Nat. Bank v. John Moran Packing Co. 138 Mo. 59, 39 S. W. 71, it was said that the same steps necessary to be pursued by a creditor in order to reach property conveyed or disposed of by his debtor with intent to defraud his creditors must be pursued by a creditor of a corporation; and that, before a creditor can maintain a creditors' bill against a corporation, he must show that he has exhausted all remedies at law. It was therefore held that a creditor was not entitled to equitable aid to reach property of a corporation which it was charged with having fraudulently conveyed before his demand became due, and before any steps had been taken to exercise the ordinary legal remedies afforded by law. The action was prosecuted upon the theory that a direct trust or lien attaches to the property of a corporation in favor of its creditors, and that a simple-contract creditor of such corporation may maintain an action in equity with respect to the administration of such assets if the corporation is insolvent, although its debt or demand may not have been due at the time of the institution of the suit.

The mere fact that the debtor is a corporation does not affect the rule requiring a creditor first to reduce his claim to judgment before seeking equitable aid to set aside the disposition by the debtor of his property, as made with the intent to defraud his creditors. Ready v. Smith, 170 Mo. 163, 70 S. W. 484.

The fact that a corporation is not managing its property as wisely and successfully as it might does not make it a case for equitable interference on behalf of creditors who have neither judgment nor liens save attachment liens. Dodge v. Pyrolusite Manganese Co. 69 Ga. 665.

But, in Kankakee Woolen Mill Co. v. Kampe, 38 Mo. App. 234, it was held that an ordinary contract creditor of an insolvent corporation may maintain a suit in equity to compel the proper distribution of corporate assets, and that, if it should be made to appear that there was danger of the property being wasted or improperly disposed of, the plaintiff would be entitled to a restraining order by giving the necessary bond, and, if necessary, to have a receiver appointed to take possession and dispose of the property under the orders of the court. This decision rests upon the ground that the assets of an insolvent corporation are a trust fund for the benefit of creditors. The court said that the primary object of the bill was the enforcement of a trust and the protection of trust property, and that such matters had always been held to be subjects of exclusive equity jurisdiction.

In Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 24 L. ed. 365, the court said, obiter, that, ordinarily, a creditor must put his demand in a judgment against the debtor, and exhaust his remedies at law before he can proceed in equity to subject choses in action to its payment. To this rule, however, there are some exceptions; and the court was not prepared to say that a creditor of a dissolved corporation might not, under certain circumstances, claim to be exempt from its operation. If it could, however, it would be upon the ground that the assets of the corporation constitute a trust fund which would be administered by a court of equity in the absence of a trustee, the principle being that equity will not permit a trust to fail for want of a trustee.

Where the prime object sought by the bill is to have the court take charge of the assets of an insolvent and dissolved corporation, and distribute them ratably among its creditors, and the action is brought by certain named creditors, not only in their own behalf, but as well for all other creditors who might see proper to come into the litigation, a court of equity will take hold of the assets and settle the respective rights of all claimants, and distribute the same according to equity and good conscience, regardless of whether the creditors' claims may have been reduced to judgment, since the assets of the insolvent corporation have become a trust fund for the benefit of all creditors alike. White v. University Land Co. 49 Mo. App. 450.

2. As to ordinary partnerships.

The creditor of a partnership cannot, before judgment, maintain an action to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance of the partnership assets by the surviving partner, on the theory that the assets of the partnership are held in trust for all the creditors by the surviving partner or his transferee. Fairbanks, M. & Co. v. Welshans, 55 Neb. 362, 75 N. W. 865.

In Batchelder v. Atlheimer, 10 Mo. App. 181, it was said that the funds of an ordinary partnership are, it is true, trust funds in a certain sense, but not in such a sense as to give any control over them to a court of equity until it is properly appealed to; that this appeal to equity cannot be made by a creditor unless he has first exhausted his legal remedy and at least obtained a judgment.

As to creditors' quasi lien on partnership property, see supra, V., i, 1.

3. As to special partnerships.

In Whitcomb v. Fowle, 7 Abb. N. C. 295, a creditors' bill by a general creditor to restrain an insolvent limited partnership from wasting its assets was entertained on the theory that the partnership assets are a special fund for the payment of debts ratably except those due to the special partner.

Where a statute constitutes the effects of a limited partnership a special fund for the benefit of all creditors, which fund, in the case of insolvency, is to be distributed among such creditors ratably, in proportion to the amount of their respective debts, it is not necessary that a creditor of such insolvent limited partnership should be compelled to proceed to judgment and execution at law, the necessary effect of which might be to give him a preference over other creditors, before he could be permitted to file a bill in equity to prevent the partnership funds from being wasted by the insolvent partner, and to obtain the payment of a ratable proportion of his debt out of the fund. Innes v. Lansing, 7 Paige, 583. The court said that if the insolvent partner neglected to place the partnership effects in the hands of a proper and responsible trustee, to be distributed without delay among all the creditors of the firm, other than the special partner, ratably, in proportion to the amount of their several debts, either due or to become due, any creditor might file a bill in equity in behalf of himself and the other creditors of the firm, and might have a receiver appointed to protect the trust fund, and to distribute it among the several creditors who might come in and prove their debts under the decree to be obtained on such a bill.

In Batchelder v. Atlheimer, 10 Mo. App. 181, it was held that, under the Missouri statute relating to limited partnerships, providing that, if the partnership becomes insolvent, no special partner shall be paid as creditor of the firm, or receive the benefit of any lien in his favor, as such, until the other creditors of the firm are satisfied; and that no sale or change of the effects of the firm, or of any member of the firm, made for the purpose of giving a preference or priority to one over another of his or its creditors, shall be valid against the creditors if made when he or the firm is insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency,—the assets of such an insolvent partnership were trust funds, and that a bill for a pro rata distribution thereof could be maintained by a general creditor. The court said that the enforcement of pure trusts is undoubtedly one of the original and inherent powers of courts of equity. Where, by direction of the debtor, the property has been conveyed in trust for the general benefit of his creditors to one of the debtors, and the bill is filed for all the creditors, to establish the trust, such facts constitute the grounds of jurisdiction.

When a limited partnership becomes insolvent, its assets are a special fund for the payment of its debts ratably, except those due to the special partner, and any creditor, although he has not proceeded to judgment and execution at law, may file a bill in equity to restrain the insolvent partners from disposing of the property contrary to law, and for the appointment of a receiver. Whitcomb v. Fowle, 56 How. Pr. 365.

1. Estates of deceased debtors.

1. In general.

Where it is held that relief is granted against the estates of deceased debtors under the original powers of a court of equity, it would appear to be unnecessary first to establish the claim at law.

In Lehman v. Meyer, 67 Ala. 396, after referring to the classes of cases mentioned above, in which equity would come to the aid of the creditor in collecting his claim, it was said that there is another class of cases dependent upon the jurisdiction of the court over the administration and marshaling of the estates of deceased persons, in which the court is accustomed to intervene for the relief of creditors, though judgments at law have not been obtained and legal remedies have not been exhausted, if a necessity exists; and the necessity exists when there is a deficiency of other assets for the payment of debts. This class of cases embraces fraudulent alienations made by the debtor in his life, and depends upon a jurisdiction of the court distinct and independent of that to which the creditor of a living man can resort.

A bill by a creditor of a deceased debtor against the administrator and a party who was fraudulently holding all the property of the deceased which, in equity, should be applied to the payment of the debt, the bill praying that the debt might be paid out of this fund, was held to come under the original jurisdiction of equity, and not under its ancillary jurisdiction to aid the creditor in executing a legal process, and therefore it was not required that the creditor should have obtained a lien at law upon the specific property sought for, if that were legal property, upon which an execution could be levied; or, if it were equitable assets, not liable to levy by execution, that the creditor must have exhausted his legal remedy by a return of nulla bona on his execution, and must also be in a condition to proceed at once at law to enforce his right if the obstacle could be removed. Hagan v. Walker, 14 How. 29, 14 L. ed. 312.

In Alabama, courts of equity, by virtue of their original powers, have jurisdiction over estates of decedents, to direct and control executors and administrators, and protect the rights of creditors generally. Because of this jurisdiction, a creditor without a lien may resort to equity to reach real and personal property standing in the name of a trustee, for the wife and children of the debtor, which was fraudulently transferred by the debtor, the estate being insolvent, the jurisdiction resting upon the double ground of the fiduciary relation of the administrators, and the inadequacy of the powers of the orphans' court to afford the necessary relief. Pharis v. Leachman, 20 Ala. 662.

A bill to enforce a claim against property alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed by an intestate, and which is in the possession of a person who cannot administer it as the rightful representative, being bound by the fraud of his intestate, may be maintained, although the creditor has not exhausted his legal remedies or obtained a lien. Watts v. Gayle, 20 Ala. 817.

Creditors of a deceased debtor may maintain an action in chancery to have the real estate of the deceased sold to pay their claims, although they have not established the amount of their claim by judgment at law, since the administration of the assets of a deceased person is a well-established rule in equity, based upon its duty to enforce trusts. Offutt v. King, 1 MacArth. 312.

It is not necessary to the maintenance of a bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance made by a deceased debtor that judgment be first obtained. The bill is not an application for the exercise of an auxiliary jurisdiction of the court, but is a part of its original jurisdiction. Dunn v. Murt, 4 Mackey, 289.

That the legislature has furnished a creditor an ample remedy at law by authorizing writs of foreign attachment to issue against nonresident heirs and devisees will not prevent him from proceeding in equity against the representative of a deceased debtor, since, in such case, courts of equity have concurrent jurisdiction with courts of law, and the creditor may elect into which court he will go. Martin v. Densford, 3 Blackf. 295.

In Whitney v. Kimball, 4 Ind. 546, 58 Am. Dec. 638, it was settled that where the original debtor is dead, a judgment at law need not be obtained before going into chancery for the collection of the debt, and that this jurisdiction rests on the ground that executors, administrators, and heirs are, or may be, trustees for creditors, and hence are liable to be called to account in chancery. And if, in a given case, a remedy exists at law also, the two jurisdictions are, in such a case, concurrent. It was said that chancery in the case of decedent's estate having jurisdiction in the first instance, and independent of all incidental circumstances, for the collection of the debt, the question of solvency or insolvency can have no influence with the court in the determination of the cause.

An administrator de bonis non who obtains a judgment against his predecessor for wrongfully converting the assets of the estate may go into equity to enforce such 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

judgment without showing that there are unpaid claims against the estate. He is not required to show that there are no other assets sufficient to pay the claims of creditors. Duffy v. State, 115 Ind. 351, 17 N. E. 615.

A creditor at large of a deceased debtor may sue the personal representative in equity for an account of assets to be applied in payment of his debt, without first obtaining a judgment thereon. The decree, however, whether the action be brought by one creditor or more, is for the benefit of all the creditors. Beverly v. Rhodes, 86 Va. 415, 10 S. E. 572. The court said that the jurisdiction of a court of equity in such cases is said by some of the authorities to be founded upon the necessity of taking accounts or compelling a discovery of assets, and because there is no adequate remedy at law. By others it is put upon the ground of a trust in the personal representative, which it is the duty of a court of equity to enforce. But, whatever may be the correct explanation, the jurisdiction is not only well established, but it is, in Virginia, practically exclusive.

A judgment creditor of a deceased debtor whose administratrix refuses to bring suit may file a creditors' bill to set aside fraudulent mortgages. Munn v. Marsh, 38 N. J. Eq. 410.

One who has a claim for contribution from the estate of a deceased debtor may come into equity to establish it, and to set aside a fraudulent conveyance in the way of it, although the claim is not in judgment. Shurts v. Howell, 30 N. J. Eq. 418.

2. Exhaustion of personal assets.

Personal assets are, however, usually the primary fund for the payment of a deceased debtor's debts, and therefore must be first exhausted before the equitable remedy is available.

A creditor at large who has no lien, and who has not exhausted his legal remedies, cannot obtain satisfaction out of real estate fraudulently conveyed by the deceased debtor unless there is a deficiency of legal assets to satisfy the demand. State Bank v. Ellis, 30 Ala. 478.

Bills by simple-contract creditors to reach property fraudulently conveyed by a deceased debtor may be maintained where there is a deficiency of legal assets. Halfman v. Ellison, 51 Ala. 543; Jenkins v. Lockard, 66 Ala. 377; Houston v. Blackman, 66 Ala. 559, 41 Am. Rep. 756; Battle v. Reid, 68 Ala. 149; Sharp v. Sharp, 76 Ala. 312; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. McGee, 108 Ala. 304, 19 So. 356.

In a bill to reach property of a deceased debtor, paid for by him, the title being taken in the name of a third person, the averment that the estate is insolvent, or that there is a deficiency of legal assets to satisfy plaintiff's demand, is essential to give the bill equity. Bush v. Coleman, 121 Ala. 548, 25 So. 569.

A creditor of a deceased debtor, upon showing a deficiency of assets in the hands of a domiciliary administrator, may maintain a bill to set aside alleged fraudulent conveyances without exhausting the assets of the debtor in another state, in which the creditor is also prosecuting his claim against the estate. Fellows v. Lewis, 65 Ala. 343, 39 Am. Rep. 1.

A bill to set aside fraudulent conveyances of a deceased debtor cannot be maintained where no execution has been issued on the judgment, although the estate has been declared insolvent by the orphans' court, where the bill shows that the intestate, at the time of his death, was possessed of "divers valuable negro slaves which never came to possession of said administrators, or either of them, and were not in any manner applied in payment of the debts of said intestate." Quarles v. Grigsby, 31 Ala. 172.

A creditor of a deceased debtor, without obtaining judgment and exhausting his legal remedies, may come into equity to subject to his demand property fraudulently conveyed by the debtor while in life, if there is a deficiency of legal assets. Werborn v. Kahn, 93 Ala. 201, 9 So. 729. The court said that the equity of bills of this class rests on the principle that, when the legal assets are insufficient, and the administrator, because bound by the fraud of his intestate, cannot administer the property subject to the claims of creditors, a court of chancery only can grant full and proper relief. Such bills depend upon the original and primary jurisdiction of courts of equity in matters of administration and marshaling the assets of the estate for the enforcement of the claims of creditors,—a jurisdiction distinct and independent of that to which creditors of a living debtor, whose claims are not connected with an administration, can resort.

In Scott v. Ware, 64 Ala. 174, however, it was said that before a creditor can obtain the assistance of a court of equity to subject lands descended or devised to the satisfaction of his demand, he must have established his debt by a judgment at law and exhausted his legal remedies, and there must be an averment and proof of the want of personal assets, and the insolvency of the personal representative and the sureties on his bond, if any he has.

The exhaustion of legal remedies against the personal estate of a deceased debtor was also held to be essential, in Allen v. Vestal, 60 Ind. 245, before a creditor is entitled to equitable aid to reach the real estate of the debtor, fraudulently conveyed.

Before the real estate of a deceased debtor can be appropriated to the payment of debts, the deficiency of the personal estate left by the decedent must be alleged and proved. Without such allegation, a court of equity has no jurisdiction. Macgill v. Hyatt, 80 Md. 253, 30 Atl. 710.

Where it appears that a deceased debtor left an estate of which the personality is of sufficient amount to pay the debt of complainant, a bill in equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate, made by the debtor in his lifetime, will not lie, since the personal property of the deceased debtor is a primary fund for the payment of his debts. Rutherford v. Alyea, 54 N. J. Eq. 411, 34 Atl. 1078.

In Wisconsin, by statute (Rev. Stat. § 3835), where a creditor has just reason to apprehend that the estate of his deceased debtor does not contain sufficient personal assets for the payment of the debts of the decedent, he is permitted to file a bill in equity in behalf of all creditors, to reach and subject to the payment of their claims any real estate, or interest therein, or any other assets of the decedent not included in the inventory, which ought to be subjected to such debts. Allen v. McRae, 91 Wis. 226, 64 N. W. 889.

On showing that a debtor has deceased, equity will aid a creditor to subject the real estate of such debtor to the payment of his debt, where there are no personal assets. Richardson v. Penicks, 1 App. D. C. 261.

VII. Effect of special statutes.

In addition to statutes already mentioned as bearing upon the various questions discussed in the foregoing subdivisions of this note, other special statutes affecting the general rules as to conditions precedent to equitable relief are here grouped, so far as they have come before the courts for interpretation.

Where the statute confers the right upon creditors to enforce their claims in equity, no prior judgment or resort to legal remedies is demanded to establish their interest. Re H. G. Andrae Co. 117 Fed. 561.

Under a statute authorizing an action to subject any property of a judgment debtor belonging to the defendant, or interest therein, to the satisfaction of a judgment, it is not necessary that the judgment debtor be shown to be insolvent. McKee v. Murphy, 138 Iowa, 322, 113 N. W. 499.

Under the Iowa statutes, Code, §§ 3150-3154, which are really declaratory of the common law, the remedy at law must be exhausted before proceeding to equitable relief. Peterson v. Gittings, 107 Iowa, 306, 77 N. W. 1056.

In Baxter v. Moses, 77 Me. 465, 52 Am. Rep. 783, 1 Atl. 350, it was held that a statute allowing an equitable remedy to be pursued by a "judgment creditor" did not dispense with the requirement that execution should be returned nulla bona as a condition precedent thereto.

A creditor at large who, by attachment, obtains a specific lien on real estate conveyed by the debtor, and which conveyance he seeks in equity to set aside as fraudulent, cannot, on being defeated on the merits, and the validity of the conveyance sustained, sustain his bill to reach notes held by the debtor, given in payment of such real estate, without complying with statutory conditions in respect thereto. Evans v. Virgin, 69 Wis. 148, 33 N. W. 585.

Under a provision of a statute that where.

during the litigation, it shall appear that the defendant is doing, or threatens to do or procure or suffer some act to be done, in violation of plaintiff's rights respecting the subject of the action, and tending to render the judgment ineffectual, a temporary injunction may be granted to restrain such act, it was held that it could not appear that his rights were in danger of being violated until they were established by a judgment. Brooks v. Stone, 19 How. Pr. 395.

The doctrine was stated in Lant v. Manley, 21 C. C. A. 457, 43 U. S. App. 623, 75 Fed. 627, that a bill in equity in aid of an attachment and execution on a debtor's equitable interests in real estate, fraudulently conveyed, would be sustained under statutes permitting attachments and executions to be levied on such interests.

A statute permitting a creditor to have equitable relief before his debt is due does not apply to a case where the transfer of the debtor's property is not fraudulent. United States Bank v. Huth, 4 B. Mon. 423.

Under a statute authorizing a judgment creditor to resort to the chancery side of the court to reach property or money in the hands of third persons, when the defendant has not real or personal property sufficient to satisfy the judgment, which can be taken in execution, a bill is not maintainable if the creditor has an execution levied on real property not yet disposed of, the proceeds of which cannot, at the time of the suit, be known, and it is in proof that there is other property not levied upon. Hubble v. Perrin, 3 Ohio, 288.

A North Carolina statute providing that creditors attempted to be defrauded by their debtor, as provided therein, may proceed in equity without obtaining judgment at law, was held, in Carr v. Fearington, 63 N. C. 560, to put a creditor filing his bill in the same situation that he would have been in had he obtained his judgment, and issued his execution, and had it levied on the property fraudulently conveyed; in other words, to give him a lien, on the filing of the bill, on the property sought to be subjected.

Under § 6343, Revised Statutes of Ohio, creditors whose debtors have made a disposition of all their property may maintain a bill in equity to have such disposition of the property declared an assignment by the debtor for the benefit of the debtor's creditors generally, although their respective claims have not been reduced to judgment. Brinkerhoff v. Smith, 57 Ohio St. 610, 49 N. E. 1025.

Section 1907a of the Kentucky statutes, which became operative June 16, 1890, expressly repealed so much of § 439 of the Civil Code as required a return of nulla bona upon the execution before a judgment creditor could institute an equitable action to subject the property of his debtor to the satisfaction of his judgment. The statute provides that "hereafter in this commonwealth it shall be lawful for any party who may be aggrieved thereby, when any real property has been fraudulently conveyed, transferred, or mortgaged, to file in a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter a petition in equity against the parties to such fraudulent transfer or conveyance or mortgage, or their representatives or heirs, alleging therein the facts showing their right of action, and alleging such fraud, or the facts constituting it, and describing such property, and, when done, a lis pendens shall be created upon the property so described, and said suit shall progress and be determined as other suits in equity, and as though it had been brought upon a return of nulla bona, as has heretofore been required. All laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed." Locheim v. Eversole, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1031, 70 S. W. 661.

In Tippenhauer v. Newport Roller Mill Co. 32 Ky. L. Rep. 209, 104 S. W. 440, it was held that, under statutes providing that before conveyances should be set aside in an action in equity, the creditor must have a return of no property found upon an execution in his favor against the debtor, the return is not made a condition precedent to the vesting of jurisdiction in a court of equity over the matter. It was said: "The court of equity had jurisdiction over the subject-matter. It likewise had jurisdiction of the parties. It was competent for it to adjudge such relief as to it appeared equitable in the premises. It ought to have been controlled in the character of its judgment by the rule of law governing the practice in such matters. But that it did not observe the rule of practice did not divest the court of jurisdiction. The judgment was not void on that account."

Under a statute providing that, after a judgment, an action may be brought to subject the debtor's property to the satisfaction thereof, and that a lien shall be created on the property of the judgment debtor in the hands of any defendant or under his control, from the time of the service of notice and copy of the petition upon such defendant, an equitable action to reach property of the debtor held under a void bill of sale may be maintained although the creditor had no lien or interest in the property in question at the time. Falker v. Linehan, 88 Iowa, 641, 55 N. W. 503. To the same effect is Hirsch v. Israel, 106 Iowa, 498, 76 N. W. 811.

Under a statute providing that the expense of a family shall be chargeable upon the property of both husband and wife, or either of them, in favor of creditors thereof, and, in relation thereto, they may be sued jointly or severally, a creditor is not entitled to come at once into a court of equity to enjoin the disposition of the debtor's property before exhausting his remedy at law. Harrison v. Hill, 37 Ill. App. 30.

In Reubens v. Joel, 13 N. Y. 488, it was said that the Code, §§ 219, 220, had so far altered the rule requiring a creditor to exhaust his legal remedy before seeking equitable aid as to allow the creditor an injunction at the time of the commencing of the action to obtain judgment on his demand, or at any time thereafter, in three classes of cases: First, where it appeared by the complaint that the creditor was entitled to the relief demanded, and such relief, or any part thereof, consisted in restraining the commission or continuance of some act, and the commission or continuance of which, during the litigation, would produce injury to him; second, where, during the litigation, the defendant does, or threatens, or is about to do, or procures some act to be done in violation of the creditor's right respecting the subject of the action, and tending to render the judgment ineffectual; third, where, during the pendency of the action, the defendant threatens or is about to dispose of his property with intent to defraud his creditors. It was, however, held that this provision did not cover an action by a simple-contract creditor against the debtor and the fraudulent assignee, to restrain the latter from disposing of the assigned property, and have the assignment declared void and his debt paid, since the fraud in that case was not threatened, but consummated. To sustain such an action, the court said that the plaintiff must be a judgment creditor of the fraudulent assignor.

Fraudulent conveyances generally.

The Alabama Code, Revised Code, § 3446, Code of 1879, § 3886, so enlarges the original jurisdiction of courts of equity that a creditor without a lien may file a bill to discover or to subject to the payment of his debt property which has been fraudulently transferred or attempted to be fraudulently conveyed by his debtor. Reynolds v. Welch, 47 Ala. 200; Todd v. Neal, 49 Ala. 266; Crawford v. Kirksey, 50 Ala. 590; McAnally v. O'Neal, 56 Ala. 299; Lide v. Parker, 60 Ala. 165; Evans v. Welch, 63 Ala. 250; Lehman v. Meyer, 67 Ala. 396; Bromberg v. Heyer, 69 Ala. 22; Weis v. Goetter, 72 Ala. 259; Harris v. Moore, 72 Ala. 507; Zelnicker v. Brigham, 74 Ala. 598; Mathews v. Mobile Mnt. Ins. Co. 75 Ala. 85; Jones v. Massey, 79 Ala. 370; Carter Bros. v. Coleman, 82 Ala. 177, 2 So. 354; Southern R. Constr. & Land Co. v. McKenzie, 85 Ala. 548, 5 So. 322; Miller v. Lehman, D. & Co. 87 Ala. 517, 6 So. 361; Jones v. Smith, 92 Ala. 455, 9 So. 179; Wooten v. Steele, 109 Ala. 563, 55 Am. St. Rep. 947, 19 So. 972; Alabama Iron & Steel Co. v. McKeever, 112 Ala. 134, 20 So. 84; Steiner Land & Lumber Co. v. King, 118 Ala. 546, 24 So. 35; Freeman v. Pullen, 119 Ala. 235, 24 So. 57; Rice v. Eiseman Bros. 122 Ala. 343, 25 So. 214; Little v. Sterne, 125 Ala. 609, 27 So. 972; Hall v. Alabama Terminal & Improv. Co. 143 Ala. 464, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 130, 39 So. 285, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 363.

By virtue of this statute, simple-contract creditors, who have not reduced their demands to judgments at law, may maintain a creditors' bill to reach personal property subject to levy and sale under execution at law, upon allegations that it has been transferred by the debtors with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud them. Lehman v. Meyer, supra. In this case, as to this statute, the court said: "The intention of the legislature was to draw simple-contract creditors, or creditors at large,—creditors who had not reduced their demands to judgments at law,—within the jurisdiction of courts of equity, originally exercised for the assistance and relief of judgment creditors only. In other words, when the debtor, by a fraudulent transfer or conveyance, had offended the rights of all creditors, whether judgment creditors or creditors at large, that all should have in equity the same right to invoke its removal. It may be supposed the term 'creditor without a lien,' employed in the statute, is rather indefinite, and was intended as an expression that the creditor at large should resort to equity only when, if he had a lien, he could invoke the aid of the court for its enforcement. But the real meaning of the statute is, that a simple-contract creditor, or a creditor at large, not having a lien by operation of law, shall have an equal right with a creditor having such lien, through the aid of a court of equity, to reach property subject to the payment of debts, which has been fraudulently transferred."

This statute is not confined to cases where mere discovery is necessary. Zelnicker v. Brigham, supra.

It confers on simple-contract creditors remedies formerly accorded only to creditors with liens. Bromberg v. Heyer, supra.

A creditors' bill filed by virtue of this statute gives to the creditor a sufficient lien upon the property to which it relates, to authorize the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the property. Weis v. Goetter, supra.

A statute authorizing a simple-contract creditor to subject property fraudulently conveyed, or attempted to be fraudulently conveyed, by the debtor, changes the rule requiring him to show a deficiency of legal assets, and authorizes him to proceed without regard to the existence of such assets. McClarín v. Anderson, 109 Ala. 571, 19 So. 982.

A bill of discovery under the Alabama Code of 1896, § 819, need not show that complainants had obtained a judgment at law upon which execution was issued and returned unsatisfied, or that complainants were creditors with a lien or judgment. McKissack v. Voorhees, 119 Ala. 101, 24 So. 523.

Section 818 of the Alabama Code, providing that a creditor without a lien may file a bill in chancery to discover or to subject to the payment of his debt any property which has been fraudulently transferred or conveyed, or attempted to be fraudulently transferred or conveyed by his debtor, authorizes a simple-contract creditor without a lien to file a bill to discover or subject to the payment of his debt any property which has been fraudulently conveyed by his debtor, without first exhausting his legal remedies and the return of nulla bona, whether the debtor be living or dead. Freeman v. Pullen, supra.

Creditors at large are entitled to proceed in equity under Code 1896, § 818, and have set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate made by the debtor, without reference to the sufficiency of legal assets belonging to the debtor's estate. Wood v. Potts, 140 Ala. 425, 37 So. 253.

But, under this statute, a simple-contract creditor cannot enjoin a fraudulent attachment suit instituted by another creditor. Builders & Painters' Supply Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 123 Ala. 203, 26 So. 311.

Under a statute providing "that, in suits to set aside fraudulent conveyances and to obtain equitable garnishments, it shall not be necessary for the plaintiff to obtain judgment at law in order to prove insolvency, but, in such cases, insolvency may be proved by any competent testimony, so that only one suit shall be necessary in order to obtain the proper relief," it is necessary to show insolvency of all of the joint debtors before resort can be had to equity. Euclid Ave. Nat. Bank v. Judkins, 66 Ark. 486, 51 S. W. 632.

In a creditors' suit for equitable garnishment, this statute dispenses with the necessity of previous judgment, and the plaintiff lays the foundation for his suit when he alleges that the debtor is insolvent and that no relief can be obtained at law. Riggin v. Hillard, 56 Ark. 476, 35 Am. St. Rep. 113, 20 S. W. 402.

The statute of 1887, dispensing with the necessity of obtaining judgment before commencing a suit to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, and providing that "insolvency may be proved by any other method," does not authorize such an action in the absence of proof of the debtor's insolvency. Davis v. Arkansas F. Ins. Co. 63 Ark. 412, 30 S. W. 258.

It is not the rule under the Code of Indiana that only creditors who have obtained judgments are entitled to invoke the aid of courts of equity against fraudulent conveyances. Phelps v. Smith, 116 Ind. 387, 17 N. E. 602, 19 N. E. 156.

The 2d section of the act of 1835, chap. 380, declares: "That, in a proceeding in equity to vacate a conveyance or other act as fraudulent against creditors, it shall not be necessary for the creditor plaintiff in the cause to obtain a judgment on his demand in order to the relief sought in the case, either in his or her own behalf, or in behalf of any other creditor who shall claim to participate in the benefit of the decree." Wylie v. Basil, 4 Md. Ch. 327.

Anterior to the act of 1835, chap. 380, with some exceptions, it was the rule that a creditor who had not obtained a lien on the debtor's property could not proceed to vacate and set aside deeds to the debtor's property in the absence of a lien upon it by judgment or otherwise. Since that act, however, the necessity of a lien as preliminary to the equitable relief has been obviated. Richards v. Swan, 7 Gill, 366. To the same effect is Christopher v. Christopher, 64 Md. 583, 3 Atl. 296.

Under the act of 1835, chap. 380, a judgment is not a condition precedent to an action by a partnership creditor to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by the partners, disposing of the partnership effects among themselves. Sanderson v. Stockdale, 11 Md. 563.

But the act of 1835, chap. 380, has no application to a case in which the thing complained of has not been executed. Therefore, one who is merely a creditor at large cannot enjoin the debtor from conveying the property sought to be reached, and have a trustee appointed to sell the land for the payment of the debt and for general relief. Balls v. Balls, 69 Md. 388, 16 Atl. 18.

The statute removes the disability of non-judgment creditors to sue in a court of equity to subject the debtor's property to the payment of the debt, but leaves the law in all other cases wholly unaffected. Morton v. Grafflin, 68 Md. 545, 13 Atl. 341, 15 Atl. 298.

Under this statute now incorporated in § 46, art. 16, Code Public General Laws, an allegation as to the alleged debt is sufficient if it sets out that defendant became indebted to the plaintiff for a certain amount on a certain day, "which indebtedness, with interest thereon, still remained unpaid and unsatisfied." Sinclair v. Auxiliary Realty Co. 99 Md. 223, 57 Atl. 664.

The Massachusetts statutes (Gen. Stat. chap. 113, § 2) do not authorize a creditor without a judgment to seek the aid of equity to interfere by injunction with real estate fraudulently conveyed by the debtor, which is subject to attachment. Under such circumstances, a creditor cannot entitle himself to a bill in equity by omitting to make an attachment. Taylor v. Robinson, 7 Allen, 253.

Under Massachusetts Gen. Stat. chap. 113, § 2, clause 11, the remedy may be pursued by a creditor who has not exhausted his remedy at law either by suing out an execution, or even reducing his claim to judgment. Barry v. Abbot, 100 Mass. 396.

The last-mentioned case was followed in Tucker v. McDonald, 105 Mass. 423.

In Crompton v. Anthony, 13 Allen, 33, it was held that a bill in equity to reach property alleged to be held in trust for the debtor, and property alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed for the purpose of concealing it from creditors, and to prevent the same from being taken on legal process, to the knowledge of the grantees, could be maintained under the Massachusetts statutes without first establishing the claim by a judgment at law. The court said that the proceeding was intended to be in the nature of an equitable process by which a single creditor might, in one and the same suit, establish his claim against the debtor, and also compel the appropriation of property in the hands of third persons to the payment of his debt.

In Mississippi it is provided in substance that chancery courts shall have jurisdiction of bills by creditors to set aside fraudulent conveyances who have not obtained judgments at law, or, having judgments, have not had executions thereon returned unsatisfied. In Citizens' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Ligon, 59 Miss. 305, the object of this statute was said to be to remove the necessity of a creditor resorting first to a court at law to recover judgment, and then going into equity to secure satisfaction.

Under this statute, it is not a necessary prerequisite to equitable relief that a creditor show the insolvency of the debtor, or that he has exhausted his legal remedies. Citizens' Bank v. Buddig, 65 Miss. 284, 4 So. 94. The court said that the view that insolvency is a condition precedent to such an action is sustained by a number of decisions from Indiana, where the supreme court, confounding the distinction between a voluntary conveyance by a husband to his wife, a father to his child, and the like, the validity or invalidity of which is determinable by the circumstances of the donor at the time of the gift, and a conveyance made to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors, had held that a creditor attacking a conveyance as made for the purpose of defrauding must aver and prove the insolvency of the debtor when the conveyance was made, and that it continued to the time of instituting the suit; and had displayed remarkable consistency and persistence in this erroneous view, against the sentiment of the courts, as indicated by the multitude of cases in which it had been questioned.

A creditor at large may resort to equity to have vacated a collusive attachment levied upon the debtor's property, although he may have a remedy at law, where a statute provides that "[chancery] courts shall have jurisdiction of bills exhibited by creditors who have not obtained judgments at law, or, having judgments, have not had executions returned unsatisfied, to set aside fraudulent conveyances of property, or other devices resorted to for the purpose of hindering, delaying, or defrauding creditors, and may subject the property to the satisfaction of the demands of such creditors as if complainant had a judgment and execution thereon returned no property found." McBride v. State Revenue Agent, 70 Miss. 716, 12 So. 699.

In Jones v. Jones, 79 Miss. 261, 30 So. 651, it was held that a statute giving equity jurisdiction over suits of creditors without judgment or execution returned unsatisfied, to set aside fraudulent conveyances, did not cover suits for unliquidated damages arising out of a tort before there had been any judgment at law ascertaining the damages, the defendant being within the jurisdiction of the court.

A personal judgment against a debtor is not a condition precedent to equitable aid under a statute providing that any person aggrieved thereby may file a petition to set aside a fraudulent conveyance as though it had been brought on a return of nulla bona as theretofore required. Smith v. Curd, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1960, 72 S. W. 744.

In Ohio, by § 458 of the Code, which is a reprint of § 16 of the act directing the mode of proceeding in chancery, the right of a judgment creditor to seek the aid of equity to satisfy a judgment out of property fraudulently conveyed depends upon the fact of no property in the judgment debtor, and not upon the return upon an execution. Therefore, this fact may be established by the return of an execution nulla bona, or any other competent proof. Bomberger v. Turner, 13 Ohio St. 263, 82 Am. Dec. 438.

Since the act of 1851-2, Code, § 4288, the remedy to reach the proceeds of property fraudulently conveyed is as ample without judgment and return of nulla bona as it was before with such judgment and return. McCrasly v. Hasslock, 4 Baxt. 1.

By the statute of Tennessee, a creditor before judgment may file a bill to set aside a fraudulent conveyance and subject the property to the payment of his debt. (Act 1852, § 365, which is Code, §§ 4288 et seq.) Fay v. Jones, 1 Head, 442; Crone v. Bivens, 2 Head, 339; Epperson v. Robertson, 91 Tenn. 407, 10 S. W. 230.

In August v. Seeskind, 6 Coldw. 166, the court said that the proper construction of these sections of the Code (§§ 4288-4290) was that the court had the same power and jurisdiction in all respects to set aside fraudulent conveyances and other fraudulent devices in the cases therein mentioned, and to subject the property, by sale or otherwise, to the payment of debts, as if the creditor had judgment, or judgment and execution, or judgment, execution, and a nulla bona return. It was also held that, although attachment might be issued to impound the debtor's property when it might appear to be necessary, the issuance of the attachment was not a condition precedent to equitable jurisdiction.

By § 4291 of the Tennessee Code, the same power and jurisdiction are conferred upon the court in all respects to set aside fraudulent conveyances and other devices, as if the creditor had obtained judgment, and execution thereon had been returned unsatisfied. And, within the meaning of the statute, the surety, before payment of the debt, is a creditor in such a sense that he may bring his principal and the creditor into a court of equity and obtain exoneration out of the property, real or personal, fraudulently conveyed by the former, or its proceeds in the hands of anyone who is not a bona fide purchaser without notice. Greene v. Starnes, 1 Heisk. 582.

Any creditor, without first having recovered judgment at law, may, under the Tennessee statute, file a bill to set aside fraudulent conveyances or devices. Act 1852, chap. 365. Armstrong v. Croft, 3 Lea, 191.

The jurisdiction of a court of chancery, under a statute allowing a creditor to come into equity for the purpose of setting aside a fraudulent conveyance of property by his debtor, without first obtaining a judgment at law, does not depend upon an attachment, which need not be resorted to except to impound the property. Nailer v. Young, 7 Lea, 735.

In Shapira v. Paletz (Tenn. Ch. App.) 50 S. W. 774, it was held that, although a surety, at the time of the filing of the bill to reach property fraudulently conveyed by his principal, may not have taken judgment in his behalf, yet, if he has paid the debt of the principal, that is immaterial, since it is not necessary that a surety should be a judgment creditor. The fact that he is a creditor is sufficient to enable him to maintain a bill in equity to subject property fraudulently conveyed to the payment of his debt.

In Virginia, under chapter 179, Code of 1860, it is held to be proper for a creditor, without having sued out an execution at law, to impeach, by a bill in equity, conveyances by the debtor upon the ground of fraud, actual or constructive. Russell v. Randolph, 26 Gratt. 705.

Section 2 of chapter 175 of the Code of Virginia allows bills to set aside deeds to be brought by creditors who have not obtained a judgment or decree, and have not established specific liens. Fink v. Patterson, 21 Fed. 602.

A West Virginia statute expressly provides that a creditor shall not be required to sue and obtain a judgment at law before proceeding in equity to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, and to subject the estate conveyed to payment of his debt. He may, in the first instance, proceed in equity upon a mere legal demand, and obtain all the relief against such estate that he could have obtained if he had first recovered a judgment at law. Code, chap. 133, § 2. Tuft v. Pickering, 28 W. Va. 330.

The statute as to maintaining an action without judgment applies to the state as a creditor. State v. Bowen, 38 W. Va. 91, 18 S. E. 375.

And the fact that the state has obtained a judgment against its debtor does not place it in a worse position than it would be under the statute as a simple creditor. Ibid.

Under § 2, chap. 133, of the West Virginia Code, a creditor, before obtaining judgment, may maintain a suit to avoid a fraudulent transfer of or charge upon the estate of his debtor. Guggenheimer v. Lockridge, 39 W. Va. 457, 19 S. E. 874; Witz v. Lockridge, 39 W. Va. 463, 19 S. E. 876; First Nat. Bank v. Prager, 50 W. Va. 660, 41 S. E. 363.

The statute of fraudulent conveyances gives the creditor the absolute right to assail the conveyance that removes his debtor's property from his pursuit, and the creditor is not compelled to seek other property of his debtor first. Hoffman v. Fleming, 43 W. Va. 762, 28 S. E. 790.

This was held to be an enabling statute in 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Frye v. Miley, 54 W. Va. 324, 46 S. E. 135, doing away with the rule which prevented relief under certain conditions only to the extent of the right given by statute; namely, to sue in equity to annul a fraudulent conveyance before reducing the claim to judgment. This was held not to mean that an action could be brought in such a case before the maturity of the debt.

Under the fraudulent conveyance statute of West Virginia, any creditor at large of the fraudulent debtor, without respect to the form or character of the debt, may maintain a suit to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent as to him, even though the claim be an unliquidated one, founded upon no certainty as to the amount of the damages claimed. Carr v. Davis (W. Va.) 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 58, 63 S. E. 326.

Under this statute, a surety on a bail bond may sue in equity a surety on a bond of indemnity, and also to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of real estate made by such surety, although he had not paid the recognizance, where, however, the execution has been issued against him to collect it. Ibid.

But a simple-contract creditor, having failed to establish fraud, and having no lien on an equity of redemption sought to be subjected to the claim, is not entitled to subject it to sale. Johnson v. Riley, 41 W. Va. 140, 23 S. E. 698.

The rule that a creditor who has acquired a lien upon the real or personal property of his debtor by issuing and levying an execution upon the property owned by him may maintain an action in equity to set aside and avoid the claims of third persons to such property when the complaint alleges and shows that such other claims are fraudulent and void, as against the plaintiff's right, exists independent of statute, and is not taken away by a statute providing such a remedy. Ahlhauser v. Doud, 74 Wis. 400, 43 N. W. 169.

Fraudulent assignments.

Where there has been an assignment for the benefit of the creditors, and a statute provides that, "in case there shall be any fraud in the matter of said assignment . . . any person interested therein may file his bill in the circuit court in chancery," etc., it was held that it was not necessary to obtain an order of the court requiring the assignee to institute the proceedings before a creditor could maintain a bill to set aside a chattel mortgage alleged to have been given by the mortgagor with the connivance of the assignee, in anticipation of the assignment, to secure the mortgagee a preference. Burnham v. Haskins, 72 Mich. 235, 40 N. W. 327.

In McCarthy v. Hancock, 9 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 98, it was said that, until a judgment has been obtained and execution issued and returned nulla bona, a creditor is in no position to assail the validity of an assignment by his debtor for the benefit of his creditors, or to reach choses in action of the debtor. This was a statutory regulation.

It is provided by statute in South Carolina, § 2016, chap. 72, General Statutes, that a simple-contract creditor, or any creditor who has no judgment, may assail, on the equity side of the court, a fraudulent assignment for the benefit of creditors without first reducing his claim to judgment. Austin v. Morris, 23 S. C. 393. In this case a mortgage, made for the purpose of giving preferences to certain persons, was held to be within the terms of the statute.

This section dispenses with the necessity of a judgment and the exhausting of legal remedies before a creditor may seek equitable aid for himself and other creditors, to set aside an assignment for creditors; hence, a bill may be maintained, whether it is to attack a formal deed of assignment, or such conveyance by a debtor of all his property as in law amounts to, or will be construed as, an assignment. Meinhard Bros. v. Strickland, 29 S. C. 491, 7 S. E. 938.

The statute is not confined to cases in which the assignment is assailed upon the ground that it provides for preferences among creditors, but permits the assignment to be attacked on any ground whatever. Regenstein v. Pearlstein, 30 S. C. 192, 8 S. E. 850.

Insolvent corporations or traders.

In Arkansas it is provided by statute that "any creditor or stockholder of any insolvent corporation may institute proceedings in the chancery court for the winding up the affairs of such corporations, and, upon such application, the court shall take charge of all the assets of such corporation, and distribute them equally among the creditors, after paying the wages and salaries due laborers and employees." Kirby's Digest, §§ 949, 950; Bradshaw v. Bank of Little Rock, 76 Ark. 501, 89 S. W. 316.

The Arkansas statutes (Sandels' & H. Dig. §§ 1425-1428) which permit a simple-contract creditor to reach the property of an insolvent corporation authorize a suit for that property in a Federal court by a creditor who has not reduced his claim to judgment. Darragh v. H. Wetter Mfg. Co. 23 C. C. A. 609, 49 U. S. App. 1, 78 Fed. 7.

In Comer v. Coates, 69 Ga. 491, a statute (act of 1881) providing that, "in case any corporation, not municipal, or trader or firm of traders, shall fail to pay, at maturity, any one or more matured debts, payment of which has been demanded of such debtor, and by him refused, and shall be insolvent, it shall be in the power of a court of equity, under a creditors' bill to which one or more of the creditors who have matured debts unpaid shall be necessary parties, to proceed to collect the assets, real and personal, including choses in action and money, and appropriate the same to the creditors of such trader, firm of traders, or corporation,"—was held to apply to existing traders, and not to those who had ceased to be such at the time the action was brought.

If the defendants have sold out their entire interest in their business and have ceased to do business, but no action is brought against them, the right to proceed under the above-mentioned act does not exist. Blanchard v. Vansyckle, 70 Ga. 278.

The act does not apply where the insolvent debtor partnership has been dissolved before the bill is filed. Scott v. Jones, 74 Ga. 762; Kimbrell v. Walters's Sons, 86 Ga. 99, 12 S. E. 305; Stillwell v. Savannah Grocery Co. 88 Ga. 100, 13 S. E. 963.

Unsecured creditors of an insolvent debtor, each of whose claims given upon account is partly due and partly not due, may proceed under the insolvent traders' act, Code, §§ 3149 et seq., to reach the debtor's assets. Rice v. Dodd, 94 Ga. 414, 20 S. E. 339.

But the vendee of land is not a trader as to the vendor, within the meaning of the act, although the vendee is engaged in a general merchandise business. Ball v. Lastinger, 71 Ga. 678.

In Minnesota the district court is not empowered to sequester the assets, and appoint a receiver of a corporation other than a banking or insurance corporation, on the bringing of an action in equity by mere contract creditors whose claims have not been reduced to judgment. A mere contract creditor who has not prosecuted his claim to judgment and execution, nor in any other manner acquired a lien on his debtor's property, cannot interfere with the possession or control of the same through sequestration proceedings, nor can he, if the debtor be a corporation, sue the stockholders, under the Minnesota statutes, §§ 9, 17, chap. 76 (Gen. Stat. 1894, §§ 5897, 5905). Klee v. E. H. Steele Co. 60 Minn. 355, 62 N. W. 309.

A Missouri statute regulating insurance companies of the town mutual class requires claims of policy holders to be reduced to judgment when not voluntarily paid, before proceeding to realize out of the company's assets, and, if the company is insolvent, the assets are required to be divided among the creditors according to their respective rights. McCoy v. Connecticut F. Ins. Co. 87 Mo. App. 73.

Conveyances in contemplation of insolvency.

A judgment and execution are also, by statute of Kentucky, no longer creditors' bill precedents to the maintenance by a creditor of a creditors' bill, the object and purpose of which is to have a conveyance made by the debtor in contemplation of insolvency subjected to the payment of the general creditors of the debtor. Griffith v. Cox, 79 Ky. 562.

A statute providing that transfers of property in contemplation of insolvency, without designing to prefer certain creditors, shall inure to the benefit of all of the creditors, and providing that all such transfers as are decreed void inure to the benefit of all creditors generally, and are subject to the control of a court of equity upon a bill filed by any person interested, authorizes a bill without the necessity of first establishing the claim at law. Early Times Distillery Co. v. Zeiger, 9 N. M. 31, 49 Pac. 723. To the same effect, Grunsfeld Bros. v. Brownell, 12 N. M. 192, 76 Pac. 310.

Discovery of assets.

Section 819 of the Code of 1896 provides that a judgment creditor or a creditor without a lien or judgment may file a bill for the discovery of assets. Etheridge Bros. v. Swann-Abrams Hat Co. 147 Ala. 535, 41 So. 465.

Under a statute providing that a creditor may file a bill against his debtor for the discovery of assets owned by the debtor, and for the application of such assets to the creditor's claim, it is not necessary that a creditors' bill should show any fraudulent conveyance or attempt fraudulently to convey property, it being sufficient if it avers the insufficiency of visible assets subject to legal process, and the existence of assets which are concealed and hidden. Pollak v. Billing, 131 Ala. 519, 32 So. 639.

The 49th section of the Illinois chancery act provides that a creditor having an execution returned, "no property found," or unsatisfied in part, may file a bill to discover property belonging to the defendant, and, on such discovery, may apply the same to the satisfaction of the judgment at law. Scripps v. King, 103 Ill. 460.

A New Jersey statute, act of 1845, gives a judgment creditor the right, upon the return of an execution unsatisfied, to file a bill in chancery for a discovery of property or money due to the debtor, or held in trust for him, and to prevent the transfer of such property, or the payment of the money, and to have the same appropriated to the payment of the judgment. Green v. Tantum, 19 N. J. Eq. 105, affirmed in 21 N. J. Eq. 364.

Equitable interests and assets.

A statute declaring that the powers of chancery courts extend "to subject an equitable title or claim of real estate to the payment of debts" does not authorize a bill to subject an equity of redemption owned by the debtor to the payment of a judgment, where the judgment creditor has not exhausted his legal remedies. Turrentine v. Koopman, 124 Ala. 211, 27 So. 522. The court said that the declaratory provisions referred to were doubtless intended to settle the question, which appeared to have been originally in doubt in England and in some courts of this country, as to whether equity can aid a creditor in the collection of a judgment at law by subjecting equitable assets where the legal remedy is unavailing for want of legal assets. The statute declared the power in general terms, but contemplated its exercise conformably to the usual principle which denies relief in equity when there is an adequate remedy at law.

The section of the Indiana Revised Stat-
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

utes of 1843, p. 456, authorizing the sale of an equitable interest in real estate on a decree in chancery after an unavailing execution at law, relates to an execution from the circuit court. Wilson v. Dale, 5 Ind. 163.

Under a statute providing that "when a judgment debtor has no personal or real property subject to levy on execution sufficient to satisfy the judgment, any equitable interest which he may have in real estate . . . [etc.], shall be subject to the payment of such judgment by action . . ." it was held that the plaintiff must be governed entirely by the statute, and that it was necessary to allege that the judgment debtor had no personal or real property subject to levy on execution, or an allegation equivalent thereto. Moyer v. Riggs, 8 Kan. App. 234, 55 Pac. 494.

Under § 16 of the Code, directing the mode of proceeding in chancery, which provides that where judgments at law or decrees in chancery have been obtained against any person, and the debtor has not personal or real estate subject to levy or execution, sufficient to satisfy the judgment or decree, but has an equitable interest in real estate, the same may be subjected in chancery to the payment of said judgment or decree. The creditor, if his claim was in judgment when he filed his bill, and there is not sufficient property of such a character as can be sold on execution, may maintain a bill in equity to subject the equitable interests of his debtor to the payment of his judgment. This provision is held clearly to regulate the rights of creditors in Ohio, and to render necessary a judgment in order to invoke the aid of chancery. Clark v. Strong, 16 Ohio, 317.

Under a statute providing that, when a judgment debtor has not sufficient property to satisfy the judgment, an action may be maintained to reach the equitable assets, the court, in Lee v. Harback, 2 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 361, said that the moment it was shown, or admitted by the plaintiff, that there was sufficient personal or real property liable to execution to satisfy the judgment, the court could then proceed no further at the instance of the judgment creditor, but the proceeding must be dismissed for want of jurisdiction if nothing further appeared to distinguish or establish it.

In Graham v. LaCrosse & M. R. Co. 10 Wis. 450, it was held that the enactment of the Code with reference to supplemental proceedings abolished the right of a party to maintain an action in the nature of the old creditors' bill at common law. After that decision, the legislature provided that a creditors' bill might be maintained in cases where an execution had been issued upon a judgment and returned unsatisfied in whole or in part. Laws 1860, chap. 303; Rev. Stat. 1878, § 3029. Under this statute no action to reach general assets of a debtor which cannot be seized upon the execution can be maintained until execution has been issued and returned unsatisfied, in whole or in part. Ahlhauser v. Doud, 74 Wis. 400, 43 N. W. 169.

Property not open to execution or attachment.

Under a clause of a statute (Mass. Gen. Stat. chap. 113, § 2) which confers upon the court jurisdiction of "bills by creditors to reach and apply in payment of a debt any property, right, title, or interest, legal or equitable, of a debtor within this state, which cannot be come at to be attached or taken on execution in a suit at law against such debtor," a judgment rendered against a corporation where process was served upon it after its dissolution is nugatory and void, and will not support a creditors' bill. Thornton v. Marginal Freight R. Co. 123 Mass. 32.

In Maine, by statute, jurisdiction is conferred upon equity to aid a creditor at large to reach and apply in payment of a debt due to him any property, right, title, or interest, legal or equitable, of his debtor residing there, or found in that state, which cannot be attached on a writ, or taken on execution in an action at law against such debtor, and which is not exempt by law from attachment and seizure. Construing this statute in Donnell v. Portland & O. R. Co. 73 Me. 567, the intent thereof was said to be to enable a single creditor alone, without first fruitlessly exhausting all legal remedies, or reducing his claim to judgment, by the one proceeding, in the nature of an equitable trustee process, to establish the validity and amount of his claim against his debtor, and compel the appropriation of the debtor's property, of whatever kind, in the hands of some third person, to the payment of his debt.

The debt need not be reduced to a judgment in order to maintain a bill in equity under the statutes which give a remedy in equity to reach and apply in payment of a debt property of the debtor which cannot be attached or taken on execution at law. Sandford v. Wright, 164 Mass. 85, 41 N. E. 120.

But the fact that a trust company owns promissory notes given to it for loans and United States bonds, and has no property which can be come at to be attached or taken on execution at law, will not entitle a creditor under the statute (Gen. Stat. chap. 113, § 2) to enjoin it from alienating its assets. The court said that the proceeding under this statute was to be regarded in the nature of an equitable trustee process, and as distinguished from a creditors' bill. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Abbott, 127 Mass. 558.

And, in proceedings by a wife living apart from her husband, against the latter, to reach property which cannot be attached or taken at law, before equity will lend her its aid to reach such property, she must have secured a judgment from the probate court, under Pub. Stat. chap. 147, § 33, that she is living apart from her husband for justifiable cause, and is entitled to be supported by him, and a decree must have 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

been entered in her behalf for a definite sum of money, fixing her status as a creditor of her husband. Willard v. Briggs, 161 Mass. 58, 36 N. E. 687.

A statute providing that, in all cases where personal service of process cannot be made at law, and when no original attachment at law will lie, and no judgment at law can be obtained, and also in cases where the demand is purely of an equitable nature, a court of chancery may subject legal and equitable interests in every species of stock and other property, with certain exceptions, and also in real estate, provided that, in case of a legal demand, the amount due shall be ascertained by the verdict of a jury, summoned in the same manner as for other trials of issues of fact before a court of chancery,—does not authorize an action by a nonresident creditor against a nonresident debtor and his fraudulent grantee, to subject the property transferred to the payment of the debt, where no judgment has been obtained at law, where the demand is of a legal character, and no personal service of process has been had in the equitable action. Gasget v. Scott, 9 Yerg. 244.

Foreign attachment.

Under the Kentucky statute, a general creditor who has obtained an attachment on the land of a nonresident debtor thereby acquires a right to subject the property to the payment of his claim, where the conveyance was made to cheat, hinder, and delay creditors, or, as to existing liabilities, was made without valuable consideration. Little v. Ragan Bros. 83 Ky. 321.

Upon a bill to subject land of a nonresident to the payment of a debt, it was required, under the Kentucky statute of 1827, 1 Stat. Law, 98, to be shown that the debtor owned no personal property, or not enough to pay and discharge a debt in the state, to the knowledge of the complainant. Calk v. Chiles, 9 Dana, 265.

In Kelso v. Blackburn, 3 Leigh, 290, the court said that the proceeding by foreign attachment against absentees was an innovation upon the common law; a proceeding in rem, founded on the necessity of the case, lest there should be an absolute failure of justice; and, like all ex parte proceedings, it was liable to great abuse unless carefully watched and strictly confined to the ground covered by the law. It was not under their general jurisdiction that courts of equity took cognizance of these cases, but under particular statutes; and these, it would be found, have marked out with special care the extent and described the manner of the proceeding.

An action in the nature of a creditors' bill cannot be based on a judgment for money only against a nonresident debtor, where jurisdiction was obtained only by attachment, where, by statute, such a judgment can be enforced only against the attached property. Capital City Bank v. Parent, 134 N. Y. 527, 18 L.R.A. 240, 31 N. E. 976.

Enforcement of judgment lien.

Under a Virginia statute providing that "the lien of a judgment may always be enforced in a court of equity. If it appear to such court that the rents and profits of the real estate subject to the lien will not satisfy the judgment in five years, the court may decree the said estate, or any part thereof, to be sold, and the proceeds applied to the discharge of the judgment" [Code of 1873, chap. 182, § 9], a creditor may go into equity to enforce his lien against his debtor's real estate, before exhausting his remedy at law against his debtor's personal property. The remedy in equity against the real estate is the only remedy in that state against such property, since the elegit was abolished. Acts 1871-2, chap. 373, p. 469. This remedy is not dependent upon the inadequacy of the legal remedy to satisfy the judgment out of the personal estate, or the insufficiency of such estate for that purpose, but may always be resorted to, whether there be or not personal estate of the debtor sufficient to satisfy the judgment. The court said that if the creditor resorted to the real estate first, and the debtor had personal property which he preferred should be applied to the payment of the judgment, he certainly could make the application himself more speedily and at much less expense than an officer at law could under an execution, and thus relieve his real estate to the extent of the value of the personal estate so applied. If he failed or refused to make the application, it was his own fault. Price v. Thrash, 30 Gratt. 515. To the same effect, Barr v. White, 30 Gratt. 531.

In Virginia, by statute, a judgment creditor may resort to a court of equity, if he so elects, to enforce the lien of his judgment against the real estate of his debtor, without first proceeding by execution at law to subject the personal estate, or assigning any reason for not doing so. The remedy in equity against the real estate is not dependent upon the inadequacy of the legal remedy to satisfy the judgment out of the personal estate, or the insufficiency of such estate for that purpose, but it may always be resorted to without reference to whether there is sufficient personal estate of the debtor to satisfy the judgment. Stovall v. Border Grange Bank, 78 Va. 188. To the same effect, Moore v. Bruce, 85 Va. 139, 7 S. E. 195.

The 8th section of chapter 139 of the West Virginia Code gives to courts of equity jurisdiction and authority to enforce judgment liens at any time. Pecks v. Chambers, 8 W. Va. 210. The court said that the exercise of that jurisdiction was not made dependent upon the fact as to whether the amount of the judgment might, or could be made by any other proceeding,—for instance, by a writ of ieri facias. A court of equity might, under the provisions of that section, sell lands of a judgment debtor to pay his judgment debts, whether the rents and profits of the lands of the debtor would pay the debt in five years or not. This was not the case prior to the adoption of the 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Code of 1868. The policy and effect of the legislation in relation to the enforcement of judgment liens seemed to be to do away with the restraints and restrictions in relation to the sale of realty for the payment of debts, which formerly existed, and to give the judgment creditor access to the lands of his debtor without unnecessary delay for the satisfaction of his just demands through the aid and instrumentality of courts of equity, should the creditor choose to invoke the aid of such courts before exhausting legal remedies to which he might resort. Whether this policy was wise or judicious was not for that court to determine.

The 8th section of chapter 139 of the Code of West Virginia of 1868 confers upon courts of equity jurisdiction and authority to enforce judgment liens against the lands of the judgment debtor, at any time, without reference to whether the judgment debtor has personal property or estate out of which the judgment might be made by a process of execution or not. Marling v. Robrecht, 13 W. Va. 440.

Under Code 1861, chap. 130, § 7, a bill to enforce a judgment lien must show the return of a fi. fa., indorsed "no property found," or that an execution issued on the judgment within two years from its date. Under a prior statute, such a suit could be maintained previous to execution. Dunfee v. Childs, 45 W. Va. 155, 30 S. E. 102.

Decensed debtors.

In Lilienthal v. Drucklieb, 34 C. C. A. 657, 92 Fed. 753, the existence of a legal representative of a deceased debtor, or his refusal to act, was held not to be a condition precedent to an equitable action in the nature of a creditors' bill, under a statute which enables a creditor of a deceased insolvent debtor, in behalf of himself and other creditors, to bring an equitable action in the nature of a creditors' bill without the necessity of previous judgment, and the issuance of an execution, and its return unsatisfied.

Under a statute providing the following remedies for creditors of deceased persons: "(1) An action at law against the personal representative . . . (2) A separate bill in chancery to compel payment of his individual debt out of the funds in the hands of the personal representative, and discover the funds or estate liable to the payment thereof . . . (3) A bill in behalf of himself and other creditors to ascertain and distribute both the real and personal estate . . . (4) A bill against an heir or devisee because of assets by descent,"—to entitle a creditor to institute his suit under either of the last three heads enumerated, he must have either exhausted his remedy under the first, being the legal remedy, or show that such remedy would, for some reason, be unavailing, or that the personal representative had neglected his legal duties to such an extent as to justify the interposition of a court of equity. Hale v. White, 47 W. Va. 700, 35 S. E. 884.

State acts; Federal courts.

An action to subject to the payment of a debt due complainants certain property owned by the debtor and other defendants cannot be maintained in the United States courts, in default of any proceeding at law to establish the validity of the amount of the debt, or to enforce its collection, although a statute of the state in which the action was brought permits it. Scott v. Neely, 140 U. S. 106, 35 L. ed. 368, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 712. The court said that the general proposition as to the enforcement in Federal courts of new equitable rights created by the states is undoubtedly correct, subject, however, to this qualification, that such enforcement do not impair any right conferred, or conflict with any inhibition imposed, by the Constitution or laws of the United States. Neither such right nor such inhibition can be in any way impaired, however fully the new equitable right may be enjoined or enforced in the states by whose legislation it was created. The Constitution, in its 7th Amendment, declared that, in suits at common law, where the value in property shall exceed $20, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved. In the Federal courts this right cannot be dispensed with except by the assent of the parties entitled to it, nor can it be impaired by any blending with a claim properly cognizable at common law of a demand for equitable relief in aid of the legal action or during its pendency.

A simple-contract creditor having no express lien by mortgage, trust deed, or otherwise, cannot come into a United States court of equity to obtain seizure of the property of a debtor, and its application to the satisfaction of his claims, notwithstanding a state statute may authorize such a proceeding in the courts of the state. Harrison v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 36 C. C. A. 443, 94 Fed. 728.

But, in Jones v. Mutual Fidelity Co. 123 Fed. 506, it was held that a Delaware statute providing that, whenever a corporation becomes insolvent, any creditor or stockholder may obtain the appointment of a receiver, could be enforced in a Federal court by unsecured general creditors as well as by stockholders and judgment creditors, since this statute created a purely equitable right and remedy. The court said that there was a clear distinction between the exercise of equitable jurisdiction in aid of the legal remedy for the collection of a pecuniary legal demand, and the exercise of equitable jurisdiction in enforcing a purely equitable right by a purely equitable remedy created by a valid state statute, not in aid of any legal remedy, but wholly independent thereof, though the existence of such equitable right and remedy might presuppose and be dependent on the existence of such pecuniary legal demand. Failure to recognize this distinction had produced some confusion in the cases.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Mechanics' liens.

Lien creditors, by virtue of laborers' liens, whose debtor does not reside in the state, and is insolvent, and who are in danger of being defeated in the collection of their claims by the entire loss by removal from the state of the only assets which their lien covers or can reach, are entitled to the aid of equity, by way of injunction and the appointment of a receiver, to preserve the property and prevent its removal from the state, without first reducing their claim to judgment. Orton v. Madden, 75 Ga. 83.

H. C. S.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

WHITNEY ESTATE COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
NORTHERN ASSURANCE COMPANY OF LONDON, Respt.

(— Cal. —, 101 Pac. 911.)

Insurance — computing loss — statute.

1. The parties to a contract of rent insurance may stipulate for a method of ascertaining and computing the loss, notwithstanding the statute provides that the sole object of insurance is indemnity.

Same — rent — what covered.

2. The gross rentals, and not the amount less cost of janitor and other service to which the landlord is subject, are covered by a policy providing that the insurer shall be liable for the actual loss of rent based on rentals in force at the time of fire, and requiring the assured to carry insurance in an amount equal to the annual rents of the premises, in the absence of which the assured shall be held as a coinsurer in the amount of the deficiency.

(April 30, 1909.)

Case Note. — Rent insurance.

In Palatine Ins. Co. v. O'Brien 107 Md. 341, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1055, 68 Atl. 484, it was held that delay in rebuilding a structure, the rents of which were insured, owing to a refusal of a permit by the municipal authorities, so that the rents were not re-established as soon as they might otherwise have been, was within the provisions of a policy that the company would not be liable for loss caused by order of any civil authority.

In the preceding case it was also held that one whose rents were insured was presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to have discharged his obligation under the contract to take immediate possession of the premises for the purpose of rebuilding, and that he thus put an end to the obligation of the tenant to pay rent.

Both of these propositions were reaffirmed in Palatine Ins. Co. v. O'Brien, 109 Md. 100, 71 Atl. 775.

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco in plaintiff's favor for a sum less than was demanded in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of fire insurance. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. L. A. Redman, for appellant:

The law recognizes the validity of contracts of fire insurance, whereby the insured might derive a profit from the happening of the event insured against; and where the bona fides of the transaction are not assailed, and neither fraud nor mistake is charged, the valuation agreed upon is conclusive upon the parties as to the amount which the insured is entitled to receive.

Michael v. Prussian Nat. Ins. Co. 171 N. Y. 25, 63 N. E. 810; May F. Ins. 4th ed. § 30; Alsop v. Commercial Ins. Co. 1 Sumn. 451, Fed. Cas. No. 262; Cooley, Briefs on Insurance, pp. 518, 3087; 1 Clement, F. Ins. p. 83; Civil Code, §§ 2594, 2595, 2757; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 102.

Messrs. Goodfellow & Eells, for respondent:

The measure of damages is the amount of actual loss or damage that has been sustained by reason of the fire.

Lite v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 119 App. Div. 410, 104 N. Y. Supp. 434; Barry v. Farmers' Mut. Hail Ins. Asso. 110 Iowa, 433, 81 N. W. 691; McIlrath v. Farmers' Mut. Hail Ins. Asso. 114 Iowa, 244, 86 N. W. 310; Clarke v. Cobb, 121 Cal. 595, 54 Pac. 74; Queen Ins. Co. v. McCain, 105 Ky. 806, 49 S. W. 800; Castellain v. Preston, L. R. 11 Q. B. Div. 380.

Mr. T. C. Coogan also for respondent.

Sloss, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on a policy of fire insurance. The facts are undisputed, such of them as were put in issue by the pleadings having been found by the court upon the agreement of the parties.

In the latter case it was held that, where the policy provided that the company should not be liable for loss of rents occasioned "by interruption of business, manufacturing processes, or otherwise," the insured was not entitled to recover for loss of rents during a delay in rebuilding caused by the obstruction of the streets by débris from a general conflagration.

In Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Northern Trust Co. 127 Ill. App. 355, where it appeared that a building was insured against actual loss of rent in case it should be rendered untenable by fire; that the lease of the building provided that, in case the premises were rendered untenable by fire, the lessor, at his option, might terminate the lease or re-

The defendant, in June, 1905, issued to plaintiff a policy containing the following provisions bearing upon the question in dispute:

"Northern Assurance Company of London.

"In consideration of the stipulations herein named and of $66.20 premium does insure the Whitney Estate Co. for the term of one year from the 1st day of June, 1905, at noon, to the 1st day of June, 1906, at noon, against all direct loss or damage by fire, except as hereinafter provided, to an amount not exceeding $15,400, to the following described property while located and contained as described herein, and not elsewhere, to wit:

"15,400. On rents of the brick building known as the Starr King building, situate No. 117 to 125 on the south side of Geary street, between Grant avenue and Stockton street, San Francisco, California. . . .

"It is understood and agreed that, in case the above-named building or any part thereof shall be rendered untenable by fire, this company shall be liable to the assured for the actual loss of rent ensuing therefrom, based upon the rentals in force from the rented portions of the premises at the time of fire, not exceeding the sum insured. Loss to be computed from the date of the fire for the time it would require to put the premises in tenantable condition, excluding from such time such portion thereof as may be consumed by a strike or by any other delay beyond the control of the assured.

"In the event of disagreement as to the time required to put the premises in tenantable condition, the same shall be ascertained by two competent and disinterested appraisers," etc.

"The assured stipulates and agrees to carry insurance on said rents in an amount equal to the annual rents of said premises, and it is understood and agreed that if, at the time of fire, the aggregate amount of insurance shall be less than the annual rentals at the time of the fire, the assured shall be held to be an insurer in the amount of such pair the premises within thirty days; that it was injured by fire, but by extraordinary diligence it was restored to its former condition, and the tenant put back into possession in twenty-nine days, during which he paid the rent as though no fire had occurred.—it was held that the contingency insured against never happened.

Lite v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 119 App. Div. 410, 104 N. Y. Supp. 434, sufficiently set out in WHITNEY ESTATE CO. v. NORTHERN ASSUR. CO., was affirmed on stipulation, and therefore without opinion, in 193 N. Y. 639, 86 N. E. 1127.

Four earlier cases upon this question are to be found in the note to Palatine Ins. Co. v. O'Brien. 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1055.

deficiency, and in that capacity shall bear a proportionate share of the loss."

All of the foregoing, except the first paragraph quoted, is contained in a slip or "rider" attached to a policy in the form usually employed for fire insurance. One of the clauses found in the body of the policy, and relied on by respondent, declares that "whenever in this policy . . . the word 'loss' occurs it shall be deemed the equivalent of 'loss or damage.'" Many of the other provisions common to such usual or "standard" form are, in their nature, inapplicable to the subject-matter of this particular contract.

On April 18, 1906, the Starr King building was owned by the plaintiff, and on that day it was totally destroyed by fire. At the time of the fire of April, 1906, the total amount of insurance on rents carried by plaintiff, including and concurrent with that of the defendant, was $69,175, and the total amount of rents being collected by plaintiff from tenants occupying the rented portions of the building was a sum which, if paid for one year, would aggregate $68,298. For such rents the plaintiff was required to, and did, furnish to its tenants certain services, including the operation of an elevator, the supply of water and light, and the services of a janitor. The cost to the plaintiff of such service, if paid for one year, would aggregate $10,000. The time required to put the building in tenantable condition was agreed upon by the parties to be twelve and one-half months. The position of the plaintiff was that, on these facts, it was entitled to recover from the insurers the gross amount of the rents for one year, vis., $68,298. The defendant contended, however, that the loss or damage sustained by plaintiff and recoverable by it was only the sum remaining after deducting from the gross annual rentals the $10,000, which, if there had been no fire, plaintiff would have been obliged to expend in furnishing the aforesaid services to tenants. The latter view was accepted by the trial court, which, after finding as a conclusion of law that plaintiff's loss or damage was $58,298, awarded judgment for $12,964.47, the proportion of such loss payable by defendant. From this judgment plaintiff appeals.

The question thus presented is, so far as we are able to learn, a novel one. Rent insurance is a comparatively recent development of underwriting, and cases dealing with its peculiar problems are few. In their briefs the learned counsel for the respective parties present various authorities, but none of the cases cited on either side can be said to be closely in point. They are valuable in so far as they illustrate general principles 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) of insurance law, which must be looked to for the determination of the question before us. One of these principles—and the one upon which the respondent bases its position—is that a policy of insurance is a contract of indemnity. It is, as defined in Civil Code, § 2527, "a contract whereby one undertakes to indemnify another against loss, damage, or liability arising from an unknown or contingent event." Section 2551 provides that "the sole object of insurance is the indemnity of the insured. . . ." Policies "executed by way of gaming or wagering" are void. Civil Code, § 2558. "The measure of an insurable interest in property is the extent to which the insured might be damaged by loss or injury thereof." Accordingly it is universally held that (except in case of a valued policy) "the insured is entitled to recover under the policy only such loss as he has actually sustained, not exceeding the sum stipulated." 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 840.

The contention of the respondent is that the application of these rules requires the affirmance of the judgment. The "loss of rent" suffered by plaintiff was not, it is said, the gross amount of rents which it would have received, but only the surplus remaining after deducting the expense to which it would have been put in collecting such rents. This position would have much force if the subject of insurance consisted of such property that the loss occasioned by a fire could be accurately determined. But, in the case of rents of a building, it is not, in the nature of things, possible to determine, at any particular period, just what the income from rents for the ensuing year would be. It may be that a greater or a less part of the building may be occupied during the year than at its commencement; so with the matter of expense. The annual outlay for elevator service, wages of janitors, light and water, will depend upon a variety of contingencies which cannot be foretold. Furthermore, the fact that a building is rendered untenable may cause a loss of rents to the owner in ways that are even more incapable of measurement. A building vacated by its tenants in consequence of fire may remain vacant, in whole or in part, long after it has been restored and is again ready for occupancy. In view of all these uncertainties, it is perfectly competent for the parties to a contract of rent insurance, without in any degree violating the principle that the insurance shall furnish only indemnity against loss, to stipulate for a method of ascertaining and computing such loss. We think the policy before us, fairly construed, does provide that the loss of rents shall be deemed to be the amount of rentals that would be collected by the insured during the period that may be required to restore the building to a tenantable condition, assuming that the rentals would have continued to be the same in amount as at the time of the fire. So construed, the policy, if not strictly a valued policy (Civil Code, § 2596), may be regarded as analogous to a valued policy in so far as it prescribes a method for determining, as between the parties, the amount of loss. The suggested meaning is the one indicated by the clauses of the policy quoted by us. The insurance company agrees to be liable for the "actual loss of rent ensuing" from the fire, and makes provision for the manner of determining the loss. It is to be based upon the rentals in force from the rented portions of the premises at the time of fire, and to be "computed from the date of the fire for the time it would require to put the premises in tenantable condition." No elements, except those of actual rentals at time of fire, and time required for repair, are mentioned. The first of these elements is easily ascertainable, and special provision is made for arbitration as to the second, in the event of disagreement. If it had been intended that any other item should enter into the computation, it seems reasonable to suppose that something would have been said regarding such other item. The view suggested is fortified by a consideration of the clause requiring the insured to carry insurance on said rents in an amount equal to the annual rents of the premises, under penalty of being held to be a coinsurer to the extent of the deficiency. If respondent's contention be correct, this clause would require, if the management of the building involved any expense whatever, the carrying of insurance to an amount greater than the loss which could possibly be sustained. It would impose upon the insured the obligation of insuring to the extent of his gross rents, although the liability of the insurers would be limited to the net rents. In this view the requirement would be unreasonable and burdensome. It is, however, a perfectly proper and legitimate condition if recovery, in the event of fire, is to go to the extent of the total rentals, without any deduction for expenses.

As we have said, no case directly in point has been called to our attention. Perhaps the one that affords the closest analogy to the one before us is Stevens v. Columbian Ins. Co. 3 Caines, 43, 2 Am. Dec. 247. There the charterer of a vessel had insured the freight under an open policy. There was a total loss en route, and it was held that the insured was entitled to recover the gross amount named in the policy, without any deduction for expenses of wages and provisions for the crew, which would have had to be borne by plaintiff if the vessel had completed her voyage. It is true that there are many distinctions between marine insurance and insurance against loss by fire, and that the rules governing the one cannot always be applied to the other. The doctrine of the Stevens Case is, in this state, expressly adopted by statute as the method of estimating the loss of freight under an open marine policy. Civil Code, § 2741. But, notwithstanding the differences arising from the nature of marine and fire insurance, each is a contract of indemnity, and much of the reasoning of the court in the case just mentioned has a direct bearing upon the one before us. "Although indemnity is the leading object of insurance, it is not always the criterion by which to ascertain the amount of the loss," says the court, and goes on to point out that "to adopt the net amount of freight as the rule would lead to much litigation and uncertainty respecting the deductions to be made. But to take the gross amount of freight as the rule of damages would be equal, simple, and easily ascertained." The last observation has particular force when applied to the facts of the case before us.

The respondent relies on Lite v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 119 App. Div. 410, 104 N. Y. Supp. 434. The policy there involved was one on "the profits of the lease" of certain buildings leased by plaintiff, and by him sublet to various tenants. In the course of the opinion it is said that plaintiff's recovery was to be "measured by the difference between the rentals which he is able to realize from the property, less the rent paid by him plus the expense of running and maintaining the building." The subject of insurance being the profits of the lease, it was obviously necessary, in estimating plaintiff's loss, to deduct from the rents received by him all expenses incurred. The case is not at all analogous to the present one, where the insurance is on rents. Barry v. Farmers' Mut. Hail Ins. Asso. 110 Iowa, 433, 81 N. W. 690, and McIlrath v. Farmers' Mut. Hail Ins. Asso. 114 Iowa, 244, 86 N. W. 310, are also cited by respondent. These were cases of insurance on growing crops, which were destroyed before maturity. In each case it was held that plaintiff could recover only the market value of the grain destroyed, after deducting what it would have cost to prepare it for market. This ruling has no bearing on the question before us. The insured was entitled to no more than the value of the property lost at the time of its destruction. The value of a growing crop is not the equivalent of the value which such crop would have at maturity, and the court was simply declaring a method of ascertaining the value of the property at the time of destruction, and the consequent loss. See Shoemaker v. Acker, 116 Cal. 239, 48 Pac. 62; Holt Mfg. Co. v. Thornton, 136 Cal. 232, 68 Pac. 708; Teller v. Bay & River Dredging Co. 151 Cal. 209, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 267, 90 Pac. 942, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 779.

Upon a consideration of the entire policy, we think it was intended to make the defendant liable for such amount of rent, at the rate paid for the portions rented at the time of the fire, as would have become payable to plaintiff during the period required to restore the premises to a tenantable condition, without deduction for any expenses connected with the renting.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the Trial Court to enter judgment in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: Angellotti, J.; Shaw, J.

Petition for rehearing denied May 27, 1909.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

F. C. RISING et al., Respts.,
v.

GEORGE DICKINSON, Appt.

(— N. D. —, 121 N. W. 616.)

Public officer — registrar of deeds — negligence — liability.

1. Under §§ 2452, 2453, Rev. Codes 1905, it is made the duty of the registrar of deeds of each county to keep a numerical index in his office, in which shall be noted, opposite the description of each tract, the volume and page of each mortgage or other instrument affecting the title thereto. Held, that defendant's failure for over two months after a mortgage was duly recorded to note the same in such numerical index is negligence per se, rendering him liable to one who, in reliance on such index, purchases the property, and sustains damage as the necessary and proximate result of such official neglect.

Same — contributory negligence.

2. It is essential to a recovery for such negligence that plaintiff be free from contributory negligence, but it was not contributory negligence on plaintiff's part in failing to examine the grantor and grantee index wherein such mortgage was noted.

Same — nature of office — liability.

3. The registrar of deeds is a ministerial officer, and as such is liable at common law, in the absence of an express statute, to an action for damages caused by his failure or neglect to perform the duties of his office, or for their negligent or illegal performance.

Headnotes by FISK, J.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Insolvency — evidence — sufficiency.

4. The action was tried on the theory, and it is in effect conceded, that it was essential to a recovery, however, that plaintiff should prove that one S., the mortgagor and the person from whom he purchased the premises, and who gave him a warranty deed containing a covenant against encumbrances, was insolvent, and hence unable to pay the mortgage indebtedness or to respond in damages for the breach of her covenant. Evidence examined, and held insufficient, for reasons stated in the opinion, to establish such fact.

(May 1, 1909.)

Case Note. — Liability of registrar of deeds for neglect, delay, or mistake in registering or indexing instrument affecting title to real property.

The duty of indexing deeds and mortgages is a ministerial one, and for neglect of such duty an action lies against the recording officer in favor of individuals who are injured thereby. Norton v. Kumpe, 121 Ala. 448, 25 So. 841.

In an action against a registrar of deeds and his bondsmen, State ex rel. Daniel v. Grizzard, 117 N. C. 105, 23 S. E. 93, held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for the failure of the registrar to index a mortgage on certain property, which resulted in a loss to the plaintiff on his subsequently loaning money on the same property.

Where it is the official duty of a recording officer to keep a tract index, and he fails to perform that duty in respect to a mortgage upon a particular parcel of land, and thereafter a person purchases that tract, relying on the index that it is free from encumbrances, the damages which the purchaser suffers may be recovered in an action against the recording officer and his sureties. Johnson v. Brice, 102 Wis. 575, 78 N. W. 1086.

In Crews v. Taylor, 56 Tex. 461, the liability of a recording officer for neglect in failing to record a certain mortgage or enter it upon the file book was recognized, but a recovery was denied the plaintiff because it appeared that he had notice of the existence of the mortgage lien through a deed which was on record and which he examined.

In Hartwell v. Riley, 47 App. Div. 154, 62 N. Y. Supp. 317, a county clerk was held liable for his failure as recording officer to index properly a lis pendens filed for record in his office, where such failure resulted in loss to a subsequent mortgagee of the property against which the lis pendens was filed.

A mistake by a registrar of deeds in recording a mortgage to secure $1,000 as securing $100 was held, in State ex rel. Kivett v. Young, 106 N. C. 567, 10 S. E. 1019, to be such a failure in the faithful discharge of the registrar's duties as to warrant a recovery on his official bond.

State use of Cardin v. McClellan, 113 Tenn. 616, 85 S. W. 267, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas.

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Benson County in plaintiff Rising's favor in an action brought to recover damages alleged to have been caused by defendant's alleged negligent failure properly to note a certain mortgage in the public records of which he was the registrar. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Lindstrom & Sinness and Burke & Middaugh for appellant.

Messrs. McClory & Barnett, for respondents:

A recorder of deeds is a ministerial official, answerable in damages for nonfeasance, misfeasance, or malfeasance.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 377; State v. Ruth, 9 S. D. 84, 68 N. W. 189; Johnson v. Brice, 102 Wis. 575, 78 N. W. 1086.

Flak, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff Rising recovered a judgment in the court below against defendant for damages for the alleged negligence of the latter, who was registrar of deeds of Benson county, in failing and neglecting to note in the numerical index a certain mortgage filed and recorded in his office on September 20, 1901.

The facts necessary to a correct understanding of the law points involved are as follows: On September 20, 1901, one Julia Solvey, who was the owner of the real property described in the complaint, gave a mortgage thereon to the Advance Thresher Company. Such mortgage, as above stated, was filed in defendant's office on September 20th, and recorded in book 18 of mortgages at page 445, and thereafter entered in the grantor and grantee's index of mortgages, but the same was not noted on the numerical index of mortgages until after December 5th following. On the latter date plaintiff Rising purchased the premises covered by such mortgage from Julia Solvey, taking from her a warranty deed of the premises, with the usual covenant warranting the same to be free from all encumbrances, except a mortgage for $400 and one for $60 in favor of other parties. The proof shows that, prior to such purchase, the plaintiff Rising examined the reception book required to be kept by defendant as such registrar of deeds, covering entries for the period of about two months immediately prior thereto, and also the numerical index, and failed to find the mortgage to the Advance Thresher Company in either of such records, and he claims to have made such purchase without any notice of any kind of the existence of such last-named mortgage. Subsequently, and prior to the commencement of this action, the 992, holds that a registrar of deeds and his bondsmen are liable in damages for the error of the registrar in recording a description of property, without question as to wilfulness, innocence, or inadvertence. Maxwell v. Stuart, infra, is distinguished as a decision under a statute requiring that the wrongful act be wilful. The statute in the McClellan Case contained no such qualification, and it was said that, "moreover, the failure of the registrar to copy the deed of the complainant correctly cannot be said to be an innocent mistake, as failure to do so cannot be accounted for upon any other hypothesis than incompetency or gross carelessness."

A parish recorder was held liable, in Baker v. Lee, 49 La. Ann. 874, 21 So. 588, for his omission to record an act of sale by a sheriff in a partition action, the omission resulting in enabling the purchasers at the sheriff's sale to create mortgages on the property which defeated a mortgage right reserved by the judgment in the partition suit.

In Reeder v. State, 98 Ind. 114, a county recorder was held liable to one injured by reason of a certain mortgage record not appearing on the general indexes in the recorder's office. It appeared that the mortgage was indexed in the volume in which it was recorded, but that conveyances were not put upon the general index until the particular volume was completed. This method of indexing was held not to comply 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

with a statute making it the duty of the recorder to keep up the general indexes "as deeds and mortgages shall from time to time be recorded," and a judgment against the recorder and his sureties for the amount of the damages caused by the delay was affirmed.

In State ex rel. Lowry v. Davis, 96 Ind. 539, a county recorder was held liable on his official bond for an error in recording a certain deed, whereby a covenant on the part of the grantee to assume the payment of "five hundred dollars" was recorded to read "two hundred dollars," to the injury of the grantor in the deed in question.

In Hunter v. Windsor, 24 Vt. 327, upon a general demurrer, it was held that the defendant would be liable for the failure of its town clerk, whose duty it was to record transfers of property and index the same, to index a certain mortgage, with resulting damage to the plaintiff if he purchased the property in question relying on his examination of the index as showing no encumbrance.

Upon the same state of facts in an action against the town clerk and the towns themselves, it was held that there could be no recovery for the clerk's failure to index the mortgage in question, where it appeared that the plaintiff had made no examination of the records, and so could not have been misled on account of the absence of the mortgage from the index. Lyman v. Edgerton, 29 Vt. 305, 70 Am. Dec. 415.

Although no statute expressly required

holder of the Advance Thresher Company mortgage foreclosed the same by action which resulted in a judgment decreeing that there was due thereon the sum of $492.30, and directing a sale of the premises to satisfy such sum. Plaintiff Rising appeared as an intervener in such foreclosure proceedings, but, failing in his defense, he thereafter was required to and did pay, to protect his title, the sum aforesaid, which is one of the items of damage claimed to have been suffered by him by reason of defendant's said negligence. At the conclusion of the trial both parties moved for a directed verdict, whereupon the learned trial court excused the jury, and thereafter findings of fact and conclusions of law were made and judgment ordered in favor of the plaintiff F. C. Rising and against the defendant for $492.30, with interest, together with the costs and disbursements of the action. A motion for a new trial was thereafter made and denied, and this appeal is both from the judgment and order aforesaid.

Among other things, appellant contends in effect that plaintiff was himself guilty of contributory negligence barring a recovery, because he neglected to make a proper and diligent search of the records, and that, if he had done so, he would have discovered the Advance Thresher Company mortgage. It is a conceded fact that this mortgage was duly noted both in the reception book and the grantor and grantee index, and that the same was recorded in mortgage book 18 on page 445, but was not noted in the numerical index, and that plaintiff Rising merely examined the reception book and the latter index. It is no doubt true that plaintiff, by searching a little farther back in the reception book, or by examining the grantor and grantee index, would have discovered such mortgage, but we think he was not bound at his peril to do so. The law required defendant to keep a numerical or tract index, in which should be noted opposite the description of each tract the volume and page where each mortgage or other instrument affecting the same is recorded, and the plaintiff had a right to assume that defendant had performed his duty in this regard. While it is true that such notation could not be made until after the instrument was recorded, or rather until its recordation is commenced, for the reason, as contended by appellant's counsel, that the officer, until such time, does not know the page upon which the record commences, still the undisputed evidence discloses that this mortgage was actually recorded over two months prior to the date plaintiff made the examination aforesaid, and we think it must be held as a matter of law that defendant was negligent in failing satisfactions of mortgages to be recorded in the mortgage record, or in any other particular record, yet the court said, in Mechanics' Bldg. Asso. v. Whitacre, 92 Ind. 547, that it must be held to be the intention of the law that such releases should be recorded in the mortgage record, and the recorder was held liable in this case for recording a release upon the record of the wrong mortgage, to the injury of one who relied on the entry.

For neglect of duty to index deeds and mortgages, a right of action lies for nominal damages, and also for such actual damages as proximately result from the wrong. Norton v. Kumpe, supra.

A recorder is not liable for more than nominal damages for a mistake in recording a conveyance so that a certain covenant reads "two hundred dollars" instead of "five hundred dollars," unless the plaintiff proves that he cannot collect the full amount from the party actually liable. State ex rel. Lowery v. Davis, 117 Ind. 307, 20 N. E. 159.

But a recovery may not be had upon the official bond of a recorder of deeds for failure to index a mortgage in a certain book, where there was more than one index for such purpose, and the statute only required the keeping of a complete index as a safe and sure reference to any deed, mortgage, or other instrument recorded, and the mortgage in question was properly entered in the book used for indexing all mortgages by themselves. Temple v. People, 6 Ill. App. 378.

In the absence of statutory provision requiring a recorder to enter in the index of mortgages the satisfaction of the mortgage or the date of the satisfaction, such an entry, if made, can only be regarded as the private memorandum of the recorder, and not as a record upon which anyone has the right to rely, or for a mistake in which the recorder is liable to the person injured. Mechanics' Bldg. Asso. v. Whitacre, supra.

In Maxwell v. Stuart, 99 Tenn. 409, 42 S. W. 34, under a statute which made any wilful violation of the requirements as to indexing deeds, mortgages, etc., a misdemeanor, and made the official and his sureties civilly liable for such violation, it was held that if a registrar of deeds, in a bona fide attempt to comply with the law, makes a mistake in indexing, which is simply one of judgment on his part and not a wilful neglect of duty, he and his sureties should not be held liable therefor. The court, however, qualified this holding by saying that it was not intended to hold that a registrar or clerk might be so negligent as not to prepare an index with reasonable care, and then escape liability because a wilful purpose to injure could not be proved; that if his negligence was gross and inexcusable, and with full knowledge that he was negligent in his duty, it would be presumed that his act was done wilfully.

to note such instrument upon the numerical index within such time after the same was recorded. Wisconsin has a statute very similar to the statute of this state regarding the records, including indexes, to be kept by the registrar of deeds, and the case of Johnson v. Brice, 102 Wis. 575, 78 N. W. 1080, we think fully sustains us in these views. In that case the plaintiff relied solely upon the tract index, and it was there expressly held that plaintiff had a right to rely on such index, and his recovery was sustained upon the theory of defendant's negligence in failing to note a certain mortgage in such index. We think the statute requiring such numerical index to be kept clearly contemplates that immediately, or at least within a reasonable time after each instrument is recorded, it shall be noted on such index. The performance of such duty requires but a brief period of time, and we are agreed that, under the facts in the case at bar, defendant was unquestionably guilty of actionable negligence per se in failing to note this mortgage upon said index prior to December 5, 1901.

Appellant's counsel call attention to the fact that, in the Wisconsin case above cited, the action was based upon an express statute fixing liability; but it is clear that, in the absence of such a statute, there is a common-law liability on defendant's part to respond in damages to any person who has been injured as the proximate result of his negligent performance of official duty. The registrar of deeds is a ministerial officer, and as such is answerable in damages for nonfeasance, misfeasance, or malfeasance. As stated in 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 377: "He is liable in a civil action for a failure or refusal to perform the duties of his office, or for their negligent or illegal performance." See also the numerous cases cited therein. To the same effect, see Throop, Pub. Off. § 743; also, State v. Ruth, 9 S. D. 84, 68 N. W. 189, wherein it was held that "an officer who, without legal excuse, fails to perform a ministerial duty, is liable for the proximate results of his failure to any person to whom he owes performance of such duty." That such is the law seems to us too plain for serious debate, and we pass this point without further comment.

This brings us to a consideration of appellant's exceptions to certain findings of the trial court. It is asserted that finding No. 8, in so far as it finds that plaintiff Rising relied upon the numerical index, has no support in the evidence, and that finding No. 14, to the effect that Julia Solvey, the mortgagor and plaintiff's grantor, was insolvent, is likewise without support in the evidence. The case was tried upon the theory, and it is in effect conceded, that, if either of these contentions is correct, a reversal must follow, as both of such findings are essential to plaintiff's recovery. If plaintiff did not rely, in purchasing said property, upon the numerical index, or if he was not damaged in the eye of the law, because of the fact that Julia Solvey was solvent and able to respond in damages for the breach of the covenant in her deed against encumbrances other than those mentioned, or financially able to pay the note secured by such mortgage, then plaintiff has no cause of action against defendant, at least for anything other than nominal damages. We have examined the record carefully, and failed to find any evidence to the effect that plaintiff, in purchasing this land, relied wholly upon the numerical index with reference to existing encumbrances. It is true plaintiff testified that, before purchasing the land, he examined the numerical index, and also the reception book, and failed to find said mortgage noted upon either, and that he had no knowledge of the existence of such mortgage. For all that appears from the record, plaintiff may have relied as much or more upon the covenant in his grantor's deed as upon the numerical index in question. Conceding, however, that the evidence upon this issue was sufficient to go to the jury, and hence the finding of the court will not be disturbed, we are entirely clear that the evidence is wholly insufficient to sustain the finding that Julia Solvey was insolvent. The only testimony upon this point is that of the witness Stewart, who testified: "I am acquainted with Julia Solvey. I have known her ever since I have been in the county, till she left. She has gone to Canada. She is not a resident of this county or state at the present time, and has no property here. I have been acquainted for sometime with her business affairs, and have had collections against her. I think I returned them to the M. M. Osborne Company. I was not able to collect anything on them. From my knowledge as to the state of her financial affairs and these collections, I would state that Julia Solvey is at this time insolvent." The above testimony was given at the trial which commenced on November 22, 1900, whereas the transaction out of which plaintiff's cause of action arises took place in the early part of December, 1901, nearly five years prior thereto. How, then, can it be argued that the foregoing testimony in any manner tends to prove that Julia Solvey in December, 1901, and for a long time thereafter, was not perfectly solvent? But such testimony is wholly insufficient to prove her insolvency, for another reason. It purports to give the mere opinion and conclusion of the witness without stating any facts as a basis therefor, and hence is entitled to no probative weight. The fact that the witness had collections against her, and in favor of the M. M. Osborne Company, which he was unable to collect, tends to prove nothing. She may have declined payment of the same for perfectly valid reasons. He does not swear that these claims were reduced to judgment, and execution was issued and returned unsatisfied, nor does he state what knowledge, if any, he had relative to the assets and liabilities of Julia Solvey. For all that his testimony discloses, she may not have owed a dollar to anyone, and she may have owned property worth millions of dollars. Moreover, the testimony of this witness fails to state when Julia Solvey went to Canada or when she ceased to own property in Benson county or in North Dakota. It may be from anything that appears in his testimony, that she continued to reside and to own property here for several years after the plaintiff purchased said property, and after he acquired knowledge of the existence of such mortgage. As before stated, and for the reasons above stated, we are convinced that plaintiff signally failed to establish the fact of Julia Solvey's financial inability to respond in damages to plaintiff for the breach of her covenant aforesaid, and proof of such fact was essential to plaintiff's recovery. As to the proper method of proving insolvency, see Abbott, Trial Ev. 2d ed. 777-779.

Entertaining these views, it follows that the judgment and order appealed from must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

All concur except Morgan, Ch. J., not participating.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

JOHN J. COWDEN et al., Appts.,

v.

TRUSTEES OF SCHOOLS et al

(235 Ill. 604, 85 N. E. 924.)

Surety — correcting account.

Sureties of an officer who has succeeded himself cannot maintain a bill in equity, after his death, to correct his official reports so as to show that he did not in fact have on hand funds with which he charged himself at the time they became his sureties, and thereby relieve themselves from liability for a shortage in his accounts.

(October 26, 1908.)

APPEAL by complainants from a judgment of the Appellate Court, Third District, affirming a decree of the Circuit Court 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

for McLean County in defendants' favor in a suit to correct the accounts of plaintiffs' principal and enjoin a suit on his official bond. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Livingston & Bach for appellants.

Mr. Jacob P. Lindley for appellees.

Vickers, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellants, who were sureties on the official bond of R. S. McIntyre as township treasurer, filed a bill in the circuit court of McLean county for the purpose of correcting certain official reports made by the township treasurer on June 30, 1903, 1904, 1905, and 1906, and to enjoin a suit at law on the official bond until this cause is determined. The circuit court sustained a demurrer interposed by the trustees of schools to the Case Note. — Liability of sureties on bond of public officer for default of principal during prior term.

There can be no doubt of the general proposition of law that, in the absence of stipulations in the bond of a public officer making it retrospective, or of estoppel by reason of the principal's report or statement for the prior term, there can be no liability on the bond for default of the principal which occurred prior to the execution of the bond. Farrar v. United States, 5 Pet. 373, 8 L. ed. 159; United States v. Boyd, 15 Pet. 187, 10 L. ed. 706; United States v. Linn, 1 How. 104, 11 L. ed. 64; Jones v. United States, 7 How. 681, 12 L. ed. 870; Postmaster General v. Norvell, Gilpin, 100, Fed. Cas. No. 11,310; Myers v. United States, 1 McLean, 493, Fed. Cas. No. 9,996; United States v. Van Steinberg, 77 Fed. 860; Dumas v. Patterson, 9 Ala. 484; McPhillips v. McGrath, 117 Ala. 549, 23 So. 721; People v. Hammond, 109 Cal. 384, 42 Pac. 36; United States v. Dudley, 21 D. C. 337; Coons v. People, 76 Ill. 385; Stern v. People, 96 Ill. 475; Potter v. Board of Trustees, 11 Ill. App. 280; Bogardus v. People, 52 Ill. App. 179; Rogers v. State, 99 Ind. 218; Mahaska County v. Ingalls, 16 Iowa, 81; Bessinger v. Dickerson, 20 Iowa, 260; Thompson v. Dickerson, 22 Iowa, 360; Independent School Dist. v. McDonald, 39 Iowa, 564; Colyer v. Higgins, 1 Duv. 6, 85 Am. Dec. 601; Newman v. Metcalfe County Ct. 4 Bush, 67; Paducah v. Cully, 9 Bush, 323; Jones v. Gallatin County, 78 Ky. 491; Rochester v. Randall, 105 Mass. 295, 7 Am. Rep. 519; Egremont v. Benjamin, 125 Mass. 15; Paw Paw Twp. v. Eggleston, 25 Mich. 36; State use of Pace v. McCormack, 50 Mo. 568; State ex rel. Douglas County v. Alsop, 91 Mo. 172, 4 S. W. 31; State ex rel. Chat-ham Nat. Bank v. Finn, 98 Mo. 532, 14 Am. St. Rep. 654, 11 S. W. 994; State ex rel. Knapp v. Finn, 23 Mo. App. 290; Missoula County v. McCormick, 4 Mont. 115, 5 Pac. 287; Warren County v. Wilson, 16 N. J. L.

bill, and, appellants having elected to stand by their bill, the same was dismissed for want of equity. That decree has been affirmed by the appellate court for the third district. By their further appeal appellants bring the case to this court for review.

The facts averred in the bill show that McIntyre was appointed township treasurer in 1880 and every two years thereafter, and that he held the office continuously until December 5, 1906, when he died. The bond upon which appellants were sureties covered the term from September 25, 1903, until September 25, 1905. The bill alleges that by his report made June 30, 1903, the treasurer showed cash on hand $2,391.97, and notes, bonds, etc., on hand $4,840; and on June 30, 1904, the report showed cash on hand $2,166.97, notes $3,450, personal notes $665, and distributable funds $41.25. After the death of McIntyre the trustees of schools demanded $7,647.94 as the balance due from the administrator of McIntyre, who turned over only $1,210.93, leaving a balance unpaid of $6,437.01. Appellants charge in their bill that this balance was misappropriated by McIntyre prior to September 25, 1903, and claim that they should not be held liable for any defaults except for such as occurred during the term during which appellants were sureties on his bond.

The questions presented by this appeal have been determined by this court adverse-110; Patterson v. Freehold Twp. 38 N. J. L. 255; State v. Sooy, 30 N. J. L. 539; Hoboken v. Kamena, 41 N. J. L. 435; Bissell v. Saxton, 77 N. Y. 191; Board of Education v. Fonda, 77 N. Y. 350; Poole v. Cox, 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 69, 49 Am. Dec. 410; State ex rel. Coffield v. McNeill, 74 N. C. 535; Cox v. Hill, 5 Lea, 146; State use of Marshall County v. Orr, 12 Lea, 725; State v. Polk, 14 Lea, 1; Gray v. State, 95 Tenn. 317, 32 S. W. 201.

There are some cases, however, which, while admitting that the general rule of law is as above stated, nevertheless, like Cowden v. Trustees of Schools, avoid such rule by holding that, where an officer is re-elected and gives a new bond, his sureties are concluded by their principal's official report made at the conclusion of his former term, showing a balance on hand, so that, even if he had converted such balance before such bond was given, the sureties thereon are nevertheless liable.

Thus, in Baker v. Preston, Gilmer (Va.) 235, it was held that the books kept by a state treasurer who had been re-elected from year to year for several years were conclusive evidence of the balance actually in the treasury at any given time, both against the treasurer and the sureties on the bond given for his last year, so as to charge them with the balance shown on his books at the commencement of his last term as if such balance were actually on hand. But this conclusion was vigorously combated by one of the judges in a dissenting opinion, and was criticized in Henrico Justices ex rel. Craddock v. Turner, 6 Leigh, 116, and in State v. Rhoades, 6 Nev. 352,—cases not otherwise in point in this note.

And, in Boone County v. Jones, 54 Iowa, 699, 37 Am. Rep. 220, 2 N. W. 987, 7 N. W. 155, it was held that the sureties upon the bond of a public officer were concluded by the reports and settlements made by him in compliance with statute; and that, if such reports and settlements showed a balance in the officer's hands at the time the bond was executed, the sureties thereon would be liable for the misappropriation of such money though it had actually occurred before the bond was executed. The court 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) added, however, that this rule must be understood as not precluding the officer and his sureties from showing in a proper case that there were mistakes in his books and settlements.

Hence, under a statute governing the reports of certain public officers and requiring that the bonds of such officers when re-elected shall not be approved until they have produced and fully accounted for the funds and property that have come into their hands, it was held in Webster County v. Hutchinson, 60 Iowa, 721, 9 N. W. 901, 12 N. W. 534, that if a county treasurer, upon making his report to the supervisors, as required by law, did not produce the money with which he charged himself in such report, and the board of supervisors, regardless of such failure to produce such money, indorsed on his new bond that he had fully accounted for and produced all the funds with which he was chargeable as shown by his balance sheet, his sureties were not estopped, by the representation of the treasurer in such settlement, from showing in their own exoneration that the treasurer had in fact failed to produce the funds with which he was chargeable, and that the default of their principal actually occurred prior to such settlement and prior to the giving of the bond on which they were sureties.

So, in Independent School Dist. v. Hubbard, 110 Iowa, 58, 80 Am. St. Rep. 271, 81 N. W. 241, the case just cited was approved, though it was further held that if a settlement was made and all the funds and property with which the officer was charged were actually produced as required by law, such settlement, in the absence of fraud or mistake, was conclusive upon the sureties.

And the conclusion arrived at in Cowden v. Trustees of Schools is supported by the following Illinois cases cited therein: Morley v. Metamora, 78 Ill. 394, 20 Am. Rep. 266; Roper v. Sangamon Lodge, 91 Ill. 518, 33 Am. Rep. 60; Cawley v. People, 95 Ill. 249; Chicago v. Gage, 95 Ill. 593, 35 Am. Rep. 182; Fogarty v. Ream, 100 Ill. 366; Longan v. Taylor, 130 Ill. 412, 22 N. E. 745.

The great weight of authority, however, seems to be opposed to the rule laid down in ly to appellants' contention. In the case of Morley v. Metamora, 78 Ill. 394, 20 Am. Rep. 266, the same contention was made that is now presented by appellants. In that case, as in this, the officer was his own successor, and his sureties sought to escape liability on the ground here interposed. In that case it was said: "It is not made to appear very clearly that whatever default occurred took place in the first year the supervisor was in office; but, conceding that fact, we do not think it relieves the sureties on the bond upon which this action is brought from liability. The supervisor was his own successor in office. He had made his annual report, in which he charged himself with having a certain amount of money in his hands. That report was approved, and we must presume it was true. . . . In contemplation of law the money mentioned in his report was in the hands of the supervisor, and the undertaking of the sureties on his bond was that he should account for it." That case has been reaffirmed in Roper v. Sangamon Lodge, 91 Ill. 518, 33 Am. Rep. 60, and in Longan v. Taylor, 130 Ill. 412, 22 N. E. 745. In the case last above cited the officer whose bond was in suit was a township school treasurer, and in that case it was held that the bondsmen of such officer were concluded by the reports made by their principal, and were estopped from showing that such reports were untrue.

Conceding the law to be as laid down in the foregoing cases, appellants contend that the COWDEN CASE. Thus, in Ohning v. Evansville, 66 Ind. 59, specifically overruling State ex rel. Vincennes Twp. v. Grammer, 29 Ind. 530, it was held that entries made by a city treasurer in his books, showing the amount of funds belonging to the city on hand at the conclusion of a preceding and the beginning of a new term, were not conclusive upon the sureties in the bond given by him at the commencement of his new term. And they were accordingly permitted to show that he had misappropriated such funds in his former term.

And, in Detroit v. Weber, 29 Mich. 24, it was held that the sureties upon the bond of a re-elected officer were not concluded by false entries in his books made to assist in forcing a balance at the close of a preceding term. Judge Campbell, however, dissented strongly from this conclusion.

So, in Van Sickle v. Buffalo County, 13 Neb. 103, 42 Am. Rep. 753, 13 N. W. 19, it was held that the surety on the bond of a re-elected treasurer was not estopped from showing the incorrectness of his principal's voluntary official report as to the amount of money in his hands at the commencement of his last term.

And, in Salazar v. Territory, 8 N. M. 1, 41 Pac. 531, it was held that the sureties upon the bond of a county treasurer, given at the beginning of his second term, were not estopped, by the report of the treasurer as to funds in his hands at the close of his first term,—which report was made during the second term, after the filing of the second bond, and was approved by the county commissioners,—from showing that the default occurred during his first term.

And this rule finds support, also, in Goodwine v. State, 81 Ind. 109; Bissell v. Saxton, 66 N. Y. 55; Kellum v. Clark, 97 N. Y. 390; and Vivian v. Otis, 24 Wis. 518, 1 Am. Rep. 199.

The conclusion reached in the COWDEN CASE would seem also to be opposed by the following cases, in which it was held that the reports or settlements of a public officer, showing funds in his hands at the time the bond was given, are only prima facie evidence against the sureties, and that, if they can show that such funds were in fact misappropriated by the officer before their bond was given, they are not liable therefor; United States v. Irving, 1 How. 250, 11 L. ed. 120; United States v. Boyd, 5 How. 29, 12 L. ed. 36; Bruce v. United States, 17 How. 437, 15 L. ed. 129; United States v. Stone, 106 U. S. 525, 27 L. ed. 163, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 287; United States v. Honsman, 17 C. C. A. 283, 44 U. S. App. 171, 70 Fed. 581; Townsend v. Everett, 4 Ala. 607; State v. Newton, 33 Ark. 276; Mann v. Yazoo City, 31 Miss. 574; State ex rel. Rutledge v. Holman, 93 Mo. App. 611, 67 S. W. 747; State ex rel. Scott v. Greer, 101 Mo. App. 669, 74 S. W. 881; Com. v. Reitzel, 9 Watts & S. 109; Anderson County v. Hays, 99 Tenn. 542, 42 S. W. 266.

In the following cases it was held that where an officer served for more than one term, and it was afterwards discovered that he was in default, it would be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that this default took place during his last term, and that, accordingly, the sureties on his last official bond would be liable therefor: United States v. Earhart, 4 Sawy. 245, Fed. Cas. No. 15,018; Heppe v. Johnson, 73 Cal. 265, 14 Pac. 833; Kagay v. Trustees of Schools, 68 Ill. 75; Pape v. People, 19 Ill. App. 24; Fox Dist. Twp. v. McCord, 54 Iowa, 346, 6 N. W. 536; Bernhard v. Wyandotte, 33 Kan. 465, 6 Pac. 617; Stoner v. Keith County, 48 Neb. 279, 67 N. W. 311; Clark v. Douglas, 58 Neb. 571, 79 N. W. 158; Kelly v. State, 25 Ohio St. 567; Vaughan v. Evans, 1 Hill, Eq. 414.

In the following cases it was held that, where an officer had served for more than one term, and the sureties on the last term were sued for his default, the burden of proof was upon them to show that the default occurred before their bond was given: Weakley v. Cherry Twp. 62 Kan. 867, 63 Pac. 433; Readfield v. Shaver, 50 Me. 36, 79 Am. Dec. 592; Pine County v. Willard, 39 Minn. 125, 1 L.R.A. 118, 12 Am. St. Rep. 622, 39 N. W. 71; Board of Education v. Robinson, 81 Minn. 305, 83 Am. St. Rep. 374, 84 N. W. 105; State v. Bobleter, 83 Minn. 479, 86 N. W. 461; Hetten v. Lane, 43 Tex. 279; Parsons v. Miller, 46 W. Va. 334, 32 S. E. 1017.

a different rule should apply where sureties file a bill in equity for relief from the false and fraudulent reports made by the officer. This contention is fully met and determined adversely to appellants' view in the case of Fogarty v. Ream, 100 Ill. 366. That was a bill in equity filed by sureties for the purpose of being relieved from the payment of money where the default had occurred in the previous terms of the guardian. In disposing of that question this court, on page 377 of 100 Ill., said: "Had it appeared Lynch still had the trust funds on hand, or other funds with which to replace the same, when complainant became his surety on his official bond, his liability for any waste of such funds thereafter would not be contested. It is sought, however, to prove the guardian did not have in his possession or control the trust funds at the time complainant became his surety, but had previously wasted the same, and was then, and has ever since continued to be, insolvent. This the policy of the law will not permit him to do. It would open a wide door for frauds in such matters. Here the guardian elects to charge himself with the full amount of a claim in his favor for funds belonging to his ward. It is neither a false nor a fictitious claim. The money is absolutely due from the guardian to his ward, and neither the guardian nor his surety will be permitted to deny he has the money admitted to be in his hands. Any other rule would be a most unsafe one and would lead to results the law will not tolerate. No case exactly analogous with the one at bar has before arisen in this state, but the same principle has been applied to sureties of defaulting municipal officers. Morley v. Metamora, supra; Chicago v. Gage, 95 Ill. 593, 35 Am. Rep. 182; Cawley v. People, 95 Ill. 249. . . . Roper v. Sangamon Lodge, supra."

Finding no error in this record, the judgment of the Appellate Court for the Third District is affirmed.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

A. M. HORNER, Plff. in Err.,
v.
THEODORE SCHINSTOCK.

(— Kan. —, 101 Pac. 996.)

Judgment — collateral attack — perjury.

A party against whom a judgment was obtained by the perjury of the adverse party committed in testifying on the trial of the action wherein the judgment was rendered cannot, while the judgment remains in force, maintain an action against such adverse party for damages alleged to have been suffered because of such perjury.

Headnote by BENSON, J.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

(May 8, 1909.)

ERROR to the District Court for Kingman County to review a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to recover damages alleged to have been caused by the giving of testimony willfully and corruptly false. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. W. Fairchild for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. George L. Hay and L. F. Walter, for defendant in error:

The action cannot be entertained while the former judgment remains free from action or proceedings impairing its original force.

Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, 13 L.R.A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159, 25 Pac. 970, 27 Pac. 537; Smith v. Lewis, 3 Johns. 157, 3 Am. Dec. 469; Cunningham v. Brown, 18 Vt. 123, 46 Am. Dec. 140; Dunlap v. Glidden, 31 Me. 435, 52 Am. Dec. 625; Peck v. Woodbridge, 3 Day, 30; Demerit v. Lyford, 27 N. H. 541; Lyford v. Demeritt, 32 N. H. 234; Cottle v. Cole, 20 Iowa, 481; Laithe v. Mc-

Case Note. — Judgment in original action as bar to action by defeated party against the adverse party for perjury in procuring it.

This note is confined to cases in which an action was brought for damages against one by whose alleged perjured testimony upon a former trial a judgment was secured against the complainant in the second action. Cases involving merely the question whether an action for damages resulting from perjured testimony may be maintained have been excluded.

As to perjury as ground for relief against judgment, see exhaustive note to Graves v. Graves, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 216.

The distinction between the cases included in the earlier note and those discussed in the present note is that, while in the one case the plaintiff claims that the judgment is void because of the false testimony and seeks relief therefrom, in the cases under discussion in this note, the plaintiff admits that the judgment is valid, or at least enforceable against him, and he seeks to recover damages for the injuries caused him by such judgment.

The few reported cases upon this point are in harmony with HORNER v. SCHINSTOCK in holding that such an action will not lie while the former judgment stands. In addition to the several cases cited and quoted in that opinion, a few others may be noted.

Thus, in McCaferly v. O'Brien, 1 Cin. Sup. Ct. Rep. 64, it was held that an action of this character could not be maintained. The Donald, 7 Kan. 254, 12 Kan. 340; Bleakley v. Barclay, 75 Kan. 470, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 230, 89 Pac. 906.

Benson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff alleged that in a former action between the same parties the defendant had given testimony which was wilfully and corruptly false, and had thereby obtained a judgment against the plaintiff, causing damages for which he prayed judgment. A demurrer to this petition was sustained, and of this ruling the plaintiff complains.

It was held in Laithe v. McDonald, 12 Kan. 340, that where a party had obtained a judgment by wilful and corrupt perjury committed in the absence of the other party, who had exercised due diligence, the judgment should be vacated in an action brought for that purpose under § 568 of the Civil Code, which provides that the district courts may vacate or modify their own judgments "for fraud practised by the successful party in obtaining the judgment or order." Gen. Stat. 1901, § 5054. The case just referred to is cited by the plaintiff as sustaining his contention, but it does not. That was a direct attack upon the judgment to set it aside. By this action the plaintiff treats the judgment as valid, and seeks to recover damages suffered from it. Such an action cannot be maintained. It is the judgment that causes the injury, and it is legally impossible that the losing party to a final adjudication should have an action against his successful adversary to recoup in damages for what he was thus adjudged to render. A judgment, unless set aside or reversed, marks the end of the controversy, and not a mere pause in the litigation. It is possible that a miscarriage of justice may occur through perjury in securing a judgment. It is also possible that damages, if they could be awarded in a new action, might be recovered through the perjury of the other party, and so each succeeding adjudication might be re-examined in a fresh action until the parties were exhausted. It will not do to open the door to such general mischief, in order to afford relief against the supposed hardships of a particular case. While decisions upon the precise situation are not numerous, they are persuasive.

In an action commenced in New York to recover damages because of a judgment obtained by the alleged perjury of the defendant on a trial between the same parties in Connecticut, it was said in the opinion of Justice Spencer, after stating the evils that would result from the precedent if recovery were permitted: "The old rule is the safest, that the parties must come prepared at the trial to vindicate themselves, and to detect the falsity of the testimony brought against them, if it be untrue; or they must take their chance of obtaining a new trial by showing that they were surprised, and that they have detected the imposition." Smith v. Lewis, 3 Johns. 157, 167, 168, 3 Am. Dec. 469. In a concurring opinion in the same case Chief Justice Kent observed: "It would be against public policy and convenience; it would be productive of endless litigation, and it would be contrary to established precedent—to allow the losing party to try the cause over again in a counter suit because he was not prepared to meet his adversary at the trial of the first suit. The general law of the land, and the rules of every superior court of competent jurisdiction, sufficiently provide against forcing a party to trial without giving him a due opportunity to prepare for his defense, and cases of surprise and injustice are generally redressed by the discretionary power of the courts in setting aside verdicts." In addition to the power to set aside verdicts upon motion, referred to in the foregoing quotation, our Code (Gen. Stat. 1901, § 5056) provides court said that this was not an action for a new trial, or for the equitable interference of the court to prevent injustice, but a suit for damages growing out of an alleged fraud committed by the defendant on the plaintiff; but, as the judgment rendered was a final judgment, it could not be collaterally impeached.

To the same effect was the decision in Bostwick v. Lewis, 2 Day, 447, which was an action by the plaintiff to recover damages from the defendant for suborning a witness in a prior action between the two parties.

And, in Cunningham v. Brown, 18 Vt. 123, 46 Am. Dec. 140, which was an action against a witness for false testimony upon a former trial, it was held that the action could not be maintained without virtually putting it in the power of every suitor to re-examine every suit in which he is cast, and to try the witnesses for perjury by instituting against them a civil suit.

So, in Eyres v. Sedgewicke, Cro. Jac. 601, which was an action of a similar character, the court said that there was no precedent for such an action, and that was reason enough why it should not be sustained.

So, also, in Damport v. Sympson, Cro. Eliz. 520, which was an action on the case against the defendant for falsely swearing in an action of trespass against himself, whereby the plaintiff recovered less damages than he would but for the alleged perjury, it was held that the action was not maintainable, and the court said, among other reasons, "If this might be suffered, every witness would be drawn in question."

that a new action may be maintained for that purpose. The plaintiff was not, therefore, denied a remedy by due course of law, as he contends.

This question was presented in the supreme court of Maine in an early case. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant, in a former action against him, had recovered by means of false testimony, and sued for damages caused by the judgment obtained through such perjury. The court said: "But the judgment against the plaintiff, so long as it remains in force, must be considered as true and just. He cannot be permitted to aver the falsity of that judgment as the ground for the recovery of damages. It constitutes in itself a clear and unequivocal denial of his allegations. He says that, by the fraud and conspiracy of the defendants, he has lost the land, but the judgment imports that it was properly rendered in the ordinary course of judicial proceedings. . . . The plaintiff himself presents the judgment as the cause of his injury and the basis of his claim against all of the defendants. He does not seek to pass by it as res inter alios acta, but in substance admits it to be binding upon him, though he contends it was unjustly obtained, and alleges that his damages have been caused by it." Dunlap v. Glidden, 31 Me. 435, 437, 52 Am. Dec. 625. The same result was reached in Wisconsin, and was stated in a clear and forcible opinion by Whiton, J., wherein the principle was held applicable to the alleged perjury of a party in securing an adjudication by the officers of the Federal land district, whereby the plaintiff had lost a tract of land. A demurrer to the declaration was sustained, and, while the general proposition that damages caused through perjury were recoverable in a proper case was conceded, still it was held that the gist of that action was not the perjury, but the unjust recovery consequent upon it. It was said in the opinion: "The reason why the suit cannot be maintained is not that the false statement was made on oath, but because it was testimony taken in the course of a judicial investigation before a tribunal clothed with authority to decide the matters in controversy between the parties, and was taken in relation to the matter decided. Should the judgment recovered in this suit be permitted to stand, the case would present this anomaly; that, while the land which was the subject of controversy between the parties would belong to the plaintiff in error, the reason for the recovery against him in this suit would be the injustice of the order or decree of the officers of the United States, by which it was awarded to him." Abbott v. Bahr, 3 Pinney (Wis.) 193, 195. A like decision was made in New Hampshire. A 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

trustee, in the process of foreign attachment, had been discharged upon his oath alleged to have been false. It was held that an action on the case for damages consequent upon the discharge so obtained would not lie. It was said: "It is quite manifest that in this action the plaintiff seeks to try again the same question that was tried and decided in the former suit between the same parties. This, on well-settled principles, he cannot be permitted to do." Lyford v. Demerriett, 32 N. H. 234, 237.

In a case recently decided in this court an effort was made in habeas corpus proceedings to retry an issue that had been determined between the same parties by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction in another state. Mr. Justice Porter said: "All courts are likely to be deceived by perjured testimony, and to permit a defeated party to go to another court, foreign or domestic, and procure a retrial of the same issues on the ground that the successful party had fraudulently procured the former judgment upon false testimony, would make litigation endless, and judgments as unsubstantial as the stuff that dreams are made of." Bleakley v. Barclay, 75 Kan. 462, 470, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 230, 89 Pac. 906. While the issue presented in this case is not the same, the principle stated is quite applicable. 1 Freeman, Judgm. § 289; 1 Black, Judgm. § 296; Pico v. Cohn, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159, note p. 165 (91 Cal. 129, 13 L.R.A. 336, 25 Pac. 970, 27 Pac. 537). The fact that the judgment was rendered in the same court where this action was commenced cannot affect the application of the rule. If maintainable here, it could be brought in any court having jurisdiction wherein the defendant might be summoned.

Section 2307 of the General Statutes of 1901, cited as authority for this action, prevents the merger of the civil rights in a criminal prosecution for a felony, but it does not create a remedy where none existed before the prosecution was instituted.

The judgment is affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

JAMES HARGIS et al., Appts.,
v.

W. G. BEGLEY et al.

(— Ky. —, 112 S. W. 602.)

Bond — bail — departure from state — liability.

1. Sureties on the bond of one under indictment for felony do not act at their peril in permitting him to leave the state on a visit, so as to be absolutely liable in case he is prevented from returning in time for his trial, because of an unavoidable accident to his person.

Same—casualty—gun-shot wound.

2. An accidental gun-shot wound which prevents one under an indictment for crime, who has left the state on a visit, from returning in time for trial, is within the operation of a statute allowing relief to his sureties for unavoidable casualty or misfortune preventing the principal from appearing and defending.

Same—nonappearance—excuse.

3. Sureties on the bond of one who, being under indictment for crime, did not appear for trial, may excuse their failure to appear at the term of court at which the case was called, by showing that they relied on a printed court calender which did not show the term at which the case was called, and that they were ignorant of the change from the calender as printed.

(September 29, 1908.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Leslie County in defendants' favor in a suit to enjoin the enforcement of a bail bond. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cleon K. Calvert and J. J. C. Bach for appellants.

Messrs. Ira Fields and James H. Jeffries for appellees.

Case Note.—Liability of bail where principal fails to appear for no fault of his own.

It is a well-established proposition of law that the sureties in a recognizance will not be liable thereunder for the failure of the principal to appear if such failure was caused by no fault of the principal. In accordance with this rule, if the principal is dead when the day for his appearance in court arrives, his sureties will be excused from liability on his bail bond. Co. Litt. 206a; Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wall. 366, 21 L. ed. 287; Pynes v. State, 45 Ala. 52; Ringeman v. State, 136 Ala. 131, 34 So. 351; State v. Cone, 32 Ga. 663; Russell v. State, 45 Ga. 9; Mather v. People, 12 Ill. 9; Piercy v. People, 10 Ill. App. 219; Woolfolk v. State, 10 Ind. 532; Bonner v. Com. 27 Ky. L. Rep. 652, 85 S. W. 1106; State v. Crane, 17 N. J. L. 191; State v. McNeal, 18 N. J. L. 333; State v. Traphagen, 45 N. J. L. 134; People v. Manning, 8 Cow. 297, 18 Am. Dec. 451; People v. Wissig, 7 Daly, 23; People v. Perlstein, 28 N. Y. S. R. 171, 7 N. Y. Supp. 662; Granberry v. Pool, 14 N. C. (3 Dev. L.) 155; Bank of Mt. Pleasant v. Pollock, 1 Ohio, 35.

Upon the same principle the sureties will not be liable where the principal subsequently appears and shows that his nonappearance on the day set in the recognizance was caused by his sickness. Chase v. People, 2 Colo. 481; Russell v. State, supra; Hopkins v. Com. 5 Ky. L. Rep. 419; Baker v. State, 21 Tex. App. 359, 17 S. W. 256; Strey v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 27 S. W. 137.

And it would be a good defense on the part of the sureties if their principal's failure to appear was caused by his being confined to his bed by reason of injuries arising from his being thrown from a horse (People v. Tubbs, 37 N. Y. 586); or from his being disabled by wounds (Com. v. Craig, 6 Rand. (Va.) 732).

And, in McArdle v. McDaniel, 75 Ga. 270, judgment upon a forfeited recognizance was vacated upon the motion of the principal after he had been tried and acquitted upon 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) a later appearance, where he showed that his absence at the first term was caused by his own sickness, and at the second by the sickness of his wife.

But, in Com. v. Hart, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. 148, the court refused to remit a forfeiture of bail merely because the failure of the principal to appear was caused by his being summoned by telegram out of the state to attend a sick wife, where it appeared that the witnesses for the commonwealth left the state and remained away, making it impossible to try the principal, though he appeared at a subsequent term.

In Com. v. Fleming, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 491, the sureties upon a recognizance were discharged from liability where it appeared that their principal, prior to the forfeiture of his bond, was tried upon a charge of lunacy and duly adjudged a lunatic, and ordered to be sent to an asylum, and, while being conducted to the asylum in the custody of an officer appointed by the court, escaped, and was at large when the bond was forfeited.

On the other hand, in Adler v. State, 35 Ark. 517, 37 Am. Rep. 48, it was held to be no defense, in a prosecution upon a bail bond, for the sureties to show that, at the time the principal was required to appear, he was insane, and had been taken out of the state and confined in an insane asylum in another state to be treated for his insanity,—upon the ground that the sureties had no right to permit him to be sent out of the state.

So, in Ringeman v. State, supra, it was held that the sureties were not released from their liability by the fact that their principal was so ill of consumption that it became necessary, for the preservation of his life, for him to go to another state; that, at the time the forfeiture was taken, he was still suffering from such malady, and that a return at that time could not have been made without serious detriment to his health, or without imminent danger to his life. The court went on to say that his illness, however severe and critical, was not such an act of God, in legal contemplation,

Nunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Prior to October, 1906, one Doug Hays was indicted in the Leslie circuit court, charged with a felony, and his bail fixed at $500. Appellants, James Hargis, Ed. Callahan, and S. B. Stidham, executed the usual bond for the appearance of Doug Hays at the October term of the Leslie circuit court to answer the charge. He failed to attend, and there was an order made forfeiting his bail bond, and another bench warrant issued, and his bail fixed at $1,000, and summons was awarded against his sureties, appellants. At the February term, 1907, of the court, appellants failed to answer, and a judgment was rendered against them for the amount of the bond. This action was instituted by appellants to enjoin the collection of this judgment.

As reasons why appellants should not be compelled to pay this judgment, they presented the following: That they and Doug Hays resided in Breathitt county, about 45 miles from Hyden, in Leslie county, the place where the judgment was rendered; that, shortly after the bail bond was executed, Doug Hays went to the state of Minnesota on a visit to his brother, who resided there; that while there Doug Hays and his brother went on a hunting trip, and Doug Hays accidentally shot and wounded himself, and it was impossible for him to appear at the Leslie circuit court in October in fulfillment of the bond; that, after he became able to travel, he returned to Breathitt county, and as would relieve his sureties from the obligation of his bond.

And, in Bonner v. Com. 27 Ky. L. Rep. 652, 85 S. W. 1196, it was held that the fact that the principal was confined with a serious illness in the hospital, physically incapacitating him from appearing in accordance with his recognizance, did not release his bail. To quote from the opinion: "The bail will be bound until the accused is able to appear, and his failure to appear and surrender himself in answer to the indictment is a breach of the recognizance."

So, in Markham v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 91, 25 S. W. 127, it was held, under the statute regulating recognizances, that, in pleading sickness of the principal as a defense to a scire facias on a forfeited bail bond, it must be shown that his failure to appear at court arose from no fault on his part, and that sickness should not be deemed a cause sufficient to exonerate the principal and his sureties, unless such principal appear before final judgment on the bail bond in answer to the accusation against him, or show sufficient cause for not so appearing.

And, in State v. Edwards, 4 Humph. 226, it was held that the fact that a principal was sick constituted no reason for his non-appearance in obedience to his recognizance, which would excuse his bail from surrendering him at a subsequent term.

In Piercy v. People 10 Ill. App. 219, it was held that a violent sickness which prevented the principal from being in court was not such an act of God as would, under the Criminal Code, exonerate the sureties and entitle them to a discharge. Here, however, it appeared that the principal was out of the state.

In Smith v. State, 17 Ga. 462, in accordance with the general rule enunciated at the beginning of this note, a final judgment upon a scire facias on a bail bond was set aside where it appeared that the principal's counsel, understanding that he had an agreement with the solicitor general that certain other cases were to be called up before his clients, had dismissed the defendant from attendance, and, upon the case being called and the solicitor general denying such agreement, he asked for ten or fifteen minutes' time to send for the principal.

And, in Mason v. People, 17 Ill. App. 331, it was held that a forfeiture of a recognizance should be set aside where it appeared that the failure of the principal to appear was caused by his being informed by his attorneys that the venue was changed, and that he need not attend the court in that county any more, and he was in the county to which he understood the venue had been changed when he learned that the forfeiture had been asked for, and he immediately started for the county in which he had given bail.

The same conclusion was reached in Rawlings v. State, 38 Neb. 590, 57 N. W. 286, where it was shown that another case preceded the case of the principal, and he was informed by his attorney that his case would not be reached until the afternoon of the next day, and he did not appear until the afternoon of the next day, when, owing to the failure of the one whose case was before his to appear, he found that his case had been called sooner than he expected and his recognizance forfeited.

But, in People v. Haggerty, 5 Daly, 532, the court refused to vacate a judgment on a forfeited recognizance, where the non-appearance of the principal was caused by his reliance upon a verbal agreement of his counsel and the district attorney to postpone the trial of his case or give him notice,—upon the ground that such stipulation could be enforced only when in writing.

So, in Wray v. People, 70 Ill. 664, it was held that where the principal in a recognizance failed to appear at the time required, in consequence of being bound to appear at the same time in a court in another state, this would afford a good cause for setting aside a forfeiture of his recognizance, if he, in good faith, surrendered himself as soon as he could after being released from attendance in the other court and in a reasonable time after the forfeiture.

Upon the same principle, if the governor of the state in which the recognizance was given surrenders the principal upon the executed another bail bond for the $1,000. It is made to appear that they failed to attend the Leslie circuit court, which began on the first Monday in February, 1907, for the reason that they did not know that there was a February term of that court; that they believed that the term began on the third Monday in March, 1907; that they relied upon the Bradley & Gilbert Company court calender for the year 1907, which fixed the term for the Leslie circuit court on the third Mondays in March, June, and November; that they did not know of the change fixing the terms of the Leslie circuit court to begin in February, May, and October. They filed with their pleadings the court calender of Bradley & Gilbert Company for the year 1907, and it substantiates their requisition of the governor of another state, this will discharge the sureties. Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wall. 366, 21 L. ed. 287; Adler v. State, 35 Ark. 517, 37 Am. Rep. 48; People v. Moore, 4 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 205; State v. Allen, 2 Humph. 258; State v. Adams, 3 Head, 260.

So, the sureties will be discharged if the principal, having given bond to appear before a United States court in one district, is, with the consent of that court, removed for trial under an indictment in another district. Re Beavers, 131 Fed. 366.

And the fact that the principal was arrested and imprisoned by military authorities will excuse a surety in a recognizance for the appearance of his principal to answer to an indictment. Belding v. State, 25 Ark. 315, 99 Am. Dec. 214, 4 Am. Rep. 26; Com. v. Rowland, 4 Met. (Ky.) 225; and Com. v. Webster, 1 Bush, 616.

In Com. v. Terry, 2 Duv. 383, it was held to be a sufficient defense to a scire facias on a forfeited recognizance that, on the day fixed for his appearance, the principal was a soldier in the Federal Army, at a remote distance from the court, and was refused a furlough to enable him to attend in discharge of his recognizance, which he would have done had he not been thus prevented without his fault and against his will.

So, the enforced military or naval service of a principal will be a sufficient excuse for his nonappearance in accordance with his recognizance, to discharge his sureties. Alford v. Irwin, 34 Ga. 25; McCluskey v. Brock, 34 Ga. 206; and Robertson v. Patterson, 7 East, 405.

The authorities differ as to whether or not the voluntary enlistment of a principal in the Army or Navy, whereby he was unable to appear according to the terms of a recognizance into which he had entered, would discharge the sureties. In the following cases this was held to be no defense: Wininger v. State, 23 Ind. 228; State v. Scott, 20 Iowa, 63; Sayward v. Conant, 11 Mass. 146; Harrington v. Dennie, 13 Mass. 93; Lamphire v. State, 73 N. H. 463, 62 Atl. 786, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 615.

Upon the same principle it was held in 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

claim. The lower court concluded that, notwithstanding these alleged facts, which were not disputed, appellants had no cause of action.

Appellees' counsel contends that appellants, the sureties of Doug Hays, acted at their peril when they permitted him to leave the state to visit his brother, and it was no defense to the action to recover the amount of the bond that Hays was accidentally shot, and thereby prevented from appearing at the October term of the Leslie circuit court, and refers to the cases of Starr v. Com. 7 Dana, 243, Alguire v. Com. 3 B. Mon. 349, and Withrow v. Com. 1 Bush, 17, and other cases of similar import as sustaining their position. These cases are unlike the case at bar. The case in 7 Dana, 243, was one

Huggins v. People, 39 Ill. 241, that, if an arrested soldier was surrendered or abandoned by the military to civil authority, he could not, by giving bail and voluntarily placing himself under the military jurisdiction, insist that his bail was discharged by the principle of vis major.

But, in Gingrich v. People, 34 Ill. 448, it was held that the fact that the principal, without the knowledge or consent of his sureties, enlisted in the military service of the United States, and that since his enlistment he had been with his regiment in another state, under the military authority and rule, and was not at any time at liberty to surrender himself; and his sureties were unable to arrest, take, or surrender him in satisfaction of his recognizance,—showed ground for a continuance of the proceeding by scire facias upon the principal's forfeited recognizance, but presented no good defense.

In People v. Cushney, 44 Barb. 118; People v. Cook, 30 How. Pr. 110; and McFarland v. Wilbur, 35 Vt. 342, the fact that the principal had enlisted in the service of the United States, and had continued to be under the control of such service, was held to be a good defense on the part of his sureties.

Upon the same principle it was held, in Com. v. Overby, 80 Ky. 208, 44 Am. Rep. 471, overruling Com. v. House, 13 Bush, 679, that the bail would be exonerated where it appeared that, upon the day following the execution of the bond, the principal was arrested by an officer of the United States and carried before a United States commissioner, and by him held to appear and answer at the next term thereafter of the United States circuit court, upon the same charge for which he had been required to appear and answer in the state court, and, failing to give bail, he was committed to jail, where he remained until he was indicted, tried, and convicted in the United States court for the offense, and sentenced to confinement in the penitentiary of another state.

So, in Woods v. State, 51 Tex. Crim. Rep. 595, 103 S. W. 895, and Caldwell v. Com.

where an infant was defendant in the indictment, and he failed to appear to answer it; and the sureties on the bail bond defended upon the ground that the infant's mother had taken him out of the state and kept him away until after the bond was forfeited. The court adjudged that the defense was insufficient. The case in 3 B. Mon. 349, was where the defendant had not appeared because he was imprisoned by the state authorities in Louisville, Kentucky. This fact was pleaded as a defense to the forfeiture of the bail bond, and was held insufficient, because it was defectively pleaded. The case in 1 Bush, 17, was one where one Catlin, who was charged with murder in Marion county, Kentucky, was arrested and gave bond, and then went to the state of Indiana, where he was arrested and imprisoned for the violation of the law in that state. While thus imprisoned in the state of Indiana, his bail bond was forfeited for his nonappearance in the Marion circuit court, and the court held that his enforced absence in the state of Indiana at the time the forfeiture proceeding was had was not a defense to the forfeiture. In the last two cases referred to the defendant was prevented from attending court in compliance with the bail bond on account of wrongful acts committed by them. They were imprisoned for committing other crimes. When the sureties executed bond in the first case referred to they knew that the infant was in the charge of his mother, and, when they permitted her to take him from the state, they took the risk of her permitting him to return, or of his returning of his own will in spite of her objections. If it had been made to appear in those cases that the defendants had been prevented from appearing in answer to their recognizance, not on account of any wrongful act or dereliction on their part, but on account of unavoidable 14 Gratt. 698, it was held to be a good defense to a scire facias upon a forfeited bail bond that, at the time set for his appearance, the principal was held in custody in another county, and that he subsequently appeared and answered to the charge against him.

And, in People v. Bartlett, 3 Hill, 570, it was held to be a good answer to an action on a recognizance that, intermediate to the date of the recognizance and the term of court therein mentioned, the principal was arrested and committed to jail in another county, where he was kept in confinement until after the day of appearance, and until he was convicted and sentenced to state's prison, where he had ever since remained.

On the other hand, in the following cases, imprisonment in another county of the same state was held not to be such a defense as would exonerate the sureties from liability on their principal's bond, upon the ground that it was within the power of the sureties to compel the principal to be produced in court: Brown v. People, 26 Ill. 28; Mix v. People, 26 Ill. 32; State v. Merrihew, 47 Iowa, 112, 29 Am. Rep. 464; Alguire v. Com. 3 B. Mon. 349.

And, in United States v. French, 1 Gall. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 15,165, the United States circuit court refused to discharge bail whose principal was confined in jail under the process of the court of the state, upon the ground that there was no physical or legal impossibility of producing the defendant, though it added that the circumstances of the case might furnish reasons for a respite of the recognizance until the next term. This same question arose in United States v. Stricker, 12 Blatchf. 389, Fed. Cas. No. 16,410, upon a motion to remit a penalty in a forfeiture of a recognizance, which motion was denied upon the ground that the question could be determined on the trial 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) of the action which had been brought upon the forfeited recognizance.

Imprisonment of the principal in another state will not, as a general rule, discharge the sureties, if he fails to appear at the day set in his bond (Hall v. Com. 20 Ky. L. Rep. 99, 45 S. W. 458; State v. Horn, 70 Mo. 466, 35 Am. Rep. 437); upon the ground, in the following cases, that the principal was prevented from appearing by reason of his own voluntary act, which rendered him amenable to the criminal laws of another jurisdiction (United States v. Van Fossen, 1 Dill. 406, Fed. Cas. No. 16,607; Yarbrough v. Com. 89 Ky. 151, 25 Am. St. Rep. 522, 12 S. W. 143; King v. State, 18 Neb. 375, 25 N. W. 519); or upon the ground expressed in the following cases, that the sureties were to blame in permitting him to leave the state (Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wall. 366, 21 L. ed. 287; Cain v. State, 55 Ala. 170; Withrow v. Com. 1 Bush, 17; Devine v. State, 5 Sneed, 623).

In Granberry v. Pool, 14 N. C. (3 Dev. L.) 155, it was held that imprisonment of the principal for debt would not release his sureties from liability, since the latter could always arrest the former by paying the debt. Of course, the imprisonment of the principal after the bond had been declared forfeited would be no excuse for his nonappearance. People v. Nooney, 73 Hun, 566, 26 N. Y. Supp. 313.

Attention should be called to State v. Berry, 34 Ga. 546, in which the master of a slave, who had entered into a recognizance for the latter's appearance, was held to be discharged from his obligation by the abolition of slavery.

In Starr v. Com. 7 Dana, 243, which is set forth in HARGIS v. BEGLEY, the decision proceeded upon the ground that the mother could legally exercise no control over the infant principal against the rights of the bail, in whose custody the law deems the principal to be placed.

accident or sickness, over which they had no control, the results would have been different. See Com. v. Terry, 2 Duv. 383; Bonner v. Com. 27 Ky. L. Rep. 652, 85 S. W. 1196.

The second proposition presented by appellees' counsel is that the judgment was rendered in February, 1907, and this action was not instituted to set aside the judgment until the 31st day of May of that year, and that one court had passed between the date of the judgment and the institution of this action, and the court was without power to vacate or modify it, except upon the grounds set out in § 518 of the Civil Code of Practice, which it is claimed are not presented in this proceeding. This contention of appellees' counsel is correct, except the last proposition, to the effect that appellants present no grounds for vacating or modifying the judgment under § 518, Civ. Code Prac. The 7th subdivision of that section is as follows: "For unavoidable casualty or misfortune, preventing the party from appearing or defending." Casualty is that which happens without design or without being foreseen. If Hays was "accidentally shot," it was without design on his part; and if he was prevented from appearing at the Leslie circuit court by reason thereof it would be the same as if he had become seriously ill, and was thereby prevented from attending court. If Hays had been at his home in Breathitt county, and had been sick, and thereby prevented from attending the Leslie circuit court, it would not be contended that his sureties could not have successfully defended for his not appearing; and there is no reason why that defense would not avail them if his sickness had occurred to him while on a visit to his brother. It is true appellants, in their pleading, did not use the words, "that Hays was prevented from attending the Leslie circuit court by reason of an unavoidable casualty or misfortune;" but the facts stated by them, if true, show these facts.

We are of the opinion that the lower court erred in sustaining a demurrer to appellants' pleadings. The judgment is reversed and remanded for trial; and, if appellants' contentions are found to be true, the court will set aside the judgment, and render judgment according to the justice of the case, as provided in § 98, Civil Code Prac., which is as follows: "If, before judgment is entered against the bail, the defendant be surrendered or arrested, the court may, at its discretion, remit the whole or part of the sum specified in the bail bond."

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

J. T. MOREHEAD, Appt.,
v.
CITIZENS' DEPOSIT BANK.

(— Ky. —, 113 S. W. 501.)

Note — collateral — surety — release.

1. One who signs a note which is to be held as collateral for that of another, with the understanding that he is to sustain the relation of surety to the latter note, will be discharged from liability by the extension of time to the principal debtor, without his knowledge, by a holder with notice of the facts.

Same — renewal — consideration.

2. The acceptance of interest in advance is sufficient consideration for the renewal of a note, to release a surety who does not consent thereto.

Estoppel — surety — recognition of liability.

3. The filing by the father, who is surety on his son's note, of a claim against the latter's bankrupt estate for a sum due him, and the collection of a pro rata thereon, and its deposit by his attorney in the bank holding the son's note, to be applied thereon under the mistaken belief that the father was still liable on the note as surety, will not estop him from setting up his release by extension of time to the son on the paper.

(November 17, 1908.)

Case Note. — Effect of renewal of principal's obligation to release party to a note executed to the creditor as collateral.

This note, of course, excludes cases where the principal debtor pledges as collateral security notes owned by him.

It would seem that, when the court in the foregoing case found as a matter of fact that the maker of the collateral note was, by the express contract or distinct understanding of the parties, a surety upon the secured note, his liability was determined, as the rule that a surety is released by any arrangements made by the other parties without his knowledge or consent, which work to his prejudice, is apparently unquestioned. But, in the absence of such an understanding, which, of course, is a mere incident peculiar to this case, there remains an interesting question whether the maker of a note executed as a collateral security to another note is in the position of a surety, so as to be released by any extension of time on the secured note given without his knowledge or consent, or whether the note is to be considered merely as any other collateral and governed by the general, but by no means universal, rule that the renewal of a note secured by collateral security does not have the effect to release any of the collateral pledged to secure it.

Of course the ordinary manner of a person's APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for McLean County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to enforce a liability on a promissory note held as collateral to that of a bankrupt. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William B. Noe and J. W. Boston for appellant.

Messrs. Ben D. Ringo and Joe H. Miller for appellee.

Clay, C., delivered the opinion of the court:

J. W. Morehead, a son of appellant, was indebted to the Citizens' Deposit Bank in the sum of $750. The bank agreed that, if he would execute a note for this sum and secure the note by proper collateral, he could have further time within which to pay his debt. He then went to his father, J. T. Morehead, and brought him to the bank. There the president of the bank explained to him that it was necessary to have a surety for the note executed by his son, and appellant, after some hesitation, acquiesced in the arrangement. For the purpose of carrying out the arrangement, he executed a note payable one day after date for the sum of $750 to J. T. Morehead Company, the firm name under which J. W. Morehead was doing business. This note was then indorsed by J. W. Morehead for the firm, and delivered to the bank. The note of J. W. Morehead was not paid at maturity, but was renewed some three or four times thereafter, and the interest paid thereon. After all these renewals were made, and after the expiration of about two years and a half, the bank sued J. T. Morehead on the collateral note held by it. He defended on the ground that he was in effect a surety for his son, J. W. Morehead, on the original note of $750 executed by him to the bank; that after J. W. Morehead's note became due it was renewed three or four times, and the interest paid thereon; that this was done without his knowledge or consent; that such renewals operated to his prejudice, and served to release him from his liability as surety. The court rendered judgment for plaintiff below, and the defendant appeals.

The first question is: Did J. T. Morehead occupy the relation of surety on the note of J. W. Morehead? For the purpose of determining this question, we are not confined solely to the instrument executed, but may consider parol evidence. 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 343. According to the testimony of appellant, he signed the note as collateral security for the note executed by his son.

The president of the Citizens' Deposit Bank testified as follows:

J. W. Morehead at that time was indebted to the bank in the sum of $750, which amount was then due. I requested of him that said note or debt herein be paid or secured in some manner; if he desired to get any extension of time on it, it must be secured. Some time after I had informed him of that fact, he and his father came to the becoming a surety upon a note is to sign the secured note itself, and the execution of a distinct note for the purpose of securing a second note is somewhat unusual. While there are cases involving notes of such a character and the rights of the parties thereto, there appears to be no other reported case in which the effect of a renewal of the secured note to release the collateral note is expressly discussed, or the rules applicable to such facts stated.

In Jennison v. Sceets, 60 Ill. App. 607, where a note had been executed as collateral security to another note, and the time for the payment of the principal note had been extended, the court said that the jury should not have been inferentially instructed that the extension of the principal note operated as an extension of the collateral note; but the facts as given in the reported case are not sufficient to show whether or not the makers of the collateral note claimed to be released by such extension.

In Holland Trust Co. v. Waddell, 75 Hun, 104, 26 N. Y. Supp. 980, affirmed on opinion below in 151 N. Y. 666, 46 N. E. 1148, it was held that the plaintiff might maintain an action upon a certificate of deposit upon defendant's bank, which had been deposited with the plaintiff as collateral security for a promissory note of a third party, which had thereafter been renewed from time to time. This decision is based entirely upon the rule that the renewal of a note secured by collateral has not the effect to release such collateral. The court said: "The principle is too well settled to need the citation of authorities, that the renewing of notes from time to time in no way extinguishes the original debt; it is simply an extension of the time of payment and a change as to the evidence of the debt, and all collaterals pledged for the payment would remain as security notwithstanding the extension of the time of payment." There was a question in the case whether or not the plaintiff knew that the certificate of deposit had been issued merely as accommodation paper, but the court said that, even if the plaintiff did know that the certificate had been issued merely as accommodation paper, and that the payee had no account at the defendant's bank, the latter would still be liable thereon, under the facts as stated.

As to effect under negotiable-instruments law of extension of time to principal to release one who, on the face of the instrument, is primarily liable, but who is in fact surety, see case note to Vanderford v. Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 129.

bank,—it was not in my office,—and he proposed the execution of this note at that time by his father, J. T. Morehead, to be given as collateral security to be executed by his father, J. T. Morehead, to him, and which note he assigned to the bank as collateral security, at the same time executing his note with which this was filed as collateral security for $750, and he was given four months' time from that date by the execution of those notes.

Q. What conversation did you have with Mr. J. T. Morehead at that time about this transaction?

A. They came in, and it is a fact that, when the nature of the case was stated, that we required a surety for the execution of this note, Mr. J. T. Morehead did have some hesitancy in signing the note, and eventually he said he would sign it as it was his boy, and he wanted to help him out, and he was willing to do that much for him.

It is manifest from the foregoing that J. T. Morehead regarded himself in the light of a surety upon the $750 note of his son, and that the president of the bank regarded him in the same light, and accepted the collateral note with full knowledge of the relation which J. T. Morehead sustained to the note of his son. We think the rule is now well established that, as between himself and the party accommodated, the accommodation party is in effect a surety, and his right to recourse against the party accommodated is that of a surety against the principal debtor. As to other holders of the paper, his liability is in general that of a similar party (maker, acceptor, or indorser) who receives value, but he is so far a surety as to holders with notice of his accommodation character that he will be discharged by arrangements made to his prejudice with the principal debtor without his knowledge. 7 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 725; Guild v. Butler, 127 Mass. 386; Price County Bank v. McKenzie, 91 Wis. 658, 65 N. W. 507. Applying this principle to the case under consideration, we find that the collateral note was simply an accommodation paper; that it was executed with the distinct understanding with the bank that J. T. Morehead was in effect a surety on the $750 note executed by his son to the bank. This arrangement was effected not only with the knowledge of the bank, but by agreement with it.

Counsel for appellee insist, however, that the rule is that the renewal of a note secured by collateral security does not have the effect to release any of the collateral pledged to secure it. There can be no doubt that this is the general doctrine, and is recognized by this court in Bank of America v. McNeil, 10 Bush, 54, and Koehler v. Hus- 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

sey, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 317, 57 S. W. 251; but the facts of those cases bear no similarity to the case under consideration. The note in this case was not merely collateral deposited to secure the payment of a debt from J. W. Morehead to the bank, but was a note executed under and by virtue of an arrangement with the bank whereby it was agreed that J. T. Morehead was a surety upon the note of his son. We therefore conclude that he should be released under the same circumstances and conditions that any other surety should be released.

The record in this case shows that the original note was renewed some three or four times. The last renewal, which is filed with the petition in this case, is for the sum of only $750, with interest from the date of its maturity. This indicates not only that the interest on the note was paid, but that it was paid in advance. The acceptance of the interest thus paid was sufficient consideration for the renewal of the note. By accepting the new note under such circumstances, the bank put it out of its power to sue the principal debtor until the renewal note became due. This was true in the case of each of the renewals. Therefore, during each period of renewal, appellant could not have paid off the indebtedness of his son and taken steps to protect himself. We therefore conclude that he was prejudiced by the renewals made without his knowledge or consent, and that such action on the part of the bank released him from liability on the collateral note sued on in this action. Steger v. Jackson, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 434, 102 S. W. 329; Post v. Losey, 111 Ind. 74, 60 Am. Rep. 677, 12 N. E. 121; Perley v. Loney, 17 U. C. Q. B. 279; Alley v. Hopkins, 98 Ky. 668, 56 Am. St. Rep. 382, 34 S. W. 13. Especially should we hold this in view of the further fact that there is proof tending to show that J. W. Morehead was solvent at the time of the first renewal, and appellant might, if the bank had not made such renewal, take steps to protect himself.

But appellee insists that a note amounting to $1,000 was filed against the estate of J. W. Morehead, who was adjudged a bankrupt, in favor of appellant, and that a note of $200 was also filed in favor of his attorney, which notes were filed for the purpose of securing appellant in the payment of the collateral note of $750 sued on in this action; that such action was a recognition by appellant of his liability to appellee, and constitutes an act of estoppel. Appellant and his son both swear that the latter was indebted to the former in the sum of $1,200 to $1,400. Opposed to this testimony is that of certain statements made by the son to the effect that he owed his father nothing.

There is also the circumstance that, when appellant's attorney collected appellant's pro rata on the notes filed in the bankruptcy proceedings, he went to the bank and deposited the proceeds with it, to be applied on the note of $750. A few minutes thereafter, however, he returned to the bank and agreed to pay the money on the note of $750 executed by appellant, provided the bank would release appellant from further liability thereon. He claims that he reconsidered his action because he realized the fact that, in paying the money absolutely in the first instance, he was acting without authority. We do not think these facts are sufficient to estop appellant from setting up the defense made to the note sued on. The preponderance of evidence is to the effect that the son did owe the father. Even if appellant's attorney, under the mistaken belief that he was still liable as surety, had offered to make a payment on the note, this fact alone would not estop him from defending on the ground that he had been released, when, as a matter of fact, he had been released. Brandt, Suretyship, § 160; Robinson v. Offutt, 7 T. B. Mon. 540.

Being of the opinion that the collateral note sued on is simply accommodation paper, that it was accepted by the bank with the full knowledge and understanding that appellant was a mere surety on the note executed by his son, that the bank, without the knowledge or consent of appellant and for a valuable consideration, renewed the son's note on three or four occasions, and that appellee has shown no facts which would estop appellant from setting up the defense relied on, we therefore conclude that appellant has been released from all liability.

The judgment is reversed, and cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the petition.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

MAX FRISCH
v.
FRANK E. WELLS.

(200 Mass. 429, 86 N. E. 775.)

Election of remedies — contract — replevin.

A vendor who is to retain title until the purchase price is fully paid and a bill of sale given, and who, upon nonpayment of an instalment when due, brings suit against the vendee for the balance due, arresting and holding the body of the debtor until he releases himself by taking the statutory oath, is precluded from subsequently maintaining replevin for the property, although he failed to enter the writ in the first suit.

(January 5, 1909.)

R EPORT by the Superior Court for Essex County for the opinion of the full bench of an action brought to recover possession of certain personal property. Judgment for defendant.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Mr. Frederick E. Shaw, for plaintiff:

There was no final or decisive election between inconsistent remedies.

Washburn v. Great Western Ins. Co. 114 Mass. 175; Lord v. Bigelow, 124 Mass. 185; Miller v. Hyde, 161 Mass. 472, 25 L.R.A. 42, 42 Am. St. Rep. 424, 37 N. E. 760.

If what was done was under or because of the mistaken idea that Krasner was about to leave the state, then there was not an election of remedies.

Butler v. Hildreth, 5 Met. 49; Washburn v. Great Western Ins. Co. supra; Connihan v. Thompson, 111 Mass. 270.

Messrs. James H. Sisk, William E. Sisk, and Richard L. Sisk, for defendant.

Braley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Under the contract, title to the replevied chattels was not to pass to the vendee until the purchase price had been fully paid and a bill of sale given. But, after having paid

Case Note. — Bringing action for purchase price as waiver of right of vendor in conditional sale to recover property in specie.

The doctrine of FRISCH v. WELLS, while, as subsequently shown, opposed by some cases, seems to have the support of the weight of authority. It is supported by the following cases, which enunciate and apply the general principle that the seller of goods on conditional sale, upon default of the buyer in paying the purchase price, has two remedies open to him,—one, to assert his title to the goods and recover possession of them; the other, to treat the sale as an absolute one, and the title as having vested in the buyer, and bring an action to recover the purchase price. These remedies are inconsistent, and the pursuit of one precludes the other. The seller cannot, after having elected to treat the sale as absolute, and the title as having vested in the buyer, thereafter assert title to the property under the original retainer of title. Bell v. Old, 88 Ark. 99, 113 S. W. 1023; Butler v. Dodson, 78 Ark. 569, 94 S. W. 703; Parke & L. Co. v. White River Lumber Co. 101 Cal. 37, 35 Pac. 442; Crompton v. Beach, 62 Conn. 25, 18 L.R.A. 187, 36 Am. St. Rep. 323, 25 Atl. 446; Truax v. Parvis, 7 Houst. (Del.) 330, 32 Atl. 227; Smith v. Gilmore, a part by instalments, his failure to make other payments was a breach which entitled the vendor, who had not broken the contract, either to treat it as an agreement for goods sold and delivered, and to sue at once for the price, or in tort for conversion, or in replevin for their specific recovery. Bailey v. Hervey, 135 Mass. 172; Brown v. Magorty, 156 Mass. 209, 30 N. E. 1021; White v. Solomon, 164 Mass. 516, 518, 30 L.R.A. 537, 42 N. E. 104; Smith v. Aldrich, 180 Mass. 367, 369, 62 N. E. 381. If the first remedy was used, it rested upon the theory that after breach, at the election of the plaintiff, the title passed to the vendee, who received and retained the property. But, if the second remedy was resorted to, the remedial right rested upon the assumption that, as the bill of sale had not been given, the title still remained in the plaintiff. Brown v. Magorty, 156 Mass. 209, 211, 30 N. E. 1021. See Cooper v. Cooper, 147 Mass. 370, 373, 9 Am. St. Rep. 721, 17 N. E. 892. These remedial rights, although alternative, were therefore inconsistent, and, while the plaintiff had his choice of either, he could not resort to them all. Snow v. Alley, 156 Mass. 193, 195, 30 N. E. 691. Nor is the case of Miller v. Hyde, 161 Mass. 472, 25 L.R.A. 42, 42 Am. St. Rep. 424, 37 N. E. 760, on which the plaintiff relies, in conflict. A majority of the court there held that, without satisfaction, a judgment for the plaintiff, in an action of tort for conversion, did not vest in the defendant title to the chattels, and, as the remedies were consistent, replevin for 7 App. D. C. 192 (filing claim in orphans' court against estate of deceased buyer); American Process Co. v. Florida White Pressed Brick Co. (Fla.) 47 So. 942 (filing claim in bankruptcy court against buyer, a bankrupt); Elwood State Bank v. Mock, 40 Ind. App. 685, 82 N. E. 1003; Gaar S. & Co. v. Fleshman, 38 Ind. App. 490, 77 N. E. 744, 78 N. E. 348; Smith v. Barber, 153 Ind. 322, 53 N. E. 1014; Button v. Trader, 75 Mich. 295, 42 N. W. 834; Bailey v. Hervey, 135 Mass. 172; Whitney v. Abbott, 191 Mass. 59, 77 N. E. 524; Alden v. W. J. Dyer & Bro. 92 Minn. 134, 99 N. W. 784; Keystone Mfg. Co. v. Cassellius, 74 Minn. 115, 76 N. W. 1028; Poirier Mfg. Co. v. Kitts (N. D.) 120 N. W. 558; Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Mahon, 13 N. D. 516, 101 N. W. 903; D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Walther, 12 Okla. 20, 69 Pac. 953; Merchants' & P. Bank v. Thomas, 69 Tex. 237, 6 S. W. 565; Bensinger Self-Adding Cash Register Co. v. Cain, 4 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 499, 18 S. W. 136; Parlin & O. Co. v. Moline Plow Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 1087.

But where the contract of sale provides that the title to the property sold is to remain in the seller until the purchase price, with interest thereon and any judgment rendered therefor, is paid in full, the seller, on default of the buyer, may prosecute to judgment an action for the purchase price, and title will not pass until such judgment is paid. Fuller v. Byrne, 102 Mich. 461, 60 N. W. 980.

A suit for the purchase price is not an election as to that portion of the property conditionally sold, the purchase price of which is not then due and payable. Bryant v. Kenyon, 123 Mich. 151, 81 N. W. 1093.

So suit by attachment levied on the property conditionally sold, prior to default by the purchaser, does not amount to an election to treat the sale as absolute and the title to have vested in the purchaser. Edge-wood Distilling Co. v. Shannon, 60 Ark. 133, 29 S. W. 147.

In other jurisdictions it is held that bringing an action by the seller, and prosecuting it to judgment, do not waive the right to retake the property the title to which he retained in the original contract of sale, where the judgment remains unpaid. Thomason v. Lewis, 103 Ala. 426, 15 So. 830; E. E. Forbes Piano Co. v. Wilson, 144 Ala. 586, 39 So. 645, disapproving dictum to the contrary in Davis v. Millings, 141 Ala. 378, 37 So. 737; Vaughn v. Hopson, 10 Bush, 337; McPherson v. Acme Lumber Co. 70 Miss. 649, 12 So. 857; Campbell Printing Press & Mfg. Co. v. Rockaway Pub. Co. 56 N. J. L. 676, 44 Am. St. Rep. 410, 29 Atl. 681; Root v. Lord, 23 Vt. 568; Matthews v. Lucia, 55 Vt. 308.

Hickman v. Richburg, 122 Ala. 638, 26 So. 136, however, enunciated the doctrine that any unequivocal act on the part of the seller recognizing the title as being in the buyer would preclude the former from afterwards setting up title in himself, and when election between two inconsistent rights had been made it could not afterwards be revoked. This doctrine was held to apply to a seller of property on conditional sale who thereafter took steps to establish and enforce a materialman's lien on the property sold, although such attempt was ineffectual.

And see also Tanner & D. Engine Co. v. Hall, 89 Ala. 628, 7 So. 187, which holds that a title clause in a conditional-sale contract is waived by the seller causing attachment to be levied on the property conveyed, selling it thereunder, and becoming the purchaser.

In New York the rule is unsettled. In Orcutt v. Rickenbrodt, 42 App. Div. 238, 59 N. Y. Supp. 1008, it was held that the seller of personal property by a contract which provided that title was to remain in him until the purchase price had been paid, who took a note to represent the purchase price, could not assert title to the property after having brought an action on the note, although he thereafter discontinued it. The court said that this action was an election to pursue one of two inconsistent remedies, either of which was available to the seller at the time the election was made, and, having elected to resort to an action upon the note, he and all persons claiming under him were precluded from thereafter asserting tration in embalming which has power to adopt rules governing the care and disposition of human dead bodies and the business of embalming.

Legislature — delegated power — validity.

4. The legislature cannot delegate to a board authority to require a knowledge of embalming as a condition to receiving an undertaker's license.

(January 6, 1909.)

REPORT by the Supreme Judicial Court for Suffolk County for the opinion of the full bench of an application for writ of mandamus to compel the granting of an undertaker's license. Writ awarded.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Arthur P. Stone, for petitioner:

The police power cannot be used as a cloak for matters which the parties interested believe to be beneficial, but in which the public health is really a secondary consideration.

People v. Beattie, 96 App. Div. 383, 89 N. Y. Supp. 193; Re Aubrey, 36 Wash. 308, 104 Am. St. Rep. 952, 78 Pac. 900, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 927; Bessette v. People, 193 Ill. 334, 56 L.R.A. 558, 62 N. E. 215; Ex parte Sing Lee, 96 Cal. 354, 24 L.R.A. 195, 31 Am. St. Rep. 218, 31 Pac. 245; Re Sam Kee, 31 Fed. 680; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Thomas v. Hot Springs, 34 Ark. 553, 36 Am. Rep. 24; United States ex rel. Kerr v.

Ross, 5 App. D. C. 241; Schnaier v. Navarre Hotel & Importation Co. 182 N. Y. 83, 70 L.R.A. 722, 108 Am. St. Rep. 790, 74 N. E. 561; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 937, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1133; Bonnett v. Vallier, 136 Wis. 193, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 486, 116 N. W. 885; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 34 L. ed. 455, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862; Brimmer v. Rebman, 138 U. S. 78, 34 L. ed. 862, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 485, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Com. v. Strauss, 191 Mass. 545, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 968, 78 N. E. 136, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 842; Austin v. Murray, 16 Pick. 121; Com. v. Perry, 155 Mass. 117, 14 L.R.A. 325, 31 Am. St. Rep. 533, 28 N. E. 1126; Com. v. Essex Co. 13 Gray, 239; Winthrop v. New England Chocolate Co. 180 Mass. 464, 62 N. E. 969.

Mr. Gilbert A. A. Pevey, for respondents:

In the exercise of police power for the prevention of injuries to the right of the public, and for the security of the public health or welfare, statutes may be passed prohibiting, unless under certain conditions, the prosecution of certain employments or the doing of certain things not illegal in themselves.

Com. v. Fahey, 5 Cush. 411; Com. v. Strauss, 191 Mass. 545, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 968, 78 N. E. 136, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 842; Com. v. Gilbert, 160 Mass. 157, 22 L.R.A.

to create a monopoly, to build up a class, and to deny the right to contract. People v. Ringe, 125 App. Div. 592, 110 N. Y. Supp. 74.

And a provision in a section of a town by-law forbidding any person, without permission signed by a majority of the selectmen, to bring any dead body into the town, or to convey through the streets any dead body so brought in, is not authorized by a statute giving the selectmen authority to make regulations for the interment of the dead and for funerals; and the further provision of such section of the by-law forbidding persons without license from the selectmen to bury any dead body so brought into the town, on their own premises or elsewhere within the town, being a prohibition, and not a regulation, is void. So, the provision of another section, that no person shall act as undertaker within the town unless appointed and licensed by the selectmen, if intended more effectually to enforce the prohibition of the foregoing section, is void. Austin v. Murray, 16 Pick. 121.

But, under a statute empowering boards of health to make all regulations which they deem necessary concerning burial grounds and interments, and to establish penalties not exceeding $100 for their violation, a board of health may make a regulation forbidding any person except a cemetery superintendent, a duly appointed undertaker, or other person specially authorized, to move from any house or place within the city, to any place of burial, the body of any deceased person, and requiring undertakers to collect, and account for, burial fees, and to give a bond for the faithful performance of their duties, and fixing a penalty of not more than $20 for violation of the regulations; and such regulations are not unreasonable, and their validity is not affected by the fact that they may have been made with reference to a particular person; and the failure of an appointed undertaker to file a bond warrants the revocation of his appointment. Com. v. Goodrich, 13 Allen, 546.

And, under a statute giving officers of a borough power to prohibit the interment of deceased persons within the limits of the borough, and to make such other regulations as may be necessary for the health and cleanliness thereof, the authorities have power to pass an ordinance providing that permits shall be taken out for the burial of the dead; and such ordinance is not unreasonable, and is valid as to an undertaker who has obtained a burial permit from a city outside the borough, in which the death occurred. Yeadon v. White, 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 360, 439, 35 N. E. 454; Burnham v. Webster, 5 Mass. 286; Nickerson v. Brackett, 10 Mass. 212; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 99; Welch v. Swasey, 193 Mass. 373, 118 Am. St. Rep. 523, 79 N. E. 745; Salem v. Maynes, 123 Mass. 372; Atty. Gen. v. Williams (Knowlton v. Williams) 174 Mass. 478, 47 L.R.A. 314, 55 N. E. 77; Sawyer v. Davis, 136 Mass. 239, 49 Am. Rep. 27; Com. v. Blackington, 24 Pick. 352; Decie v. Brown, 167 Mass. 290, 45 N. E. 765; Com. v. Roswell, 173 Mass. 119, 53 N. E. 132; Com. v. Hamilton Mfg. Co. 120 Mass. 383; Bancroft v. Cambridge, 126 Mass. 438; Com. v. Roberts, 155 Mass. 281, 16 L.R.A. 400, 29 N. E. 522; Watertown v. Mayo, 109 Mass. 319, 12 Am. Rep. 694; Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 372, 2 L.R.A. 81, 12 Am. St. Rep. 560, 19 N. E. 390; Com. v. Bearse, 132 Mass. 542, 42 Am. Rep. 450; Newton v. Joyce, 166 Mass. 83, 55 Am. St. Rep. 385, 44 N. E. 116; Com. v. Hubley, 172 Mass. 58, 42 L.R.A. 403, 70 Am. St. Rep. 242, 51 N. E. 448; Com. v. Danziger, 176 Mass. 290, 57 N. E. 461; Com. v. Pear, 183 Mass. 242, 67 L.R.A. 935, 66 N. E. 719; John P. Squire & Co. v. Tellier, 185 Mass. 18, 102 Am. St. Rep. 322, 69 N. E. 312; Parker v. Kaughman, 34 Ga. 136; Ex parte Whitley, 144 Cal. 167, 77 Pac. 879, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 13; Allopathic State Medical Examiners v. Fowler, 50 La. Ann. 1358, 24 So. 809; Dexter v. Blackden, 93 Me. 473, 45 Atl. 525; Mon Luck v. Sears, 29 Or. 421, 32 L.R.A. 738, 54 Am. St. Rep. 694, 44 Pac. 693; Com. v. Keary, 198 Pa. 500, 48 Atl. 472; State v. Sharpless, 31 Wash. 191, 96 Am. St. Rep. 893, 71 Pac. 737; Kentucky Bd. of Pharmacy v. Cassidy, 115 Ky. 690, 74 S. W. 730; State v. Evans, 130 Wis. 381, 110 N. W. 241; Iler v. Ross, 64 Neb. 710, 57 L.R.A. 895, 97 Am. St. Rep. 676, 90 N. W. 869; State v. Wilcox, 64 Kan. 789, 68 Pac. 634.

The refusal to license was justified under the provisions of the Revised Laws.

Com. v. Goodrich, 13 Allen, 549; Money-weight Scale Co. v. McBride, 199 Mass. 503, 85 N. E. 870.

The determination of the defendants as to whether or not the petitioner should receive a license as an undertaker, because he is not a registered embalmer, is within their judgment and discretion.

Rice v. Highway Comrs. 13 Pick. 225; Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. v. Cutting, 181 Mass. 261, 92 Am. St. Rep. 415, 63 N. E. 433.

Knowlton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel the respondents, the board of health of the city of Cambridge, to grant 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the petitioner a license as an undertaker. Among the facts agreed are the following:

"Second. That the petitioner, Benjamin F. Wyeth, is an inhabitant of Cambridge, is an undertaker by trade, and has been for forty-six years engaged in the trade of undertaking in various capacities, and has carried on for some years past the business of undertaking under the name of Benjamin F. Wyeth; that said undertaking business as conducted by the petitioner is a profitable one, and it is his support and the support of his family; that the petitioner is the sexton of the First Church in Cambridge, and the members in attendance at that church and other residents of Cambridge and the vicinity have been accustomed from time to time to engage him to perform such services as may be required in connection with the burial of the dead.

"Third. That the petitioner, Benjamin F. Wyeth, is a competent undertaker, and is well versed in the duties and practices of that trade or business, except in so far as he is ignorant of the processes of embalming.

"Fourth. That the petitioner, Benjamin F. Wyeth, does not hold himself out to the public as one skilled in the methods of embalming dead bodies, and has not, and never has had, and has not applied for, a certificate or license from the board of registration in embalming to enable him to engage in the business of embalming dead bodies.

"Fifth. That a large part of the petitioner's trade or business does not require a knowledge of embalming, and in many instances the petitioner is not required nor directed to embalm the bodies of the dead intrusted to his care.

"Sixth. That, in all cases in which the said Benjamin F. Wyeth has had occasion to have the bodies of the dead embalmed, he has, since January 1, 1906, procured the services of an embalmer duly registered by the board of registration in embalming, or he has intrusted the work to some servant or agent in his employ who was duly registered as aforesaid.

"Seventh. That the respondents to this petition or their predecessors in office had, up to and including the 1st day of May, 1907, always given to the said Benjamin F. Wyeth a license to act as undertaker upon his application therefor."

From other facts in the case, and from the respondents' answer, it appears that the only reason for refusing to grant the petitioner a license as an undertaker is that he is not licensed as an embalmer. He cannot obtain a license as an embalmer without making application under rule 2, § 1, adopted by the board of registration in embalming, and complying with the requirements of this section, which is as follows: "The applicant must have taken a regular course at a reputable school of embalming whose course of instruction is satisfactory to this board, and must have had not less than a year and a half of experience in active work with a practising embalmer." The question of law presented by the report of the single justice is whether the respondents' refusal to grant a license, solely for this reason, is legal.

Stat. 1905, chap. 473, p. 493, is "An Act to Establish a Board of Registration in Embalming." Under § 6 the board is to adopt rules and regulations "not inconsistent with the provisions of this act and the statutes of the commonwealth, governing the care and disposition of human dead bodies, and the business of embalming." Under the authority of this section the board has adopted rules and regulations whereby they assume to put the whole business of the management of funerals and the burial of the dead in the hands of persons holding a license as embalmers from this board. The first part of rule 9, § 2, is as follows: "No permits for removal, burial, or disinterment shall be issued by boards of health, city or town clerks, selectmen of a town, or any other persons authorized to issue burial permits, to any person or persons who have not been registered and received a certificate from the state board of registration in embalming." Under this rule no one can bury lawfully the dead body of a former member of his family, unless the permit for burial is obtained by a licensee of this board. No one can perform the ordinary duties of an undertaker without first having procured a license as an embalmer. No one can obtain a permit for the disinterment of a dead body for any cause, at any time, however long after the burial, unless he is a licensed embalmer. Surely the fitness of a person to receive a permit for the disinterment of a dead body cannot depend upon his knowledge or ignorance of the process of embalming. The question is presented whether there is any warrant under the Constitution and the laws for this interference with the liberties of the people.

The respondents, in their answer, rest their defense largely upon the action of the board of registration in embalming, and adopt as their own the views upon which this action presumably was founded.

The right to enjoy life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness is secured to everyone under the Constitution of Massachusetts. This includes the right to pursue any proper vocation to obtain a livelihood. Substantially the same right is secured also by the Constitution of the United States, which 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

does not permit a state to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. The nature of this right has been stated and illustrated in many cases. Com. v. Strauss, 191 Mass. 545, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 968, 78 N. E. 136, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 842; Com. v. Perry, 155 Mass. 117, 14 L.R.A. 325, 31 Am. St. Rep. 533, 28 N. E. 1126; Winthrop v. New England Chocolate Co. 180 Mass. 464, 62 N. E. 969; Austin v. Murray, 16 Pick. 121; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 937, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1133; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 34 L. ed. 455, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862.

There is no doubt that the refusal to permit one to engage in the business of an undertaker is a violation of this right, unless there is some good reason for the refusal; and the refusal to permit one to bury the dead body of his relative or friend, except under an unreasonable limitation, is also an interference with a private right that is not allowable under the Constitution of the commonwealth or the Constitution of the United States.

In the exercise of the police power, such kinds of business as require regulation in the interest of the public health, the public safety, or the public morals, and, perhaps in a strict sense, in the interest of the public welfare, may be regulated by the state, and no other interference of the public to the detriment of an individual is permissible.

The burial of the dead has such relations to the public health that it well may be regulated by law. In possible aspects of it, its regulation may be made in the interest of the public morals. For the detection of crimes which result in death there well may be regulation in the interest of the public safety. In the exercise of the police power the legislature of this state has made elaborate provisions and strict regulations covering these subjects. Rev. Laws, chap. 78, §§ 37 to 44, inclusive; chapter 29, §§ 6-S, 10-12, 15. Of its power to exercise complete control of burials of the dead, so far as is necessary for the protection of the public health and the promotion of the public safety, there is no question.

No argument has been addressed to us to show that the general embalming of dead bodies is necessary for the preservation of the public health, and we know of no facts that indicate such a necessity. Except in those cases where embalming is desired for a special reason, we know of nothing connected with the duties of an undertaker that calls for the work of a licensed embalmer. When such work is desired, a proper person can be procured to perform it. In cases generally it is not an essential part of the duties of an undertaker, and it has no relation to the public health.

The only particular in which the respondents have suggested, either in their answer or their argument, that performance of an undertaker's duties by a licensed embalmer would tend to promote the public health, is that an embalmer would be more likely to discover that a deceased person died of a contagious disease than an undertaker who is not an embalmer. To use the language of the agreed statement of facts: "In the opinion of the respondent board of health, these rules for preserving and embalming human dead bodies have a tendency to and do increase, on the part of the undertaker, the knowledge of the nature of the disease from which the party deceased may have suffered, and which may have caused death." There is certainly a grave reason to doubt the correctness of this opinion. No evidence is furnished that, through his knowledge of the business of embalming, one can form an opinion which an ordinary undertaker of experience could not form of the cause of death of a person whose body is seen by him. But, if there may be some slight increase of knowledge from this source to one preparing a human body for burial, its relation to the public health, if any, is too remote to be made a foundation for legislation or regulation. As was said in the opinion in Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 57, 49 L. ed. 937, 941, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 543, 3 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1133: "The mere assertion that the subject relates, though but in a remote degree, to the public health, does not necessarily render the enactment valid. The act must have a more direct relation, as a means to an end, and the end itself must be appropriate and legitimate, before an act can be held to be valid which interferes with the general right of an individual to be free in his person, and in his power to contract in relation to his own labor." From such a possibility no such benefit could come as to justify a requirement that all human bodies should be embalmed for the purpose of procuring such information in regard to the cause of death as can be acquired through the process of embalming, or a requirement that an embalmer should always be employed as undertaker for the chance of a valuable discovery from his observation, without his using the process of embalming. The law recognizes direct ways of ascertaining whether death was from a contagious disease, without employing an embalmer for that purpose. Rev. Laws, chap. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

29, §§ 1-6, 10-12. These ways seem a thousandfold more important and reliable than any possible knowledge that an embalmer might have from his training in that business, beyond the knowledge of an undertaker of experience who was not an embalmer.

We can see no such connection between requiring all undertakers to be licensed embalmers and the promotion of the public health, as to bring the making of this regulation by the board of registration in embalming, or the refusal of a license by the board of health on account of the regulation, within the exercise of the police power by the state. If such a regulation had been made by an act of the legislature, with all the strong presumptions of constitutionality which attach to legislative action, we should hesitate to affirm the constitutionality of the act. But action by such a board, under mere general authority to make rules and regulations, does not carry with it these strong presumptions. We consider this action without foundation in law or reason, and in violation of the constitutional rights of our citizens.

A statute of New York which provided, among other things, that no person should engage in the business of undertaking unless he had been duly licensed as an embalmer, was held unconstitutional by a unanimous decision in the appellate division of the supreme court of that state. People v. Ringe, 125 App. Div. 592, 110 N. Y. Supp. 74.

From another point of view the rules and regulations of the board of registration in embalming, relied on by the respondents as an important reason for their decision, are invalid. In Brodine v. Revere, 182 Mass. 598-600, 66 N. E. 607, 608, is this language: "It is well established in this commonwealth and elsewhere that the legislature cannot delegate the general power to make laws, conferred upon it by a Constitution like that of Massachusetts." Then follow numerous citations from different states, with the words: "This doctrine is held by the courts almost unanimously." None of the cases referred to later in the opinion, in which there was a delegation of legislative authority for a local or special purpose, or in matters of administration, and none of the cases which have been decided since, and which are referred to in Com. v. Kingsbury, 199 Mass. 542, 127 Am. St. Rep. 513, 85 N. E. 848, go far enough to legalize a delegation of authority to change a general law for all people of the commonwealth, with no local or special reason for seeking the aid of an administrative board, as the rule about the issuing of permits, and some of the other rules of this board, purport to change the general laws on this subject for all the people in every city and town in the commonwealth. If the statute were construed to authorize the making of such rules, it would be held unconstitutional as assuming to delegate general legislative authority.

We decide that the refusal of the respondents to grant the petitioner a license as an undertaker, solely for the reason that he is not licensed as an embalmer, is unwarranted, improper, and illegal. According to the report upon this determination of the question of law, a writ of mandamus is to issue. The case being on the law side of the court, only questions of law could be reported to the full court, and, by the terms of the report, the question of discretion whether to grant the writ must be taken to have been decided in favor of the petitioner. The report is equivalent to a finding upon the answer and the facts agreed that the only reason for the respondents' refusal was that the petitioner was not licensed as an embalmer, and that, except for this, the respondents, in the exercise of their judgment and discretion, would have granted the license. Upon these facts nothing remains but to enter the order:

Peremptory writ of mandamus to issue.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

JACOB STUMPF

v.

LOUIS STORZ et al.

(156 Mich. 228, 120 N. W. 618.)

Tax — mortgage.

1. The taxation of mortgages and also of the real estate bound by them to its full value is not invalid as double taxation.

Same — deduction of debts.

2. The constitutional requirement of uniformity of taxation is not violated by a statute permitting the deduction of debts from credits in listing personal property for taxation.

(April 6, 1909.)

CERTIORARI to the Circuit Court for Oakland County to review a judgment denying a writ of mandamus to compel the striking of a certain personal-property assessment from the tax rolls. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Fred A. Baker, for plaintiff in certiorari:

The taxation of real-estate mortgages, in addition to the taxation of the real estate at its full value, is duplicate taxation, and as such unconstitutional.

Falkner v. Hunt, 16 Cal. 167; People v. Whartenby, 38 Cal. 461; People v. Eddy, 43 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Cal. 331, 13 Am. Rep. 143; Savings & L. Soc. v. Austin, 46 Cal. 415; People v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc. 51 Cal. 243, 21 Am. Rep. 704; Central P. R. Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization, 60 Cal. 35; Santa Clara County v. Southern P. R. Co. 9 Sawy. 165, 18 Fed. 385; Russell v. Croy, 164 Mo. 110, 63 S. W. 849; Hewitt v. Dean, 91 Cal. 5, 27 Pac. 423; London & S. F. Bank v. Bandmann, 120 Cal. 221, 65 Am. St. Rep. 179, 52 Pac. 583; Germania Trust Co. v. San Francisco, 128 Cal. 589, 61 Pac. 178; Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 95 Mich. 466, 55 N. W. 112; Stroh v. Detroit, 131 Mich. 109, 90 N. W. 1029; Green v. Grant, 134 Mich. 462, 96 N. W. 583.

Allowing the owner of taxable property of any kind to deduct from its assessable value the amount of his indebtedness is a plain violation of the constitutional requirement of uniformity.

Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Detroit, 125 Mich. 694, 84 Am. St. Rep. 589, 85 N. W. 96, 86 N. W. 809; Exchange Bank v. Hines, 3 Ohio St. 1; Re Assessment & Collection of Taxes, 4 S. D. 6, 54 N. W. 818; State v. Duluth Gas & Water Co. 76 Minn. 96, 57 L.R.A. 63, 78 N. W. 1032; Henderson v. Com. 99 Ky. 623, 29 L.R.A. 73, 31 S. W.

Case Note. — Taxation of mortgage and real estate at full value as double taxation.

This note is confined to the question whether the taxation of a mortgage and of the real estate subject thereto at its full value in the same state is double taxation, and does not cover the question whether the taxation of the mortgage in one state, and the real estate in another, is double taxation. The note is confined strictly to the question indicated in the title, and does not include the more general and fundamental question whether the taxation of credits amounts to double taxation, irrespective of the fact whether or not they are secured by specific property.

As to taxation of property in different states as double taxation, generally, see case note to Judy v. Beckwith, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 142.

As to taxation of shares of stock and corporate assets as double taxation, see case note to East Livermore v. Livermore Falls Trust & Bkg. Co. 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 952.

From the standpoint of logic and, perhaps, of sound principles of taxation, it would seem possible to demonstrate that the taxation of a mortgage, or the indebtedness represented thereby, to the mortgagee, and the taxation of the real estate at its full value, without deduction on account of the indebtedness secured by the mortgage, to the mortgagor, amounts to double taxation, and that the actual burden of both taxes will in most cases ultimately fall upon the mortgagor. And in some states the taxing statutes are framed in harmony with this view.

486; Barnes v. Moragne, 145 Ala. 313, 41 So. 947.

Although the taxation of real-estate mortgages, in addition to taxing the land at its full value, is not, standing by itself, unconstitutional duplicate taxation, and although the deduction of debts from credits is not of itself so great a departure from uniformity as to make it unconstitutional, yet, when they operate in combination, the result is a violation of the uniformity clause of the state Constitution, and of the equality required by the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors and Santa Clara County v. Southern P. R. Co. supra; Russell v. Croy,

Nevertheless, the great weight of authority holds, as a legal proposition, that the taxation of the mortgage to the mortgagee, and of the real estate at its full value to the mortgagor or owner, without deduction of the amount of the mortgage, does not constitute double taxation in an obnoxious constitutional sense. Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co. v. Lott, 54 Ala. 499; Ouachita County v. Rumpf, 43 Ark. 525; Lamar v. Palmer, 18 Fla. 147; People v. Rhodes, 15 Ill. 304 (obiter); People v. Worthington, 21 Ill. 171, 74 Am. Dec. 86; Griffin v. Board of Review, 184 Ill. 275, 56 N. E. 397; Augusta Bank v. Augusta, 36 Me. 255 (obiter); Appeal Tax Ct. v. Rice, 50 Md. 302; Baltimore v. Canton County, 63 Md. 218 (obiter); Allen v. Harford County, 74 Md. 204, 22 Atl. 308; Taggart v. Sanilac County, 71 Mich. 16, 38 N. W. 639; Detroit v. Board of Assessors (Detroit v. Rentz) 91 Mich. 78, 16 L.R.A. 59, 51 N. W. 787 (obiter); Marquette v. Michigan Iron & Land Co. 132 Mich. 130, 92 N. W. 934 (obiter); STUMPF v. STORZ; St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Board of Assessors, 56 Mo. 515 (obiter); State v. Carson City Sav. Bank, 17 Nev. 146, 30 Pac. 703; Nashua Sav. Bank v. Nashua, 46 N. H. 389 (obiter); Morrison v. Manchester, 58 N. H. 538 (by implication); Drew v. Morrill, 62 N. H. 23; Boston, C. & M. R. Co. v. State, 62 N. H. 648; People ex rel. People's Trust Co. v. Feitner, 30 Misc. 216, 63 N. Y. Supp. 883, affirmed in 51 App. Div. 178, 64 N. Y. Supp. 539 (obiter); Paddell v. New York, 50 Misc. 422, 100 N. Y. Supp. 581, affirmed in 114 App. Div. 911, 100 N. Y. Supp. 1133, and 187 N. Y. 552, 80 N. E. 1114; Philadelphia Sav. Fund Soc. v. Yard, 9 Pa. 359; West Chester Gas Co. v. Chester County, 30 Pa. 232 (by implication); Judge v. Spencer, 15 Utah, 242, 48 Pac. 1097; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 610.

Morrison v. Manchester, supra, holding that the entire value of mortgaged property, without deduction of the amount of the indebtedness secured thereon, may be assessed and taxed to the owner, apparently implies that such taxation does not amount to unconstitutional double taxation, even though the mortgagee is also taxed on the mortgage. The opinion, however, was devoted mainly to combating the contention that the only taxable property of the mortgagor is the equity of redemption; and in one of the briefs for the mortgagor it was stated that the proposition that there is a double taxation was not an essential part of the complainant's contention.

164 Mo. 97, 63 S. W. 849; Pingree v. Auditor General (Pingree v. Dix) 120 Mich. 95, 44 L.R.A. 679, 78 N. W. 1025; Stroh v. Detroit, supra; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Taylor, 86 Fed. 168; 1 Cooley, Taxn. 3d ed. 343; Thomas v. Snead, 99 Va. 616, 39 S. E. 586; Hamilton v. Wilson, 61 Kan. 517, 48 L.R.A. 238, 59 Pac. 1069; Brewer Brick Co. v. Brewer, 62 Me. 62, 16 Am. Rep. 395; Gilman v. Sheboygan, 2 Black, 510, 17 L. ed. 305; Jones v. Memphis, 101 Tenn. 188, 47 S. W. 136; Marion & McP. R. Co. v. Champlin, 37 Kan. 682, 16 Pac. 222; Adams v. Mississippi State Bank, 75 Miss. 701, 23 So. 395; State v. Elizabeth, 64 N. J. L. 502, 45 Atl. 795; Fox's Appeal, 112 Pa. 337, 4 Atl. 149; Fletcher v. Oliver, 25

The case of McGregor v. Vanpel, 24 Iowa, 436, is probably also to be regarded as sustaining the proposition above stated, though strictly the decision appears to be merely that the mortgagee cannot complain that he is doubly taxed.

In Taggart Sanilac County, supra, Morse, J., with whom Champlin and Long, JJ., concurred, said that he thought that the statute as it stood, taxing land to its full value and at the same time taxing a mortgage upon it at its full cash value, was open to the complaint of double taxation; but that double taxation was not necessarily unconstitutional, and was not unconstitutional in this instance.

The view taken by the courts which sustain this rule is fairly represented by the opinion in Judge v. Spencer, supra, where it is said in effect that the interests represented respectively by the ownership of the mortgage and the ownership of the land are entirely separate, and represent different values; that each should contribute a just share of the burdens of government, however difficult it may be in practice to have each owner do so in a state where rate of interest by contract is not limited; that while it undoubtedly frequently happens that the owner of the land mortgaged is not only compelled to pay the assessment on the land, but also, indirectly at least, by increased rate of interest on the money borrowed, to pay the tax on the mortgage, and in this way the burden which ought to be borne by the creditor is shifted to the debtor, this consideration does not render the taxing of the mortgage objectionable as double taxation, nor militate against the justness and legality of the tax, although it may render questionable the policy of the law.

This position, however, is opposed by the California cases. The history of the question in that state is of such interest as to ing done. . . . I know of no reason why property in real-estate mortgages cannot be assessed at its cash value as well as any other personal property. Such property is very largely dealt in by nearly all classes of business men, and the various kinds have a rated value according to the extent of the security and personal responsibility of the party whose obligation is secured, if any; and I know of no reason why the assessing officer may not as well ascertain that value as any other business man. . . . The claim that double taxation cannot be avoided under the act cannot be sustained. . . . In order to have double taxation, the same property must be taxed twice when it should be taxed but once. The law of 1887 creates no such injustice. When an indebtedness is secured by mortgage on real estate, and the mortgage becomes property more valuable and desirable than the land itself, there is not, nor can be, any good reason why the mortgage should not be taxed to assist in bearing the public burden, and any course of reasoning which would exempt the property in the mortgage, and make the land bear the burden of taxation which should be shared by the holder of the mortgage, would not only be unequal and unjust, but would, I think, be getting about as near double taxation as can be reached without having it pure and simple." Justice Champlin, concurring in this view, said: "I think it is competent for the legislature to assess and tax securities representing values. Whether it is the best plan to adopt, or whether it is expedient to do so, is not a judicial, but a political, question, resting solely with the legislature." The question was again before the court in Marquette v. Michigan Iron & Land Co. 132 Mich. 130, 92 N. W. 934, in which this same contention was made, that a tax on both the property contracted to assessable value. Before the transaction the parties between them owned $3,000 of assessable value,—$2,000 represented by the farm owned by the vendor, and $1,000 represented by cash in the hands of the vendee. After the transaction there is, under a system which taxes both the mortgage and land at full value, $4,000 of assessable value,—$2,000 representing the value of the land, $1,000 representing the mortgage, and $1,000 in cash or its equivalent in the hands of the mortgagee, representing the amount paid to him by the mortgagor. Under this system of taxation assessable values are bound to shrink whenever a mortgage is paid; either with money representing new values created by the mortgagor, or money received by him from other sources, e. g., by will or gift, for which he assumed no obligation. It is true that, after the mortgage in the case supposed has been discharged by the payment of the $1,000 due thereon, there is still $4,000 of assessable value between the former mortgagor and mortgagee,—$2,000 represented by the land owned by the former and $2,000 represented by cash or its equivalent in the hands of the latter. But this result is due to the fact that the $1,000 of assessable value lost by the discharge of the mortgage has been compensated by the importation of an equal assessable value from a new source, to wit, the thousand dollars with which the mortgage was discharged. As that thousand dollars was already presumably assessable, the result is that $5,000 of assessable value which, under this system of taxation, existed the moment before payment of the mortgage, has by reason of such payment shrunk to $4,000, assuming always that the mortgagor assumed no obligation for the last thousand dollars, with which he paid the mortgage. (Of course if the last thousand dollars was obtained under such circumstances as to create an obligation on the part of the mortgagor, and a credit in the hands of a third person, the assessable values would remain the same after the mortgage was paid as before the thousand dollars with which it was paid was borrowed from the third person, though it may be observed that, in the interval between the borrowing of the amount and its application to the mortgage, there would be, under a system which allows no reduction from credits on account of indebtedness, $6,000 of assessable value, which would be reduced to five as soon as the application was made.

Assuming again, for the sake of simplicity, that the thousand dollars with which the mortgage is discharged was a gift to the mortgagor, or represented new value created by him, so that there is no corresponding credit subject to taxation, it is apparent that, under a system which taxes both mortgage and property at full value, the execution of a mortgage increases the assessable value without adding any real value, and that its discharge diminishes the assessable value without destroying any real value. Upon the other hand, if the value of the property on which the mortgage is secured be regarded as the total assessable value, whether it be assessed wholly to the mortgagor, or in part to the mortgagor and in part to the mortgagee, the execution of the mortgage will not increase the assessable values nor its discharge diminish them.

Perhaps the time has passed when any advantage may be hoped from addressing any argument to the courts against the constitutionality of the taxation of both the mortgage and the property on which it is secured at full value, but, in view of the demonstrable correctness of the proposition that such taxation amounts to double taxation in fact, it would seem the argument might still appeal, with some force at least, to courts sitting in states where double taxation is specifically prohibited by the Constitution.

be sold and on the credit in question was such a double taxation as to violate the constitutional provision requiring uniformity. That case was a case of a land contract, but the principle is the same as in the case of a mortgage security. It was said by Mr. Justice Carpenter: "It is to be noted that in this case the obligation to pay the taxes upon the property rests not upon the vendor . . . but upon the vendees. Therefore the argument advanced in support of this contention is precisely the argument which has been advanced to prove that the taxation of credits secured by mortgage and of the land covered by the mortgage is unconstitutional. The decision of this court upholding the constitutionality of such taxation (Taggart v. Sanilac County, supra) is controlling and decisive of this question." We are asked to reconsider these cases, although it may be said that they have the support of many decided cases in other jurisdictions.

But it is urged that in practice the mortgagor pays the tax both upon the real estate and upon the mortgage, and that, therefore, he is subjected to double taxation. The answer is that this may or may not be true, and that, whenever the mortgagor does pay the tax upon the mortgage, it is not because it is a burden imposed upon him by the state, but because of a contract that he has voluntarily entered into, and this contract is subject to restrictions imposed by the usury laws. See Green v. Grant, 134 Mich. 462, 96 N. W. 583. As bearing on the general question, see Paddell v. New York, 187 N. Y. 552, 80 N. E. 1114, s. c. 211 U. S. 446, 53 L. ed. 275, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 139.

It is next urged that the law permitting a creditor in listing his property for taxation to deduct the amount of any indebtedness owing by him is unconstitutional as being in violation of the constitutional requirement of uniformity; the claim being that the Constitution of Michigan does not make the net assets of persons or corporations the basis of taxation, but, on the contrary, provides that all general taxation must be on property according to its cash value; and it is urged with much force that the credits of which one is possessed constitute property, and that, this being so, it would be subject to taxation as property, and that any provision for deducting the indebtedness of the owner is in effect an exemption of so much of his property from taxation.

The case of Exchange Bank v. Hines, 3 Ohio St. 1, is relied upon to sustain this contention. The majority opinion of the court in that case did sustain the contention, and that opinion has been followed 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

by the supreme court of South Dakota in the case Re Assessment & Collection of Taxes, 4 S. D. 6, 54 N. W. 818. The Constitution of Ohio of 1851 (art. 12, § 2) provided that "laws shall be passed, taxing, by a uniform rule, all moneys, credits," etc., and it was in construing this constitutional provision that the rule in Exchange Bank v. Hines was laid down. Soon after this decision, however, the legislature of Ohio enacted a statute which declared that the term "credit" meant the excess of the sum of all legal claims and demands over and above the sum of legal and bona fide debts owing by such person. In Hubbard v. Brush, 61 Ohio St. 252, 55 N. E. 829, the supreme court of Ohio said of this legislation that it had been acquiesced in for more than forty years, and that Exchange Bank v. Hines, in so far as it denied the right to deduct liabilities from claims and demands, has been ignored. The court said: "The word 'credits,' in the connection in which it is used in the Constitution, is not made at all clear by a resort to the lexicographers. It is apparent, however, that, if the framers of the Constitution had intended to specifically tax book accounts, promissory notes, and the like, it would have only required the addition of a few words, not at all incompatible with the brevity required in such instruments, to manifest that intention. The ease with which it could have been done gives to the omission a signification entitled to some consideration. . . . The difficulties, however, attending a deduction of liabilities from claims and demands, have not proved formidable since the practice was authorized by the legislature, and the practice itself has received general approbation. For these considerations, not to specify others, we are of opinion that the legislative declaration is in accord with the Constitution, and therefore hold that the corporation involved in this controversy rightfully, in listing its property for taxation, deducted its liabilities from its claims and demands." The result of this opinion was that the term "credits" as used in the Constitution might be held to mean the net credits. The same ruling was made by the supreme court of Nebraska in Lancaster County v. McDonald, 73 Neb. 453, 103 N. W. 78. In the case of Florer v. Sheridan, 137 Ind. 28, 23 L.R.A. 278, 36 N. E. 365, the conclusion was reached that the true value of the taxpayer's credits was the balance due after deducting the debts. The case upon this point is well reasoned, and we think states the correct rule. See also State v. Moffett, 64

Minn. 292, 67 N. W. 68, and State v. Northern P. R. Co. 95 Minn. 43, 103 N. W. 731, and for a general discussion, Gray, Limitations of Taxing Power, §§ 1395 et seq. Since the adoption of the Constitution, and indeed before, every tax law in the state has authorized the deduction of debits from credits in listing personal property for taxation, and, while the court has never been directly called upon to pass upon this question, the propriety of such legislation has been recognized in First Nat. Bank v. St. Joseph, 46 Mich. 526, 9 N. W. 838, and Beecher v. Detroit, 110 Mich. 456, 68 N. W. 237.

It is urged that the fact that the practice of deducting debts from credits has so long continued should not deter the court from declaring the law unconstitutional, if convinced that it is beyond the legislative power. This statement of the duty of the court is undoubtedly correct. See Pingree v. Auditor General (Pingree v. Dix) 120 Mich. 95, 44 L.R.A. 679, 78 N. W. 1025. But the fact that such statute has remained upon the statute books for over seventy years, and that the practice has continued from the formation of the state to the present time, does call upon the court to move with the utmost caution in asserting its invalidity. We are not convinced that the reasoning of the courts in the cases cited above from other jurisdictions is unsound, and are disposed to follow them. As to the further contentions of relator's counsel, the language of Judge Cooley [Taxation, vol. 1, 3d ed. p. 389] quoted with approval by this court in Detroit v. Board of Assessors (Detroit v. Rentz) 91 Mich. 78, 16 L.R.A. 59, 51 N. W. 787, is peculiarly appropriate: "Now, whether there is injustice in the taxation in every instance in which it can be shown that an individual who has been directly taxed his due proportion is also compelled indirectly to contribute is a question we have no occasion to discuss. It is sufficient for our purposes to show that the decisions are nearly, if not quite, unanimous in holding that taxation is not invalid because of any such unequal results. It cannot be too distinctly borne in mind that any possible system of tax legislation must inevitably produce unequal and unjust results in individual instances; and, if inequality in result must defeat the general law, then taxation becomes impossible, and governments must fall back upon arbitrary exactions."

The order of the Circuit Court dismissing the petition is affirmed, with costs.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

EDWIN E. KELLOGG, Plff. in Err.,
v.

CINCINNATI TRACTION COMPANY et al.

(80 Ohio St. 331, 88 N. E. 882.)

Municipal corporation — overhead bridge — right to erect.

The owner of lots abutting on opposite sides of the street may, under a license or permit from the city council, revocable at its pleasure, construct an overhead bridge for the purpose of transporting freight over the street and relieving the street of a serious obstruction to, or interference with, traffic along the street; the bridge being so constructed that its supports will not be in the street, and so that it will not interfere with the light and air of adjoining abutting owners.

(May 18, 1909.)

Headnote by the COURT.

Case Note. — Right of municipality without express power to permit construction of an overhead bridge across a public street for private purpose.

It is not intended to include in this note the question whether a municipality has power to permit the erection of bridges across public streets for public purposes, or power to permit the erection of such bridges, either for public or private purpose, where the abutments or supports of the bridge or approaches thereto are built in and occupy a portion of the street.

But few cases have considered the question as herein raised. It is to be noted that, in KELLOGG v. CINCINNATI TRACTION Co., the bridge in question was constructed between buildings on opposite sides of the street, and its supports were not in the street, and hence neither the bridge nor its supports in any way impeded public travel. Moreover the permit of the municipality to construct the bridge was considered merely a license, revocable at pleasure. The general rule is that a municipality cannot, without express or implied power, permit any use of its streets that will seriously impair or interfere with the public use, even where the license or franchise is to use the street or streets for a public purpose, and the rule is even more rigidly enforced where the contemplated use is for a private purpose.

In the few cases that have considered the question under annotation, it was presented in form somewhat different from that presented in the KELLOGG CASE, and for that reason, although the power of a municipality to permit the erection of such a structure has been uniformly denied, the cases cannot fairly be said to conflict with the doctrine of the KELLOGG CASE. Indeed, in the KELLOGG CASE, the court expressly ERROR to the Circuit Court for Hamilton County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas dismissing a petition filed to enjoin the construction of a proposed bridge. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Horstman & Horstman, for plaintiff in error:

An ordinance permitting encroachment upon a street for a purely private purpose is void.

People ex rel. Faulkner v. Harris, 203 Ill. 272, 96 Am. St. Rep. 304, 67 N. E. 785; Wabash R. Co. v. Defiance, 52 Ohio St. 262, 40 N. E. 89; Hibbard v. Chicago, 173 Ill. 91, 40 L.R.A. 621, 50 N. E. 256; State v. Street & Waters Comrs. 65 N. J. L. 307, 47 Atl. 466; Reimer's Appeal, 100 Pa. 182, 45 Am. Rep. 373; John Anisfield Co. v. Edward B. Grossman & Co. 98 Ill. App. 180; Costello v. State, 108 Ala. 45, 35 L.R.A. 303, 18

So. 820; Denver v. Girard, 21 Colo. 447, 42 Pac. 662; Platt v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 74 Iowa, 127, 37 N. W. 107; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cincinnati, 76 Ohio St. 482, 81 N. E. 983; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Elyria, 69 Ohio St. 415, 69 N. E. 738; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 660; Grove v. Ft. Wayne, 45 Ind. 429, 15 Am. Rep. 262.

Mr. Murray Seasongood, for defendants in error street railroad companies:

The bridge is not a nuisance as it does not amount to an obstruction of the street.

Cincinnati v. Fleischer, 63 Ohio St. 229, 58 N. E. 568; Elster v. Springfield, 49 Ohio St. 82, 30 N. E. 274; Wolff v. District of Columbia, 196 U. S. 152, 49 L. ed. 426, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 198, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 967; Iroquois Hotel Co. v. Columbus, 5 Ohio N. P. N. S. 357; Spencer v. Andrew, 82 Iowa, 14, 12 L.R.A. 115, 47 N. W. 1007; Cushing v. Boston, 128 Mass. 330, 35 Am. Rep. 383; pointed out that there was no complaint that the public would be inconvenienced or any property rights injured, and statements in the answer, to the effect that the bridge would promote the public convenience in the street, were admitted. It is on this ground that the power of a municipality to permit the erection of such a bridge was attacked in the cases hereinafter mentioned. Thus, in Field v. Barling, 149 Ill. 556, 24 L.R.A. 406, 41 Am. St. Rep. 311, 37 N. E. 850, the power of a municipality to permit the construction of a structure similar to that involved in the KELLOGG CASE was attacked by near-by property owners, who claimed that such a structure injured their property in that it deprived them of sunshine, light, air, and warmth which they had hitherto enjoyed, and cut off and obstructed their view. On these grounds the contention of such property owners was sustained, and the erection of the structure restrained.

On the same ground a similar structure or bridge was held, in Beecher v. Street & Water Comrs. 64 N. J. L. 475, 46 Atl. 166, affirmed in 65 N. J. L. 307, 47 Atl. 466, to be inconsistent with the purposes for which the city had control of the highways, and hence the municipal authorities had no power to pass an ordinance permitting the construction of such a bridge.

And it was also held in the foregoing case that owners of property located near such a bridge, whose light and view was thereby obstructed, had a sufficient interest to entitle them to maintain proceedings to question the validity of the action of the municipality in authorizing the construction of the bridge.

In reaching the same conclusion as to a very similar structure, in Tilly v. Mitchell & L. Co. 121 Wis. 1, 105 Am. St. Rep. 1007, 98 N. W. 969, the court said: "So long as it remains a street, it is reserved for public uses and for public uses alone, and the council has no power to devote any part of it to private uses, even though that part be merely a part of the space above the roadbed. . . . Common councils have no authority to turn a street into a tunnel, for the purpose of granting to private parties for private use the enjoyment of everything above the tunnel. The proposition needs no authority. The council holds the easement in the street for public use alone. is an attempt to exceed their powers, and The attempt to divert a part to private use hence, under principles already stated, can be controlled by the courts."

Townsend v. Epstein, 93 Md. 537, 52 L.R.A. 409, 86 Am. St. Rep. 441, 49 Atl. 629, also held that, while the mayor and city council of the city of Baltimore were invested with the title to and control over public streets, yet this power did not warrant a grant of the use of a street to promote a mere private purpose to serve a mere private interest, or to subordinate the right of one citizen in a street to the private interest and convenience of any other; hence, a permit to a private person to connect buildings on opposite sides of the street by a superstructure built so far above the street as not to interfere with traffic was invalid because beyond the powers of the corporation.

And, in Bybee v. State, 94 Ind. 447, 48 Am. Rep. 175, a similar structure was held to be within the rule that "the permanent and exclusive use and occupancy of any public street or highway by any person, by the erection or maintenance of any structure on, beneath, or above its surface, which wrongfully obstructs or may obstruct such street or highway, is a misdemeanor within the meaning of the statute, and is punishable as a public nuisance."

But a municipality is liable for the damages caused by its officers summarily tearing down such a structure over an alley, because by ordinance it had been declared a nuisance, when the obstruction thereby to light and travel was of a slight character. Westburg v. Hitchins, 99 Md. 617, 59 Atl. 49.

Sawyer v. Davis, 136 Mass. 239, 49 Am. Rep. 27; Offutt v. John Roth Packing Co. 11 Ohio C. C. N. S. 357.

Messrs. Edward M. Ballard and Geoffrey Goldsmith, for defendant in error city of Cincinnati:

The public has in a street the right of pedestrian and vehicular passage and to sub-surface and to supersurface for pipes, tubes, conduits, and the like, and for trackage, trolleys, and the like, respectively, but no other rights.

Hamilton, G. & C. Traction Co. v. Parish, 67 Ohio St. 181, 60 L.R.A. 531, 65 N. E. 1011; Henry v. Cincinnati, 1 Ohio C. C. N. S. 289.

A bridge having no footing in the street, and finding support in buildings or lands abutting the street, and affording a clearance of 24 feet 3 inches, is not a nuisance.

Offutt v. John Roth Packing Co. 11 Ohio C. C. N. S. 357; Reese v. Cleveland, 5 Ohio N. P. N. S. 193; Henry v. Cincinnati, supra; Butler v. Cincinnati, 2 Ohio C. C. N. S. 376; Iroquois Hotel Co. v. Columbus, 5 Ohio N. P. N. S. 357.

Summers, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The city of Cincinnati by ordinance granted permission to the Cincinnati Traction Company and the Cincinnati Street Railway Company to construct and maintain across Eastern avenue in the city, a bridge for the purpose of connecting the property of the companies upon the north side of the avenue with the property of the companies on the south side of said avenue, in order that coal might be carried from their elevator on the north side of the avenue to their power house on the south side of said avenue.

The plaintiff in error, Edwin E. Kellogg, filed a petition for an injunction against the city and the two companies. He avers that he is a taxpayer of the city, and brings the action on behalf of the city, and that he, in writing, duly requested the city solicitor to bring the action, and that he refused to do so. He avers that the city by ordinance granted permission to the companies to construct the bridge. He avers that Eastern avenue is one of the principal thoroughfares of the city, and that the companies threaten to erect and maintain the bridge, and he avers that the ordinance is invalid for the reason that the city did not have authority to make the grant, and that the erection of the bridge will result in the execution and performance of a contract made in behalf of the corporation contrary to law, and will be an abuse of the corporate power of the city.

The city answers, admitting the facts stated in the petition. It sets out a copy of the ordinance, and denies that it is a contract, or its enactment an abuse of the corporate power of the city.

The answer of the companies is as follows:

"The Cincinnati Traction Company and the Cincinnati Street Railway Company, defendants, admit that the city of Cincinnati is a municipal corporation, that these answering defendants are corporations, and that the plaintiff, Edwin E. Kellogg, is a taxpayer, and that he requested the city solicitor in writing, and the latter refused such request, as alleged. They further admit that the city of Cincinnati, on April 27, 1908, passed the ordinance the title to which is set forth in the petition; that it is their intent to construct and maintain a bridge for coal purposes across Eastern avenue from their property on the north side of said avenue to their property on the south side thereof, in accordance with the terms and provisions of said ordinance, except that the height of said bridge above the surface of Eastern avenue will be greater than the minimum height prescribed by the ordinance,—that is to say, the bridge proposed is to be about 10 feet in width, with a clear span across said avenue, and located so that the center line of the bridge on the north line of said avenue shall be about 151 feet west of the west line of St. Andrew street, measured along the north line of Eastern avenue, and that the center of said bridge at the south line of Eastern avenue is to be about the same distance west of the west line of St. Andrew street, measured along the south line of said Eastern avenue,—and said defendants deny each and every other allegation in said petition contained.

"The defendants further aver that the Cincinnati Street Railway Company owns the fee, and the Cincinnati Traction Company is the lessee of said owner, and has a leasehold estate in the properties located on the north side and the south side of said Eastern avenue and so to be connected by means of said proposed bridge, together with an elevator at the north end of the bridge for lifting coal from railroad cars to the level of the bridge; that the total frontage of the property so located on the north side of Eastern avenue is 227.61 feet; that the total frontage of said property located on the south side of Eastern avenue is 376.50 feet; that the bridge as authorized is designated to be, and will be, constructed and maintained along a line at right angles to the center line of Eastern avenue, and at the sole cost and expense of these defendant companies; that the distances on both sides of Eastern avenue between the eastern boundaries of the properties aforesaid of these defendants and the center of said proposed bridge are about 151 feet, as hereinbefore stated; that the distance between the center of said bridge as proposed on the north side of Eastern avenue and the west boundary of the said property located on the same side of Eastern avenue is about 75 feet; that the distance between the bridge as proposed on the south side of Eastern avenue and the west boundary of the said property on the same side of the avenue is about 225 feet; that the plan of the proposed bridge has been completed, and the bottom line of the truss construction supporting the same is to be 28.83 feet above the rails of the street railway tracks located at that point in said Eastern avenue, and the bridge will be constructed and maintained with a clearance of that height throughout the width of said avenue; that said proposed bridge cannot, and will not, interfere in any respect whatever with the light and air of any property or structure of any owner or holder of property situated on either side of said avenue; that the said bridge is designed to be and will be constructed and maintained so that no part of the structure will rest in any portion of Eastern avenue, its supports being designed to be, and will be, placed wholly upon the property of these defendants; that the materials with which the bridge is to be constructed are of the most substantial, modern, and durable steel work, thoroughly fireproof in all parts, both as to supports and span, including also the floor, sides, and roof of the bridge and all its connections, and its construction will be of such a character, and the structure will be so inclosed, as absolutely to prevent any part of the structure itself, or anything carried thereon, from falling into the street; and the right is expressly reserved to the city council by the said ordinance to revoke the bridge grant at any time, and to require the defendant companies to remove the bridge upon thirty days' notice.

"These defendants further aver that they maintain, on the property located as aforesaid on the south side of Eastern avenue, one of the most important power stations they have or use in connection with their street railway system in Cincinnati; that it is necessary to place and maintain the bridge structure proposed in manner aforesaid, in order to secure by railroad, which is the only means of securing, sufficient supplies of the best obtainable smokeless coal, the north end of said proposed bridge being designed to connect with the Pennsylvania railroad, the only railroad in that vicinity, and the defendants being required by ordinance of Cincinnati to operate their power house without the emission of smoke for more than six minutes in any one hour; that the quantity of coal now consumed at said power house is between 35,000 and 23 L.R.A. (N S.)

40,000 tons per annum, and much of this coal should be stored and carried in large quantities so as to avoid interruptions to street car service through delays in railroad deliveries; that such storage is not now practicable, but would be after completion of the proposed bridge; that these defendants have found it necessary, and they propose, to enlarge this power plant so as there to generate the electrical energy required to meet the increasing demands of the street railway traffic of the city, and sufficient finally to enable the defendants to abandon some of their other power stations, and the quantities of coal that will be ultimately needed at the power station on Eastern avenue, to be supplied by means of this proposed bridge, will be about 250,000 tons per annum, and the prevention of, or any interference with, the construction and maintenance of this bridge as proposed, would work irreparable injury, both to these defendants and the public.

"The defendants further aver that the only means for transporting coal from the railroad aforesaid, or from any other railroad, to the said power station, is by teams; that the defendant traction company was authorized by ordinance of the city of Cincinnati passed March 28, 1904, to construct and maintain surface tracks across Eastern avenue at or about the site of the proposed bridge, for the purpose of transporting coal from the Pennsylvania tracks to the said power station, but subject, however, to a provision that there should be no obstruction to travel on Eastern avenue; that these defendants found that such a plan as that would be an obstruction to travel, and would be impracticable as well as dangerous; that the use of teams has been, and is now, an obstruction to travel, and is also attended by constant danger of collision with street cars, since the teaming has to be carried on at right angles to the line of travel in Eastern avenue; but that the plan proposed of supplying the coal by means of the bridge in question would not interfere with public travel of any kind, or with any street use whatever.

"The defendants further aver that it has been, and is, the usage and custom in the city of Cincinnati, through its council and controlling officials, to permit the construction, maintenance, and use of bridges of various kinds, including structures similar in character to the one involved herein, across and above the surfaces of streets and alleys, and that no interference with public traffic or street usage of any character has been experienced.

"Wherefore these defendants pray that both the temporary and perpetual injunctions prayed for be denied, and that they be dismissed hence with their costs."

General demurrers to the answers were filed and overruled, and the petition dismissed, and on error in the circuit court the judgment of the court of common pleas was affirmed. The question for determination is whether a city taxpayer may enjoin the construction, by an abutter, of a bridge over a street, from his property on one side of the street to his property on the other, under an ordinance granting him the right to do so.

It is provided by statute (§§ 1526-1566, Rev. Stat.) that "a proprietor of lots or grounds in a municipal corporation, who subdivides or lays the same out for sale, shall cause to be made an accurate map or plat of such subdivision, describing with certainty all grounds laid out or granted for streets, alleys, ways, commons, or other public uses," and that, when such map has been properly acknowledged and approved by the council of the city, and recorded in the office of the recorder of the county, it shall be deemed a sufficient conveyance to vest in the municipal corporation the fee of the parcel or parcels of land designated or intended for streets, alleys, ways, commons, or other public uses, to be held in the corporate name in trust to and for the uses and purposes in the instrument set forth and expressed, designated, or intended.

Judge Dillon says (Mun. Corp. § 664a) that "the later and better considered judgments hold that it is comparatively unimportant, as respects the relative rights of the abutting owner and the public in and over streets, whether the bare fee is in the one or the other. If the fee is in the public, the lawful rights of the adjoining owners are in their nature equitable easements; if the fee is in the abutter, his rights in and over the street are in their nature legal; but, in the absence of controlling legislative provision, the extent of such rights is, in either event, substantially, perhaps precisely, the same." And, in Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. ed. 224, it is said: "On the general question as to the rights of the public in a city street, we cannot see any material difference in principle, with regard to the extent of those rights, whether the fee is in the public or in the adjacent landowner, or in some third person." The decisions in this state are in accord with these statements of the law. Langley v. Gallipolis, 2 Ohio St. 108; Crawford v. Delaware, 7 Ohio St. 459; Cincinnati & S. G. Ave. Street R. Co. v. Cumminsville, 14 Ohio St. 523; Scioto Valley R. Co. v. Lawrence, 38 Ohio St. 41, 43 Am. Rep. 419; Callen v. Columbus Edison Electric Light Co. 66 Ohio St. 160, 58 L.R.A. 782, 64 N. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

E. 141. If the fee is in the city, it is in trust for the purposes of a street, and, if it is in the abutter, it is subject to the easement of a street.

The estate that is vested in the city is measured by the uses and purposes for which the dedication is intended; the remainder remains in the dedicator and vests in the owners of the abutting property. Kinnear Mfg. Co. v. Beatty, 65 Ohio St. 204, 87 Am. St. Rep. 600, 62 N. E. 341. The abutting owner's interest in the street is a property right, and he may make any use of the property that is subject to the easement of a street, or that is held in trust for a street, that does not impair its use for any purpose for which it may be used as a street. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 656a, 650b, 723c. "Public streets, squares, and commons, unless there be some special restriction when the same are dedicated or acquired, are for the public use; and the use is none the less for the public at large, as distinguished from the municipality, because they are situate within the limits of the latter, and because the legislature may have given the supervision, control, and regulation of them to the local authorities. The legislature of the state represents the public at large, and has, in the absence of special constitutional restraint, and subject (according to the weight of more recent judicial opinion) to the property rights and easements of the abutting owner, full and paramount authority over all public ways and public places." Dillon, § 656. Accordingly, it is held that a franchise to construct a railway in a street, or to lay water, natural or artificial gas pipes, or heating pipes, or to construct telegraph or telephone or electric lighting poles and wires in the streets, or other franchises, may not be granted by a municipality, unless it is expressly authorized so to do by the legislature; and there are cases that hold that the municipality, in the absence of power delegated to it by the legislature, either expressly or impliedly, may not license or permit encroachments upon the street, or the use of the street for any private purpose, and that a delegation of such power is not to be implied from a general grant of power to supervise and control the streets. Elliott, Roads & Streets, §§ 651, 653, 740.

In People ex rel. Faulkner v. Harris, 203 Ill. 272, 96 Am. St. Rep. 304, 67 N. E. 785, it is held: "An ordinance permitting the construction of a bay window extending into the street or any other encroachment thereon, for a purely private purpose or private use, is void." "The streets in their entirety are public streets, exclusive for public use, and no part of them can be devoted exclusively to private persons or private use by virtue of municipal ordinances or otherwise." In Costello v. State, 108 Ala. 45, 35 L.R.A. 303, 18 So. 820, it is held that a fruit stand on the sidewalk is an unlawful obstruction, and that the city could not authorize it by license. To the same effect is Denver v. Girard, 21 Colo. 447, 42 Pac. 662. In Grove v. Ft. Wayne, 45 Ind. 429, 15 Am. Rep. 262, it is said: "The power of a city over its streets, and the right of the public to them, extends upward indefinitely for the purpose of their preservation, safe use, and enjoyment; and the duty of a city in this respect is commensurate with its power."

We concur in the view that a franchise can be granted only by the state, or by the municipality under power expressly granted; but there are many uses or encroachments upon the streets that are not, and never have been, regarded as nuisances, so long as they serve a useful purpose, and do not inconvenience the public, and which may be permitted or licensed under general powers such as those conferred by § 1530-131, Rev. Stat., which provides that, "in all municipal corporations, council shall have the care, supervision, and control of public highways, streets, avenues, alleys, sidewalks, public grounds, bridges, aqueducts, and viaducts within the corporation, and shall cause the same to be kept open and in repair and free from nuisance."

In Elster v. Springfield, 40 Ohio St. 82, pages 96, 97, 30 N. E. 274, 277, a water pipe had been laid in a street, under a grant or license by the city, for the purpose of conveying water from a spring to a paper mill several squares distant. In the construction in the street of a large sewer by the city, more than twenty-one years after the pipe had been laid, the water pipe was destroyed, and the owner sued the city for damages. In the opinion it is said by Spear, J. (96): "The laying of sewers, like that of gas and water pipes beneath the soil, and the erection of lamps and hitching posts, etc., upon the surface, is a street use, sanctioned as such by their obvious purpose, and long-continued usage." And again he says (97): "As we have seen, the city as to its streets is a trustee for the use of the public. A trustee of property for the benefit of the public could not, any more than could a trustee of private property held for known specific and continuing uses, alien or encumber the property to the prejudice of the beneficiary; and a purchaser dealing with the trustee, in either case, would be bound to take notice, at his peril, of the limitation of the power. 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 671; Alton v. Illinois Transp. Co. 12 Ill. 60. 52 Am. Dec. 479. Hence it would follow that 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) whatever grant may have been made by the town of Springfield to the Kills, to maintain water pipes in Center street, could have no greater operation than as a temporary license, subject to be revoked at the will of the town or city, as its necessities in the future uses of the street might require. It necessarily results from this that the enjoyment of the street beneath the surface for the laying of the pipes, and the flowing of the water through them, was a permissive use, and that no permanent right could be acquired by long continuance." And it is there held: "The use of the street by the plaintiff for his water pipes being allowed by license, there was no enjoyment adverse to the city. Nor had the city power by grant to give plaintiff any right in the street inconsistent with the future legitimate uses of the street by the city. Hence no right by prescription to maintain the pipes in the street would vest in the plaintiff, although he had enjoyed the use more than twenty-one years, and any damage accruing to plaintiff by removing the pipes, and thus interrupting the flow of water through them, would be damnum absque injuria." In Cincinnati v. Fleischer, 63 Ohio St. 229, 58 N. E. 568, it is held that the city is not liable for personal injuries sustained by a person in falling over a carriage block of the usual size, and occupying the usual position of such blocks, near the curb upon the street, merely because it permitted it to be in the street.

The immemorial practice has been for the abutter to maintain in the street shade trees, carriage blocks, hitching-posts, lamp-posts, areas, cellarways, coal cellars or holes, steps, stairways, fire escapes, porticos, bay windows, awnings, signs, and other conveniences, and to place his building flush with the street, so that the eaves project over the street and his window shutters open over the sidewalk. In a large city, where land is very valuable, it is not unreasonable that a property owner should wish to build flush with the street, and to place an areaway to the basement, and bay windows over the street, for they may add very materially to the enjoyment of his building, without inconveniencing the public; but if, in order to have them, he must set his building back from the street line, he will do without, for he cannot afford them at that cost, and so everything will be brought to a dead level, and beauty be sacrificed with convenience.

When a franchise is granted without limit as to time, and invested with the elements of a contract, it is usual for the grant to be made by the state, subject to the approval of the municipality; and when the question is as to the power of the city to make such a grant, it should be held not to exist, unless expressly given or necessarily implied; but, when the use is not in the nature of a franchise, but is a use that is recognized as permissible by an abutter, the city may authorize it by a permit or a license, under the general power given it of care, supervision, and control. Such a permit or license is a mere regulation of the use. It contains none of the elements of a contract, and is revocable at the pleasure of the city. It is so held respecting a permit to an abutter to occupy a street with building materials, to be used in a building on the abutting lot, in Columbus v. Penrod, 73 Ohio St. 209, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 386, 112 Am. St. Rep. 716, 76 N. E. 826.

In Clark v. Fry, 8 Ohio St. 353, 72 Am. Dec. 590, where an abutting owner had contracted for the construction of an area, 6 by 20 feet, in a street in front of his building, with steps down the area leading into the basement, and where a person had fallen into the area, and brought suit for damages for his injuries, it was successfully contended by Morrison R. Waite, counsel for plaintiff in error, and afterwards Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, that the trial court had erred in charging the jury "that, as the defendant had shown no license or authority from the authorities of the city of Toledo or state of Ohio to make such an excavation in the street in front of his lot, such excavation was unlawful; and, being unlawful, the defendant Clark was liable for any damage which occurred, by reason thereof, to the plaintiff, when he (the plaintiff) was not himself in fault, although the work was done by Freeman under a contract with Clark entered into for that purpose."

The easement for a street extends as far below, and as high above, the surface of the ground as is necessary for street purposes, but if the abutter may for a useful purpose, and when the public is not inconvenienced, build an areaway in the street to the basement of his building, or place structures under the street, he may, subject to the same limitations, place structures above the street. There is no complaint here that the public will be inconvenienced, or any property rights injured, but the demurrer admits the statements of the answer to the effect that the bridge will promote the public convenience in the street. The rule that every encumbrance is unlawful, unless expressly authorized by the legislature, is certain and easy of application, but is not according to experience, and may result in a very great inconvenience to many and hardship to a few; and, so long as such permits or licenses are revocable at the pleasure of the city, whenever the public convenience requires, and inasmuch as a right to maintain them cannot be acquired by their use, however long continued, it is better to suffer a few contentions that may arise than to escape them at the expense of the convenience of so many.

Judgment affirmed.

Crew, Ch. J., and Spear, Davis, and Shauck, JJ., concur.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

J. J. JENNINGS et al., Respts.,

L. TRUMMER, Appt.

(— Or. —, 96 Pac. 874.)

Broker — introducing customer — commission.

1. A broker for the sale of property who notifies the owner of the fact that he has a customer, and gives his name, is entitled to the credit of bringing the parties together, although he does not actually introduce them to each other, which service is performed by another broker.

Same — two agents — right to commission.

2. A property owner who, with knowledge of the facts, deals with a customer of one broker through the agency of another, will be liable to the first for his commission.

Same — unfair dealing.

3. A property owner will be liable for the commission of a broker to whom he has given the right to sell the property, after receiving notice that he has a customer, if such owner afterwards induces another broker to effect the sale, by acquainting him with the facts.

Appeal — findings — conclusiveness.

4. The determination by the trial court on conflicting evidence, that a broker for the sale of property had secured a purchaser at a certain price before the owner interfered by a sale through another broker, is binding on the appellate court.

(July 28, 1908.)

Case Note. — Right to commissions where two or more real-estate brokers acting for the same person are instrumental in effecting a sale of property to a certain purchaser.

The earlier cases on this question are gathered in a subject note to Hoadley v. Savings Bank, 44 L.R.A. 337. The cases gathered here, therefore, are only those decided since that note.

The question as to which one of two or more real-estate brokers instrumental in effecting a sale of property to a certain APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover commissions for the sale of real estate. Affirmed.

Statement by Eakin, J.:

This is an action to recover commissions for the sale of real estate. Plaintiffs allege that in December, 1904, the defendant employed them to find a purchaser for the furniture and good will of a rooming house in Portland, Oregon, for the price of $7,000 net to the defendant, for which they were to have for their commission such sum above $7,000 as they should be able to obtain; that on December 23, 1904, plaintiffs were negotiating a sale with Mrs. Lange as a prospective purchaser at the price of $7,750, which she was ready, able, and willing to pay therefor, and plaintiffs advised defendant of such prospective sale and gave him the name of the customer, and on December 24, 1904, while plaintiffs were so negotiating with Mrs. Lange, the defendant sold the property to her for a price in excess of $7,000; that the sale was procured through the efforts of plaintiffs; and they now ask judgment for $750, the amount of their commissions thereon. Defendant, by his answer, denies these allegations of the complaint, and alleges that plaintiffs did not procure Mrs. Lange as the purchaser, but that L. R. Cottrell, another real-estate broker, introduced her as the purchaser, to the defendant, at the price of $7,250. The cause was purchaser is entitled to the commissions seems to resolve itself into the further question which one of the brokers was the procuring cause of the sale. It will be seen, therefore, that the real difficulty involved in this question, and upon which the courts might not seem altogether harmonious, is to decide which one of the brokers was the procuring cause of the sale, all the courts being agreed that the broker who was the procuring cause of the sale is entitled to the commissions.

In Votaw v. McKeever, 76 Kan. 870, 92 Pac. 1120, the court states the law to be as follows: "Where two or more agents are employed to sell the same property, the one who makes the sale to have the commission, and a sale is brought about by the joint efforts of all the agents employed, then the agent who was the efficient, predominating, procuring cause of the sale is entitled to the commission. Who first called the attention of the purchaser to the property, or who finally closed the contract by receiving a part payment of the purchase price, or who was most diligent in showing the premises to the purchaser, are unimportant facts, except as they tend to support the controlling proposition. The true rule of law applicable to such a case was very clearly placed before the jury by the 10th instruction, which reads: 'Where two or more agents employed by the owner show or make an effort to sell the same property to the same person, and such person afterward buys the property, and the owner is liable for the payment of the commission, the rule of law is that that agent is entitled to the commission who is the proximate, efficient, and procuring cause of the sale.' This submits the controversy to the jury to decide from the evidence which agent was the proximate, predominating, and procuring cause of the sale. The jury should consider all of the evidence presented, and not confine its deliberations exclusively to the initiatory steps taken, nor to the final execution of the conveyance. If an agent, by his own exclusive effort, produces a purchaser, shows him the property, and, after considerable effort, prevails upon him to take the property, but delays the final act of closing the trade until the following day, and, while the negotiations thus stand in abeyance, another agent induces the purchaser to pay the purchase price and the owner to execute a conveyance, such agent should not be regarded as the efficient, proximate, and procuring cause of the sale. On the other hand, if the agent who produced the purchaser relaxed his efforts, and another, by efficient and persistent work with such purchaser, induced him to make the purchase, then he should be regarded as the one who made the sale."

In accordance with the above statements, where an owner of property places it for sale with two or more real-estate agents, or places it in the hands of a second agent after the relations with the first have terminated, if one makes a sale, though possibly on different terms, to a customer to whom others had first unsuccessfully tried to sell the same property, or with whom they had merely negotiated, not resulting directly in the purchase of the property, the owner, at least in the absence of any interference between the agents, is liable for commissions only to the agent who finally effected the sale.

Cases so holding are: Carper v. Sweet, 26 Colo. 547, 59 Pac. 45; Witherbee v. Walker, 42 Colo. 1, 93 Pac. 1118; Henkle v. Dunn, 97 Mo. App. 671, 71 S. W. 735; Gamble v. Grether, 108 Mo. App. 340, 83 S. W. 306; Johnson v. Lord, 35 App. Div. 325, 54 N. Y. Supp. 922; Sampson v. Ottlinger, 93 App. Div. 226, 87 N. Y. Supp. 796; Cole v. Kosch, 116 App. Div. 715, 102 N. Y. Supp. 14; William P. Rae Co. v. Kane, 121 App. Div. 494, 106 N. Y. Supp. 47, reaffirmed after a new trial in 132 App. Div. 935, 116 N. Y. Supp. 739; Haines v. Barney, 33 Misc. 748, 67 N. Y. Supp. 164; Tyng v. Constable, 35 Misc. 283, 71 N. Y. Supp. 820; Kifer v. Yoder, 198 Pa. 308, 47 Atl. 974; Duval v. Moody, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 627, 60 S. W. 269; Land Mortg. Bank v. Hargis (Tex. Civ. App.) 70 S. W. 352; Frink v. Gilbert (Wash.) 101 Pac. 1088.

tried by the court without the intervention of a jury, and the court found for the plaintiffs, and rendered judgment thereon, and defendant appeals.

Mr. C. M. Idleman for appellant.

Mr. Dan J. Malarkey for respondents.

Eakin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The denial of the defendant's motion for a judgment of nonsuit, interposed at the close of plaintiffs' testimony, is the only ground of error presented by the defendant in his brief. It is a general principle that, even if the evidence was insufficient to be submitted to a jury, yet the appellate court will not review the motion if such defect has been cured by subsequent testimony which is properly disclosed by the record. Bennett v. Northern Pacific Exp. Co. 12 Or. 49, 6 Pac. 160; Carney v. Duniway, 35 Or. 131, 57 Pac. 192, 58 Pac. 105; Elmendorf v. Golden, 37 Wash. 664, 80 Pac. 264. Therefore we are at liberty to examine the whole of the evidence which is contained in the bill of exceptions, in considering the error assigned.

Defendant's contention is that, as the property was listed with two agents, and that Cottrell actually brought Mrs. Lange and defendant together, and the sale was thus consummated, he was justified in dealing with Cottrell, and plaintiffs have no cause of action. On the 23d day of December, 1904, plaintiffs notified the defendant that they had secured Mrs. Lange as a

And see 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 928.

In Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co. 83 N. Y. 378, 38 Am. Rep. 441,—a case not strictly in point here, since it did not involve real-estate brokers, and which was decided prior to the date of the former note,—it was said: "A broker is never entitled to commissions for unsuccessful efforts. The risk of failure is wholly his. The reward comes only with his success. That is the plain contract and contemplation of the parties. The broker may devote his time and labor, and expend his money with ever so much of devotion to the interests of his employer, and yet if he fails, if, without effecting an agreement or accomplishing a bargain, he abandons the effort, or his authority is fairly and in good faith terminated, he gains no right to commissions. He loses the labor and effort which was staked upon success. And in such event it matters not that, after his failure, and the termination of his agency, what he has done proves of use and benefit to the principal. In a multitude of cases that must necessarily result. He may have introduced to each other parties who otherwise would have never met; he may have created impressions which, under later and more favorable circumstances, naturally lead to and materially assist in the consummation of a sale; he may have planted the very seeds from which others reap the harvest; but all that gives him no claim. It was part of his risk that, failing himself, not successful in fulfilling his obligation, others might be left to some extent to avail themselves of the fruit of his labors."

If the jury find that an agent did not procure the purchaser, and that he did not have the exclusive authority to sell, such agent cannot recover commissions where the sale is effected through another agent. Rothenburger v. Schoniger, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 1018, 99 S. W. 1150.

In Girardeau v. Gibson, 122 Ga. 313, 50 S. E. 91, where a real-estate agent procured a purchaser, but, before the completion of the sale, by agreement of all parties concerned, the transaction was considered at an end, it was held that, in the absence of fraud or collusion, such agent cannot recover commissions upon the property being subsequently placed in the hands of another agent and by him sold on practically the same terms to the same purchaser.

And the same is true where a real-estate broker after failing to effect a sale is discharged by the principal, and the land is afterward sold by another broker to a purchaser with whom the first broker had previously dealt. Leonard v. Eldridge, 184 Mass. 594, 69 N. E. 337, and Smith v. Kimball, 193 Mass. 582, 79 N. E. 800.

In Higgins v. Miller, 109 Ky. 209, 58 S. W. 580, it was held that when property has been listed for sale with a number of real-estate agents, the one who succeeds in bringing the seller and purchaser together, and induces them to enter into the contract, is the one who has earned the commissions; and an agent, although the first to introduce the parties, cannot recover if unsuccessful in his attempt at sale.

In De Zavala v. Royaliner, 84 N. Y. Supp. 969, reaffirmed after a new trial in 45 Misc. 430, 90 N. Y. Supp. 563, it was held that a broker was not entitled to commissions for the sale of a leasehold, where he merely brought the parties together, but did not cause them to agree upon terms, but which was effected some time later through another broker, upon a basis, however, different than that which was submitted by the first broker.

To the same effect is McNulty v. Rowe, 28 Misc. 523, 59 N. Y. Supp. 690, where a broker merely suggested a purchase to a certain person without naming the price or making a contract, the property being afterwards sold by another broker for a sum less than that for which the complaining broker was entitled to sell.

A similar case and holding to the same effect is Hollyday v. Southern Farm Agency, 100 Md. 294, 59 Atl. 646, where, after an agent had failed to effect a sale with a certain intending purchaser, the land was purchaser for said property on the terms and conditions required by the defendant, and the defendant thereupon assented thereto by giving plaintiffs until January 1st to complete the transaction, and signed the following agreement to that effect, viz.:

I hereby agree to give a clear bill of sale to the furniture and good will of the rooming house, No. 323½ Washington street (known as the Raleigh block), Portland, Oregon, which includes all the furniture on all of the three upper floors of said building, for the sum of seven thousand dollars ($7,000.00), said sale to be made by the 1st day of January, 1905; and I also agree to loan the purchaser, Mrs. Lange, $4,000, said $4,000 to be secured by a first mortgage on said furniture, the principal to be paid off $500 each quarter, with interest. Said interest is to be at the rate of 8 per cent per annum. It is understood that Jennings & Co. are to get their commission over and above said $7,000.

Done this 23d day of December, 1904.

L. Trummer.

Although plaintiffs did not actually introduce Mrs. Lange to the defendant, it was not necessary that they do so. They did advise him of the prospective sale and of the name of the purchaser, and, if defendant dealt with her as the result of such information, then plaintiffs brought them together; and the evidence was sufficient to be submitted to a jury on that question.

sold by another agent to a different purchaser, and by him resold to the first agent's intending purchaser.

In Freeman v. Polstein, 49 Misc. 644, 97 N. Y. Supp. 1032, it was held that a broker who as agent for the intending purchaser fails to negotiate a contract for the sale of property cannot, upon another broker stepping in and procuring an acceptable offer, recover commissions from such purchaser.

In McCloskey v. Thompson, 26 Misc. 735, 56 N. Y. Supp. 1076, it seems to have been held that a real-estate broker who merely negotiates with a person to rent a certain property, without binding the bargain, is not entitled to commission, and therefore where, as in this case, the prospective renter, after talking with the broker and promising to come back in a few hours, goes away to get the keys and find the landlord, and in the meantime falls in the hands of another broker, who in fact rents the property to him, the first broker cannot recover commissions. The court said: "To entitle him to a commission, it is necessary that a broker should earn it by effecting the bargain which his employer has asked him to make, and, unless he effects this, however strenuous may have been his efforts, he has no claim to reward."

In Staehlin v. Kramer, 118 Mo. App. 329, 94 S. W. 785, it was held that a real-estate broker having property for sale, in the absence of a definite contract, has a reasonable time in which to find a purchaser, and if after such a time the property is sold through another agent, though to a purchaser with whom the first agent had unsuccessfully negotiated, such agent first appointed cannot recover commissions.

This was also recognized in Nadler v. Menschel, 110 N. Y. Supp. 384, where, after a person procured by one broker failed to consummate the sale, because of a mortgage on the property, the land was sold by another broker to the first-named person's partner.

In Mead v. Arnold, 131 Mo. App. 214, 110 S. W. 656, it was found that the complaining real-estate broker, although having called the purchaser's attention to the property, was not the procuring cause of the sale, and therefore, as against another broker who afterward did sell the property, he was not entitled to the commissions.

In Shipman v. Wilkeson, 112 N. Y. Supp. 895, it was held that, under a contract employing a broker to procure a purchaser for real estate before a designated date, and stipulating the payment of full commissions if the property were sold after such date through information obtained through his agency, such broker is not entitled to commissions where it appears that, although he at one time brought the parties together, they failed to come to any agreement, and that sixteen months afterwards the land was sold to the purchaser through another broker, independently of the former broker and on a different basis, bad faith on the part of the owner being wholly lacking.

In Edwards v. Pike (Tex. Civ. App.) 107 S. W. 586, it was held that a broker who, with knowledge of the employment of other brokers also, secures a prospective purchaser upon terms agreed to by the buyer, cannot recover commission if, before the contract was reduced to writing, the purchaser falls into the hands of other brokers who consummate a sale upon slightly different terms. The court said: "The broker who undertakes a sale of property with full knowledge that another broker has also undertaken to sell it ought not to expect more of the owner than that he will not interfere in favor of the one or the other. It is then an even contest between them, where the chances of success in contemplation of the competition to be expected should be presumed to have been duly weighed by each; and, if as a result of such competition, without interference or fault on the part of the owner, the sale is actually consummated by his competitor, the broker who brought the prospective purchaser and the owner together, but failed to consummate a sale upon the terms agreed upon between him and the buyer, ought not to be permitted to charge against the owner the loss sustained by him, not by the owner's fault, but as a Miss Lange, who is the daughter of Mrs. Lange and was her agent in this transaction, had agreed with the plaintiffs as to the terms of the sale, except that she desired to make a deposit of only $10, instead of $100, as asked by plaintiffs. This fact is evidenced by a blank receipt drawn up in the presence of Miss Lange, and read over and assented to by her, except as to the $100 deposit required thereby.

Whatever may be the rights of a real-estate broker who takes a customer away from another, and closes a sale between such customer and the owner, if done without the aid or connivance of the owner, yet if the owner, with knowledge of the facts, deals with the customer of the first broker, even through another agent, he will be liable to the first broker; and, in view of the evidence in this case, it is a question for the trier of the facts to determine whether the defendant did not collude with Cottrell to defeat plaintiff in his efforts to complete the sale. The agreement of defendant of December 23d, set out above, was so signed soon after 12 o'clock M.

Mr. Cottrell testifies that, on the afternoon of that day, defendant showed him a copy of this agreement, and they discussed result of acts of his competitor and conduct of the purchaser, which he reasonably should have contemplated might ensue when he undertook and performed the service."

It would follow from the above cases that, where a real-estate broker begins negotiations for the sale of property, and continues these negotiations until finally, through his efforts and as a direct result thereof, the sale of the property is brought about, he in fact is the procuring cause of the sale, and he cannot be deprived of his right to commissions because the negotiations were finally completed through another agent, whether on the same terms or on different terms. As was said in some cases, the courts will not permit one person to shake the tree and another to gather the fruits.

Cases of this nature are: Rigdon v. More, 226 Ill. 382, 80 N. E. 901, reversing 128 Ill. App. 447; Wood v. Wells, 103 Mich. 320, 61 N. W. 503; Cunliff v. Hausman, 97 Mo. App. 467, 71 S. W. 368; Smith v. Truitt, 107 Mo. App. 1, 80 S. W. 686; Hovey v. Aaron, 133 Mo. App. 573, 113 S. W. 718; Elmendorf v. Golden, 37 Wash. 664, 80 Pac. 264; Sullivan v. Tufts (Mass.) 89 N. E. 239.

Although the contract was modified in minor details. Hall v. Grace, 179 Mass. 400, 60 N. E. 932.

And although the property was exchanged for other real estate, instead of sold, Grether v. McCormick, 79 Mo. App. 325.

In Buehler v. Weiffenbach, 21 Misc. 30, 46 N. Y. Supp. 861, where a real-estate 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

whether or not it gave Jennings the exclusive right to sell to Mrs. Lange; and he says:

I read it over, and I said: "I don't see that this is the sole option. It looks to me like he has the privilege to sell it at this price if he can do so before that time."

Q. And you considered that you had an opening to get in?

A. Mr. Trummer seemed to be of the same opinion.

Q. He thought that did not give him the exclusive option, and he told you you could go ahead?

A. He said: "You can have it at the same price."

This was before Cottrell had seen Mrs. Lange. Trummer testifies that at the same conversation he told Cottrell "to go ahead and make the sale."

The cases quoted from in defendant's brief upon this question are to the effect that the owner cannot interfere, but the several brokers are free to act independently of each other; and the owner is under no obligation to decide between their conflicting claims, but only to remain neutral, both as between them and between them and the purchaser. The owner cannot step in and complete the broker who had been employed to effect a sale of property brought a prospective purchaser, who made an offer which was refused on the ground of it being insufficient, and it appeared that, without terminating such broker's authority, the owner accepted the same offer from the same person, through another broker, the first-named broker was held entitled to the commission.

In Levy v. Wolf, 2 Cal. App. 491, 84 Pac. 313, it was held that a real-estate broker who, within the time allowed by his contract of employment, procures an oral offer from a responsible purchaser, of which he informs his vendor, as well as of his intending purchaser's name, is entitled, upon the vendor accepting the offer, to his commissions, although the property was in fact subsequently sold, on the terms procured, after the expiration of the term of employment, by the vendor through another broker.

The principle that a real-estate broker is entitled to his commissions where the property is sold directly through his efforts, although the final negotiations are effected through another agent, is especially applicable where the last broker acted with the connivance of the owner of the property.

A case of this nature is Gilmour v. Freshaur, 126 Mo. App. 299, 102 S. W. 1107, where the owner induced a prospective purchaser to deal with another firm of real-estate brokers, telling him he could there get the property for a lower price.

And, where the owner assisted the agent sale, and escape liability for the commission. The above quotation from the evidence shows not only that the defendant did not remain neutral, but, within a few hours, gave to a competing broker the confidence obtained from the plaintiffs, and aided him in diverting the customer from plaintiffs. Such conduct is entirely lacking in good faith toward plaintiffs. Between the principal and the broker, the utmost good faith must be exercised. The case of Wood v. Wells, 103 Mich. 320, 61 N. W. 503, is very much in point here. The purchaser was procured by Wood, but the sale was consummated by Calkins, another broker, to Wood's customer on practically the same terms; defendant having been previously informed by plaintiff of his negotiations and with whom he was dealing. It was held that the plaintiff was the procuring cause of the sale, and entitled to his commission. To the same effect is Elmendorf v. Golden, 37 Wash. 664, 80 Pac. 284, where the plaintiffs procured the purchaser, of which defendant had full notice. Another broker interfered, and the defendant completed the sale to the second broker for the benefit of plaintiffs' customer; and it was held that plaintiff was entitled to his commission. To the same effect is McCormack v. Henderson, 100 Mo. App. 647, 75 S. W. 171.

Defendant urges that plaintiff has not established, by a preponderance of the evidence, that Mrs. Lange had agreed to buy from the plaintiff at the price of $7,750. Although the evidence is conflicting upon this question, three witnesses testify that she did; and that was a question of fact to be determined from the evidence, which we cannot review. Tinsley v. Scott, 69 Ill. App. 352, 355, makes the proper distinction in such a case as this: "Of several independent brokers under such employment at the same time, the one who first so sells is entitled to the commission. No express contract to that effect is required to give him that right. But, to be a producer, the party presented must be a client or customer of his own, and not one then sustaining that relation to another broker under like employment. If he was first in negotiation with such other, he continues to sustain that relation to him until it is expressly broken off, or the matter of the purchase has ceased to be held by him under consideration. The employer, with notice of the pendency of such negotiation, cannot escape liability to the broker for his commission, by selling to his customer through another, even though he first consummating the sale by authorizing him to sell for less than the complaining agent was allowed to accept. Holland v. Vinson, 124 Mo. App. 417, 101 S. W. 1131.

See, in connection with the above two cases, JENNINGS v. TRUMMER.

In Barton v. Rogers, 84 Ill. App. 49, it was held that, where property is placed with a real-estate agent for sale, and a sale is brought about through his agency, the vendor cannot escape the payment of commissions to him by declaring the deal off upon his failure by a certain time to furnish or procure money necessary on the part of the vendee to consummate the deal, and by paying commission to another agent who was able and willing to furnish the necessary money.

In Lewis v. McDonald (Neb.) 120 N. W. 207, it was held that, where a real-estate broker has practically induced a person to buy certain property, such broker cannot be deprived of his commission by the acts of the intending purchaser in going to another real-estate broker and prevailing upon him to get the agency of the property, and to divide the commission between them; the owner of the property in this case having conveyed the same in good faith, and without knowledge that the complaining broker had negotiated with the purchaser.

In Lovett v. Clench, 115 App. Div. 635, 101 N. Y. Supp. 174, a real-estate broker procured a purchaser on the terms authorized by the owner, who, however, refused to consummate the sale because, as it appeared, another broker with whom, unknown to the first broker, the property had also been listed, had previously procured an oral offer from this purchaser for a larger sum, which, however, had not at that time been accepted. Thereafter the owner, through the second broker, sold the property to the purchaser for a still larger sum than had theretofore been offered. In an action by the first-named broker to recover his commissions, it was held that, since the owner's contract with the broker was a promise of payment of commissions upon the latter procuring a customer ready, willing, and able to purchase at the former's terms, and it appeared that the purchaser at the time was financially able to buy, and also legally able to buy, since the previous verbal offer was not binding, such broker was entitled to recover. The court took occasion to say that a commission had been paid to the other broker, or that he was in a position to compel the payment of one, under the circumstances, had nothing to do with the case.

In Sylvester v. Johnson, 110 Tenn. 392, 75 S. W. 923, it was held that a real-estate broker having the exclusive authority to sell certain property, and who had been negotiating with a certain intending purchaser, cannot be deprived of his commissions by another agent stepping in, pending the negotiations, and effecting the sale.

In Gouge v. Hoyt, 127 Iowa, 340, 101 N. W. 463, it was held that, under a contract to pay a stated commission upon the owner effecting a sale to a certain purchaser, who had already been introduced by the agent to the vendor for that purpose, the agent the jury might find such negligence. If, by this argument, it is intended to claim that, as a matter of law, there is any evidence of negligence in the fact of a runaway horse, it is clearly wrong. . . . If, however, it is claimed only that the fact of the horse running away affords a presumption of fact that there was negligence on the part of the defendants, then, of course, it must be taken in connection with the other facts." The other facts were taken to show no negligence, and hence the affirmance of the nonsuit.

But, in Maus v. Broderick, 51 La. Ann. 1153, 25 So. 977, it was said that the fact itself that a team is found running away upon the streets of a city, without a driver, requires explanation as to how this should have been; and, if it is not given, it is not an unfair inference that no satisfactory explanation can be made.

And it was held, in Gorsuch v. Swan, 109 Tenn. 36, 97 Am. St. Rep. 836, 69 S. W. 1113, that when a team is found running away, unattended, upon a public thoroughfare, and doing hurt to one lawfully thereon, negligence is prima facie fairly imputable to the owner from this fact alone.

In Strup v. Edens, 22 Wis. 432, the exception urged on the appeal was the refusal to grant a nonsuit. The court, affirming the ruling, said that, at the time the motion was made, there was evidence tending to show that the horses were not properly hitched, and, in addition, "the fact that the horses got loose and ran away is some evidence of negligence. It is true such a thing might occur notwithstanding due care in hitching. But such would not be the ordinary result; and unexplained, the reasonable inference from the fact would be that there had been negligence in fastening the horses."

Affirming the trial court, and approving its charge that, "when a horse and wagon are found running along, without a driver, upon the sidewalk of a public street, and injury to another person or his goods is caused by it, it is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the owner," Gannon v. Wilson, 1 Sadler (Pa.) 422, 18 W. N. C. 7, 5 Atl. 381, holds that it is the duty of the owner of a horse not voluntarily to permit it to run on the sidewalk of a public street, and, when so found, the owner must rebut the presumption of negligence arising therefrom.

The fact that a team of runaway horses was found dashing along a public highway, without the attendance of the owner or his servants, was held, in Kokoll v. Brohm & B. Lumber Co. (N. J. L.) 71 Atl. 120, to raise a presumption of negligence in their management and care which will render the owner liable, in the absence of explanation, for injuries caused by their unrestrained acts. This holding was cited and followed in Francois v. Hanff (N. J. L.) 71 Atl. 1128.

The fact that a horse runs away in a city street and does injury shows a prima facie case of negligence which calls for explanation on the part of the defendant owner, and a nonsuit was held erroneous in Crawford v. Upper, 16 Ont. App. Rep. 440, where such circumstances appeared, and nothing was proved as to the origin or cause of the runaway.

In Unger v. Forty-second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 51 N. Y. 497, a team of horses became detached from one of the defendant's cars and ran away, injuring the plaintiff. No proof was offered as to how the horses became detached from the car, or as to the cause; one witness testified that he was in the car, but was not looking when the horses became detached; his attention was attracted by the stopping of the car, and he then looked and saw the horses running away from the car. The court said this was sufficient to make out a prima facie case, and the fact that the horses were unattended and unfastened in the street was, unexplained, evidence of negligence against the defendant, and hence no error was committed in refusing to nonsuit the plaintiff at the close of his evidence.

The law presumes negligence on the part of the owner of a horse attached to a wagon or carriage, found running away on a city sidewalk, and it lies upon the owner to show that there was no fault on his part. Hummell v. Wester, Brightly (Pa.) 133.

In the case of Watson v. Weekes, decided March 19th, 1887, and later affirmed, it was held by Smith, J., as stated in Tolhausen v. Davies, 59 L. T. N. S. 436, that, upon proof given by a plaintiff that the defendant's horse, harnessed to a cart, was running away unattended along a highway, whereby the plaintiff, being lawfully thereon, was injured, a judge could not rightly nonsuit, for such facts were more consistent with the absence of ordinary care in the superintending a horse, than with such care having been used.

Snee v. Durkie [1904] 6 F. 42, is cited in 1 Butterworths' Dig. 67, as holding that a presumption (though a rebuttable one) of negligence arises if a runaway horse and carriage knock a person down in a public street.

Upon the question of negligence in leaving a horse unhitched in the highway, see the subject note in connection with Moulton v. Lewiston, B. & B. Street R. Co. 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 845.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

WILLIAM SUTHERLAND, Appt.,

v.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA.

(— Va. —, 65 S. E. 15.)

Concealed weapons — receptacle.

Carrying in the hand a pair of saddlebags with the lids down, which contain a pistol, which is hidden from common observation, is not a violation of a statute making it an offense to carry a pistol about the person, hidden from common observation.

(June 17, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Dickenson County convicting him of carrying a concealed pistol. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. S. H. Sutherland, for appellant:

The pistol was not carried about the person, hidden from common observation, within the meaning of the statute.

Ladd v. State, 92 Ala. 58, 9 So. 401; George v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 29 S. W. 386; Cunningham v. State, 76 Ala. 88.

Mr. William A. Anderson, Attorney General, for appellee:

Case Note. — What manner of carrying or concealment of weapon violates statute against carrying concealed weapons.

What constitutes carrying.

It is generally held not necessary, in order to constitute a carrying of concealed weapons on or about the person, that the weapon should be concealed strictly upon the person, but, if it is shown to have been carried in a position near by, where it could readily be resorted to for use, this is sufficient. 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 733.

Thus, carrying a pistol in a basket which is held in the hand violates a statute against carrying weapons on or about the person. Johnson v. State, 51 Tex. Crim. Rep. 648, 104 S. W. 902.

And carrying a pistol in a hand basket on the arm, and placing the basket on the seat by the side, while riding in a street car, is a violation of such a statute. Diffey v. State, 86 Ala. 66, 5 So. 576. The court said: "The purpose of the statute is to interdict carrying a weapon in a manner so connected with the person that it may be easily and promptly used, and yet others not discover its presence. About the person does not mean necessarily on the person. All the essential elements of the offense exist if an interdicted weapon is carried near the person, and so connected therewith that the locomotion of the body necessarily carries the weapon, and so that it may be promptly used when desired; as in the pocket of an overcoat carried on the arm, or in a hand basket or other receptacle, held by the hand. Such carrying one of the forbidden weapons concealed comes within the letter and purview of the statute, and constitutes the offense denounced."

And having a pistol in a basket which is upon accused's lap is a violation of a statute forbidding the carrying of a weapon concealed "about" the person. State v. McManus, 89 N. C. 555.

So, carrying a pistol in a basket on the arm for convenient use and access, and not merely for transportation, violates a statute against having or carrying a pistol

The word "about," in the statute, is used in the sense of "close to" or "near at hand."

State v. McManus, 89 N. C. 555; Garrett v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 25 S. W. 285; Diffey v. State, 86 Ala. 66, 5 So. 576; Warren v. State, 94 Ala. 79, 10 So. 838.

Harrison, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this case the accused was charged with unlawfully carrying about his person a pistol which was concealed from common observation.

The evidence in support of this charge is that the accused placed a pistol, incased in its scabbard, in a pair of saddlebags, pulled the lids of the saddlebags down, hiding the pistol from view, and carried the saddlebags ute against having or carrying a pistol about the person otherwise than in an open and exposed manner. Boles v. State, 86 Ga. 255, 12 S. E. 361; Warren v. State (Ga. App.) 64 S. E. 111.

But an unqualified charge that "carrying a pistol in a basket or bag upon the arm, and not for transportation alone," violates a statute against carrying a pistol concealed, is erroneous where there was no evidence that the pistol was concealed in the basket, but rather that it was carried in an open-top arm basket, fully exposed to view. Sullivan v. State (Ga. App.) 65 S. E. 354.

Having a pistol in a satchel with a strap attached, which rests upon the shoulder of the accused while a passenger in a railway car, violates a statute against carrying concealed weapons about the person. Willis v. State, 105 Ga. 633, 32 S. E. 155.

So, a pistol is carried "about the person" within the meaning of the statute, where accused carries it in a hand satchel which is suspended by a strap from his shoulder, although the satchel is locked and the key is in his pocket. Warren v. State, 94 Ala. 79, 10 So. 838. The test adopted in this case was whether the weapon moved with the person, and not whether it was readily accessible for use.

Where it is unlawful to carry pistols except openly in the hand, carrying a navy in a scabbard hung to the horn of a saddle is indictable. Barton v. State, 7 Baxt. 105.

And, if one knowingly carries in his hand a pistol so wrapped and inclosed within a bundle that it cannot readily be seen and recognized as a pistol, he violates the statute against carrying concealed weapons. Edwards v. State, 126 Ga. 89, 54 S. E. 809.

One who carries a pistol in a box or compartment beneath the driver's seat of a hack is guilty of unlawfully carrying a weapon concealed about his person. Kendall v. State, 118 Tenn. 156, 121 Am. St. Rep. 994, 101 S. W. 189, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 1105.

Whether a pistol in the box under a wagon seat is carried as a weapon, so as to be accessible for use in a fight, is a question in his hand down the road until out of sight.

The question presented is whether or not it is a violation of the statute against carrying concealed weapons for a man to carry in his hand a pair of saddlebags containing a pistol, which is hidden from common observation.

So much of the statute as is necessary to the consideration of this question is in these words: "If any person carry about his person, hid from common observation, any pistol, . . . he shall be fined not less than $20, nor more than $100." Acts 1908, chap. 259, p. 381.

This is a penal statute, and it is an ancient maxim of the law that all such statutes must be construed strictly against the state, and favorably to the liberty of the citizen. The maxim is founded on the tenderness of the law for the rights of individuals, and on the plain principle that the power of punishment is vested in the legislature, and not in the judicial department. No man incurs a penalty unless the act which subjects him to it is clearly within the spirit and letter of the statute which imposes such penalty. There can be no constructive offenses, and, before a man can be punished, his case must be plainly and unmistakably within the statute. If these principles are violated, the fate of the accused is determined by the arbitrary discretion of the judges, and not by the express authority of the law. Harris v. Com. 81 Va. 240, 59 Am. Rep. 666; Lescallett v. Com. 89 Va. 878, 17 S. E. 546; United States v. Wiltberger, 5 Wheat. 76, 5 L. ed. 37.

In the light of this fundamental rule of construction, we are of opinion that the question raised by this record must be answered in the negative. The purpose of the statute was to interdict the practice of carrying a deadly weapon about the person, for the jury. Easlick v. United States, 7 Ind. Terr. 707, 104 S. W. 941.

Evidence that a pistol was on the wagon seat near defendant is sufficient to support a verdict against him, under a statute forbidding the carrying of a pistol on or about the person. Garrett v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 25 S. W. 285; Hill v. State, 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 619, 100 S. W. 384.

And if one who borrows a buggy knows that there is a pistol under the cushion, and carries it to town in that position, he is guilty of unlawfully carrying a pistol. Leonard v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 119 S. W. 98.

So, a person carrying a pistol on his person in a buggy clearly violates a statute forbidding carrying concealed weapons on or about the person. Prewitt v. State, 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 323, 92 S. W. 800.

But, carrying a pistol in a box in the wagon in which defendant is riding is not a carrying on or about his person. Hardy v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. 511, 40 S. W. 299.

Neither does placing a pistol on cotton in a wagon, half way between the seat and rear end of the wagon, violate the statute. Thompson v. State, 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 146, 86 S. W. 1033.

And evidence that defendant reached down in his wagon and picked up a pistol from a corner of the wagon body has been held insufficient to show a carrying on or about his person. Cathey v. State, 23 Tex. App. 492, 5 S. W. 137.

So, a traveler may carry a pistol down in his buggy without violating an act prohibiting the carrying of deadly weapons about the person. Maxwell v. State, 38 Tex. 170. The court said: "In the opinion of this court, the act prohibiting the carrying of deadly weapons was not intended to prevent persons traveling in buggies or carriages upon the public highway from placing arms in their vehicles for self-defense, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

or even from carrying them from place to place for an innocent purpose. We can hardly conceive that a traveler would be compelled to lock up his arms in his trunk or valise, where they would be useless to him if attacked."

And it was held that a conviction for unlawfully carrying a pistol was not sustained by evidence that a pistol was carried in the pocket of an overcoat which defendant placed on his load, and did not wear at any time during the trip. George v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 29 S. W. 386.

A conviction for carrying a pistol concealed on or about the person cannot be had on evidence that, when a quarrel arose, defendant went down under the seat of the wagon in which he was riding, got a satchel and took a pistol from it, there being nothing to show to whom the grip or wagon belonged, or who placed it in the wagon. Com. v. Sturgeon, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 613, 37 S. W. 680.

And a case warranting conviction for carrying concealed weapons is not shown by evidence that accused went with her mother to watch a watermelon patch; that she took a revolver with her in the box it originally came in, carrying it in her hand; that she took it out of the box later, and went to her brother's assistance, and at times had it under her cloak with her hands folded. Smith v. State, 69 Ind. 140.

A conviction for carrying a concealed weapon was upheld in Holt v. State, 89 Ga. 316, 15 S. E. 316, where the evidence was conflicting as to whether the accused drew the pistol from his hip pocket or took it from a dinner box which was in his wagon.

Where there was evidence that defendant, in an information for carrying a revolver on the person, did not have the revolver on his person, but in a scabbard in his buggy, the evidence was held contradictory, so that the court more carefully scrutinized the eviconcealed, and yet so accessible as to afford prompt and immediate use. "About the person" must mean that it is so connected with the person as to be readily accessible for use or surprise if desired. A pistol in a scabbard and in a pair of saddlebags, with the lids down, though the saddlebags be in the hand, does not fall within the language of the statute, which says: "If a person carry about his person, hid from common observation, any pistol," etc.

Evidence that the defendant had a pistol concealed under a rug in the bottom of the buggy in which he was riding was held not to be sufficient to convict him of carrying a pistol concealed about his person. Ladd v. State, 92 Ala. 58, 9 So. 401.

Evidence that the defendant had a pistol concealed in saddlebags while riding along the public road was held not to be sufficient to convict him of carrying a pistol concealed about his person. Cunningham v. State, 76 Ala. 88.

The act of which the accused stands convicted in this case does not come within the spirit, and certainly not within the letter, of the statute, which it must do.

As said by Chief Justice Marshall in United States v. Wiltberger, supra: "It would be dangerous indeed to carry the principle that a case which is within the reason or mischief of a statute is within its provisions, so far as to punish a crime not enumerated in the statute, because it is of equal atrocity or of kindred character with those which are enumerated."

If the statute be less comprehensive than the legislature intended, it is for that body to extend its operation, and not for the courts to do so.

The judgment must be reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the case remanded for a new trial not in conflict with this opinion.

dence upon which the conviction was had. Walburn v. Territory, 9 Okla. 23, 59 Pac. 972.

The question of the necessity of an intent to conceal is not intended to be covered in this note. It may be of value, however, to call attention to two cases involving this question. In State v. Gilbert, 87 N. C. 527, 42 Am. Rep. 518, where defendant, a business man, purchased a pistol as a sample, and placed it in his pocket to carry to a store for packing with other things, he was held not guilty. The court said: "It is true, it will always be presumed to be a man's intention to do what in fact he does, and that he must contemplate the natural consequences of his conduct. But when the jury expressly find the contrary, and that, notwithstanding the act done, there was no criminal intention connected with it, that must put an end to the prosecution. In this instance, their only other meaning could have been that the act proceeded from accident or inattention, or some such like cause. And to hold that a merchant who, having just purchased a pistol with a view to his trade, and in carrying it from one store in a town to another, for the purpose of having it packed with other goods, thoughtlessly puts it in his pocket, not caring and not thinking whether it could be seen or not, is guilty of a criminal violation of the laws of his country, is more, we think, than was ever contemplated by those who framed the law upon the subject, and very certainly seems far removed from the mischief that it was intended to remedy."

And carrying a pistol in a sack does not violate a statute which contemplates making the offense of carrying to depend upon the intent to go armed, where there is an entire want of evidence to show such intent. Robinson v. State, 3 Shannon, Cas. 50. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

What amounts to concealment.

A weapon is generally held to be concealed when so placed that it cannot be readily seen under ordinary observation.

Thus, it is not necessary, under a statute prohibiting the carrying of a deadly weapon concealed about the person, that the weapon should be entirely concealed; if it is so concealed as to be generally hidden from ordinary observation, this is sufficient. State v. Johnson, 16 S. C. 187. The court said: "It is contended in the argument here that, unless the weapon is entirely concealed from observation, there is no violation of the law; and that, when it is only partially concealed, the statute is not violated. It is very true that the rule is that penal statutes must be construed strictly, but they are not to be so strictly construed as to defeat the obvious intention of the legislature. . . . Now, in this case, if the word 'concealed' should be construed to mean entirely or completely hidden from observation, then the manifest object of the legislature would be defeated, and the statute would, to a great extent at least, be nugatory. For, if a person could not be convicted unless the proof showed that the weapon was entirely and completely concealed, then it is difficult to perceive how in any case the act could be made effective unless the person charged should furnish evidence against himself. It seems to us clear, therefore, that such cannot be the proper construction, but, on the other hand, that the true construction is that, if the weapon is so concealed as to be hidden from ordinary observation, even though it may not be entirely concealed, and might be seen on closer examination, the offense is complete, and that it is for the jury to determine, from all the evidence, whether the weapon is so concealed. Again, if the weapon is so carried as not to be at all times exposed to the ordinary observation of the bystanders, the offense would be complete, even though at times it might be exposed to such observation. For example, if the weapon is carried under the coat, not exposed to view except when the coat is removed or thrown back by the wind or other cause, this would be a concealment in the sense of the statute."

And it was held, in Jones v. State, 51 Ala. 16, that, to constitute concealment, it is sufficient if the weapon is hidden from ordinary observation, although it may be seen on closer examination; and that this should be determined by the jury.

So, evidence that accused held a pistol in one hand, partially concealed by his vest and pants, and that no part was in open view, and that it could only be seen by looking in a certain direction, and from a certain point, is sufficient to support a verdict for carrying concealed weapons. State v. Miles, 124 Mo. App. 283, 101 S. W. 671.

And wearing a pistol in such manner that it is at all times partially concealed by the pants, and sometimes entirely concealed by the coat, is a violation of a statute prohibiting the carrying of arms secretly, but authorizing the carrying thereof openly, outside of all the clothes. Sutton v. State, 12 Fla. 135.

And it is not enough to warrant an acquittal that the pistol could be seen when accused took off his coat, or, by some accident, the skirt of the coat was so displaced as to expose it to view. There must be evidence that it was so worn that persons near enough to see it if not hidden could see it with ordinary observation. Street v. State, 67 Ala. 87.

It is held that concealment for but a moment violates the statute. Brinson v. State, 75 Ga. 882.

But a charge assuming defendant guilty of carrying a concealed weapon if the pistol was so carried that it was concealed from the view of those occupying a particular position, though it might have been open to the ordinary observation of those occupying different positions, is erroneous. Smith v. State, 96 Ala. 66, 11 So. 71. In discussing the meaning of ordinary observation, the court said: "What is ordinary observation in such cases cannot well be defined so as to meet all the varying conditions under which weapons may be carried about the person, but it may be said, generally, that the meaning is, the weapon must be open to the ordinary observation of persons who may come in contact in the usual and ordinary associations of life with one who carries a weapon about his person. If parties approaching a man carrying a weapon about his person, or passing him on the streets or highways, or thrown with him in ordinary social contact, can see the weapon without inspection or examination for that purpose, and from ordinary observation, then such weapon is not concealed about the person, within the meaning of the statute. Whether or not, however, it is so concealed, is a question for the jury, under all the facts and circumstances of each case." To the same effect is Driggers v. State, 123 Ala. 46, 26 So. 512; Hampton v. State, 133 Ala. 180, 32 So. 230.

And it was held, in Hainey v. State, 147 Ala. 146, 41 So. 968, that whether a pistol was carried in such manner as not to be discernible by ordinary observation was a question for the jury.

Testimony of defendant that "the pistol could have been seen by ordinary observation" is inadmissible, since it is a mere opinion or conclusion of the witness. Nichols v. State, 100 Ala. 23, 14 So. 539.

An instruction that a pistol must be carried in such an open manner and so fully exposed to view that a person "meeting" the carrier would readily see and know that he had a pistol about his person is erroneous, since "meeting" implies coming together from opposite directions; and a weapon might be carried so that it would be clearly visible from the rear, although not from the front, and thus no violation of the statute would exist. Stripling v. State, 114 Ga. 538, 40 S. E. 733.

The mere holding a pistol in the hand, although it may be concealed for a period from the only witness present, does not violate a statute against carrying it about the person. Ramsey v. State, 91 Ala. 20, 8 So. 568. The court said: "It cannot be gained that an ordinary pistol might be so carried in the hand as to amount to the offense of carrying it concealed about the person. To do so, however, would require more concealment than results from simply holding it in the hand. The true inquiry and test, in such cases, are, Was it so carried as not to be discernible by ordinary observation? . . . That is not enough. The proper inquiry was, Could it have been so seen by ordinary observation, as to disclose it was a pistol, held or carried as the testimony convinces the jury the real facts were? If it could, then the statute was not violated."

Where a pistol is carried in the pocket so that persons standing in full view of accused cannot see it, it is concealed. Brown v. State, 2 Ga. App. 417, 58 S. E. 549.

There is dicta in Cotton v. State, 88 Ala. 168, 7 So. 148, that a pistol is concealed, within the meaning of the statute, if it is hidden from sight, although the impression made on the coat is so clear that, at a distance of 15 feet, it could be recognized as a pistol.

Although, as already stated, it is not necessary that the weapon be entirely concealed in order to constitute a violation of these acts, yet it is held that a part of the weapon may be covered and hidden from view so long as it is still open to ordinary observation.

Thus, if a pistol is carried in an open manner, and so plainly and fully exposed to view that any person can see and know that it is a pistol, the statute against carrying weapons otherwise than in an open manner is not violated, although part of the pistol is concealed. Stockdale v. State, 32 Ga. 225.

And a pistol is not concealed where the evidence shows that a sufficient part of it is exposed to enable witness to recognize it as a pistol. Stripling v. State, 114 Ga. 538. 40 S. E. 733.

And if a pistol is carried so exposed to view that it can readily be seen and recognized as a pistol by one having his person in view, it is, in legal contemplation, carried in an open manner and fully exposed to view; but, if it is so far concealed that it cannot be readily seen and recognized as a pistol, it is carried in a manner prohibited by the statute. Killet v. State, 32 Ga. 292.

So, it is error to refuse defendant a continuance because of the sickness of a witness by whom he expected to show that the handle and a portion of the barrel of the pistol alleged to have been concealed were exposed to view. Barnard v. State, 73 Ga. 803.

In State v. Reams, 121 N. C. 556, 27 S. E. 1004, accused put a pistol in his coat pocket so that 2 inches of the breach and handle were showing. It was held error to instruct in effect that, if any part of the pistol was concealed, the accused was guilty of an indictable offense. The court said: "Whether the weapon is concealed from the public, and whether the defendant has rebutted the presumption of guilt raised by the statute when possession is shown, are questions of fact solely for the jury, under proper instructions from the court. If the weapon is partly exposed to public view, it would be difficult and unreasonable to say, as a legal conclusion, that it was concealed."

Evidence that defendant, in a prosecution for carrying concealed weapons, wore his pistol so that the cylinder and handle were above his waistband, and open to view, tends toward the inference that the pistol was not concealed. Newell v. State, 109 Ala. 5, 19 So. 511.

So, the presumption of concealment, raised by the statute upon proof that a weapon was found on accused, is rebutted by evidence that a pistol was carried by defendant buckled around him, without scabbard, and naked in a belt on the outside of his clothing. State v. Roten, 80 N. C. 701.

There is dicta in Carr v. State, 34 Ark. 448, 36 Am. Rep. 15, that a weapon, to be concealed, must be hidden in such a way as to put others off their guard.

But, the carrying of a pistol in the pocket or under the clothes, although partially exposed, is a violation of a statute defining as concealed any weapon carried by a person, not appearing in full, open view. State v. Smith, 11 La. Ann. 633, 66 Am. Dec. 208.

And this statute is violated by carrying a pistol with the barrel and cylinder stuck inside the waistband of the pants in front, although the handle and guard are exposed. State v. Bias, 37 La. Ann. 259.

And a person carrying a deadly weapon so that a part only is concealed, the other part being visible, is guilty of carrying a concealed weapon, within the meaning of a statute making it unlawful to carry a weapon concealed "in whole or in part." Martin v. State (Miss.) 47 So. 426.

Evidence that accused had a pistol in his hip pocket, concealed by a coat, is sufficient to warrant a conviction for carrying concealed weapons. Sanders v. State, 122 Ga. 143, 50 S. E. 66.

Where the defense was that defendant was in his shirt sleeves, and a part of the handle of the pistol could be seen protruding from his pocket, a charge that, "if the pistol in question was not concealed, but was so carried that enough of said pistol was exposed to public view to show plainly that it was a pistol," the defendant was not guilty, was as liberal as the latter was entitled to. Orrick v. Akers, 109 Mo. App. 662, 83 S. W. 549.

A conviction for carrying concealed weapons is not supported by evidence that witness saw accused and other boys leave his premises; that he ran after them, and, upon coming within 3 or 4 feet of them, accused pulled a pistol from in front of his person; that the pistol was a very large one, as long as witness's arm; that the boys had been hunting; that accused did not have on any vest, but a sack coat, and had a belt around his waist; and that witness did not see him until accused turned around,—since it is plain from such evidence that the pistol could not have been "concealed." Williams v. Com. 18 Ky. L. Rep. 663, 37 S. W. 680.

Where there was evidence that one accused of carrying a concealed weapon had a pistol on his person, under his overcoat, but it was not shown whether the coat was buttoned, and there was evidence that the pistol could be seen, it was held error to instruct the jury that, if they believed the testimony, the defendant was guilty, since it was for them to determine whether the evidence was sufficient to rebut the presumption of concealment raised by the statute upon proof that the weapon was found about defendant's person. State v. Lilly, 116 N. C. 1049, 21 S. E. 563.

The word "concealed," in a statute against carrying concealed weapons, means "wilfully or knowingly covered or kept from sight." Owen v. State, 31 Ala. 387.

So, a person who bears a pistol in his vest pocket, which is wilfully or knowingly covered, is guilty of the offense. Ibid.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

CELIA ELLIS MARLING, Appt.,
v.

CHARLES FITZGERALD et al., Respts.

(138 Wis. 93, 120 N. W. 388.)

Note — consideration — promise.

1. A promise to lend money as needed in the future is a sufficient consideration for a promissory note of the intending borrower for the amount, although the same is never in fact advanced.

Same — transfer — liability.

2. One who executes a note secured by mortgage which is placed on record, to another, who does not comply with a condition subsequent, which is to form the consideration for it, will not be permitted to set up that fact as a defense to a suit by one to whom the securities were assigned for value, without notice, although he did not take them in due course, so as to be within the protection of the law merchant, where the maker was charged with notice of the possibility of an assignment of the securities for value.

Same — defenses — time.

3. The rule that an assignee of a promissory note, not in due course, takes it subject to equities or defenses existing between the original parties, does not include defenses arising subsequently to the transfer, such as the failure of the payee to comply with a promise which formed the consideration for the note.

(February 16, 1909.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee

County in defendants' favor in an action brought to foreclose a mortgage. Reversed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:Action to foreclose a mortgage.

The issues raised by the pleadings were closed by findings of fact, which may be presented, as follows: March 19, 1903, defendant Charles Fitzgerald, the then owner of the premises described in the complaint, duly mortgaged the same to defendant Herman to secure payment of said defendant's note of like date, for $3,000, payable to the order of said Herman, three years after date, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, and said mortgage was duly recorded. The transaction occurred pursuant to an application by said defendant to said Herman for a loan of $3,000, to be used in the erection of a building on the mortgaged premises, the money to be advanced as fast as the improvement progressed. Upon the delivery of the note and mortgage to Herman, he delivered to said defendant an acknowledgment of the purpose thereof, and

Case Note. — Estoppel to set up original obligee's breach of condition to make future advances as against assignee of contract for payment of money, not protected by the law merchant.

The foregoing case presents what appears to be an unusual application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel, and there appears to be no precedent where the facts are identical or at all similar. At first glance the case would seem to be fully within the rule that an assignee without indorsement takes the instrument subject to the equities existing between the original parties. And a further examination seems to confirm this view, and to raise the query whether, if the holding of the court be correct, the doctrine of estoppel may not be invoked in every case in favor of the holder of commercial paper, whether negotiable in form or not, who has taken it in such a manner as not to be protected by the law merchant, although there be no representations by the maker as to its validity, save the existence of the paper alone.

The court distinguishes between the effect of a delivery of a note and mortgage which are not to take effect until the performance of a specified condition, and the delivery of an instrument in consideration of money to be advanced in the future, the security to take effect immediately. It is true that, in the former case, the security would not be valid until the performance of the condition, while, in the second case, there would be a certain valid effect from the start, sufficient, undoubtedly, to prevent the maker from maintaining an action for the cancellation of the instrument. But it cannot be contended that the payee could have enforced the securities before any advances had been made, and it does not appear in what way the 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) payee's position differs in the one case from what it would have been in the other, if the action is one to enforce the securities. Nor does it clearly appear how the assignee could be affected by the distinction noted.

The court says that the rule that a negotiable instrument in the hands of an assignee is subject to all the defenses or equities existing between the original parties refers only to such defenses as existed at the time of the transfer; but, in the case at bar, the defense pleaded, viz., lack of consideration, did exist at the time of the transfer, and would have been available in an action brought by the payee. It was not merely some subsequent default that the maker pleaded, but it was the absence of anything in the way of consideration, and the defense existed at the time of the transfer as well as at the time that the action was brought.

The quotation given in MARLING v. FITZGERALD from Bush v. Cushman, 27 N. J. Eq. 131, would seem to support the argument in the former case, but an examination of that case shows that an entirely different state of facts existed. The mortgage was given to secure a loan of $15,000, $5,000 of which was to be loaned immediately, and $10,000 to be thereafter advanced. At the solicitation of the mortgagor, the plaintiff loaned $5,000 to the mortgagee for the first loan, and took an assignment of the mortgage. In an action to foreclose it, it was held that the mortgagor was estopped by his acts in inducing the plaintiff to make the loan upon the mortgage, and by his representations that the mortgage was valid. In regard to the fact that the equities did not exist at the time of the transfer, there was a consideration of $5,000 which passed to the mortgagor, and the case merely held that the

in effect, that he was indebted to said defendant to the amount of the loan, payable as before indicated. March 20, 1903, said Herman borrowed of George Ellis $1,900, giving his promissory note therefor, payable three months after date, and for collateral security for the payment of the debt, delivered to said Ellis said first-mentioned note and the mortgage, duly assigning the same in writing, but not so as to enable the said Ellis to record the assignment, and it never was recorded. Before the commencement of the action, plaintiff became the owner of said $1,900 note, and succeeded to all rights of said George Ellis to said collateral security. The said $1,900 note is wholly unpaid, as well as the interest thereon from its date. No part of said $3,000 loan was ever paid to said Fitzgerald, nor could he ever collect any part thereof. Herman was known to Fitzgerald, at the time the mortgage was given, to be engaged in dealing in notes and mortgages, and in loaning money for himself and others on real estate security.

On such facts the court concluded: First, latter was estopped from pleading as a defense to the foreclosure of the mortgage, the fact that the mortgagee had failed to make the subsequent advances which he had agreed to make. It does not appear that the assignee was endeavoring to hold the mortgagor liable for the $10,000 called for by the mortgage, which he had not advanced, and which the mortgagor had never received.

In McNeil v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 325, 7 Am. Rep. 341, the plaintiff, to cover advances to be made for him, assigned certain stock to his brokers by a written assignment similar in all respects to those used ordinarily in passing title to stock. In an action to recover the stock from one to whom the brokers had wrongfully pledged it, the court held that while, ordinarily, an assignee of non-negotiable securities stands in no better position than his assignor, yet the plaintiff, by clothing his brokers with all the external indicia of title to the stock, was estopped to deny their title as against an innocent third party who had dealt with them in reliance upon their apparent title. It does not appear in this case, however, that, in the pledge of the securities to the third party, there was any omission on the part of the original assignee which ought to have put the third party on his guard, while in MARLING v. FITZGERALD the payee of the note did not deliver it to the third party by indorsement, which is the recognized manner of transferring paper of that character.

And the McNeil Case was cited with approval and followed in Moore v. Metropolitan Nat. Bank, 55 N. Y. 41, 14 Am. Rep. 173.

There are many cases where the doctrine of estoppel has been held applicable where there have been some express representa-

the note and mortgage were given without consideration; second, neither said Ellis nor plaintiff took said note in due course, so as to be entitled to the protection of the law merchant; third, the latter holds the same subject to equities and defenses, including the defense of failure of consideration, which said Fitzgerald would have, had the security remained in the hands of said Herman, and is, therefore, not entitled to enforce the same at all, and is liable to Fitzgerald for his costs and disbursements in the action.

Judgment against plaintiff was ordered accordingly and was so rendered.

Messrs. Goff, Hayes, & Hannan for appellant.

Messrs. Dorr & Gregory, for respondents:

The rights of the parties to the note are governed by the law relating to commercial paper.

Boyle v. Lybrand, 113 Wis. 79, 88 N. W. 904.

The holder of an unindorsed note cannot

tions on the part of the maker which influenced the third person to take the note, but such cases present a different question from that presented in MARLING v. FITZGERALD.

One other point should be noted. The court holds that the maker is estopped by his conduct in giving a note negotiable in form, and without any conditions thereon, to the payee, whom he knew to be a note broker, and who was likely to sell the note to some person without disclosing the nature of his business relations with the maker. But it might well be argued that the assignee could have fully protected himself from the defense of lack of consideration by insisting upon the payee's indorsement upon the note; and, in failing to do this, he was not in a position to say that he was a bona fide assignee for a valuable consideration.

In Robertson v. Merriam, 106 Ill. App. 610, the defendants took out policies of insurance upon their lives in consideration of a promise made by the agent that the company would thereafter make a loan upon their real property. Payments upon the notes were refused, as the loan was not given. The agent afterwards assigned the notes, but it does not appear whether they were assigned before or after maturity. The court said that if, as the plea alleged, the notes were assigned after maturity, the same defense could be made against the assignee that could have been made against the original payee. A recovery upon the notes, however, was allowed upon the ground that, in refusing to pay the notes, the makers were in effect rescinding their contract, and this could not be done unless they returned the policies for which the notes had been given.

Same — transfer — liability.

2. One who executes a note secured by mortgage which is placed on record, to another, who does not comply with a condition subsequent, which is to form the consideration for it, will not be permitted to set up that fact as a defense to a suit by one to whom the securities were assigned for value, without notice, although he did not take them in due course, so as to be within the protection of the law merchant, where the maker was charged with notice of the possibility of an assignment of the securities for value.

Same — defenses — time.

3. The rule that an assignee of a promissory note, not in due course, takes it subject to equities or defenses existing between the original parties, does not include defenses arising subsequently to the transfer, such as the failure of the payee to comply with a promise which formed the consideration for the note.

(February 16, 1909.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee

Case Note. — Estoppel to set up original obligee's breach of condition to make future advances as against assignee of contract for payment of money, not protected by the law merchant.

The foregoing case presents what appears to be an unusual application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel, and there appears to be no precedent where the facts are identical or at all similar. At first glance the case would seem to be fully within the rule that an assignee without indorsement takes the instrument subject to the equities existing between the original parties. And a further examination seems to confirm this view, and to raise the query whether, if the holding of the court be correct, the doctrine of estoppel may not be invoked in every case in favor of the holder of commercial paper, whether negotiable in form or not, who has taken it in such a manner as not to be protected by the law merchant, although there be no representations by the maker as to its validity, save the existence of the paper alone.

The court distinguishes between the effect of a delivery of a note and mortgage which are not to take effect until the performance of a specified condition, and the delivery of an instrument in consideration of money to be advanced in the future, the security to take effect immediately. It is true that, in the former case, the security would not be valid until the performance of the condition, while, in the second case, there would be a certain valid effect from the start, sufficient, undoubtedly, to prevent the maker from maintaining an action for the cancellation of the instrument. But it cannot be contended that the payee could have enforced the securities before any advances had been made, and it does not appear in what way the County in defendants' favor in an action brought to foreclose a mortgage. Reversed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

Action to foreclose a mortgage.

The issues raised by the pleadings were closed by findings of fact, which may be presented, as follows: March 19, 1903, defendant Charles Fitzgerald, the then owner of the premises described in the complaint, duly mortgaged the same to defendant Herman to secure payment of said defendant's note of like date, for $3,000, payable to the order of said Herman, three years after date, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, and said mortgage was duly recorded. The transaction occurred pursuant to an application by said defendant to said Herman for a loan of $3,000, to be used in the erection of a building on the mortgaged premises, the money to be advanced as fast as the improvement progressed. Upon the delivery of the note and mortgage to Herman, he delivered to said defendant an acknowledgment of the purpose thereof, and,

payee's position differs in the one case from what it would have been in the other, if the action is one to enforce the securities. Nor does it clearly appear how the assignee could be affected by the distinction noted.

The court says that the rule that a negotiable instrument in the hands of an assignee is subject to all the defenses or equities existing between the original parties refers only to such defenses as existed at the time of the transfer; but, in the case at bar, the defense pleaded, viz., lack of consideration, did exist at the time of the transfer, and would have been available in an action brought by the payee. It was not merely some subsequent default that the maker pleaded, but it was the absence of anything in the way of consideration, and the defense existed at the time of the transfer as well as at the time that the action was brought.

The quotation given in MARLING v. FITZGERALD from Bush v. Cushman, 27 N. J. Eq. 131, would seem to support the argument in the former case, but an examination of that case shows that an entirely different state of facts existed. The mortgage was given to secure a loan of $15,000, $5,000 of which was to be loaned immediately, and $10,000 to be thereafter advanced. At the solicitation of the mortgagor, the plaintiff loaned $5,000 to the mortgagee for the first loan, and took an assignment of the mortgage. In an action to foreclose it, it was held that the mortgagor was estopped by his acts in inducing the plaintiff to make the loan upon the mortgage, and by his representations that the mortgage was valid. In regard to the fact that the equities did not exist at the time of the transfer, there was a consideration of $5,000 which passed to the mortgagor, and the case merely held that the

in effect, that he was indebted to said defendant to the amount of the loan, payable as before indicated. March 20, 1903, said Herman borrowed of George Ellis $1,900, giving his promissory note therefor, payable three months after date, and for collateral security for the payment of the debt, delivered to said Ellis said first-mentioned note and the mortgage, duly assigning the same in writing, but not so as to enable the said Ellis to record the assignment, and it never was recorded. Before the commencement of the action, plaintiff became the owner of said $1,900 note, and succeeded to all rights of said George Ellis to said collateral security. The said $1,900 note is wholly unpaid, as well as the interest thereon from its date. No part of said $3,000 loan was ever paid to said Fitzgerald, nor could he ever collect any part thereof. Herman was known to Fitzgerald, at the time the mortgage was given, to be engaged in dealing in notes and mortgages, and in loaning money for himself and others on real estate security.

On such facts the court concluded: First, latter was estopped from pleading as a defense to the foreclosure of the mortgage, the fact that the mortgagee had failed to make the subsequent advances which he had agreed to make. It does not appear that the assignee was endeavoring to hold the mortgagor liable for the $10,000 called for by the mortgage, which he had not advanced, and which the mortgagor had never received.

In McNeil v. Tenth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 325, 7 Am. Rep. 341, the plaintiff, to cover advances to be made for him, assigned certain stock to his brokers by a written assignment similar in all respects to those used ordinarily in passing title to stock. In an action to recover the stock from one to whom the brokers had wrongfully pledged it, the court held that while, ordinarily, an assignee of non-negotiable securities stands in no better position than his assignor, yet the plaintiff, by clothing his brokers with all the external indicia of title to the stock, was estopped to deny their title as against an innocent third party who had dealt with them in reliance upon their apparent title. It does not appear in this case, however, that, in the pledge of the securities to the third party, there was any omission on the part of the original assignee which ought to have put the third party on his guard, while in MARLING v. FITZGERALD the payee of the note did not deliver it to the third party by indorsement, which is the recognized manner of transferring paper of that character.

And the McNeil Case was cited with approval and followed in Moore v. Metropolitan Nat. Bank, 55 N. Y. 41, 14 Am. Rep. 173.

There are many cases where the doctrine of estoppel has been held applicable where there have been some express representa-

the note and mortgage were given without consideration; second, neither said Ellis nor plaintiff took said note in due course, so as to be entitled to the protection of the law merchant; third, the latter holds the same subject to equities and defenses, including the defense of failure of consideration, which said Fitzgerald would have, had the security remained in the hands of said Herman, and is, therefore, not entitled to enforce the same at all, and is liable to Fitzgerald for his costs and disbursements in the action.

Judgment against plaintiff was ordered accordingly and was so rendered.

Messrs. Goff, Hayes, & Hannan for appellant.

Messrs. Dorr & Gregory, for respondents:

The rights of the parties to the note are governed by the law relating to commercial paper.

Boyle v. Lybrand, 113 Wis. 79, 88 N. W. 904.

The holder of an unindorsed note cannot

tions on the part of the maker which influenced the third person to take the note, but such cases present a different question from that presented in MARLING v. FITZGERALD.

One other point should be noted. The court holds that the maker is estopped by his conduct in giving a note negotiable in form, and without any conditions thereon, to the payee, whom he knew to be a note broker, and who was likely to sell the note to some person without disclosing the nature of his business relations with the maker. But it might well be argued that the assignee could have fully protected himself from the defense of lack of consideration by insisting upon the payee's indorsement upon the note; and, in failing to do this, he was not in a position to say that he was a bona fide assignee for a valuable consideration.

In Robertson v. Merriam, 106 Ill. App. 610, the defendants took out policies of insurance upon their lives in consideration of a promise made by the agent that the company would thereafter make a loan upon their real property. Payments upon the notes were refused, as the loan was not given. The agent afterwards assigned the notes, but it does not appear whether they were assigned before or after maturity. The court said that if, as the plea alleged, the notes were assigned after maturity, the same defense could be made against the assignee that could have been made against the original payee. A recovery upon the notes, however, was allowed upon the ground that, in refusing to pay the notes, the makers were in effect rescinding their contract, and this could not be done unless they returned the policies for which the notes had been given.

than his assignor possesses; but, said the court:

"It does not interfere with the well-established principle that, where the true owner holds out another, or allows him to appear, as the owner of, or as having full power of disposition over, the property, and innocent third parties are thus led into dealing with such apparent owner, they will be protected. Their rights in such cases do not depend upon the actual title or authority of the party with whom they deal directly, but are derived from the act of the real owner, which precludes him from disputing, as against them, the existence of the title or power which, through negligence or mistaken confidence, he caused or allowed to appear to be vested in the party making the conveyance."

Counsel for respondents place their sole reliance on the idea that the note was without consideration at the start, hence without validity (which is wrong, as we have seen), and on the law merchant as incorporated into § 1676-19 of the negotiable instrument statute (Laws 1899, chap. 356, p. 703), to the effect that the taker for value of a negotiable instrument without indorsement takes no better title than his assignor had thereunder, and § 1676-28, to the effect that a holder of negotiable paper, who does not acquire it in due course, is subject to the same perils as regards defenses by the payor as the payee was. Those rules, as we have seen, give way to the supreme rule of estoppel in pais. We are referred with confidence to Boyle v. Lybrand, 113 Wis. 79, 88 N. W. 904. Suffice it to say that we are unable to see that it touches the question in hand.

We are further referred to Rapps v. Gottlieb, 142 N. Y. 164, 36 N. E. 1052, where the court grounded its decision on the doctrine that an assignee without indorsement, of negotiable paper, takes it subject to all the defenses available as to the original parties, holding it to be applicable because the note and mortgage in question never had validity as obligations, since they were delivered to the named payee to take effect according to their tenor and not otherwise at all, only upon the happening of a condition precedent. Under those circumstances, negligence or inexcusable holding out on the part of the payor, essential to efficient application of the doctrine of estoppel in pais, was not found to exist. Without appreciation of the precise grounds for the decision, one would be quite liable to be led astray; especially in view of a brief discussion at the closing of the opinion 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) ion of the invocability of the doctrine of estoppel in pais. The court reasoned thus:

"It is a rule of last resort, applicable only where all others fail; it is a doctrine subordinate, and not dominant, which reverses no other, but submits to the authority of all, and is adequate to an ultimate decision only when it has the field to itself."

As those expressions are liable to be understood, they hardly give proper dignity to the doctrine of estoppel in pais. True, it is a rule of last resort, but, where it is applicable, it is not subordinate. It stays the operation of other rules which have not run their course, when to allow them to proceed further would be a greater wrong than to permanently enjoin them. It is a rule of justice, which, in its proper field, has a power of mastery over all other rules. It is a rule by no means to be discredited, but rather one entitled to the distinction of being one of the greatest instrumentalities to promote the ends of justice which the equity of the law affords.

There is this further insurmountable difficulty in sustaining the judgment. The rule that a negotiable instrument in the hands of an assignee for value and without notice of defenses as between the original parties is subject, nevertheless, to such defenses, has relation to such equities or defenses as existed at the time of the transfer, not to latent defenses or equities which possibly may, at some future time, exist. As said in Bush v. Cushman, supra: It does not embrace "equities or defenses springing from defaults, or even fraud of the assignor, committed subsequent to the assignment, and which had no existence, and were simply possibilities, at the time of the assignment."

The same doctrine was applied in Coster v. Griswold, 4 Edw. Ch. 364-374. The views of the court are thus expressed:

"All that the court of law or equity can do in such cases, since they recognize and protect the rights of assignees of choses in action, is, to allow them to take, subject always to any defense, legal or equitable, which existed in favor of the debtor against the original holder or creditor at the time of the transfer or assignment. Now, the question arises: What existing equity or defense was there against these bonds" when they were pledged to the "United States Bank as collateral security . . .?" And, again, "Where an assignee takes in good faith, his right to hold will not be disturbed or divested by any subsequent event or after-accurring right or equity of the debtor."

To the same effect are Chance v. Isaacs, 5 Paige, 592; Cornish v. Bryan, 10 N. J. Eq. 146; Losey v. Simpson, 11 N. J. Eq.

253; Murray v. Lylburn, 2 Johns. Ch. 442; Flemming v. Hoboken, 40 N. J. L. 270; North Bergen v. Eager, 41 N. J. L. 184-189; Ex parte Hale, 3 Ves. Jr. 304; Terney v. Wilson, 45 N. J. L. 282.

Here, as we have seen, at the time of the assignment to George Ellis, Herman was the absolute owner of the note and mortgage. They were not waiting upon the happening of any event to give them validity. Herman owed Fitzgerald $3,000, but was not in default. He had, at best, a possible contingent defense or equity. Under those circumstances, within the authorities cited, Ellis could safely take, in good faith, for value, the note from Herman. The latter's subsequent mere default could not operate to his prejudice.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for judgment according to the prayer of the complaint.

Winslow, Ch. J., took no part.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

NATHAN MELTON.

(— Ala. —, 47 So. 1024.)

Animal — death — fright — liability.

A railroad company is liable for the value of a horse which it frightens to death by its wrongful act, although no bodily injury is inflicted upon it.

(December 17, 1908.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Elmore County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to hold defendant liable for the value of a horse alleged to have been killed through defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Goodwyn & McIntyre for appellant.

Mr. Frank W. Lull for appellee.

Dowdell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

But one question is presented for our consideration, and that arises on the action of the lower court in overruling the demurrer of defendant, appellant here, to the complaint. The complaint contained two counts, in both of which it is charged that the defendant's servant and employee, in the operation of one of defendant's locomotive engines, by loud and terrifying noises unnecessary in the operation of the 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

engine, intentionally frightened plaintiff's horse "to the extent that it died from fright." The demurrer interposed contained a single ground, viz.: "For that the only claim made in said complaint is for alleged fright of the horse, unaccompanied by any bodily injury inflicted by the defendant, and the complaint therefore states no cause of action."

On demurrer, facts stated in the complaint or plea demurred to are to be taken as confessed. The "claim" made in the complaint is that the horse died from fright, and that the fright was caused by the wrong of the defendant's servant. The claim, therefore, is for more than the "alleged fright of the horse." It is for the death of the horse, caused by the alleged fright. The demurrer admits that the alleged fright caused the death, and, if this is true, it is unimportant that it was "unaccompanied by any bodily injury inflicted." The damages claimed are for the loss of the horse; and, if the loss was the direct and prox-

Case Note. — Liability for frightening animal to death.

An extensive search has disclosed but one other case presenting the novel question decided in LOUISVILLE & N. R. Co. v. MELTON, as to a defendant's liability for the death of an animal where the death results directly from the fright itself.

In Moshier v. Utica & S. R. Co. 8 Barb. 427, a horse was being led upon a highway which ran along the defendant's railroad tracks, and, as a train passed, became greatly frightened, jumped about, reared, and fell dead. The court held that a neglect of duty on the part of the defendant, if the proximate cause of the damage to the plaintiff, as was found on a reference, rendered the railroad company liable. It was urged in this case that an action did not lie for so exciting the fears of an animal as to cause its death, but the cases cited by the court indicate that no distinction was in mind between the case in hand and those where the fright of an animal was what may be termed the instigating cause of its death. Numerous cases have been before the courts since the decision in the Moshier Case, turning upon the liability of a defendant for the death or injury of an animal resulting indirectly from a fright for which the defendant was responsible, but these seem to present a somewhat different question from a case where fright itself causes the death.

See also Hazel v. People's Pass. R. Co. 132 Pa. 96, 18 Atl. 1116, where a horse, apparently frightened at one of the defendant's cars, reared and fell dead. The defendant was held entitled to the direction of a verdict because the case was absolutely devoid of testimony establishing any relation of cause and effect between the acts of the defendant and the death of the plaintiff's horse.

mate result of the wrong of the defendant, it is immaterial as to the agency employed in causing the damage. The case of Pullman Co. v. Lutz, 154 Ala. 517, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 907, 45 So. 675, cited by counsel for appellant, involved a different question from that here presented. The question there presented was whether damages could be had for mental pain and distress occasioned by fright; and in that case, while the court was divided, it was ruled by the majority that such damages were recoverable.

While the complaint in the present case may have been objectionable on some other ground, it was not open to the ground of demurrer stated. It follows, from what we have said, that the judgment must be affirmed.

Tyson, Ch. J., and Anderson and McClellan, JJ., concur.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

J. D. SCRUGGS et al.

(— Ala. —, 49 So. 399.)

Fire — interference with extinguishment — liability.

A railroad company which, in the ordinary course of its business, stops a train between a hydrant and a burning building, without notice of any intention on the part of anyone to run a hose from the hydrant to the fire, owes no duty to the owner of the burning building to move the train before the conductor has received his proper clearance card, for which he stopped, and cannot therefore be held liable for injury to the building because of its failure so to do.

(McClellan, J., dissents.)

(April 6, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Morgan County in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover damages for loss alleged to have been caused by defendant's interference with the extinguishment of a fire on plaintiffs' property. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — As to the duty of a steam or street railway company to avoid interference with extinguishment of fires, see the case notes to Houren v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1110, and American Sheet & Tin Plate Co. v. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 382, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Messrs. John O. Eyster, George W. Jones, J. M. Foster, and Lowe & Tidwell for appellant.

Mr. E. W. Godbey, for appellees:

The railroad company is liable for loss caused by failing to move its train out of the firemen's way.

Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Fulton, 144 Ala. 340, 39 So. 282; Metallic Compression Casting Co. v. Fitchburg R. Co. 109 Mass. 277, 12 Am. Rep. 689; American Sheet & Tin Plate Co. v. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 382, 75 C. C. A. 47, 143 Fed. 789, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 626; Tutwiler Coal, Coke & I. Co. v. Nail, 141 Ala. 374, 37 So. 634; Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Beauchamp, 95 Tex. 496, 58 L.R.A. 717, 93 Am. St. Rep. 864, 68 S. W. 502; Clark v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. 149 Mich. 400, 112 N. W. 1121, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 559; Phenix Ins. Co. v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 122 App. Div. 113, 106 N. Y. Supp. 696; Little Rock Traction & Electric Co. v. McCaskill, 75 Ark. 133, 70 L.R.A. 680, 112 Am. St. Rep. 48, 86 S. W. 997; Houren v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 236 Ill. 620, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1110, 127 Am. St. Rep. 309, 86 N. E. 613, 29 Cyc. Law & Proc. pp. 1151, 1153.

Messrs. Tyson, Willson, & Martin also for appellees.

Dowdell, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case was tried by the court without the intervention of a jury, and judgment was rendered for the plaintiffs. From this judgment the defendant appeals and here assigns its rendition as error.

But one question is argued and presented for our consideration, and that is whether there was a duty owing from the defendant to the plaintiffs, under the facts, for a violation of which the plaintiffs have a cause of action. There is no pretense that the defendant was in any way connected with the origin of the fire which destroyed the plaintiffs' property. The undisputed evidence is that, when the defendant's servants moved the locomotive and train of twenty-four freight cars from the company's yards to the point intervening between the hydrant or water plug and the plaintiffs' property that was on fire, it was without any knowledge or notice on the part of the defendant or of its servants of any purpose or intention of the fire department, or of anyone else, of laying a hose across the defendant's track, from said water plug to the plaintiffs' property. The movement of the train of cars was in the orderly course of the defendant's business. The place at which the train of cars was stopped, near the despatcher's office, was its customary and usual place for stopping to receive orders and clearance card from the despatcher, before it could proceed over what was termed the "block"—indicating, in this case, a certain section of railroad used in common by the defendant company and the Southern Railway Company—on its journey to Nashville, the place of its destination. The evidence as to the length of time the train remained stationary varies from five to "fifteen or twenty" minutes; but we think this unimportant, as the evidence is without dispute that the train moved on its journey over the block, immediately upon the receipt by the conductor, who had control of its movements, of the clearance card from the despatcher. Thus it is seen that the defendant company was in the rightful use of its property, in the ordinary and usual course of business. It was guilty of no negligence, in the exercise of its rights, resulting in injury to the plaintiffs' property. In the legitimate use of its own tracks, in the orderly course of business, the defendant, under the evidence in this case, was not by law charged with the duty to move its train of cars otherwise than according to its own rules and regulations.

We fully recognize the principle of law expressed in the maxim. Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas; but this principle finds no application under the facts of this case. We find the doctrine applicable here well stated in Cooley on Torts, 1st ed. p. 81, where it is said: "It is damnum absque injuria also if, through the lawful and proper exercise by one man of his own rights, a damage results to another, even though he might have anticipated the result and avoided it. That which it is right and lawful for one man to do cannot furnish the foundation for an action in favor of another. Nor can the absence of commendable motive on the part of the party exercising his rights be the legal substitute or equivalent for the thing amiss which is one of the necessary elements of a wrong. 'An act which does not amount to a legal injury cannot be actionable because it is done with a bad intent.'" Again, in 8 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 695, the doctrine is thus stated: "Applying this principle, it may be stated as a general proposition that every man has a right to the natural use and enjoyment of his own property; and if, while lawfully in such use and enjoyment, without negligence or malice on his part, an unavoidable loss occurs to his neighbor, it is damnum absque injuria, for the rightful use of one's own property may cause damage to another without any legal wrong." Applying this doctrine to the case before us, our conclusion is that, on the undisputed 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) evidence, the trial court should have rendered judgment in favor of the defendant.

In respect to legal responsibility to a third person, there is, we think, a distinction to be drawn between an active and a passive use, in the enjoyment of one's property rights. To illustrate: If, in the present case, the fire hose had been laid from the hydrant, across the tracks of the defendant, to the fire, and the defendant's servants, with knowledge of the existing conditions as to the fire and the laying of the hose, had wilfully or negligently run the train of cars over the hose, destroying it, and thereby prevented the extinguishing of the fire, a legal liability for such conduct would have arisen. That would have been an active use of one's property in violation of the maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. On the other hand, if (as was the case here) the defendant's train of cars was already rightfully standing on its tracks intervening the hydrant and the plaintiffs' burning house, and the defendant merely failed or refused to promptly move its train out of the way when requested so to do, in order that the hose might be laid across its tracks, there would be no case for the application of the above-quoted legal maxim. In the latter instance the use would be merely passive. The law imposes no duty on one man to aid another in the preservation of the latter's property, but only the duty not to injure another's property in the use of his own.

In the case of American Sheet & Tin Plate Co. v. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 382, 75 C. C. A. 47, 143 Fed. 789, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 626, cited and relied on by counsel for appellees, the facts are different from those in the case at bar. In that case the train of cars rested across a street crossing where the firemen wished to lay a hose to reach the fire. It is true it is stated that the street had been abandoned, as such, by the city, but it was maintained as a crossing by the company. The case, we think, when properly understood, is not opposed to the views we have expressed. Moreover, it was decided in that case that the railroad company was not liable.

Other cases cited by counsel are different in their facts from the case at bar, and are easily to be differentiated in principle.

The judgment appealed from will be reversed, and one here rendered in favor of the defendant.

Simpson, Mayfield, and Sayre, JJ., concur.

McClellan, J., dissenting:

The case made for the plaintiffs is, in substance, this: A freight train of the defendant, in orderly course of operation, was rolled up to a point on its track near defendant's office, and there stopped, thereby raising an obstruction between a building on fire and the nearest convenient fire plug; and when the employees having the physical control of the engine and train were requested to move the train so as to permit the fire hose, already connected with the plug, and which hose was of sufficient length to reach the conflagration, they wrongfully failed or refused to do so, and, in consequence, the property of the plaintiffs was damaged or destroyed. Of course, this statement takes no account of the conflict instituted by the testimony favorable to the defendant.

The right that one has to the use and enjoyment of his property, even for the purposes entirely lawful, is not absolute; and the lack of this absoluteness is expressed in the maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. And when the use and enjoyment of private property is opposed in exercise to casualties such as conflagrations in populous communities, the private right must yield to the qualification expressed in the maxim, Salus populi suprema est lex. Phoenix Assur. Co. v. Fire Department, 117 Ala. 649, 42 L.R.A. 468, 23 So. 843. The soundness and wholesomeness of the doctrine of these two maxims cannot, of course, be disputed. They are at least as old as the common law itself, and attach to the right of use and enjoyment of all property: but the controversy here does not involve a questioning of the doctrine stated in the first maxim. It involves the denial of the application of the doctrine to the mere inactive wrong, the omission, alleged to inhere in the failure or refusal to remove—as the ability and facility so to do, with safety, existed—the obstruction to the laying of the connected hose from the plug to the burning building. Since negligence can be predicated only upon breach of duty, it is clear that the inquiry is: Was it the duty of the employees in physical control of the engine and train occasioning the mentioned obstruction, to remove it, either by moving the train or by “cutting” the train; notice of the necessity to do so, in order to permit the application of the water to the fire, being given these employees? There is no serious contention that the backing of the train, or the cutting of it, so as to admit of the laying of the hose across the track, would have endangered that or other property of the defendant, or the safety of persons in its employ or using its service, nor was any hazard assigned, on the occasion, as a reason for such failure or refusal.

It has been ruled, upon what seems to me conclusive reasoning, that the duty rests on a railway or street car company to refrain, after notice, from severing hose laid across its track with the view to the extinguishment of a fire, and that a breach of this duty is a wrong for which the company is liable, if the damage claimed is a proximate consequence thereof. American Sheet & Tin Plate Co. v. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382, and note (75 C. C. A. 47, 143 Fed. 789, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 626); Little Rock Traction & Electric Co. v. McCaskill, 75 Ark. 133, 70 L.R.A. 680, 112 Am. St. Rep. 48, 86 S. W. 997; Metallic Compression Casting Co. v. Fitchburg R. Co. 109 Mass. 277, 12 Am. Rep. 689; note to Byrd v. English, 64 L.R.A. 95, 96. In my opinion, the cases of the cited class rest on a principle common to them and to that at bar. I cannot improve on the statement of the principle to be found in the American Sheet & Tin Plate Co. v. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. supra: “It is not denied that a natural person, or a corporation, by its corporate agencies, may so interfere with the rights of another, growing out of the emergency of a fire or conflagration of or on such other person's property or premises, as to make him or it liable for injury and damage directly resulting from such interference. Actionable interference of this kind is the violation of a fundamental social duty, and is within the definition of a common-law tort. Private property may be entered by the public authorities, or by the person, or his agents, who is owner of a burning property, for the purpose of using reasonable means to save the same or extinguish the fire; and undoubtedly, in the case now before us, the plaintiffs' employees, as well as the public firemen, had the right to cross the right of way and tracks of the defendant company for the purpose of leading the hose from the source of supply to the burning buildings.” In the case just quoted, the question under consideration in the case at bar was presented; and following the principle declared, as quoted, the court, through Judge Gray, exonerated the defendant upon the evident assumption that the duty to move or cut the train, so as to avoid interference with the efforts to extinguish the fire, was met by those in physical control of the train; the proof showing a promptly announced and acted-on willingness and purpose of the enginemen to relieve the emergency of the interference occasioned by his train. The majority attempt to distinguish this case upon the ground that a street was blocked by the standing train. Yet the statement of facts made by the learned judge shows (at page 384 of 12 L.R.A. [N.S.] that the “so-called Fifteenth street crossing was a way maintained by the company across the tracks of the railway company, on the line of what was formerly Fifteenth street, but for a long time abandoned as a city street." (Italics supplied.) The attempted differentiation is expressly refuted.

Besides, a principle may be applicable or not, owing to the facts; but a principle is never altered, whatever the facts. And the principle, clearly announced by Judge Gray, affects the duty due from the carrier to the firemen regardless of the public character of the place whereat the crossing of the track with the hose is necessary to the application of water to the fire. A perfect analogy, in principle, is afforded by the decision in Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Fulton, 144 Ala. 340, 39 So. 282, where it was held to be the duty of the train men to stop the train (if practicable) in order to allay the discovered fright of an animal being driven near the track, but not on a public highway. The doctrine of the maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas, was in fact applied in Fulton's Case to the effect that the right to the use and enjoyment of the carrier's property was qualified by the stated emergency, not attributable to the carrier in any degree. Houren v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 236 Ill. 620, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1110, 127 Am. St. Rep. 309, 86 N. E. 611, is an authority opposed to the majority view in this case. In my opinion there are none in support of the conclusion of the majority.

According to the testimony for the plaintiffs, the employees in the physical control of this train evinced, after full notice, an indifference to the situation and emergency that was little short of shocking. If A own an alleyway leading from the street to near B's dwelling to the rear, and such alleyway is bounded on either side by buildings owned by A, and the entrance to that alley is by a heavy gate on which A has a lock of special pattern, and it becomes necessary, in the reasonable judgment of the firemen, to approach B's burning building through A's alleyway, and the firemen request A to unlock his gate that the hose may be carried from the plug to the fire, and A refuses to unlock the gate, although he might readily do so, and the firemen undertake, in the interest of the extinguishment of the conflagration, to break down the gate, within their right to do, and great delay, in applying, from the indicated direction, water to the flames, ensues, and injury and damage to the property of B results as a proximate consequence of the delay in removal, by force, of A's gate, could it be doubted that A's conduct was within the common-law definition of "tort," based on a high social duty mentioned by Judge Gray? Other illustrations readily suggest themselves.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Counsel for appellant seek to show the unsoundness of the conclusion attained by the court below by an illustration hypothesizing circumstances where the owner of a building, adjoining another building then on fire is requested by the owner of one beyond that so adjoining the burning building to raze it, because the safety of the latter building is endangered by the fact that the intervening building will be ignited by the one already burning, and the fire thence communicated; and, in consequence of the refusal of the owner so requested to raze his building, the building more removed from the original building is burned. Whatever may be the ruling with respect to liability in such a case when it arises, the illustration is inapt in this case, for the reason that here no destruction of property, nor its hazarding, was involved in the requested removal of the interference, with the right to cross the tracks of the defendant as and for the purpose set forth in the complaint and shown by the testimony for the plaintiffs. The interference here complained of arose from a cause easily removable at the will of the person in control thereof,—an agency contrived to be propelled.

Of course, it follows that the application of the doctrine of the maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas, excludes an appeal to the doctrine of the maxim, Damnum absque injuria, for the obvious reason that the latter doctrine is grounded in rightful use; whereas, the status raised by the interference with the extinguishment of the fire on appellees' premises was a violation of a duty created by the emergency, coupled with the right to reach the burning building with the appliances maintained for the purpose of extinguishing fires.

The judgment should, in my opinion, be affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied May 11, 1909.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

B. F. BIGGER, Appt.,

v.

J. R. ACREE.

(87 Ark. 318, 112 S. W. 879.)

Livery-stable keeper—Injury to horse—Liability.

A livery-stable keeper is not liable for injury to a horse by its getting loose in the night and being kicked by another horse, where it was tied in the usual and customary manner, and as the owner had tied it when he brought it to the stable.

(September 21, 1908.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Randolph County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the loss of a horse, alleged to be due to defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Witt & Schoonover for appellant.

Messrs. Henderson & Campbell for appellee.

Hill, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Acree ran a hack between Maynard and Pocahontas, arriving each day at Pocahontas about 11 o'clock in the forenoon and departing at about 1 o'clock in the afternoon. He had two teams, and alternated in the use of the same, leaving one in the livery stable of Bigger, at Pocahontas, while he was using the other. Pittman was hostler for Bigger, and was in charge of the stable. When Acree came in each day, he tied the horses in the stalls himself, or Pittman did so. At the time in question, Acree brought in his team and tied them in their stalls himself. In the afternoon of that day, Pittman took the team out to water them, and returned them to the stable, and tied them in the same manner that Acree had tied them. In the night, Pittman heard a noise, and, going in the stable, found that one of Acree's horses was loose and standing in another stall. He tied it in that stall with the Case Note. — Care required of keeper of boarding stable.

The keeper of a boarding or livery stable, taking charge of a horse or carriage for hire, is not an insurer of it. Hunter v. Ricke Bros. 127 Iowa, 108, 102 N. W. 826; Dennis v. Huyck, 48 Mich. 620, 42 Am. Rep. 479, 12 N. W. 878; Searle v. Laverick, L. R. 9 Q. B. 122; dissenting opinion in Templeton v. Waddington, 14 Manitoba L. Rep. 495.

Ordinary care is all that is required at his hands. Hunter v. Ricke Bros. supra; Weick v. Dougherty, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 930, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 348, 90 S. W. 966; Eaton v. Lancaster, 79 Me. 477, 10 Atl. 449; Swann v. Brown, 51 N. C. (6 Jones, L.) 150, 72 Am. Dec. 568.

In Searle v. Laverick, supra, it was held that where a livery-stable keeper undertook, for a reward, to receive a carriage and lodge it in a coachhouse, he was bound only to take reasonable care of the same.

In Weick v. Dougherty, supra, it was held that if, by the exercise of ordinary care, a livery-stable keeper could have saved a wagon and its contents, left in his keeping for hire, and destroyed by the burning of his stable, he was liable.

In McPherrin v. Jennings, 66 Iowa, 622, 24 N. W. 242, plaintiff recovered the value of a horse which he had placed in charge of the keeper of a feed stable, to be cared for and fed for a consideration, the horse having killed itself in struggling to get its head free from a box in which its food was placed. The court said that the express liability for loss arose out of defendant's failure properly to care for the horse.

In Eaton v. Lancaster, supra, it was held that a jury might properly find that there was a want of due care on the part of a livery-stable keeper's night watchman, where, contrary to a rule of the keeper, he permitted drunken men to go into the hay loft, knowing that they were tobacco smokers and had pipes and matches with them, to stay during the night, and, about half an hour afterward, the loft was on fire, and the stable was destroyed, together with plaintiff's horse, which had been delivered at the stable to be kept for hire.

In Byrnes v. Holscher, 96 N. Y. Supp. 89, it was held that livery-stable keepers were liable for the loss of a sleigh which, while in their keeping, they let out to someone, who destroyed it.

In Hexamer v. Sonthal, 49 N. J. L. 682, 10 Atl. 281, it was held that a livery-stable keeper who undertook to board a horse assumed the duty of furnishing proper treatment when the horse became sick, and for death resulting from improper treatment, he was liable.

In Swann v. Brown, supra, it was held that it was the duty of a livery-stable keeper who permitted other horses, kept in the same stable, with a common door, to be taken out by their owners during the night, to have had an agent or servant present to see that the door was properly closed, so as to have prevented plaintiff's horse from escaping.

In Durocher v. Meunier, 9 Lower Can. Rep. Dec. Des Tribunan, 8, it was held that where a tavern keeper, who maintained stables in connection with his tavern, put plaintiff's mare into his stable for a compensation, and the mare's mane and tail were shorn in the night, the presumption was that the act was done by the keeper's own servants, or, at least, in consequence of his or their negligence, for which he was responsible.

In Powers v. Jughardt, 101 App. Div. 53, 91 N. Y. Supp. 556, where it was shown that a horse, while being boarded, was placed in a stall in good condition at night, and in the morning was found injured in a way that ordinarily does not occur without negligence, it was held that it then devolved upon the keeper to show that the accident occurred without negligence on his part.

In Hunter v. Ricke Bros. supra, where plaintiff's team, left with livery-stable keepers for hire, to be kept over night, was destroyed by fire, which consumed the barn and same rope that it had been previously tied with in the other stall. He did not at that time discover that the horse was injured; but the next morning he discovered that it had been hurt, apparently kicked on the leg, and he felt sure it had been kicked by its mate, as it was the only other horse in the stable. He and Acree treated the horse for several days, when it died. Acree brought suit against Bigger for the value of the horse, alleging that it had been injured, and died as a result thereof, through the negligence of Bigger in permitting the horse to run loose in the stable among other horses confined therein, as a result of which it had been kicked and injured, from which injuries it died. Bigger denied negligence, and the case was tried upon this issue, resulting in a verdict for Acree, and Bigger has appealed.

The only testimony as to the care of the animal was that of Pittman called by the plaintiff. He testified that he tied the mare in the stall with the same rope and in the same manner that the owner had tied it earlier in the same day, and that this was the usual way that it had been tied theretofore; that this mare had been in the habit of breaking loose at night, and he used a small rope with which to tie her, for the reason that, if a larger rope had been used, she might have broken her neck, or choked herself to death; that he had not tied a rope or chain at the rear of the stall to prevent her from backing out, for the reason that he did not think it necessary, nor was it customary in the livery business, with which its contents, it was held that the burden was on the keepers to overcome the presumption that the loss occurred through a want of ordinary care; but where they showed that the loss occurred through the operation of forces not within their control, the plaintiff, failing to disprove the asserted cause of loss, or to show that a want of ordinary care on the part of the keepers co-operated with such destroying cause, was not entitled to recover.

In Lockridge v. Fesler, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 469, 37 S. W. 65, it was held that a livery-stable keeper charged with negligently permitting a horse left in his keeping to be injured was entitled to plead and prove that the injury was caused by accident, without any carelessness or negligence on his part, or on the part of his employees.

In the preceding case, it was held that, where there was no proof that the alleged carelessness and negligence of the livery-stable keeper or his employees necessarily resulted in the injury and death of a horse left in his keeping, or that the result might reasonably have been expected to follow from the alleged negligence, the owner of the horse was not entitled to recover.

In Berry v. Marix, 16 La. Ann. 248, it was held that a livery-stable keeper was not liable for the disappearance or theft of horses from stalls rented at a stipulated price to the owner of the horses, who furnished his own provender, and kept his own employee in the stable to take care of the horses, since the contract related merely to the stalls, and not to the keeping of the horses.

In Adams v. Cost, 62 Md. 264, 50 Am. Rep. 211, it was held that, merely because of his obligation to take reasonable care of a horse left in his keeping for hire, a livery-stable keeper was not to be held liable where the owner of the horse interposed, and requested one of the keeper's servants to ride the horse out for exercise, during which it was injured through carelessness, this being no part of the contract of livery.

In Templeton v. Waddington, 14 Manitoba L. Rep. 495, where plaintiff paid to have his mare kept by a livery-stable keeper in an ordinary open stall, and she was kicked and injured by another horse which broke halter, it was held that defendant was not liable, in the absence of evidence showing knowledge that the horse was a vicious one, or that he had ever broken halter before.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Bradley v. Cunningham, 61 Conn. 485, 15 L.R.A. 679, 23 Atl. 932, it was held that a livery-stable keeper who, for hire, stored a hearse under an agreement which did not expressly specify any particular stable, though both parties expected that it would be kept at the main stable, at which place only it was covered by an insurance policy, was not liable for the loss of the hearse by fire, not due to his negligence, while stored in another stable also used in his business, where he did not in fact know of the limitation of the insurance, although a similar limitation existed in the policies upon his own vehicles.

In Peyser v. Lund, 89 App. Div. 195, 85 N. Y. Supp. 881, it was held that the keeper of a boarding stable was not liable for the value of property stolen from a truck left standing in the street in front of his stables, although, in violation of his contract to receive and care for such trucks and their contents, he had refused to receive the same.

Whether or not a livery-stable keeper, in the exercise of ordinary care, sufficiently guarded against fire the barn in which he kept horses which he was boarding, is a question for the jury. Weaver v. Montana Stables, 46 Wash. 65, 89 Pac. 154; Colby v. Montana Stables, 46 Wash. 609, 91 Pac. 1135.

And where the court tries the case without a jury, the decision of the court that the facts constituted negligence in the care of the horse has the effect of the verdict of a jury. Poncelier v. Palace Livery Co. (Ala.) 47 So. 702.

business he testified he was familiar. The rope with which she was tied was either half-inch or three-quarter inch rope, and was sufficient to hold any ordinary animal.

A livery-stable keeper for hire is required to use ordinary care of the animals committed to his charge. And he is liable for injuries to horses placed in his charge when, and only when, such injuries are occasioned by negligence on his part. "The ordinary care required, according to the familiar definition, is that degree of care which a person of ordinary prudence would take of the property, under the same circumstances, if it were his own." 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 432. See also, where the same principles were announced, Swann v. Brown, 51 N. C. (6 Jones, L.) 150, 72 Am. Dec. 568; Weick v. Dougherty, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 348, and note (28 Ky. L. Rep. 930, 90 S. W. 966); Adams v. Cost, 62 Md. 264, 50 Am. Rep. 211; Hunter v. Ricke Bros. 127 Iowa, 108, 102 N. W. 826; 25 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1512. In the case of Lockridge v. Fesler, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 469, 37 S. W. 65, the court of appeals of Kentucky had before it a case quite similar to this one. A horse, intrusted to a livery stable, had slipped his halter and escaped, and was killed. The defense was that the horse was hitched in the usual and customary manner in the stable; that the owner saw the manner in which the horse was hitched and placed, and did not object thereto; and that the horse was properly hitched, but, being breachy and restless, slipped its halter and escaped, without any carelessness or negligence on the part of the defendant or his employees. It was held that these facts constituted a defense. This case cannot be distinguished from that one, and the principle of it is correct and in consonance with all the authorities on the subject. Under the undisputed evidence in the case, the horse was cared for in the usual and customary manner of caring for horses in livery stables; and in the same manner that the owner cared for this horse in this stable. To hold the livery keeper liable under this evidence would be to make him an insurer of the safety of animals in his stable; and that is not the law.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

Wood, J., is also of opinion that the evidence is insufficient to show that the death of the animal resulted from the injury received.

23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

J. S. HANDFORD et al., Appts.,

v.

C. M. EDWARDS.

(89 Ark. 151, 115 S. W. 1143.)

Deed of trust — redemption — surety — subrogation.

A surety advancing money to his principal to redeem from a statutory foreclosure sale of property deeded in trust to secure the sum for the payment of which he is surety is not entitled to subrogation to the rights of the creditor, where the statute authorizes the Case Note. — Right of one who advances money to another for purpose of redeeming from a sale under a mortgage to be subrogated to the lien of the mortgage.

It will be noted that the foregoing decision turns upon the fact that, by the redemption itself, the lien was extinguished, and consequently there was no lien to which the defendant could be subrogated. In this way the case is to be distinguished from those cases in which one loans money merely to pay off a lien, and thereafter seeks to be subrogated to the lien. That the one loaning the money had an interest to protect, or that it was his intention to preserve the lien for his own protection, is consequently wholly immaterial, although ordinarily these facts are very important in cases involving subrogation.

There appear to be but few other cases involving the right to subrogation where money is loaned to redeem from a sale, and in none of these does it appear that the decision turns upon the fact that the lien had been extinguished by the act of redemption.

In Rodman v. Sanders, 44 Ark. 504, on the foreclosure of a vendor's lien, the vendee's father paid off the encumbrance, and received the outstanding purchase note and a deed to his son. The deed, however, was not put on record or delivered to the son, but was retained, together with the note, by the father, and it was held that he would be subrogated to the vendor's lien, as it was clearly his intention to preserve the lien for his protection.

In Backer v. Pyne, 130 Ind. 293, 30 Am. St. Rep. 231, 30 N. E. 21, it was held that a judgment creditor who, relying upon the debtor's fraudulent representations, advanced money to redeem the debtor's property from a sale under an execution, and to pay off other liens, in order to protect his own judgment, and who took a mortgage for the amount advanced, would be subrogated to the rights of the persons whose liens he satisfied, both as against the debtor and against other lienors whose liens were subsequent to the liens he paid, but were prior to the mortgage.

mortgagor to redeem the land sold free from the mortgage lien.

(February 1, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Independence County Chancery Court overruling a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to enjoin a sale of certain real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Samuel M. Casey, for appellants: Although the surety is entitled to the benefit of a security held by the creditor for the payment of the debt, yet, if the whole security has been applied upon the debt without paying it in full, and the surety has been compelled to make up the deficiency, he cannot then resort to the security for subrogation or contribution.

Sheldon, Subrogation, 2d ed. § 116; McConnell v. Beattie, 34 Ark. 113.

Plaintiff merely furnished the money for redemption to the judgment debtor as a part of the purchase money of the land, and is not entitled to subrogation of the land.

Nichol v. Dunn, 25 Ark. 120; Chaffe v. Oliver, 39 Ark. 531; Cohn v. Hoffman, 50 Ark. 108, 6 S. W. 511.

Mr. Samuel A. Moore, for appellee:

The complainant, having paid the surety debt, had a right to protect his own interest by furnishing the $400 with which to redeem the property.

Sheldon, Subrogation 2d ed. §§ 12, 19, 86; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 209, 237, 235; Talbot v. Wilkins, 31 Ark. 411; Chaffe v. Oliver, 39 Ark. 531; Newton v. Field, 16 Ark. 216; Spurlock v. Spurlock, 80 Ark. 37, 96 S. W. 753; Davies v. Pugh, 81 Ark. 253, 99 S. W. 78; Schoonover v. Allen, 40 Ark. 132; Fleming v. Beaver, 2 Rawle, 128, 19 Am. Dec. 629; Crippen v. Chappel, 35 Kan. 495, 57 Am. Rep. 187, 11 Pac. 453; Hughes v. Thomas, 131 Wis. 315, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 744, 111 N. W. 474, 11 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 673.

Hill, Ch. J. delivered the opinion of the court:

In 1905 the Bank of Newark obtained a decree in the Independence chancery court against C. J. Magness in the sum of $2,865.62. This decree was based on a note secured by a deed of trust upon real and personal property, and a foreclosure was decreed. Two lots in the town of Newark were sold under said decree for $400, and the purchase price thereof credited upon the decree. Edwards was one of several sureties of Magness to the bank, and after the foreclosure, the property being insufficient to discharge the debt, he was compelled to pay $197.28 as his pro rata of the debt due the bank. Magness was insolvent and unable to pay the same. In order that he might protect himself, Edwards advanced the sum of $400 with which to redeem the lots from the commissioner's sale, and in consideration of said $400, and the $197.28 paid as surety, Magness executed to Edwards on the 20th. of May, 1907, his warranty deed for said lots.

Handford and Adams obtained judgment in the Independence chancery court against Magness on the 14th of May, 1907, and in July, 1907, had execution issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff, and levied on the lots conveyed by Magness to Edwards, and said lots were thereupon advertised for sale. Edwards brought a complaint in equity, alleging that a sale of said lots would be a cloud upon his title, and asking that, if they should be sold, he be subrogated to the amount of $597.28, the amount which he had advanced as surety and to redeem said lots. The court directed a cancellation of the deed of Magness to Edwards, but decreed a subrogation to the amount he had advanced as surety and for the redemption of said lots, to wit, $597.28, and declared it a lien upon the lots superior to the title of Handford and Adams, derived through the execution upon their judgment. The court overruled a demurrer to a complaint setting forth these facts, and after judgment, Handford and Adams appealed.

The statutory right of redemption from mortgage sales entitles the mortgagor to redeem the lands sold, free of the mortgage lien. Fields v. Danenhower, 65 Ark. 392, 43 L.R.A. 519, 46 S. W. 938. In this case the court said: "For the purpose of redemption, the statute conclusively presumes that the price for which the property sells at the mortgage sale represents its actual value, and it allows the mortgagor, within a reasonable time after the sale, to redeem and reclaim the property by substituting therefor its money value, as determined by such facts." This was said in regard to a sale under a power in the mortgage, but the reasoning is equally applicable to the statutory right to redeem from a mortgage foreclosure in chancery. As pointed out in Fields v. Danenhower, this principle only applies to the statutory right of redemption.

It follows that the land redeemed by Magness, through the advance of the money to him by Edwards, was redeemed, free from any lien, and there was no lien to which Edwards could be subrogated. This was a simple advance to Magness of money to enable him to redeem this land, which he did, for which he took a deed to the property; but, at the time he took the deed to the property, there was an outstanding judg-

Same — medical examination.

5. A statutory provision requiring applicants for life insurance to pass a satisfactory medical examination by a physician applies to applicants for burial insurance.

(November 24, 1908.)

A PPEAL by the State for a judgment of the Circuit Court for Hancock County quashing an indictment charging defendant with writing insurance in violation of the provisions of the statute. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles L. Tindall, James Bingham, E. M. White, H. M. Dowling, and A. G. Cavins for appellant.

Messrs. Felt & Bulford for appellee.

Hadley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The prosecuting attorney filed an affidavit charging appellee with writing a policy of insurance in violation of § 4713, Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908 (§ 4894ul, Burns's Anno. Stát. 1901). Appellee's motion to quash the affidavit was sustained, and the state appeals.

The first count of the affidavit stated, in substance that the appellee, on the 10th day of December, 1907, knowingly and unlawfully wrote a policy of insurance upon the life of one Davis, who was then and there an individual in the state of Indiana; the policy reading as follows:

No. 8539.

Greenfield, Indiana, Dec. 10, 1907.

This is to certify that Charles C. Davis, who was born on the 1st day of July, 1867, is entitled to membership in the Greenfield Mutual Burial Association, and entitled to all the benefits as a member of said association, in accordance with the by-laws thereof.

M. T. Smith, President.

Attest: Oak S. Morrison, Secretary.

The affidavit then sets out the by-laws of the Greenfield Mutual Burial Association,

App. 345, 52 N. E. 462, it was held that, under a policy in a benevolent society providing that "if death shall result from any cause, at any time while this member is in good standing, then this society shall . . . pay to his estate . . . $100 as a funeral fund," followed by the clause, "no benefits will be paid for self-inflicted injuries,"—there could be no recovery of the funeral fund where the member committed suicide.

But, in Penn Lodge, No. 105, K. P. v. Chalfant, 1 Chester Co. Rep. 133, where there was no such provision against payment of benefits for self-inflicted injuries, it was held that the administrators were entitled to the funeral benefit, although the deceased member committed suicide.

Funeral benefits cannot be recovered upon the death of one who has been expelled as a member of the benefit association, and has taken no steps to have himself reinstated. Dodd v. Armstrong, 43 Phila. Leg. Int. 270.

The fact, however, that charges were pending against deceased at the time of his death, does not affect the right to recover his funeral benefit, in the absence of a by-law to that effect. Mullen v. Court Queen City, O. F. 70 N. H. 327, 47 Atl. 257.

In Frey v. Fidelity Lodge, No. 123, K. P. 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 435, where it appeared that the by-laws of a benefit society provided for sick benefits, and, "on the decease of a beneficial member, the lodge shall appropriate $75 towards defraying the expenses of his funeral," and further provided that a member taken sick when in arrears could not, by the payment of such arrears, become entitled to benefits during that sickness.—it was held that the society was not liable for the funeral expenses of a member, who, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) being in arrears, paid the same while afflicted with a sickness which continued until his death.

In Anthony v. Carl, 28 Misc. 200, 58 N. Y. Supp. 1084, where the by-laws of an unincorporated association provided for the payment of funeral money to the widow of a deceased member if he had paid all dues "that may legally be demanded of him by the lodge," it was held that the widow of a member who was in default at the time of his death could not recover the funeral money, although the lodge had not legally demanded payment of him.

In Hess v. Johnson, 41 App. Div. 465, 58 N. Y. Supp. 983, it was held that the widow of a deceased member of a voluntary association was not entitled to recover the amount of a funeral benefit where it appeared that the constitution of the association, which was subscribed by the widow's husband, provided that the sum of $100 should, on the decease of any member of one year's standing, be paid to the relative who should assume or be responsible for the expenses of his funeral, the payment being subject to the proviso that "no funeral benefits shall be paid by this union in the case of a member who shall have been three months in arrears during the six months immediately preceding his death," and the deceased husband was in arrears for a period of over three months, which he discharged less than four months before his decease.

In Cowan v. New York Caledonian Club, 46 App. Div. 288, 61 N. Y. Supp. 714, it was held that there could be no recovery of a funeral allowance payable by a club's rule "on the death of a member in good standing," where the deceased member was in arrears for dues, and, in order to pre-which state that the object of the association is to provide a plan for the payment of funeral expenses for the members thereof, which plan consists of the payment, by assessment, of funeral expenses to the amount of $75 for each member ten years of age or over, and $37.50 for each member under ten years of age. Any person in good health, between the ages of one year and seventy years, may become members by paying an initiation fee of 10 cents if over ten years of age, and 5 cents if under ten years of age. The officers shall consist of president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer,—the duties of the last two to be performed by the same person,—and these three shall constitute a "board of control," and have full power to direct the affairs of the association. These officers are to be elected annually, if necessary, and the various adult members are each given one vote. When a member dies, if over ten years of age, every member over ten years old shall be assessed and pay 11 cents; 10 cents of this being used as "funeral expenses," and 1 cent being used for "paying for collections." All members under ten years old and over five years old must pay 5 cents, all of which is to go for funeral expenses. If a member under ten years of age dies, each member over ten years of age shall pay 6 cents, 5 cents of which is to go to pay funeral expenses, and 1 cent for collections; and members under ten years shall pay 3 cents each, all of which is to be used for funeral expenses. Failure to pay any such assessment for thirty days forfeited the membership and all previous payments. In case the membership becomes so reduced that the benefits promised in the by-laws cannot be paid, only such benefits are to be furnished as the above assessments would justify. If there should be an excess of revenue from the assessments, such excess shall be paid into the treasury, to be applied on future benefits as the necessity therefor may arise. A member removing to such a distance as to render the services of the association's undertaker impracticable must notify the association's undertaker of such removal, and give the name of an undertaker preferred at the new place of residence.

vent his name from being erased from the roll of membership on account of being in arrears, it was necessary that he should make excuse satisfactory to two thirds of the members present at the next regular meeting, and, at the time of his decease, he had not made such excuse.

In Hess v. Johnson, supra, it was held that a provision in the constitution of a voluntary association, that, in case of a member being in arrears for three months, even when he paid those arrears, his family should not be entitled to funeral benefits unless he continued his payments for six months thereafter, was valid and binding.

In Sherry v. Plasterers' Union, 139 Pa. 470, 20 Atl. 1062, where it appeared that the constitution of an incorporated beneficial society provided that a member should be entitled to $100 for funeral expenses if he was not more than three months' dues in arrears at the time of his death; that deceased was three months in arrears and he died the day before the fourth payment was due,—it was held that the society was liable for the $100.

In O'Keefe v. William M. Barry Benev. & Athletic Asso. 74 N. J. L. 435, 66 Atl. 601, where the constitution of a benevolent association provided that upon the death of a member there should be appropriated $75 to defray his funeral expenses if his dues were not "unpaid for over three months," and it appeared that his dues were paid up to July 1st, and he died on September 24th of the same year,—it was held that a verdict for the association was erroneous.

In Talbot v. Tipperary Men Nat. Social & Benev. Asso. 23 Misc. 486, 52 N. Y. Supp. 633, it was held that a benevolent corporation was not liable for the burial expenses of a member's wife where, by its constitution, it had expressly reserved the right to itself to expend the money towards the burial of its members or their wives, or hand it over for that purpose to the next of kindred, and it had no notice of the death of such member's wife until after her funeral, and consequently no opportunity to exercise its option.

In Emmons v. Hope Lodge No. 21, I. O. O. F. 1 Marv. (Del.) 187, 40 Atl. 956, it was held that, in order to recover funeral benefits, under a by-law of a beneficial association, it was necessary to show that the deceased member was a member in good standing, and had strictly complied with the provisions of the by-laws and constitution of the association.

In Mullen v. Court Queen City, O. F. supra, it was held not necessary first to submit a claim for a funeral benefit to the adjudication of the lodge before bringing a suit therefor.

Who may recover.

In Matoon v. Wentworth, 4 Ohio L. J. 513, it was held that, since it was the duty of the administrator of the deceased to defray the expenses of the funeral, he was entitled to recover the funeral benefits provided for in deceased's benefit certificate.

Where the by-laws of a voluntary unincorporated association, providing for the payment of a funeral benefit, make no provision as to whom it shall be paid, the administrator of a deceased member is entitled to recover the amount. Taylor v. Pet-tee, 70 N. H. 38, 47 Atl. 733; Pearson v. Anderburg, 28 Utah, 495, 80 Pac. 307.

In Miller v. Wolf, 18 Lanc. L. Rev. 105, where it appeared that the constitution of an unincorporated beneficial society pro-

Failure to do so forfeited all rights in the association. No salary shall be paid to any officer. The initiation fee shall be paid into an expense fund, for the "expenses of organizing the association—and such subsequent expenses as may be legitimately incurred." The president can call meetings of the association at his pleasure, and must do so upon written request of ten members. Each member shall receive a certificate as follows:

No. ———.

Greenfield, Ind., ———, 190—.

This is to certify that ———, who was born on the ——— day of ———, ———, is entitled to membership in the Greenfield Mutual Burial Association, and entitled to vided that, "upon the death of a member entitled to weekly benefits, a funeral benefit . . . shall be paid to the nearest competent relative, to aid in defraying the expenses of his burial, for which purpose the said benefit is paid, . . . provided that, if in any case it shall be deemed advisable for the noble chief to receive the money and defray the funeral expenses, it shall be lawful for him to do so;" that the noble chief had paid over the funeral benefit of a deceased member to the executor, who had paid funeral expenses in excess of the benefit; that plaintiffs had not contracted for or paid any funeral expenses,—it was held that plaintiffs, although the nearest competent relatives, had no right to the benefit, and that it was properly paid to the executor.

In Radiant Temple, No. 2, O. U. A. v. Piper, 62 N. J. Eq. 565, 50 Atl. 177, where the constitution of a beneficial association provided that a funeral benefit should be paid to the head officer of the subordinate lodge, "should the member leave no relative," and the by-laws directed that $25 should be immediately "paid to the family or to the person bearing the expense of the burial," and further provided for the payment of an additional $125 as funeral benefits, without naming the person to whom it was to be paid,—it was held that the additional amount was presumably to be paid to the same person, and that deceased's husband, being her sole survivor, and having paid the funeral expenses, was entitled to the $125.

In Fanton v. Coachmen's Benev. Union, 13 Misc. 245, 34 N. Y. Supp. 162 where the constitution of a benevolent association provided that, "in case of the death of a member entitled to benefits, the sum of $150 shall be allowed as a funeral benefit. In the absence of competent friends, the association shall appoint a committee to take charge of the deceased brother"—it was held that the deceased's widow could not recover the $150, since she was not designated as beneficiary, and, as the benefit provided was expressly a "funeral benefit" as distinguished from a benefit in the nature all the benefits as a member of said association in accordance with the by-laws thereof.

———, President.

———, Secretary.

Applicants for membership are required to be in good health. Articles 14 and 15 are in these words:

The benefits herein provided are for the purpose of furnishing respectable funeral and burial services for deceased members, and the benefits provided are to be paid to the undertaker furnishing such services, and not to surviving relatives and friends as death benefits. It is agreed that the goods for said funerals shall be furnished and of life insurance, a rational interpretation of the words used restricted the "benefit" to an allowance for burial expenses defrayed by the "competent friends," or by the committee appointed to act in their absence.

Likewise, in Hughes v. Journeymen Horseshoers' Protective Union & Benev. Soc. 29 Misc. 327, 60 N. Y. Supp. 526, where the by-laws of a benevolent society provided that, "on the death of a member in good standing, the sum of $100 shall be appropriated for his funeral expenses," to be paid by the society to the "proper parties," so as to "insure a decent and Christian burial," it was held that the widow of a member was not entitled to recover the $100 in the absence of proof that she defrayed the funeral expenses.

In Berlin Beneficial Soc. v. Merch, 82 Pa. 166, it was held that a widow who had voluntarily left her husband, and was not living with him at the time of his death, and who bore no part of his funeral expenses, could not recover from an incorporated beneficial society of which he was a member, under its by-law providing that, at the death of a member, the association shall pay to his widow or relatives $25 for and towards his decent interment.

In Smith v. Theatrical Mechanical Beneficial Asso. 5 Pa. Dist. R. 326, it was held that, under a by-law of a beneficial association which provided that, "in the event of the death of a brother, a funeral benefit of $100 shall be appropriated to the wife or other proper person," the widow could not recover the sum where it appeared that she had wilfully and maliciously deserted her husband; that his mother attended him during his last illness, and paid the bills for medical attendance, etc.; and that the association stood ready to make payment to the mother.

In Battersby v. Schnykill Tribe No. 202, I. O. R. 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 288, it was held that, where the by-laws of a beneficial society provided that a funeral benefit should be paid to the widow of a deceased member unless the officers of the association were satisfied that it would be diverted from its legitimate purpose, in which case they were services rendered by C. W. Morrison & Son, their heirs and assigns, and they are hereby designated the official undertakers of this association.

Board of control:

Marshall T. Smith, President.
Joel B. Pusey, Vice President.
Oak S. Morrison, Sec'y and Treas.

The affidavit further charged that neither the beneficiary named in said policy of insurance, nor any member of the firm of C. W. Morrison & Son, had any bona fide insurable interest, in whole or in part, in the life of said Charles C. Davis, at the time said policy was issued, nor at said time was the beneficiary of such policy, nor was any member of the firm of C. W. Morrison &

Son, related to said Charles C. Davis in any degree of kinship whatever.

The statute referred to at the head of this opinion forbids the taking, or the receiving, of any application for any insurance upon the life of any person in the state of Indiana, in favor of any person who has not a bona fide insurable interest in the life of the insured, or who is not related to him within a degree not further removed than first cousins. It also forbids the issuance of a policy of insurance where the insured has not been subjected to, and satisfactorily passed, a medical examination by a duly authorized physician. The offenses created by this statute relate to the character of the interest or relationship of beneficiaries in contracts of insurance, and the state of given power to see that the funeral expenses were paid,—an undertaker who was a mere volunteer without contract with the association could not recover from the latter the funeral benefit of a deceased member merely because he had notified the association that the widow had declared that she would not use the same, or any part thereof, to defray the funeral expenses.

In Sleight v. Supreme Council, M. T. 121 Iowa, 724, 96 N. W. 1100, it was held that, where the constitution and by-laws of a benevolent society provided that $100 should be paid towards defraying funeral expenses "to the nearest of kin of the deceased member, or one having the burial of such member in charge," plaintiffs could not recover in the absence of an allegation that they were the nearest of kin, or that they had the burial of the member in charge.

Where they so allege and prove the allegation, they are entitled to recover. Sleight v. Supreme Council, M. T. 133 Iowa, 379, 107 N. W. 183.

In Sherry v. Plasterers' Union, 139 Pa. 470, 20 Atl. 1062, it was held that, where the amount agreed to be paid for burial purposes was to be paid to deceased's nearest relatives, a complaint which alleged that "the plaintiffs are the father and mother of . . . deceased, and his nearest relatives," was sufficient, and made out a prima facie case, since, if decedent was married and left a widow or child living, this was matter of defense.

Duty of receiver of fund to pay funeral expenses.

In Redmond v. Redmond, 112 Ky. 700, 66 S. W. 745, it was held that, where, by the rules of a society to which deceased belonged, $40 was appropriated to be applied to the payment of burial expenses, the widow, collecting the same, could not claim it as part of her distributive share.

A widow who has received funeral benefits from beneficial societies of which her deceased husband was a member, in her account as administratrix of his estate, can be allowed only the excess of his funeral expenses over and above the funeral benefits received by her. Hyneman's Estate, 2 W. N. C. 571; Sharp's Estate, 2 W. N. C. 631; Nixon's Estate, 6 W. N. C. 496.

And after the widow has paid the funeral expenses out of the funeral benefit, she will not be allowed credit for the same out of her deceased husband's estate in the hands of an administrator. Haas's Estate, 3 Pa. Co. Ct. 345.

In Martin's Estate, 2 Chester Co. Rep. 47, it was held that, where the funeral benefit, according to the constitution of a beneficial society, was paid to the widow to aid in defraying the expenses of a deceased member's funeral, he having expressly stipulated by his membership in the society that the benefit should be so used, the money so received by the widow was impressed with a trust to pay such funeral expenses, and the widow's estate was held liable to his estate for the amount of the expenses in fact paid by his estate; but the portion of the funeral money received by the widow, beyond what was necessary to discharge the funeral expenses, went to the widow absolutely, the deceased having made no provision for the use of any surplus there might be.

In Althouse v. Roth, 35 Pa. Super. 400, it was held that, where a policy of insurance provided for the payment of funeral benefits to the executors or administrators of the insured, and also provided that the company could make payment to "any relative by blood, or connection by marriage, of the insured, or to any other person appearing to said company to be equitably entitled to the same by reason of having incurred expense in anyway on behalf of the insured for his or her burial," and it appeared that the company paid the benefits in good faith, and in the exercise of its discretion, to the husband of the insured,—he acquired title to the money, in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation, and, although he used no part of the money on account of expenses incurred for the burial of his wife, her administrator could not recover the same from the husband.

the health of the insured. The first question therefore to be determined is whether the Greenfield Mutual Burial Association, as shown by its by-laws and certificates of membership, is engaged in doing a life insurance business; or, in other words, whether their "certificates," such as was issued in this case, are, in legal contemplation, insurance contracts upon the life of persons named.

There are three kinds of insurance companies—stock, mutual, and mixed. A "stock company" is one where the stockholders contribute all the capital, pay all the losses, and take all the profits. A "mutual company" is one wherein the members constitute both the insurers and the insured, where the members all contribute, by a system of assessments, to the creation of a fund from which all losses and liabilities are paid, and wherein the profits are divided among themselves in proportion to their interests. "Mixed companies" are such as the term implies. They embody the characteristics of both the others. The subjects of insurance are numberless. The various systems, with their ramifications, offer indemnity for almost every conceivable loss or injury that may be sustained, and which depends upon future possibility or uncertainty in point of time. It embraces the hazards of navigation, losses by fire, lightning, tornadoes, accidents of almost every character, insolvency of debtors, dishonesty and negligence of employees, failure of title to real estate, death of animals and of human beings. In life insurance, the event insured against is sure to happen, and at some time the indemnity promised the beneficiary is sure to demand the full amount stipulated in the contract. But the contracts made by all kinds of insurance companies are plain indemnity contracts; contracts by which one party agrees, for a stipulated sum, to assume some risk borne by the other party, and, if the apprehended loss occurs, to make the loser whole by reimbursing him fully, or to the extent agreed upon in the contract. There is no doubt but a contract founded upon a legal consideration, whereby the obligor undertakes to furnish the obligee, or to one of the latter's near relatives, as the case may be, at death, a burial reasonably worth a fixed sum, would be a valid contract. If the citizen of small means, or for any other reason, desires to make a definite arrangement for the expenses of his funeral, and thus make certain of a sufficient amount to secure a respectable burial, the law will sustain him, if he will keep his contract within certain well-defined limitations, demanded by both the statute and public policy. Such a contract, however phrased, would be an indemnity contract.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Bouvier defines an "insurance contract" to be one "whereby, for an agreed premium, one party undertakes to compensate the other for loss on a specified subject, by specified perils." Bouvier's Law Dict. p. 1008, "Insurance." In State ex rel. Sheets v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 68 Ohio St. 2, 64 L.R.A. 405, 96 Am. St. Rep. 635, 67 N. E. 93, life and accident insurance is defined to be "a contract whereby one party, for a stipulated consideration, agrees to indemnify another against injuries by accident or death." In Com. v. Equitable Beneficial Assn. 137 Pa. 412, 18 Atl. 1112, it is said: "A contract of insurance is purely a business adventure, not founded on any philanthropic or charitable principle; and the design and purpose of an insurance company, and the dominant and characteristic feature of its contract, is the granting of an indemnity or security against loss, for a stipulated consideration." The same subject is stated in Cooley's Briefs on Law of Ins. vol. 1, p. 5, thus: "Perhaps a better definition is that a contract of insurance is an agreement by which one party for a consideration promises to pay money, or its equivalent, or do some act of value, to the assured, upon the destruction or injury of something in which the other party has an interest." "To render a contract one of life insurance, the payments must be contingent upon the duration of human life." 25 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 697. See also May, Ins. § 112; Standard Dict. "Insurance." People ex rel. Kasson v. Rose, 174 Ill. 310, 44 L.R.A. 124, 51 N. E. 246; 4 Words & Phrases, p. 3674, "Insurance;" 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 878.

In the light of the foregoing definitions, we again inquire: Was the contract solicited and taken of Charles C. Davis, by appellee, any kind of life insurance, within the meaning of the statute? The contract was issued by an association whose declared object is to secure, or make certain, by a system of mutual contribution, to each member of the association, at death, the specific benefit of $75 for application to his burial service. This was indemnity or security that, at the cessation of the life of the member, a certain sum of money should be payable by the association for his burial, whether the deceased had paid one assessment or a thousand. The controlling elements of the contract, as interpreted by the by-laws, are in all material respects similar to those of an ordinary mutual life insurance company. The members of the association are both the indemnitors and the indemnitees. It pays its losses from a mutually contributed fund, and divides its profits among the members. Death assessments must be paid by the contract holder during the life of the insured, and the promised indemnity is payable in a lump sum, and in a definite amount. The association needs and employs agents to represent it. It solicits from the general public. It is founded on no principle of philanthropy, benevolence, or charity. It is not a benefit and protective society, designed to furnish relief to its sick and disabled members out of funds mutually contributed for that purpose. It is simply a business enterprise in which the contract holder is promised a definite thing, in consideration of his performance of a definite undertaking on his part. The contract is determinable by the cessation of a human life, and belongs to that extended class of agreements dependent upon such contingency, and commonly known as "life insurance." It is therefore life insurance within the meaning of § 4713, supra, and subject to the wholesome provisions of our insurance laws. State ex rel. Coleman v. Wichita Mut. Burial Asso. 73 Kan. 179, 84 Pac. 757; Fikes v. State, 87 Miss. 251, 39 So. 783; State v. Beardley, 88 Minn. 20, 92 N. W. 472; Re Solebury Mut. Protective Soc. 4 C. P. Rep. 11. The Kansas case, supra, involved an association that had by-laws, and issued certificates of membership, substantially identical with those under consideration; and, concerning the purposes of the association, that court said: "The business designed to be transacted under the plan of the Wichita Mutual Burial Association is plain ordinary insurance." In the case before us, some of the details of the plan, as outlined by the by-laws, are veiled, and give evidence of an effort to avoid the classification just made. Some of the provisions are unreasonable, some unguarded, and others indefinite, and tend to expose the concern to the suspicion that the whole system is, in real design, but the scheme of an undertaker to promote his private business, largely at the expense of persons of small means. A wise public policy demands that the laws be liberally construed to circumvent any attempt by such bodies, to evade the reasonable and beneficial restraints of the statute.

This leads us to the important inquiry: Does it appear that the beneficiary of the contract has an insurable interest in the life of the insured, Charles C. Davis? First, who is the beneficiary of the insurance contract? It is contended by the attorney general that it is C. W. Morrison & Son, the official undertakers, and by the appellee that it is Davis's estate and next of kin, who, but for the insurance would be called upon to furnish the burial. "Beneficiary" is defined in Webster's Int. Dict. as "one who receives a benefit or advantage." "The 'beneficiary' is the person to whom a policy of insurance effected is payable." 1 Words and Phrases, p. 750. There is no beneficiary named in the certificate of membership issued to Davis, and nothing of the contract is mentioned beyond the statement that Davis is a member, "and entitled to all the benefits of a member of the association in accordance with the by-laws thereof." So we must go to the "by-laws" for an exposition of the contract. From these by-laws we learn the terms of the contract to be that Davis, as a member, had undertaken to pay to the association 11 cents on every death in the membership that should occur before his own, and in consideration of which, upon his death, the association was to pay to C. W. Morrison & Son $75 for burial goods and service. It is expressly agreed, as shown by articles 14 and 15, above set out, that C. W. Morrison & Son, their heirs and assigns, as undertakers, shall furnish the supplies and services for the burial, and the association shall pay to them the full amount of the benefits accruing under the policy contract, for such services, and no part thereof "to the surviving relatives and friends as death benefits." It is plain that the contracting parties intended to make Morrison & Son the sole beneficiary. Under the by-laws the insured is not entitled to withdraw profits, or to receive dividends, or sick or other benefits. He is not even entitled to revoke the appointment of his undertaker, and commit that duty to his relatives and friends. The $75 benefit must be paid to Morrison & Son, their heirs and assigns, and to no one else. Neither the administrator nor the heirs of the insured could maintain an action against the association for a default in payment. The right to bury the insured is a contract right of Morrison & Son, deemed so absolute and personal and beneficial as to be descendible and assignable. If it should turn out that the insured, at the end of life, has neither estate nor next of kin, would that contingency make Morrison & Son any more beneficiaries than they otherwise are? It is argued that the undertakers will take no benefit; that they will return the money's worth to the deceased. In answer, it may be said that they may at least take the contractor's profit, which, under the by-laws, is left to their unbridled greed. We conclude that, if the estate or next of kin can, under the terms of the contract, be considered, in any just sense, beneficiaries, it must be ascribed to a secondary degree, and we hold that Morrison & Son, as the official undertakers of said association, are the primary and intended beneficiary.

The question then arises: Have Morrison & Son a bona fide insurable interest, in whole or in part, in the life of the insured?

It is said in Words and Phrases, vol. 4, p. 3672: "The tendency of the American decisions is to hold that, wherever there is any well-founded expectation of, or claim to, any advantage to be derived from the continuance of a life, there is an insurable interest in the life,"—citing Bliss, Life Ins. §§ 21-31; May, Ins. 102-111. By the same volume, a clear and succinct definition, in these words, "a person has an insurable interest in the life of another, when there is a reasonable probability that he will gain by the latter's remaining alive, or lose by his death," is credited to 3 Kent, Com. 14th ed. 566, note. It is charged in the affidavit that neither the firm, nor any member of the firm, of Morrison & Son, had any bona fide insurable interest in the life of Charles C. Davis at the time said policy was issued; nor was the firm, nor any member thereof, at the time related to said Davis in any degree of kinship whatever. There is nothing in the case, as against these direct averments, from which we can infer either an insurable interest or kinship.

The second count alleged substantially the same facts as did the first, and set out a copy of the by-laws, and then charged that, at the time said policy was written and issued, said Charles C. Davis, the person whose life was thereby insured and to whom the policy was issued, had not first passed a satisfactory medical examination by a physician duly authorized to practise medicine in the state of Indiana. This count also stated a sufficient charge under said section.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to overrule the motion to quash the affidavit.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

CITY OF WINONA, Plff. in Err.,
v.

AUGUST W. BOTZET.

SAME

v.

MARY ALICE NICHOLS, Admr., etc., of James N. Nichols, Deceased.

(— C. C. A. —, 169 Fed. 321.)

Municipal corporation — functions — negligence.

1. The city of Winona maintained a shrill, startling steam whistle on its waterworks building, within 110 feet of its bridge across the Mississippi river, which was 40 feet in height at that point. This whistle was connected with its fire-alarm system, so that it gave notice automatically by its blasts of fires and their location when an alarm was sent in. The city directed the engineer of its waterworks to blow this whistle daily, by hand, at 5 P. M., to give notice to union men and its employees of the end of their day's work. There was substantial evidence that the blasts from this whistle had frightened horses traveling on the bridge for years before this accident. As Nichols was driving his horses over the bridge at a point about 110 feet from the whistle, at 5 P. M., the assistant engineer of the waterworks blew a blast of the whistle which frightened his horses, caused them to run away, to throw him and a girl who was riding with him to the ground below, and to kill him and injure her.

Held: (1) The whistle was not blown in the exercise of the city's power to protect itself and its inhabitants against fires, but in the exercise of its power to maintain waterworks and to care for its own property.

(2) There was substantial evidence that it failed to discharge its duty to so use its property as to do no unnecessary damage to others, and its duty to use reasonable care to keep its bridge reasonably safe for travelers.

Evidence — negligence — similar accidents — competency.

2. In an action for damages caused by frightening horses on a highway by the blast of a whistle, evidence that tractable and gentle horses had been frightened previously by blasts of the same whistle under similar circumstances was competent.

Negligence — jury.

3. It is only when the material facts and the rational inferences from them are so clearly established that but one finding would be sustained by the court that the question of the negligence of the defendant is for the court. Evidence considered, and

Case Note. — Liability of municipality for torts of its officers or employees in connection with its waterworks.

In a note to State ex rel. Hallauer v. Gosnell, 61 L.R.A. 33, upon establishment and regulation of municipal water supply, the earlier cases upon this subject are collected and discussed at page 58. This note will be confined to decisions rendered since the preparation of the earlier note.

Where a city maintains and operates a waterworks system solely for the protection and welfare of its inhabitants, it is generally held to be exercising one of its governmental functions, and, in the absence of statutory provisions, is not liable for any injuries resulting therefrom, even though such injuries are caused by the negligence of its officers or employees. But, if a city maintains and operates a system for the purpose of selling the water to its inhabitants or to others, as well as for protection against fire, etc., then it is generally held to be exercising merely its private rights, and is liable for injuries incurred through held sufficient for the consideration of the jury.

Same — injury — proximate cause.

4. The proximate cause of an injury is the primary moving cause, without which it would not have been inflicted, and which, in the natural and probable sequence of events, without the intervention of any new and independent cause, produces the injury.

The intervening cause, which will relieve of liability for an injury, is an independent cause which intervenes between the original wrongful act or omission and the injury, turns aside the natural sequence of events, and produces a result which would not otherwise have followed, and which could not have been reasonably anticipated.

The blast of a whistle frightened horses on a bridge; they ran, the tugs came unhooked, the tongue slipped from the yoke, fell to the bridge and broke, the wagon box crashed against the railing, threw the occupants over it to the ground, and injured them.

Held: The blast of the whistle was the proximate cause of the injuries, and the subsequent events preceding the injuries were dependent upon and caused by it.

Same — assumption of risk.

5. Notice or knowledge and appreciation of the danger are indispensable to an assumption of the risk of it.

Contributory negligence — burden of proof — evidence — jury.

6. The burden of proof to establish the contributory negligence of the plaintiff is upon the defendant.

It is only when the evidence of it is so clear that the court would not sustain a the negligence of its employees, the same as any private corporation.

Upon the general question of distinction between private and public functions of a municipality, see note to Barron v. Detroit, 19 L.R.A. 452, and case note to Dickinson v. Boston, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 665.

The distinction between the two classes of acts, and the difference in the liability of the city in connection therewith, is thus clearly expressed in Hourigan v. Norwich, 77 Conn. 358, 59 Atl. 487: "Municipal corporations are agents of the state in the exercise of certain governmental powers; they are also treated in certain respects as private corporations, and may be authorized, by way of special privilege, to perform certain acts, in part for the special benefit of the corporation and its inhabitants, which the state may lawfully perform in the exercise of its governmental power. When the state imposes upon an incorporated city the absolute duty of performing some act which the state may lawfully perform, and pertaining to the administration of government, the city, in the performance of that duty, may be clothed with the immunities belonging to the mere agent of the state; but, when the city is merely authorized by way of special privilege to perform such an act, in part for its corporate benefit and the benefit of its inhabitants, the city is not clothed with these immunities, and is liable to be sued for injuries inflicted through its negligence in the performance of such an act."

This same distinction is recognized in practically all of the recent cases upon the subject of the liability of a municipality for tort of its officers or employees in connection with its waterworks.

Thus, in Aschoff v. Evansville, 34 Ind. App. 25, 72 N. E. 279, it was held that, in the extinguishment of fires and in making arrangements therefor, the municipality acts in its governmental capacity, and is not liable for damages caused by the negligence of its fire department; as, for instance, where the pipes burst from excessive pressure during a fire and flooded adjacent cellars; but, where the water system is conducted by the municipality in part for profit, even if principally for public purposes, the municipality is liable for damages caused by its negligent management.

That a city may use its waterworks system for protection against fire as well as for the purpose of selling and distributing water to its inhabitants does not relieve it from liability for negligent acts of its servants or agents in the conduct of the system, except for such acts as are performed by them in the actual work incident to extinguishing fires. Piper v. Madison (Wis.) 122 N. W. 730.

So, in Dunstan v. New York, 91 App. Div. 355, 86 N. Y. Supp. 562, the court said that if the city maintained a separate water system for the fire department, and the break occurred in such a pipe, it might be that it could not be chargeable with negligence concerning the construction and maintenance of the same; but, for negligence in not repairing a water main proper or a service pipe which is used for other than fire purposes, the city would be liable; and the fact that the lateral which burst and caused the injury was used solely to connect the water main proper with a hydrant used solely for fire purposes was held to be immaterial.

And a city authorized, not required, to acquire and use land and water rights for the purpose of storing, distributing, and selling water for corporate profits, and to use the water for the purpose of protecting its citizens from fire, and of promoting public health, is not, while engaged in enlarging its reservoir, performing that public governmental duty which can clothe it with immunity from liability for its negligence. Hourigan v. Norwich, supra.

The business of selling water to inhabitants and street sprinkling contractors is not an exercise of the police power, and a city is not exempt from liability for negligence in maintaining a waterworks system for such purpose. Chicago v. Selz, S. & Co. 202 Ill. 545, 67 N. E. 386.

So, in Lynch v. Springfield, 174 Mass. 430, 54 N. E. 871, it was held that it was the established rule in Massachusetts that a city is liable for injuries caused by the neg-finding to the contrary that it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury that the plaintiff was guilty of it. Evidence considered, and held for jury.

Negligence — driver — imputation to passenger.

7. The negligence of the driver of a vehicle may not be imputed to a passenger who is riding with him without charge or compensation.

Municipal corporation — streets and bridges — duty.

8. The duty of a city to exercise reasonable care to keep its bridge or street reasonably safe for travelers is not limited to acts of commission and omission within the limits of the bridge or street, but extends to those outside the bridge or street that render it unsafe for travelers.

The duty to so use its own property as to do no unnecessary injury to others extends to effects produced by the use beyond the limits of its property.

Same — injury — damages.

9. Damages sustained by injuries to persons as well as to property are recoverable for a breach of these duties.

Public nuisance — legislative grant — defense.

10. Where the use and enjoyment of a legislative grant does not necessarily and naturally create a nuisance, but the nuisance results from the method of the use and enjoyment, the grant is no defense to an action on account of the creation or continuance of the nuisance or its effects.

Municipal corporations — powers — nature — negligence — damages.

11. Municipalities have two classes of powers,—the one, political, public, in the exercise of which they govern their people and act as delegates of the state; the other, private, business, in the exercise of which they act for the advantage of their inhabitants and themselves.

They are not liable for damages for the acts and omissions of their officers and agents in the exercise of the former. But they are liable for damages for the wrongful and negligent acts and omissions of their officers and agents within the scope of their authority in the exercise of the latter.

Same — waterworks.

12. The municipal power to construct, maintain, and operate waterworks is a private or business power, and a city is liable for damages caused by the wrongful or negligent acts and omissions of its officers and agents in the exercise of that power to the same extent as a private corporation or individual.

(March 26, 1909.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Minnesota to review judgments for the plaintiffs in consolidated actions; the one brought to ligence of one of its employees while engaged in the necessary business of its water department, maintained voluntarily by the city, and partially for the purpose of selling the water.

And in Augusta v. Mackey, 113 Ga. 64, 38 S. E. 339, it was held that a municipal corporation was liable for injuries caused by an excavation made by its employees in a highway while it was, under legislative sanction, constructing its waterworks system outside the limits of the corporation, for the purpose of selling water to strangers.

So, in St. Germain v. Fall River, 177 Mass. 550, 59 N. E. 447, it was held that a city is liable for injuries caused by hydrant so set as to constitute a defect in a street, where the hydrant is a part of the system of waterworks operated in part by the city as a source of profit.

A number of other cases may be cited in which the court approaches the question from a somewhat different point of view.

Thus, in Wiltse v. Red Wing, 99 Minn. 255, 109 N. W. 114, the court said that it was a rule of that court that a party who, for his own profit, keeps on his premises anything not naturally belonging there, the natural tendency of which is to become a nuisance and to do mischief if it escapes, is liable if it escapes, without proof of negligence, for all damages directly resulting therefrom; and the rule was applicable where the plaintiff's property was destroyed by the breaking of the defendant city's reservoir.

And, although a municipal corporation, it was engaged in the business of supplying water to its inhabitants, for profit, which was an undertaking of a private nature. And the same rule was applied in 100 Minn. 548, 111 N. W. 1134, in which the facts were identical, but there was a different plaintiff.

And, in Southeast v. New York, 96 App. Div. 598, 89 N. Y. Supp. 630, it was held that the city was liable for injuries to the bridges of a town, due to its negligence in the maintenance of a reservoir dam, even if it should be held that, in furnishing water to its inhabitants, the city was exercising a governmental function. A distinction not noticed in the other cases is made between personal injuries and injuries to property. The court said: "The many cases in which a municipal corporation has been held exempt from liability to respond in damages for personal injuries occasioned in the negligent exercise of governmental functions have no controlling application to the case, because the property of the citizen is protected by a constitutional provision from the assault even of the sovereign unless just compensation is made for the taking involved. Neither the state nor any political division can take the property of others for public use without just compensation. Const. art. 1, § 6. It can hardly be claimed that an act which results in a trespass upon and the actual injury to or destruction of the property of a citizen is not the taking of such recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff Botzet's daughter, and alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence; the other, to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff Nichols's intestate. Affirmed.

Statement by Sanborn, Circuit Judge:

At 5 o'clock in the afternoon of a cold, blustering day in January, 1907, the assistant of the engineer of the waterworks of the city of Winona blew a steam whistle on the waterworks building for the purpose of notifying union men and city employees that their workday was over, and thereby scared a team of horses which James N. Nichols was driving about 110 feet distant from the whistle, over the city's bridge across the Mississippi river, so that they ran away, threw him and Irene Botzet, a schoolgirl thirteen years old, who was riding with him, over the railing of the bridge to the frozen ground, 40 feet below, killed him, and seriously injured her. Mary Alice Nichols, the administratrix of his estate, brought an action against the city for alleged negligence in causing the death of Mr. Nichols in this way. August Botzet, the father of Irene, brought an action against the city for alleged negligence in causing the injuries to her. The two causes were tried together, and resulted in judgments for the plaintiffs, of which the city complains.

For more than twenty years the city of Winona has maintained waterworks, and, as a part thereof, a building in which the pumping engines are located and operated. It has also maintained an organized fire department under legislative authority. In 1888, under this authority, it installed an electric fire-alarm system, and, as a part of it, a 12-inch fire whistle, which it placed on the roof of the waterworks building, and which automatically notified the members of the fire department and others by its blasts in what part of the city a fire was whenever an alarm was sent in from any one of some sixty fire-alarm boxes scattered throughout the city. This whistle, including the fire-alarm system, was tested three times a day, so that it gave forth many blasts, sometimes about 100 in a day. After this whistle and fire-alarm system had been established, and in 1891, the city of Winona, under authority conferred upon it by the legislatures of Minnesota and Wisconsin, constructed, and has maintained ever since, a toll bridge across the Mississippi river for the use of pedestrians, teams, and carriages. It constructed this bridge in such a way that the driveway of the approach to it upon the Minnesota side started on an easy ascent at the intersec-property, at least, pro tanto, and such an act cannot be defended as an exercise of a sovereign power which may not be redressed by action."

In Ennis v. Gilder, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 351, 74 S. W. 585, it was held that a city could not, in constructing and operating its waterworks, maintain a nuisance, and was liable in damages for any injuries caused thereby.

Where a town has authority to lay water mains in its streets, and, in the prosecution of that enterprise, it becomes necessary to destroy private drains, the case, in the absence of negligence, is one of damnum absque injuria. Bennett v. Mt. Vernon, 124 Iowa, 537, 100 N. W. 349.

Where the negligent act causing the injury is performed in connection with work pertaining to fire protection, a number of cases have held that a city is not liable.

Thus, in Brink v. Grand Rapids, 144 Mich. 472, 108 N. W. 430, it was held that a city is not liable for the negligence of one of its firemen in flushing a hydrant maintained and used solely for fire protection, where the sole object of the flushing was to remove sticks and stones which had accumulated there. The court said: "The city had no pecuniary interest in establishing or maintaining this hydrant. It received no compensation for its use. It was maintained entirely by taxation upon the entire city, and its use was for the sole benefit of the city. It was constructed, maintained, and used in a governmental capacity." 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

That a hydrant is part of a borough's water system, and is flushed under the supervision of the superintendent of the water department, does not prevent the flushing from being so incident to the fire service alone as to relieve the borough from liability for injuries through the negligent performance of the act. Judson v. Winsted, 80 Conn. 384, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 91, 68 Atl. 999.

This note does not include cases like Rhobidas v. Concord, 70 N. H. 90, 51 L.R.A. 381, 85 Am. St. Rep. 604, 47 Atl. 82, where a servant of the defendant city is injured by the negligence of another servant, or of the city itself.

As to acts which are not essentially police functions, but are connected therewith, see case note to Wilcox v. Rochester, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 741.

As to liability of municipality for injuries inflicted by servant while engaged in removing ashes or garbage, see case note to Haley v. Boston, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1005.

As to liability for negligent operation of electric light plant, see case note to Davoust v. Alameda, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 536.

As to municipal liability for acts or negligence of members of fire department, see case note to Cunningham v. Seattle, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 629.

As to municipal liability for torts of police officers, see case note to Gilmore v. Salt Lake City, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 537.

tion of Second and Main streets in Winona, ran north on Main street about 400 feet, then turned and ran west one block of 300 feet to Johnson street, where it was at least 45 feet above the ground. At that point the driveway turned and ran east across the river about 300 feet to a point where it connected with a pile bridge and a road leading across the Wisconsin bottoms. Where the roadway turned east on the Minnesota side, it was not more than 110 feet distant from the steam whistle on the waterworks building, which was in a plane not more than 15 feet below it. The roadway of the bridge was provided with a sidewalk on one side of it, 6 feet in width, a driveway for carriages, 18 feet in width, and substantial wooden railings, 4 feet, 2 inches in height.

In May, 1905, the city council of Winona, on a petition of the trades and labor council, adopted a recommendation of its fire committee that this fire whistle should be blown at 5 in the afternoon to notify mechanics and others when their workday ceased. Thereupon the water commissioner directed the engineer of the waterworks to blow this whistle at that hour each day, and he did so by means of a cord attached to the valve from that time until the injuries were inflicted which resulted in these actions.

By chapter 165, p. 238, of the General Laws of Minnesota, 1903, the management of the waterworks was transferred on May 1, 1906, to the board of municipal works of the city of Winona; but that board gave no directions concerning the blowing of this whistle, and the engineer, who continued in charge of the waterworks building, continued to blow the whistle as before.

The blast of this whistle was produced by a stream pressure of about 100 pounds to the square inch, and it sent forth a shrill, startling sound which could be heard 5 miles, and much farther under favorable conditions. In the discharge of its functions as a fire whistle it was blown automatically by the action of the fire-alarm system. But, in the discharge of its functions as a time whistle, it was blown by hand by the engineer of the waterworks, or his assistant, who pulled the valve open by means of a cord attached to it. Gentle and tractable horses had been scared by the blasts of this whistle, and had attempted to run away while they were traveling upon the bridge, and this had occurred many times during the preceding nine years. Mr. Nichols was a dairyman who lived about 12 miles distant from Winona, in the state of Wisconsin, and who had been accustomed for four years to drive over the bridge once a week and sometimes more frequently, so that he probably knew that the whistle sounded for fire alarms; but the evidence does not indicate whether or not he was aware that it blew at 5 in the afternoon. He drove into Winona on the morning of the day of the accident a pair of young horses, four and five years old, and started to return about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. Irene Botzet, a schoolgirl who lived in Wisconsin and attended school in Winona, asked him for a ride across the bridge, and he granted her request. As he drove up the approach of the bridge toward the turn near the whistle, he was holding his horses down to a slow walk, so that another team walked past him. There were then two teams in front of him on the bridge, and he was following. Just after he arrived at the turn of the driveway to the east, the steam whistle blew, and his team, and that next in front of him, began to run. He held onto his horses and guided them past the two teams in front of him, but one, and, a little later, two more, of the tugs in his harnesses, unhooked, the end of the tongue slipped out of the yoke, dropped, and broke, the horses ran on, drove the end of the broken tongue against the guard rail, raised the box on which the occupants were sitting, and threw them over the railing to the frozen ground on the Wisconsin side, 40 feet below. The court submitted to the jury the questions, Was the city guilty of negligence which was the proximate cause of the injuries inflicted by the runaway? and Were the victims guilty of negligence which contributed to cause these injuries? and the jury answered the former in the affirmative, and the latter in the negative.

Argued before Sanborn, Van Devanter, and Adams, Circuit Judges.

Messrs. Richard A. Randall and Tawney, Smith, & Tawney, for plaintiff in error:

The admission of the petition and the action of the city council thereon more than six months after they become inoperative, like the admission of a void ordinance, was prejudicial error.

Dugan v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 43 Minn. 414, 45 N. W. 851.

The evidence that other teams were frightened at different points while crossing the bridge at various times covering a period of nine years previous to the accident, by the sounds produced by the fire whistle, without reference to the distance the teams were from the whistle, or the number of sounds produced each time, or the length or volume of each sound, or whether the team so frightened was a team of ordinary gentleness, or was then and there being carefully driven, was inadmissible.

1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 52, 448; Cleveland, C. G. & I. R. Co. v. Wynant, 114 Ind. 525, 5 Am. St. Rep. 644, 17 N. E. 118; Bloor v. Delafield, 69 Wis. 273, 34 N. W. 115; Lewis v. Eastern R. Co. 60 N. H. 187; Phillips v. Willow, 70 Wis. 6, 5 Am. St. Rep. 114, 34 N. W. 731; Gillrie v. Lockport, 122 N. Y. 403, 25 N. E. 357; Dye v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 130 N. Y. 671, 29 N. E. 320.

The city was not responsible for injuries caused by negligent acts not within the highway.

Brink v. Grand Rapids, 144 Mich. 472, 108 N. W. 430; Becker v. La Crosse, 99 Wis. 414, 40 L.R.A. 829, 67 Am. St. Rep. 874, 75 N. W. 84; Temby v. Ishpeming, 140 Mich. 146, 69 L.R.A. 618, 112 Am. St. Rep. 392, 103 N. W. 588; Hubbell v. Viroqua, 67 Wis. 343, 58 Am. Rep. 866, 30 N. W. 847; Hixon v. Lowell, 13 Gray, 61; Favor v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 114 Mass. 350, 19 Am. Rep. 364; McHugh v. St. Paul, 67 Minn. 441, 70 N. W. 5; Tarras v. Winona, 71 Minn. 22, 73 N. W. 505; Wood, Nuisances, 3d ed. § 322.

If the blowing of the whistle was a nuisance at all, it was a nuisance established and maintained by the affirmative act of the city council, under express legislative authority, in the performance of a governmental duty.

Cunningham v. Seattle, 40 Wash. 59, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 629, 82 Pac. 143; Workman v. New York, 179 U. S. 552, 45 L. ed. 314, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 212; Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. ed. 336; Vande Vere v. Kansas City, 107 Mo. 83, 28 Am. St. Rep. 396, 17 S. W. 696; Heininger v. Great Northern R. Co. 59 Minn. 458, 61 N. W. 558; Goodin v. Fuson, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 873, 60 S. W. 293.

The city was acting in a governmental capacity, and therefore is not liable for the negligence of its officers or agents.

Detroit v. Osborne, 135 U. S. 492, 32 L. ed. 260, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1012; Denver v. Porter, 61 C. C. A. 168, 126 Fed. 292; Lane v. Minnesota State Agri. Soc. 62 Minn. 176, 29 L.R.A. 708, 64 N. W. 382; Snider v. St. Paul, 51 Minn. 473, 18 L.R.A. 151, 53 N. W. 763; Wilcox v. Rochester, 190 N. Y. 137, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 741, 82 N. E. 1119, 13 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 759; Bank v. Brainerd School Dist. 49 Minn. 106, 51 N. W. 814; Ihk v. Duluth City, 58 Minn. 182, 59 N. W. 960; Gulikson v. McDonald, 62 Minn. 279, 64 N. W. 812; Williams v. Greenville, 130 N. C. 93, 57 L.R.A. 207, 89 Am. St. Rep. 860, 40 S. E. 977; Hughes v. Auburn, 161 N. Y. 104, 46 L.R.A. 636, 55 N. E. 389; Dodge v. Granger, 17 R. I. 664, 15 L.R.A. 781, 33 Am. St. Rep. 901, 24 Atl. 100; Miller v. Minneapolis, 75 Minn. 131, 77 N. W. 788; Claussen v. Luverne, 103 Minn. 491, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 698, 115 N. W. 643; Smith v. Rochester, 76 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

N. Y. 506; Frederick v. Columbus, 58 Ohio St. 546, 51 N. E. 35; Yule v. New Orleans, 25 La. Ann. 394; Irvine v. Chattanooga, 101 Tenn. 291, 47 S. W. 419; Manske v. Milwaukee, 123 Wis. 172, 101 N. W. 377; Kempster v. Milwaukee, 103 Wis. 421, 79 N. W. 411; Mendel v. Wheeling, 28 W. Va. 233, 57 Am. Rep. 664; Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Keeseville, 148 N. Y. 46, 30 L.R.A. 660, 51 Am. St. Rep. 667, 42 N. E. 405; Higgins v. Superior, 134 Wis. 264, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 994, 114 N. W. 490; Peterson v. Wilmington, 130 N. C. 76, 56 L.R.A. 959, 40 S. E. 853; Lawson v. Seattle, 6 Wash. 184, 33 Pac. 347; Terhune v. New York, 88 N. Y. 247, 42 Am. Rep. 248; Brink v. Grand Rapids, supra; Edgerly v. Concord, 62 N. H. 8, 13 Am. St. Rep. 533; Cunningham v. Seattle, supra; Maximilian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 164, 20 Am. Rep. 468; Gillespie v. Lincoln, 35 Neb. 34, 16 L.R.A. 349, 52 N. W. 811; Saunders v. Ft. Madison, 111 Iowa, 102, 82 N. W. 428; Folk v. Milwaukee, 106 Wis. 359, 84 N. W. 420; Simon v. Atlanta, 67 Ga. 618, 44 Am. Rep. 739; Burrill v. Augusta, 78 Me. 118, 57 Am. Rep. 788, 3 Atl. 177; Lerch v. Duluth, 88 Minn. 295, 92 N. W. 1116; Becker v. La Crosse, supra; Ehle v. Minden, 70 App. Div. 275, 74 N. Y. Supp. 903; Wabaska Electric Co. v. Wyomere, 60 Neb. 199, 82 N. W. 626; Love v. Raleigh, 116 N. C. 296, 28 L.R.A. 182, 21 S. E. 503.

The unhooking of the tugs, which was due to the negligence of the driver, was the intervening and proximate cause of the injuries.

McFarlane v. Sullivan, 99 Wis. 361, 74 N. W. 559, 75 N. W. 71.

Messrs. Webber & Lees and M. L. Fugina, for defendants in error:

The council and the board of municipal works are both representatives of the city, for whose acts and omissions within the scope of their powers the city is liable.

Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 540, 23 L. ed. 440; District of Columbia v. Woodbury, 136 U. S. 450, 34 L. ed. 472, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 990; Kleopfert v. Minneapolis, 90 Minn. 158, 95 N. W. 908; Ehr Gott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 264, 48 Am. Rep. 622; Fisher v. New Bern, 140 N. C. 506, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 542, 111 Am. St. Rep. 857, 53 N. E. 342; Denver v. Spencer, 34 Colo. 270, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 147, 82 Pac. 590; Burrige v. Detroit, 117 Mich. 557, 42 L.R.A. 684, 72 Am. St. Rep. 582, 76 N. W. 84.

Evidence that horses were frightened by the whistle prior to the date of the accident was admissible.

1 Wigmore, Ev. § 461, p. 568; Darling v. Westmoreland, 52 N. H. 401, 13 Am. Rep. 55; District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U. S. 519, 27 L. ed. 618, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840;

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Netolicky, 14 C. C. A. 615, 32 U. S. App. 168, 406, 67 Fed. 665; House v. Metcalf, 27 Conn. 631; Knight v. Goodyear's India Rubber Glove Mfg. Co. 38 Conn. 438, 9 Am. Rep. 406; Hill v. Portland & R. R. Co. 55 Me. 438, 92 Am. Dec. 601; Crocker v. McGregor, 76 Me. 282, 49 Am. Rep. 611; Bemis v. Temple, 162 Mass. 342, 26 L.R.A. 254, 38 N. E. 970; Nye v. Dibley, 88 Minn. 465, 93 N. W. 524; Brown v. Eastern & N. R. Co. L. R. 22 Q. B. Div. 391; Topeka Water Co. v. Whiting, 58 Kan. 639, 39 L.R.A. 90, 50 Pac. 877.

The city's maintenance and operation of the whistle under the circumstances constituted a public nuisance.

Wood, Nuisances, § 71; 1 Thomp. Neg. 1261; Baxter v. Coughlin, 70 Minn. 1, 72 N. W. 797.

The city cannot escape liability on the ground that, in causing the whistle to be blown, it was performing a purely governmental function, and hence is not liable for the negligent performance of such function.

Grube v. St. Paul, 34 Minn. 402, 26 N. W. 228; Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black, 418, 17 L. ed. 298; Logansport v. Dick, 70 Ind. 65, 36 Am. Rep. 166; Denver v. Porter, 61 C. C. A. 168, 126 Fed. 288; Denver v. Davis, 37 Colo. 370, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1013, 86 Pac. 1027; Aldrich v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 141, 23 Am. Rep. 434; Hill v. New York, 139 N. Y. 495, 34 N. E. 1090; Dickinson v. Boston, 188 Mass. 595, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 604, 75 N. E. 68, Wiltse v. Red Wing, 99 Minn. 255, 109 N. W. 114; Denver v. Spencer, supra; Naumburg v. Milwaukee, 77 C. C. A. 67, 146 Fed. 651; Neuert v. Boston, 120 Mass. 338; Dodge v. Granger, 17 R. I. 664, 15 L.R.A. 781, 33 Am. St. Rep. 901, 24 Atl. 100; Roe v. Lucknow, 21 Ont. App. Rep. 1; Brown v. Eastern & N. R. Co. supra; Workman v. New York, 179 U. S. 552, 45 L. ed. 314, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 212.

As the owner and occupier of the waterworks, the city is liable for private injuries due to its improper and negligent management of its property, on the ground that it maintained a nuisance on its own premises.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 985; Oliver v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 489, 3 Am. Rep. 485; Briegel v. Philadelphia, 135 Pa. 451, 20 Am. St. Rep. 885, 19 Atl. 1038; Pekin v. McMahon, 154 Ill. 141, 27 L.R.A. 206, 45 Am. St. Rep. 114, 39 N. E. 484; Ft. Worth v. Crawford, 74 Tex. 404, 15 Am. St. Rep. 840, 12 S. W. 52; Sammons v. Gloversville, 175 N. Y. 346, 67 N. E. 622; Wood, Nuisances, § 747; Haag v. Vanderburgh County, 60 Ind. 511, 28 Am. Rep. 654.

As the owner of city waterworks, having power to manage and control such works 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) and furnish water to private consumers for pay, as well as for public use, a city is not engaged in a purely governmental enterprise, and is liable for negligence in the operation of its waterworks system in any of its parts.

Wiltse v. Red Wing, supra; Lynch v. Springfield, 174 Mass. 430, 54 N. E. 871; Hand v. Brookline, 126 Mass. 324; Western Sav. Fund Soc. v. Philadelphia, 31 Pa. 175, 72 Am. Dec. 730; Aldrich v. Tripp, supra; Esberg-Gunst Cigar Co. v. Portland, 34 Or. 282, 43 L.R.A. 435, 75 Am. St. Rep. 651, 55 Pac. 691; Palestine v. Siler, 225 Ill. 630, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 205, 80 N. E. 345.

The legislative authority which will shelter an actual nuisance must be express, or a clear, unquestionable implication from powers conferred; should be certain and unambiguous, and such as to show that the legislature must have contemplated the doing of the very act in question.

Cogswell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 103 N. Y. 10, 8 N. E. 537; Bohan v. Port Jervis Gaslight Co. 122 N. Y. 18, 9 L.R.A. 711, 25 N. E. 246; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Buffalo, 158 N. Y. 266, 53 N. E. 44; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 27 L. ed. 739, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 719; Pine City v. Munch, 42 Minn. 342, 6 L.R.A. 763, 44 N. W. 197.

The city cannot escape liability on the ground that the blowing of the whistle by its employees at the waterworks was unauthorized, or that, if authorized, the act was ultra vires the city.

Boye v. Albert Lea, 74 Minn. 230, 76 N. W. 1131; Salt Lake City v. Hollister, 118 U. S. 256, 30 L. ed. 176, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1055; Sacks v. Minneapolis, 75 Minn. 30, 77 N. W. 563; Thayer v. Boston, 19 Pick. 511, 31 Am. Dec. 157; Stewart v. Wright, 77 C. C. A. 499, 147 Fed. 321; Greenwood v. Westport, 63 Conn. 587, 60 Fed. 500; Kobs v. Minneapolis, 22 Minn. 159; Tate v. St. Paul, 56 Minn. 527, 45 Am. St. Rep. 501, 58 N. W. 158; Kleopfert v. Minneapolis, 90 Minn. 158, 95 N. W. 908; Stanley v. Davenport, 54 Iowa. 463, 37 Am. Rep. 216, 2 N. W. 1064, 6 N. W. 706; Lee v. Sandy Hill, 40 N. Y. 442; Hollman v. Platteville, 101 Wis. 94, 70 Am. St. Rep. 899, 76 N. W. 1119; Moulton v. Scarborough, 71 Me. 267, 36 Am. Rep. 308; Burrill v. Augusta, 78 Me. 118, 57 Am. Rep. 788, 3 Atl. 177.

A person cannot be held to have assumed the risk of injury from any cause unless he knew of the existence of such cause, and also appreciated the risk of injury which he would encounter therefrom.

Russell v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 32 Minn. 230, 20 N. W. 147.

The negligence of the driver would not be imputable to the passenger.

Cunningham v. Thief River Falls, 84 Minn. 21, 86 N. W. 763.

The blowing of the whistle was the proximate cause of the disaster.

Aetna F. Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117, 24 L. ed. 395.

Sanborn, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The city of Winona is a municipal corporation created, endowed with its powers, and charged with its duties, by the legislature of the state of Minnesota. The character and the limits of the powers and liabilities of such corporations are questions of local law, upon which the decisions of the highest judicial tribunals of the states which create them are authoritative in the national courts, because these questions are determinable by the construction of the Constitutions and statutes of the states under which the municipalities are organized. Detroit v. Osborne, 135 U. S. 492, 499, 35 L. ed. 260, 262, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1012; Clairborne County v. Brooks, 111 U. S. 400, 410, 28 L. ed. 470, 474, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 489; Madden v. Lancaster County, 12 C. C. A. 566, 570, 27 U. S. App. 528, 65 Fed. 188, 192; Blaylock v. Muskogee, 54 C. C. A. 639, 640, 117 Fed. 125, 126. So far, therefore, as the supreme court of Minnesota has decided the extent of the powers and liabilities of municipal corporations, those decisions must control in this case. The opinions of other courts become immaterial, and it will be unnecessary to notice or consider them.

Under the decisions of the supreme court of Minnesota, municipal corporations are charged with the duty to exercise ordinary care to make and keep their roads, streets, and public ways reasonably safe for travelers thereon, and also with the duty to exercise reasonable care to so use their property and rights as to inflict no unnecessary injury upon persons or upon their property. Shartle v. Minneapolis, 17 Minn. 308, Gil. 284; Blyhl v. Waterville, 57 Minn. 115, 47 Am. St. Rep. 596, 58 N. W. 817; Wiltse v. Red Wing, 99 Minn. 255, 260, 109 N. W. 114.

The bridge across the Mississippi river, on which this accident occurred, is a public highway, and the city of Winona is liable for negligence in its maintenance and care to the same extent as it is for negligence in the care and maintenance of its public streets. Willis v. Winona City, 59 Minn. 27, 26 L.R.A. 142, 60 N. W. 814. With these established rules in mind, let us consider the complaints concerning the trial of these cases.

The first specification of error presented is that the court received in evidence the petition of the trades and labor assembly that the fire whistle be blown daily at 5 in the afternoon, the action of the city council of the defendant in May, 1905, granting that petition, and the curfew ordinance passed in January, 1906, whereby the engineer of the waterworks was directed to designate 9 in the afternoon each day by nine short blasts of the whistle; and the argument is that, inasmuch as, on May 1, 1906, the management of the waterworks building passed to the board of municipal works, the water commissioner who, in May, 1905, directed the engineer to comply with the order of the council, then went out of his office, and the board never gave the engineer any direction on the subject thereafter, these acts of the common council were immaterial. But the question at issue was, Did the city exercise ordinary care to keep the bridge reasonably safe for travelers, and to use its waterworks and steam whistle so as to inflict no unnecessary injury upon the persons or property of travelers over the bridge? The acts of the council which were introduced in evidence clearly indicated the degree of care the city was exercising in the use of this whistle, and for that reason they were not immaterial. Again, the act of the city council which directed the blowing of the whistle at 5 in the afternoon unquestionably gave the engineer the authority and the direction of the city of Winona to blow it at that hour until that authority was revoked or an inconsistent instruction was given to him by the city. The same engineer remained in charge of the waterworks building and of the whistle after the control of them was transferred to the board of municipal works, and he undoubtedly had the same authority to blow the whistle thereafter that he had to continue to run the engines and to pump the water through the city. His authority continued until it was revoked. Moreover, this action of the council in connection with the continued blowing of the whistle subsequent to May 1, 1906, was competent, and persuasive evidence of the alleged negligence of the board of municipal works, for the board must have been aware that the whistle was being blown after it came into control of the waterworks, and it did not stop it, and, by the express terms of the act under which it was created, the city is liable for its acts of commission and omission within the scope of its authority. Gen. Laws Minn. 1903, chap. 165, p. 241; Kleopfert v. Minneapolis, 90 Minn. 158, 160, 95 N. W. 908; Barnes v. District of Columbia, 91 U. S. 540, 545, 551, 555, 23 L. ed. 440, 441, 443, 445; District of Columbia v. Woodbury, 136 U. S. 450, 34 L. ed. 472, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 990. There was no error in the admission of the acts of the city council.

It is assigned as error that the court permitted the introduction in evidence of testimony that other horses of ordinary gentleness and tractability were frightened while traveling over this bridge by the blasts of this steam whistle at various times during nine years preceding the accident in question. The reasons urged in support of this specification of error are: (1) That Nichols's horses were frightened by a single blast of the whistle, five seconds in duration, while the horses of the witnesses were scared by several blasts in quick succession, caused by the automatic action of the fire-alarm system; but it was evidently the first sudden sound that tended to frighten the horses far more than its subsequent repetition; (2) that the first blast is not, at its commencement, as loud as it becomes later, because there is at first stationary steam in the pipe which must be started forth; but there could have been no very substantial difference in the blasts on that account, because the steam pressure was constantly from 85 to 110 pounds to the square inch, and that pressure necessarily must have produced almost instant action and sound when the valve was released; and (3) because the defendant was charged with liability for the effect of the blast which it directly caused, so that this evidence was not necessary or competent to prove notice to the city of its dangerous character, and because this evidence introduces a collateral issue. But the main issue in this case was whether or not the blasts of this whistle were of such a character that a person of ordinary intelligence and prudence would have anticipated the frightening of horses traveling upon the bridge, and their rapid flight as the natural and probable effect of the blast. If these blasts were of that character, the production of them was actionable negligence; if they were not, it was not actionable negligence to make them. There were but two ways in which that question could be determined. It must be determined by the opinions or speculations of witnesses, or by the experience of those who had actually tried it. The latter is certainly more persuasive and convincing and more likely to accord with the fact than the former. The material conditions under which the horses of the witnesses were frightened were substantially the same as those under which the accident happened. They were scared while they were traveling upon the same bridge upon which the horses of Nichols were frightened. They were terrified by the same whistle, located in the same place, at the same distance from the bridge, and the testimony of the witnesses who were driving or observing these animals, that gentle and tractable horses had been frightened while they were traveling upon this bridge by the blasts of 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

this whistle at various times preceding the accident, was, upon both reason and authority, material and persuasive evidence that these blasts were of a character likely to frighten horses under such circumstances, that their fright and flight were natural and probable consequences of the production of the blasts, and that these facts were so notorious that they might be considered by the jury to constitute notice to the city of the dangerous character and probable effects of the blowing of this whistle. Darling v. Westmoreland, 52 N. H. 401, 13 Am. Rep. 55; Nye v. Dibley, 88 Minn. 465, 93 N. W. 524; District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U. S. 519, 525, 27 L. ed. 618, 620, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Netolicky, 14 C. C. A. 615, 622, 32 U. S. App. 168, 406, 67 Fed. 665, 672; Wigmore, Ev. § 458, subd. 2; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. McDonough, 88 C. C. A. 517, 161 Fed. 657, 667.

Counsel for the city argue that the refusal of the court to instruct the jury to return a verdict in its favor was error: (1) Because there was no lack of care in the construction and the maintenance of the bridge, and the city was not liable for injuries caused by its acts of commission or omission outside of that structure; (2) because the whistle was blown for a governmental, and not for a private or corporate, purpose, and the city is exempt from liability for acts so done, and the rights of the injured were not thereby infringed; (3) because the location and the use of the whistle were discretionary with the city, and the exercise of that discretion was not reviewable by the courts; (4) because the act of blowing the whistle to indicate the time of day was beyond the corporate power of the city; (5) because there was no evidence of the city's negligence, or that its negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, and the persons injured assumed the risk of the blast of the whistle; and (6) because Nichols was guilty of contributory negligence, in that his whiffletree hooks were not in such a condition that they prevented the tugs from becoming unhooked while his horses were running away.

It is only when the material facts and the rational inferences from them are so clearly established that but one finding from them would be sustained by the court that the duty is imposed upon it to withdraw the question of the causal negligence of a defendant from the jury. Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 417, 36 L. ed. 485, 489, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679; Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Price, 38 C. C. A. 239, 243, 97 Fed. 423, 427. Ten witnesses testified to thirteen occasions within nine years preceding this accident, upon which gentle and tractable horses upon this bridge near the turn where Nichols was when the whistle blew had been frightened by blasts of this whistle, and had jumped or run or turned around. One witness testified that his horse was so terrified that he jumped and broke the shafts of his buggy; another, that his horses were so scared that they ran and tore the yoke near the tongue, and broke a strap from the evener; still another, that his horses were so frightened that they ran and caused a tug to unhitch; and another still, that his horses were so terrified that they ran while he was driving them, so that they threw his wife out of his wagon and injured her. At the time of this accident, Losinski was driving the leading team across the bridge, Duff the second team, and Nichols was either holding his team stationary or at a slow walk very near the turn of the bridge when the whistle blew. Losinski testified that his horses immediately jumped and became frightened, but he held them. Duff testified that Nichols stopped his horses near the turn to let him pass; that he passed Nichols; that the latter's horses were then quiet; that just after he passed him the whistle blew; that, the moment it blew, both teams were on the dead run; that his horses were gentle, but they were frightened, ran and jumped and nearly got away. This was substantial and persuasive evidence that the blowing of this whistle was likely to frighten horses passing it on the bridge, that it rendered the bridge unsafe for drivers of teams thereon, and that, in the light of the evidence that the sound it gave forth was shrill, startling, "awful loud," and could be heard from 5 to 10 miles, this fact was so notorious that a jury was warranted in finding that it must have been known to the city, and that a person of ordinary prudence and intelligence would have anticipated as its natural and probable result the fright and flight of passing horses, and serious injuries to those who should be drawn by them.

Nor can the contention be sustained that the unhooking of the tugs, the breaking of the pole, or any of the other events between the blowing of the whistle and the injuries and death was, and the blast of the whistle was not, the proximate cause of those dire effects. The proximate cause of an injury is the primary moving cause without which it would not have been inflicted, but which, in the natural and probable sequence of events, and without the intervention of any new or independent cause, produces the injury. The intervening cause that will insulate the original wrongful act or omission from the injury, and relieve of liability for it, must be an independent, intervening cause which interrupts the natural sequence of events, prevents the ordinary and probable result of the original act or omission, and produces a different result, which could not have been reasonably anticipated. Union P. R. Co. v. Callaghan, 8 C. C. A. 205, 210, 12 U. S. App. 541, 56 Fed. 988, 993, 994; Cole v. German Sav. & L. Soc. 63 L.R.A. 416, 59 C. C. A. 593, 597, 600, 124 Fed. 113, 117, 120. The blast of this whistle was the primary moving cause, without which the accident would not have happened. It was the cause which set in motion all the other events; the cause which set the horses into a dead run, made them uncontrollable, brought about the unhooking of the tugs, the breaking of the pole, the crash of the wagon against the railing, and the throwing of its occupants to the ground below. All these intermediate acts were dependent, not independent, causes. They were mere links in the chain of causation between the blowing of the whistle and the injuries and death it produced, and were themselves caused by the blast of the whistle.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

There is a statement in the brief that Nichols and Irene Botzet knew that the whistle was blown daily at 5 in the afternoon, and that they assumed the risk of injury from it. The place in the record where the evidence that they had this knowledge may be found is not pointed out, and a search of the record for it has proved vain. The transcript, however, does show that Irene testified that she did not know that the whistle blew at 5 o'clock, and that, just as Nichols was approaching the turn of the bridge nearest to the whistle, a few seconds before 5 o'clock, he held his horses to a walk while Losinski passed him, and then stopped them very near the turn while Duff passed him, and then it was 5 o'clock, the whistle blew, the two rear teams ran instantly, and the injuries and death followed. It is difficult to believe that Nichols would have walked and then stopped his horses at the most dangerous place on the bridge at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, if he had known that the whistle blew daily at that hour, when he might just as easily have driven them on and been a few hundred feet distant when the blast came.

Notice or knowledge and appreciation of the danger are indispensable to the assumption of the risk of it (Chicago G. W. R. Co. v. Price, 38 C. C. A. 239, 247, 97 Fed. 423), and the evidence that the victims of this accident knew and appreciated the danger from the blast of the whistle was far from being so conclusive that it was the duty of the court to instruct the jury that they assumed the risk of it.

The burden was upon the defendant to prove contributory negligence, and it was the duty of the court to instruct the jury 53 Am. Rep. 31, 23 N. W. 220; Maximilian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 20 Am. Rep. 468; Ogg v. Lansing, 35 Iowa, 495, 14 Am. Rep. 499; Benton v. City Hospital, 140 Mass. 13, 54 Am. Rep. 436, 1 N. E. 836; Barbour v. Ellsworth, 67 Me. 294), the power to maintain and operate a fire department to protect its inhabitants against conflagrations (Grube v. St. Paul, 34 Minn. 402, 26 N. W. 228; Miller v. Minneapolis, 75 Minn. 131, 77 N. W. 788; Smith v. Rochester, 76 N. Y. 506; New York v. Workman, 14 C. C. A. 530, 35 U. S. App. 201, 67 Fed. 347; Fisher v. Boston, 104 Mass. 87, 6 Am. Rep. 196), the power to promote education (Ham v. New York, 70 N. Y. 459; Lane v. Woodbury, 58 Iowa, 462, 12 N. W. 478), the power to inspect steam boilers (Mead v. New Haven, 40 Conn. 72, 16 Am. Rep. 14), and the power to administer public charities (Haight v. New York [D. C.] 24 Fed. 93),—the city, like the state, is not liable to pay damages in civil actions.

But for damages caused by the wrongful acts and omissions of its officers and agents within the scope of their authority in the exercise of its powers of the latter class, such as its power to build and maintain bridges, streets, and highways, the power to construct and keep in repair sewers (Murphy v. Indianapolis, 158 Ind. 238, 63 N. E. 469; Williams v. Greenville, 130 N. C. 93, 57 L.R.A. 207, 89 Am. St. Rep. 860, 40 S. E. 977; Hamlin v. Biddeford, 95 Me. 308, 49 Atl. 1100; Denver v. Rhodes, 9 Colo. 554, 13 Pac. 729), the power to collect refuse and to care for the dump where it is deposited (Denver v. Porter, 61 C. C. A. 168, 126 Fed. 288, 294), the power to construct and operate the draws of bridges (Naumburg v. Milwaukee, 77 C. C. A. 67, 146 Fed. 641), and the power to build, maintain, and operate waterworks to furnish water to the city and to its inhabitants for compensation (Wiltse v. Red Wing, 99 Minn. 255, 260, 109 N. W. 114; Lynch v. Springfield, 174 Mass. 430, 54 N. E. 871), the city is liable to the same extent as a private individual or corporation under like circumstances. The power of a city to construct and operate waterworks is not a political or governmental, but a private or corporate, power, granted and exercised, not to enable it to control its people, but to authorize it to furnish to itself and its inhabitants water for their private advantage. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Arkansas City, 34 L.R.A. 518, 22 C. C. A. 171, 182, 40 U. S. App. 257, 76 Fed. 271, 272; Pikes Peak Power Co. v. Colorado Springs, 44 C. C. A. 333, 342, 105 Fed. 1, 10; Omaha Water Co. v. Omaha, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 736, 77 C. C. A. 267, 271, 147 Fed. 1, 5.

The blast of the whistle which frightened Nichols's horses was not blown by the city 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) in the exercise of its power to protect its inhabitants against fire and to operate its fire-alarm system or its fire department. It had no connection with or tendency to perform any of these functions. The blasts for those purposes were blown automatically through the fire-alarm system. This blast was blown by hand by the assistant engineer of the waterworks building, by direction of its water commissioner and the city council, in the exercise of the power of the city to maintain waterworks, and care for the pumping station, which was a part of them. It therefore falls far within the line of municipal liability.

The argument that the discretion of the city in the construction, location, and operation of its fire-alarm system is not reviewable by the courts has not escaped attention. But, if sound, it is not material, and hence will not be discussed, because it was not the exercise of that discretion, but the blowing of the whistle by the assistant engineer of the waterworks building, that was the proximate cause of the injuries and death, and that is the foundation of these actions. The location and use of the whistle for the fire department, dangerous as it was, would never have caused the death of Nichols and the injury to Irene, if the assistant engineer of the waterworks building had not pulled open the valve and sent forth the blast at 5 in the afternoon of that fatal day.

Finally, it is said that the city is not liable, because it had no corporate power to cause this whistle to be blown for the purpose of notifying union men and the employees of the city of the time of day. But it had plenary power to erect, maintain, and operate the waterworks building. It had the power, and it was its duty, to so use that building and the whistle upon it that it would not inflict any unnecessary injury upon travelers upon the bridge; to prevent, and, when it arose, to suppress, the public nuisance of the startling, dangerous 5 o'clock blasts of this whistle upon it, and to exercise ordinary care to keep the bridge reasonably safe for travelers thereon. For damages caused to travelers by the failure to discharge these duties, it was liable in these cases, and the evidence of such a failure was so substantial that the refusal of the court below to direct a verdict in its favor was not error.

In the Botzet Case attention is called to the facts that, while the whistle was blown, and the horses were frightened and started to run, in the state of Minnesota, Irene was not thrown over the railing of the bridge, and was not injured, until they had carried her into the state of Wisconsin; that there is a statute of the latter state which limits the amount of recovery from any city, county, town, or village, on account of any defects in a bridge or highway, to $5,000, and that the verdict and judgment in that case were far in excess of this amount, and in excess of the amount specified in the notice of the claim upon which the action is based which was originally given to the city. But this action was brought in the state of Minnesota, the city committed the wrong on which it is founded in that state, the statute of Wisconsin had no effect beyond the limits of the state of Wisconsin, and the plaintiff was not limited in his recovery to the amount claimed in his original notice. Terryll v. Faribault, 84 Minn. 341, 342, 87 N. W. 917.

There was no error in the trial of these cases, and the judgments below must be affirmed.

It is so ordered.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF NEBRASKA, Appt.,
v.

DAVID T. MARTYN.

(82 Neb. 225, 117 N. W. 719.)

Carrier — pass — regulation.

1. A contract between a railroad company and a physician, by the terms of which he is to receive for professional services to be rendered by him for the company, at its request, the sum of $25 per month and an

Headnotes by BARNES, Ch. J.

Case Note. — Is pass issued as part of consideration for contract within statute prohibiting free transportation of passengers or discrimination in passenger rates.

Free transportation in the form of an annual pass issued to one not in the regular and stated service of an interstate carrier, nor receiving any wages or salary under a contract of employment, but requested by him as compensation for throwing in its way what business he conveniently could, is a violation of the interstate commerce act of February 4, 1887. Slater v. Northern P. R. Co. 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 243.

Free passes issued by an interstate carrier to shippers or dealers on account of interstate traffic furnished by them constitute an offense against the interstate commerce law, as affording transportation at less than established fares or charges, and, whether the holders are entitled to interstate passage or not, if granted on account of the interstate transportation of freight, the result is a "rebate or device" whereby the pass holders obtain such freight transportation, not only at less than tariff rates but for a less net price than is exacted from annual pass over its lines of road, where the physician does not spend a major portion of his time in the employment of the company is prohibited by the provisions of §§ 10,664, 10,665, Cobbey's Stat. 1907, and the acceptance and use of such a pass by the physician renders him guilty of a violation of those sections.

Same — anti-pass law — constitutionality.

2. The provisions of chapter 93, p. 342. Laws 1907, commonly called the "anti-pass law," prohibiting the issuance, acceptance, and use of free transportation, are a proper and reasonable exercise of the police power of the state and the power of the legislature to regulate the business of common carriers by preventing unjust discriminations, and are not unconstitutional.

(September 16, 1908.)

A PPEAL by the State from a judgment of the District Court for Platte County dismissing an information charging defendant with accepting a pass in violation of law. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. J. Sullivan, with Messrs. W. T. Thompson, Attorney General, and W. B. Rose, for appellant:

A pass issued to a physician who does not devote the major portion of his time to the services of the carrier is a free pass within the meaning of the anti-pass law.

McNeill v. Durham & C. R. Co. 135 N. C. 682, 67 L.R.A. 230, 47 S. E. 765; State v. Omaha Elevator Co. 75 Neb. 637, 106 N. W. 979, 110 N. W. 874; Gran v. Houston, 45 Neb. 813, 64 N. W. 245; Lake Superior & persons not so favored, who are shippers of like traffic transported under similar conditions between the same points. Milk Producers' Protective Assn. v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 7 Inters. Com. Rep. 163.

So, the free transportation of certain newspaper employees upon interstate trains carrying newspapers pursuant to a contract, whose duty it is to sort, handle, and make them into packages for instant delivery at the various stations, which includes return transportation to the starting point, is a violation of such act, and does not fall within the exception authorizing free transportation "to necessary care takers of livestock, poultry, and fruit." Re Free Transportation of Newspaper Employees, 12 Inters. Com. Rep. 15.

But a contract between a common carrier and an express company whereby the former, among other things, is to transport the latter's messengers and property, and furnish passes for the free transportation of its officers, agents, and servants when traveling upon its business, for which the express company is to make specified payments and also carry free of charge certain property of the railway company, is not

M. R. Co. v. United States, 12 Ct. Cl. 35; Marshall v. Nashville R. & Light Co. 118 Tenn. 254, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1249, 101 S. W. 419, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 675.

By making acceptance of a pass unlawful, the anti-pass law is not unconstitutional as depriving a railway physician of his property without due process of law, or as violating the terms of his contract to perform services for $25 a month and a pass.

Armour Packing Co. v. United States, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 400, 82 C. C. A. 135, 153 Fed. 1, affirmed in 209 U. S. 56, 52 L. ed. 681, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 428; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 200 U. S. 361, 50 L. ed. 515, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 272; Summerville v. Pressley, 33 S. C. 56, 8 L.R.A. 854, 26 Am. St. Rep. 659, 11 S. E. 545; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 62, 21 L. ed. 404; Bullard v. Northern P. R. Co. 10 Mont. 168, 11 L.R.A. 246, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 536, 25 Pac. 120.

Mr. W. N. Hensley also for appellant.

Messrs. W. M. Corneliuss, Edson Rich, and J. E. Raitt for appellee.

Barnes, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At the March, A. D. 1908, term of the district court of Platte county, an information was filed against the defendant, David T. Martyn, Sr., which, omitting the title and formal parts, was, in substance, as follows: That, on or about the 15th day of January, 1908, David T. Martyn, Sr., then and there being, did unlawfully accept from the Union Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation owning and operating lines of railroad in the state of Nebraska, a free pass for travel on and over all the lines of railroad owned and operated by the said Union Pacific Railroad Company in said state; and did then and there unlawfully use said pass for the free transportation of himself as a passenger on and over the said lines of railroad in said county and state; that said David T. Martyn, Sr., not being then and there an officer, agent, or bona fide employee the major portion of whose time is or was devoted to the service of said railroad company. The information in conclusion also stated facts sufficient to show that the defendant was not included within any of the exceptions contained in chapter 93, p. 342, Laws 1907, commonly called the "anti-pass law." To this information the defendant entered a plea of not guilty. In due time he was placed on trial, and the cause was finally impaired by a subsequent act of the legislature imposing a penalty upon a carrier who shall knowingly carry any person free of charge, or give any person or corporation a free pass or privilege or a substitute for pay, or a subterfuge which is used, or which is given to be used, instead of the regular fare or rate for transportation, or sell any transportation for anything except money, or for any greater or less rate than is charged to all persons under the same conditions, as such act was intended to be prospective only, and discloses no intention to affect transactions already passed. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Wells-Fargo Exp. Co. (Tex.) 110 S. W. 38, affirming (Tex. Civ. App.) 108 S. W. 172; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wells-Fargo Exp. Co. (Tex.) 110 S. W. 41, affirming (Tex. Civ. App.) 108 S. W. 174.

In Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Wells-Fargo Exp. Co. supra, the court said that the carrying of persons under the contract in question could not be an offense defined by such act, as the carrying would not be done free of charge, as the offense contemplated by the statute consists in carrying or hauling free, and not a carrying or hauling for which a carrier receives very substantial compensation for everything it does, in the form of money paid and services rendered. A contract in consideration of a conveyance of land to an interstate railway company, to issue, or procure the issuance of, annual passes to the grantors, is not within the prohibition of the interstate commerce act, which forbids the issuance of passes gratuitously, and not for a money or other valuable consideration. Curry v. Kansas & C. P. R. Co. 58 Kan. 6, 48 Pac. 579. 23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

So, a contract to furnish free transportation over the lines of an interstate carrier for the life of one who, in consideration therefor, releases the carrier from all damages, or claims for damages, for personal injuries received, is not within the interstate commerce act as amended by 34 Stat. at. L. 584, prohibiting the issuance, or giving directly or indirectly, of any interstate free pass or transportation, except for the carrier's employees, as such law was not intended to be retroactive as to existing contracts. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mottley (Ky.) 118 S. W. 982. A similar decision was made upon this contract in Mottley v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 150 Fed. 406, although in 211 U. S. 149, 53 L. ed. 126, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 42, the suit was dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

Nor, is such contract brought within the interstate commerce act by reason of the fact that it provided for the issuance of a pass each year, as the contract itself, not being within the act, cannot be brought thereunder by the mere act of issuing the pass pursuant to the terms thereof. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mottley, supra. The court said that the statute inhibits the issuance of free tickets or passes, and that a pass issued in the execution of the contract cannot be called free, as it was paid for in money just as certainly as if the actual cash were paid for a trip ticket, as the plaintiff, having received serious bodily injuries by negligence of the carrier, was entitled to damages, and it was competent for the parties to settle this unliquidated claim for money and agree upon its value, and it submitted on the contract under which the pass in question was issued, and an agreed statement of facts. It was provided, among other things, by said contract, that the defendant should furnish all necessary surgical and medical treatment to the sick and injured employees of the Union Pacific Railroad Company free of charge to said employees, and also render such services to passengers and others for whom the company should request the same, between Schuyler and Silver Creek, Nebraska, for which he was to receive an annual pass on the Nebraska division of said railroad, together with trip passes upon other divisions thereof, and $25 per month during his employment, which it was provided could be canceled and terminated at any time, for cause, by the said company. By the agreed statement of facts it was conceded, among other things, that the defendant was and is not employed a major portion of his time in the service of the said railroad company. On motion of the defendant's counsel the court directed the jury to return a verdict of not guilty, which was accordingly done, the defendant was discharged, and the cause was thereupon dismissed,—to all of which the state entered its exceptions, and has brought the case here for review under the provisions of §§ 483 and 515 of the Criminal Code. It is contended by the state that the record shows, beyond any question or chance of reasonable contention, that defendant was guilty of a plain violation of our statutes prohibiting the acceptance and use of free transportation. On the other hand, defendant contends, first, that a pass issued in good faith to a regular, practising physician, in return for services performed and to be performed by him in the treatment of persons injured on or about the railroad issuing it, is not a free pass within the meaning of the act of March 30, 1907, prohibiting the giving, acceptance, and use of passes, or free transportation of passengers over any and all lines of railroad within this state; second, that the act violates § 3, art. 1, Const., which provides that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law;" and, third, that the act violates § 16 of article 1 of the Constitution, which provides that "no bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts or making any irrevocable grant of special privileges, . . . shall be passed."

To determine these questions, it is not was stipulated that the amount thereof was equal in value to such transportation as he should afterwards choose to make over its lines during his natural life, and, being valid when made, we do not think it is within the prohibition of the Federal statute.

The exchange of railroad transportation in payment for newspaper advertising constitutes an acceptance in payment for transportation, of compensation greater or less or different from that named in an interstate carrier's published rates, in violation of the interstate commerce act as amended by the Hepburn act, which prohibits any interstate carrier from accepting greater or less or different compensation than that named in its published schedule. United States v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. 163 Fed. 114.

And such a contract was condemned under a statute of similar purport to the interstate commerce act, in Hicks Pub. Co. v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. (Wis.) 120 N. W. 512, which required a publisher to pay four times as much for the transportation used by him as the public generally was called upon to pay.

So, a pass issued in consideration of the insertion of a schedule of a railway company in a newspaper, for the current year, violates an act of a state legislature prohibiting a common carrier, directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, from charging, demanding, collecting, or receiving from any person a greater or less compensation for the transportation of passengers than it charges, demands, or receives from other persons for similar services. McNeill v. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Durham & C. R. Co. 132 N. C. 510, 67 L.R.A. 227, 95 Am. St. Rep. 641, 44 S. E. 34, s. c. second appeal in 135 N. C. 682, 67 L.R.A. 230, 47 S. E. 765.

But, in Hicks Pub. Co. v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. supra, the court, although not deciding the question, said as there was no positive prohibition against exchanging transportation for advertising, such a contract might be entered into if the transportation was of equal value to the advertising furnished.

A municipality is not prohibited from granting a franchise for a street railway with a condition therein for the carrying of policemen, firemen, United States mail carriers, and children under a certain age free, by reason of a constitutional prohibition against railroad or transportation companies, directly or indirectly, issuing or giving any free ticket, pass, or transportation to others than its employees and their families, its officers, agents, surgeons, physicians, attorneys at law, and ministers and other enumerated persons, not including those mentioned in such franchise. Oklahoma City v. Oklahoma R. Co. 20 Okla. 1, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 651, 93 Pac. 48.

A common carrier renders itself liable to the penalty provided by a statute against making unjust discrimination in rates for transportation over its road, by actually transporting a person without charge or for an inadequate consideration, and not by making a contract for free transportation. McNeill v. Durham & C. R. Co. 135 N. C. 682, 67 L.R.A. 230, 47 S. E. 765.

In addition to the cases above cited, see also those discussed in the opinion to STATE v. MARTYN.

only proper, but necessary, for us to consider all of the several provisions of our statutes relating to, or in any manner regulating, the business of common carriers within this state; and we should also take into consideration the evil sought to be corrected by the several legislative acts on that subject, together with the means adopted to accomplish that purpose. It is a matter of common knowledge that free passes first originated in favors granted to personal friends of railroad officials, and that this courtesy was gradually extended to public officers. This in itself, and in its inception, was not considered harmful or detrimental to the public welfare; but, long prior to the passage of the act in question, the giving, acceptance, and use of the free pass had become an intolerable evil, a menace to good government, and a stumbling block in the way of securing needed legislation, as well as a burden to the railroad companies themselves. With this situation confronting the legislative assembly of 1907, that body wisely determined to put an end to the whole matter, and so it first enacted chapter 90, p. 311, Sess. Laws 1907, commonly called the "railway commission act," which was approved by the governor and became a law on the 27th day of March of that year. By § 14 of the act it was provided that, "if any railway company or common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, directly or indirectly, through or by its agents, officers, or employees, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, shall charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person, firm, or corporation a greater or less compensation for any service rendered or to be rendered by it than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person, firm, or corporation for doing a like and contemporaneous service, the same shall constitute an unjust discrimination, which is hereby forbidden, and declared to be unlawful." It seems perfectly clear that the giving of free transportation to any person whomsoever was thereby made unlawful; and, while it was not made a penal offense by that section to receive such transportation, yet the giving of it was made a crime punishable by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $1,000. That the provisions of that section are broad enough to cover the transaction in question in this case, and render it at least unlawful, there can be no doubt, for the transportation of a passenger by a railroad company over its line of road is a service performed by it for such passenger; and the Union Pacific Railroad Company, by giving the defendant the pass in question, thus charged, collected, demanded, and received a different charge from the defendant than it charged, demanded, collected, or received from other persons or passengers for a like service. That this rendered the transaction unlawful there can be no question. To the operation of this law there was no exception, and the servants and employees of the railroad company could not be transported free, even while carrying out the terms of their employment. It was therefore apparent that the law, as it then stood, was too drastic in its provisions, and that there should be enacted some needed exceptions to its operation; and so the anti-pass law above mentioned was passed, approved by the governor, and took effect on the 30th day of March, 1907. See §§ 10664, 10665, Cobbey's Stat. 1907. By this act it was made a penal offense, not only for a railroad company to give, but for any person to receive and use, free transportation, who was not especially excepted from its operation by the language of the act itself. As we understand the question before us, it is not claimed by the defendant that he falls within any of those exceptions, and, while the defendant was an employee of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, yet it is frankly conceded that he did not, and does not, spend a major portion of his time in the service of that company. With the facts above stated before us, we come now to determine the foregoing questions.

The defendant's first contention is that his pass is not a free pass within the meaning of the statute above referred to. To support this proposition, his counsel cite Dempsey v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 146 N. Y. 292, 40 N. E. 867. In that case one Dempsey, a railroad policeman, appointed by the governor of the state of New York, pursuant to statute, had entered into a contract with the defendant railroad to protect its property, and be ready for such service at all times on demand; and it was also agreed that, if he would procure his appointment to the office of railroad policeman, the company would give him $75 per month for performing the duties of that office, together with an annual pass, which was required to enable him to perform his official duties. Upon these facts it was held that the pass contracted for was not a free pass within the meaning of the Constitution of New York, which prohibited the issuance of free passes to the public officers of that state. It thus appears that the rule announced therein has no application to the case at bar.

Our attention is next directed to the opinion of the attorney general of the state of Wisconsin, wherein he decided that a contract between the assistant attorney general and a railway company, by which that officer was to act as attorney for the company in consideration of an annual pass, was not a violation of the anti-pass law of that state. An examination of that opinion, however, discloses that it was based on Dempsey v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. supra, and therefore has no application to the facts here in question, or the law by which our decision must be governed. Again, the obvious impropriety of the employment of the assistant law officer of the state by a railroad company, and the inconsistency of his position in accepting such employment, affords sufficient reason to justify us in declining to follow that opinion.

Finally, on this branch of the case, counsel present Smith v. New York C. R. Co. 24 N. Y. 222, and New York C. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 17 Wall. 359, 21 L. ed. 634. We find, upon an examination of those cases, that the point decided by each of them was that a shipper, traveling on a drover's pass issued to enable him to take care of his live stock en route, was not a gratuitous passenger in such a sense as to relieve the carrier from liability for negligence causing his death. Just how those cases can aid us in determining the questions under consideration we are not now advised, and so far have been unable to ascertain. On the other hand, we find that, in Marshall v. Nashville R. & Light Co. 118 Tenn. 254, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1249, 101 S. W. 419, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 675, the nature of a free pass issued by a railroad company to the chief of police of the city of Nashville was determined, and it was there said: "One of the assignments of error in this case is that the pass was not a mere gratuity, but that it was given for a valuable consideration; and, in this connection, it is said that the deceased was a member of the police force of Nashville, being chief of detectives, and that, to this class of persons, the company, as a rule, issued passes, which were based upon a valuable consideration. In other words, this pass was given, like others of its class, to encourage and to induce members of the police force, like the intestate, to ride upon the cars, and to be frequently about them, because their presence tended to preserve peace and good order for the passengers, and to protect the interest and operation of the road. We are of opinion that such a motive on the part of the road cannot be considered a valuable consideration, because the expected benefits are too remote, contingent, and uncertain to be so classed; and the pass must, therefore, be considered and treated, as it purports to be, a mere gratuity or compliment." An examination of the contract under which the pass in question was issued to the defendant discloses, as 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

above stated, that it could be abrogated or annulled at any time for cause, and the impression is created thereby, and by the whole record, that, for the contingent services which the defendant was to render to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, if requested, he was to receive and accept $25 per month, and that the pass in question, by which he was permitted to ride upon the trains of that company over its Nebraska division free of charge, was a mere gratuity, and was so considered by both the defendant and the railroad company until after the passage of the act in question herein. It seems quite evident that any expected benefits by reason thereof, which might be received by the railroad company, were so remote and contingent as to constitute no consideration therefor. If the defendant's pass is not a free pass within the meaning of the act which is the basis of this prosecution, then the statute itself is as useless as the vermiform appendix. If a free pass can be lawfully issued by a railroad company and used by any person as an employee, who does not spend a major portion of his time in the service of the company, the whole purpose of the law is thwarted and destroyed, for, under the pretext of employment, any service performed for the company, however slight and trifling, would entitle the one performing it to free transportation, and the law would thus be rendered wholly nugatory. We therefore decline to adopt the construction contended for, and are of the opinion that the defendant's pass is just what it purports to be, a free pass, and its issuance, acceptance, and use was a plain violation of the statute which is the basis of this prosecution.

We come now to dispose of the defendant's second and third contentions, which strike at the constitutionality of the law involved in this controversy. These questions will be considered together, for what may be said as to one of them applies with equal force to the other. It is asserted that the anti-pass law is unconstitutional because it impairs the obligations of the contract existing between the defendant and the railroad company, and deprives defendant of his property without due process of law. To correctly decide this question, we should construe all of the provisions of our Constitution and statutes which relate thereto, or have any bearing thereon, together. By § 7 of article 11 of the Constitution it is provided that "the legislature shall pass laws to correct abuses, and prevent unjust discrimination and extortion in all charges of express, telegraph, and railroad companies in this state, and enforce such laws by adequate penalties." It thus appears that the power to regulate intrastate commerce and prevent unjust discriminations is not only granted to the legislative assembly by the Constitution, but it is thereby made a duty which the lawmaking body is commanded to perform. It is also well settled that the internal commerce of a state—that is, the commerce wholly confined to and carried on within the limits of a single state—is as much under state control as foreign or interstate commerce is under the control of the general government. Sands v. Manistee River Improv. Co. 123 U. S. 293, 31 L. ed. 151, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113; Gibbons v. Ogden. 9 Wheat. 19, 6 L. ed. 27; Moore v. American Transp. Co. 24 How. 39, 16 L. ed. 681; Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S. 210, 38 L. ed. 965; 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 649, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1087; Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 40 L. ed. 793, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600. The exercise of this power necessarily includes the right to interfere with contract and property rights, so far, at least, as may be necessary to prevent extortion and discrimination. From even a cursory examination of the several acts of our legislature on this subject, it is quite apparent that the contract under consideration was, and is, discriminatory in its nature. We find that like contracts have been frequently declared to be so. The statutes of North Carolina upon this subject are the same as our own, and, in M'Neill v. Durham & C. R. Co. 132 N. C. 510, 67 L.R.A. 227, 95 Am. St. Rep. 641, 44 S. E. 34, it was held that a contract between a railroad company and the publisher of a newspaper, by which he was to publish the time-tables of the company, and receive a pass over its line of railroad as compensation therefor, was invalid, and was an illegal discrimination. In the opinion in that case we find the following: "Subject to the liberal exceptions just recited, the general assembly deemed that free transportation or any other discrimination was so much against public policy that a violation of the statute was made punishable with a fine 'not less than $1,000 and not exceeding $5,000 for each offense.' Nothing could be more clearly a discrimination than the ground upon which the plaintiff asked for and received free passage on this occasion; to wit, that for the year previous he had advertised the schedule of the defendant company in his paper, and had received therefor a free pass over its line for the previous year, and that this contract had been renewed for the year then current. It does not appear what was the value of the advertising done, charging for the space at the same rates as would be charged others, but, let it be what it may, it could not amount exactly, 'neither more nor less,' to the value of a free pass to travel ad libitum an unstipulated number of miles over the 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) defendant's road. Besides, it was an illegal discrimination to sell the plaintiff transportation on credit, and not payable in money." This decision not only meets with our approval, but we find that the Federal courts, in construing like provisions of the interstate commerce law, have reached a similar conclusion. United States v. Wells-Fargo Exp. Co. (C. C.) 161 Fed. 606. Again, it may be said, if the contract for the pass, in the case at bar, ever had any validity, the provisions of our Constitution above quoted, entered into and became a part of it at its inception. And its terms and obligations were at all times subject to the power of the legislature to pass laws "to correct abuses and prevent unjust discriminations." Therefore, when the law in question took effect, the contract became illegal, and its obligations gave way and were suspended, for it cannot be said that it was of such a character as to suspend the provisions of the Constitution and the statute passed in response to the command of that instrument.

It may be further stated that our anti-pass law is simply a police regulation, adopted in pursuance to the mandates of the supreme law, and therefore cannot be said to be unconstitutional. In Tiedeman on Limitations of Police Power it is well said [§ 93, p. 233]: "Whenever the business is itself a privilege or franchise not enjoyed by all alike, or the business is materially benefited by the gift by the state of some special privileges to be enjoyed in connection with it, the business ceases to be strictly private, and becomes a quasi public business, and, to that extent, may be subjected to police regulation." That such is the nature of the business of a common carrier there can be no doubt. In Bullard v. Northern P. R. Co. 10 Mont. 168, 11 L.R.A. 246, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 536, 25 Pac. 120, it was held that "existing contracts for special freight rates, or rebates from regular tariff rates which had been made with railroad companies subject to the interstate commerce act, became illegal when that act took effect, and were after that time incapable of enforcement." The contract in question herein is without doubt subject to the same rule. We are therefore of opinion that the issuance of the defendant's annual pass, and its acceptance and use by him, was a plain violation of the statute.

We are therefore constrained to hold that the District Court erred in directing the jury to find the defendant not guilty, and discharging him from further prosecution. For the foregoing reasons, the exceptions of the state are sustained. Judgment accordingly.

Petition for rehearing denied, January 23, 1909.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

ATLANTIC & NORTH CAROLINA RAILROAD COMPANY

v.

ATLANTIC & NORTH CAROLINA COMPANY, Appt.

(147 N. C. 368, 61 S. E. 185.)

Contract — assignment.

1. A contract to cut wood and deliver it to a railroad company is assignable by the company, so as to impose upon the assignee the duty to pay for the wood when delivered according to its terms.

Lease — assignment of contract.

2. A contract to take and pay for wood to be cut and delivered to it passes by a lease by a railroad company which undertakes to demise, let, hire, farm out, and deliver to the lessee the franchise and property of the lessor for a term of years, and which expressly includes all lands, interest in lands, timber, timber rights, and contracts now owned by the lessor, which rights and contracts are necessary to furnish the fuel used in the locomotives on the road.

Damages — breach of contract — assignment.

3. The damages for breach by a lessee of its agreement to carry out the lessor's contract for supplies is the amount of the judgment which the contractor recovers against the lessor in an action for breach of the contract, of which the lessee had notice, together with the costs and reasonable attorneys' fees incurred in resisting the recovery,—at least, where the lessee covenanted

Case Note. — Assignability of executory contract to perform particular work, as distinguished from a contract for personal services or contract of sale.

This note is limited to cases passing on the assignability of executory contracts, where, as in ATLANTIC & N. C. R. Co. v. ATLANTIC & N. C. Co., by the terms of the contract one person agreed to do some particular work, not professional, for another; that is, where the relation is analogous to that of independent contractor and person by whom he is employed. Cases, therefore, concerning contracts involving the mere relation of master and servant, or involving services by a lawyer, physician, or other professional person, as such, are not included within this note. Cases involving the assignability of contracts for public work have been expressly excluded from this note, as well as those cases which depend for their decision as to assignability upon the terms of the contract.

The question of assignability of construction or building contracts which contain no provision with reference thereto is discussed in a case note to Johnson v. Vickers, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 359.

As was said in the note first referred to, the general doctrine that contracts are not assignable where they involve a personal liability, a relation of personal confidence, or call for the skill or experience of one of the parties, is well settled. The real question to be considered, therefore, in each particular case, seems to be whether it comes within the above-named rule.

In Tifton, T. & G. R. Co. v. Bedgood, 116 Ga. 945, 43 S. E. 257, a contract made by a railroad company with the owner of a lumber tract to build a side track to their property, in consideration for the latter's agreement to ship lumber over the company's railroad, was held not assignable by the owners of the lumber tract, so as to make it enforceable against the railroad company by the assignee.

In Arkansas Valley Smelting Co. v. Bel-den Min. Co. 127 U. S. 379, 32 L. ed. 246, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1308, a contract for the sale and delivery of lead ore by a mining company to persons conducting a smelter, the ore to be assayed after delivery, and the price to be ascertained and paid according to the result of the assay, no security being given for payment except the character and solvency of the parties to whom the ore was to be delivered, was held not assignable by the latter; coming within the rule that contracts involving a personal confidence cannot be assigned; and therefore the mining company in this case could not be compelled to accept the liability of a smelting company as a substitute for the liability of those with whom it contracted.

In Edison v. Babka, 111 Mich. 235, 69 N. W. 490, a contract by a nurseryman with a farmer to plant fruit trees on the latter's farm, and to prune and care for them during a term of years, was held not assignable by the nurseryman.

So, in Eastern Advertising Co. v. McGaw, 89 Md. 72, 42 Atl. 923, where an advertising company assigned a contract with one of its customers to display his advertisements in street cars, the court, in holding that the assignee could not enforce the contract against the customer, said: "It is perfectly obvious that skill and judgment as well as taste were required by the contract to be exercised by the Eastern Company, both in the designing of the cards and in selecting the type in which they were to be printed, and in the arrangement of the cards in the cars. Its approval of the style and contents of the cards was necessary before any card could be placed in the cars. The contract was one where the delectus personæ was most material. It made no provision for an assignment; and a transfer of it for performance by another was clearly not contemplated by either of the parties to it. Its sale to the new company gave to that company no authority to execute it without the consent of McGaw; and that consent was refused. The Eastern Company disabled itself to perform the contract, and a suit in its name to the use of the assignee or vendee gave the latter no to save the lessor harmless from any damages which might be recovered against it because of the lessee's default, and the lessor undertook to notify the lessee of any cause of action for which the lessee would be liable, and tender defense of the action to the lessee.

Same — implied contract.

4. The assignee of a contract for supplies is, under the general doctrine of indebitatus assumpsit, bound to indemnify the assignor for loss which he may suffer at the suit of the other contracting party, because of the default of the assignee.

Lease — construction — assignment of contract.

5. A provision in a lease that the lessee shall not be liable for any debt of the lessor at the date of the contract does not include a liability to pay for supplies subsequently delivered to the lessee under a contract assigned by lessor to lessee.

Same — railroad — lessee's liability.

6. The rule that the lessee of a railroad is not liable on the contracts of the lessor, in the absence of a stipulation to that effect, is not applicable where the lessee has taken the contract by assignment, and thus made itself primarily liable thereon.

right to recover for services it had not been engaged to render."

To the same effect are Fitch v. Brockmon, 3 Cal. 348 (contract with the owner of a stock ranch to take charge of ranch for a certain time and to give it his personal attention, in consideration for a certain per cent of the increase of the cattle, horses, and grain, together with certain other property); and Hudson v. Farris, 30 Tex. 574 (contract to locate colonists' land on shares and obtain a certificate therefor); and Streeter v. Sumner, 31 N. H. 542 (contract to move upon a farm and board lumbermen, and keep the owner's teams).

So, a contract to publish school books, between the author and a corporation, was held not assignable by the latter, in Wooster v. Crane & Co. (N. J. Ch.) 66 Atl. 1093, although, with one exception, the personnel of the assignee was the same as that of the assignor, and although the author, in making the contract with the publishers, used the word "assigns."

In Dr. Jaeger's Sanitary Woollen System Co. v. Walker, 77 L. T. N. S. 180, a contract between a woollen goods company and manufacturers, by which the latter agreed to manufacture for the former certain goods covered by their trademark, and of quality to be approved, and with right of inspection of the manufacturers' goods, with various conditions as to manufacture for other dealers, was recognized as not assignable, it being a personal contract.

In Spencer v. Woodbury, 1 Minn. 105, Gil. 82, a person agreed in writing to cut and split several thousand rails, to be delivered to a certain person or bearer. On the question whether or not this contract

Evidence — confidential communication — attorney — common knowledge.

7. Testimony of an attorney for a lessee that a contract with a third person was mentioned and referred to at the time of taking the lease cannot be excluded from evidence in a suit to enforce the provisions of the lease with respect to it, as a confidential communication, since the fact must necessarily have been known to both parties at the time.

(April 15, 1908.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Craven County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to hold defendant liable for a judgment which had been recovered against plaintiff on a contract which had been assigned to defendant. Affirmed.

Statement by Hoke, J.:

Civil action, tried at the November term, 1907. A jury trial having been formally waived by the parties, the court heard the testimony, found facts, and made conclusions of law thereon as follows: "(1) That was assignable so as to make it enforceable in the hands of an assignee, the court said: "It is, at most, but a chose in action, and, as that class of rights were not assignable at common law, and, as the statute in force at the time, rendering notes assignable promising the payment of money, does not affect other obligations promising payment of anything else, or the performance of labor, the action in this case upon the obligation in question cannot be maintained at law."

However, in Janvey v. Loketz, 122 App. Div. 411, 106 N. Y. Supp. 690, it was held that a contract calling for the performance of painting, decorating, whitewashing, and wall papering involved no personal confidential relation, and no exceptional personal skill or knowledge, and was therefore assignable.

So, a contract to drill an oil well was held to be assignable, in Galey v. Mellon, 172 Pa. 443, 33 Atl. 560, the court saying that the work, of necessity, required the labor and attention of a number of men, and it did not appear that, because of his knowledge, experience, or pecuniary liability, or for any other reason, the assignor was especially fitted to carry it on.

In Anse La Butte Oil & Mineral Co. v. Babb, 122 La. 415, 47 So. 754, it was held that a contract giving a person the exclusive right to drill on another's land with a view of finding commercial substances, and obligating him, in case of success within a certain time thereafter, to pay a certain sum for the land, did not impose a personal obligation on him within a statute declaring an obligation personal when the obligor the plaintiff is a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of North Carolina. (2) That the defendant is a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of North Carolina. (3) That, on the 1st day of September, A. D. 1904, the plaintiff made, duly executed, and delivered a lease to the Howland Improvement Company; a copy of said lease is hereto annexed and made a part of these findings of fact. (4) That the defendant succeeded to the rights and liabilities of the said Howland Improvement Company under said lease. (5) That, previous to the execution of said lease, the plaintiff used in its locomotives for the transportation of freight and passengers over its railroad wood as fuel, and, for the purpose of supplying itself with a sufficient quantity of wood, the plaintiff had purchased timber lands and standing timber, and had entered into contracts with several persons for cutting timber, among others, one B. W. Ives, for the cutting and delivery to plaintiff of 15,000 cords of wood; and, in pursuance of said contract, the said Ives, prior to the date of said lease, had cut and delivered large quantities of said wood to plaintiff, and, at the time of the execution of said lease, the contract between plaintiff and Ives was in regular course of performance by both parties thereto. (6) That, when the defendant took over the property of the plaintiff under the said lease, all of the locomotives which it received were what are known as 'wood burners,' and it was necessary to have an adequate supply of wood as fuel for said locomotives, and that the defendant used in its railroad operations only those locomotives for several months, and used up large quantities of wood as fuel, including a portion of the wood cut and delivered to plaintiff by said Ives under said contract. (7) That, some months after defendant had been in the operation of said railroad under the said lease, it changed the locomotives from 'wood burners' to 'coal burners.' (8) That, after the lease, the defendant refused to carry out the wood contract with Ives, or to take any wood from him under and in pursuance of said contract between the plaintiff and said Ives; thereupon the said Ives demanded of the plaintiff that it carry out said contract, and, upon the failure of the plaintiff to perform said contract, the said Ives, on the 28th day of De-undertakes to perform anything that requires his personal skill and attention, and hence such contract was assignable.

In Sunday Mirror Co. v. Galvin, 55 Mo. App. 412, a contract stipulating for the support of a newspaper for the publication of a book was held not to rest on personal confidence, and was therefore assignable by the owners of the newspaper to a corporation formed to continue its publication.

In Rochester Lantern Co. v. Stiles & P. Press Co. 40 N. Y. S. R. 851, 16 N. Y. Supp. 781, reversed on other grounds in 135 N. Y. 209, 31 N. E. 1018, a contract whereby one agreed to make and deliver to another dies for lanterns which the latter intended to manufacture was held assignable by the person who was to receive the dies. The court said: "No reason is suggested why this contract should be held to be an exception to the general rule that contracts are assignable. Had Kelly died after entering into the contract, his representatives would have been entitled to the contract as an asset of his estate, and could have insisted upon the defendant's performing it. The defendant could have procured another to make the dies; and, if they complied with the contract, Kelly would have been compelled to accept them. . . . The parties could have prohibited the assignment of the contract by a provision in it to that effect, had they chosen. Not having done so, it must be held to be assignable."

So, where a contract was made to supply a party with slate, a portion of which was to be delivered immediately and another part monthly, at a fixed price, and the purchaser agreed to receive the slate in quantities of not more than a certain amount per 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

month, such agreement to be in force until a time stated, it was held, in Wentworth v. Cock, 10 Ad. & El. 42, that such contract was not a personal one, and therefore would survive as an obligation and liability upon the administrator of the deceased contractor's estate.

Nor is a contract for the sale and delivery of a quantity of saw logs one of the class in which the delectus personæ is material (Poling v. Condon-Lane Boom & Lumber Co. 55 W. Va. 529, 47 S. E. 279); there being nothing in this case to show that the person who was to receive the logs was in anyway prejudiced by the assignment.

Cases closely related to those coming within the scope of the note, but not strictly in point here, are those passing on the question of the assignability of a lease upon shares.

Among such cases is Litka v. Wilcox, 39 Mich. 94, where it was held that, because of its personal nature, a contract whereby a person agreed to work a farm on shares with its owner, and the farmer's wife was to do the cooking and washing for the latter, was not assignable, and therefore the grantee of the owner could enjoin the assignee for committing waste on such property. And to the same effect are Randall v. Chubb, 46 Mich. 311, 41 Am. Rep. 165, 9 N. W. 429, and Lewis v. Sheldon, 103 Mich. 102, 61 N. W. 269, holding that a lease of a farm upon shares, because of its personal nature, is not assignable.

For cases on assignability of insurance agent's right to commission on renewal premiums, see case note to Re Wright, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 193.

ember, 1904, brought suit against the plaintiff for the breach of said contract. (9) That, upon the institution of said suit, the plaintiff notified the defendant to come in and defend the same, which the defendant declined to do, and the plaintiff undertook the defense of said suit, and did defend it to the best of its ability and at considerable expense and cost, but judgment was finally awarded both in the superior and supreme courts against the plaintiff, and in favor of said Ives, for the sum of $8,106.90, with interest and costs. That, in addition to said amount, the plaintiff was forced to pay the following amounts: Interest on said amount, $216.16; cost superior court, $104.60; cost supreme court, $23.55; attorney's fee, $700,—amounting in all at the time of said payment to the sum of $9,147.21. (10) That the defendant knew of the existence of said contract at the time of the said lease, as shown by the paper writing itself and testimony of Howland, Davidson, and Bryan. (11) That said contract was assignable, and was duly assigned by the plaintiff to the defendant, and was broken by the defendant. (12) That said contract between the plaintiff and B. W. Ives was not in writing, nor was there any writing concerning same at the time of the making of the lease to the defendant. (13) The referee held that the defendant is liable to the plaintiff for the amount set out in paragraph 9 above, and that judgment be entered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant accordingly."

The portions of the lease referred to in finding of fact 3, pertinent to this inquiry, are as follows: "Now, therefore, for and in consideration of the several sums of money, rents, covenants, agreements, and stipulations hereinafter specified and agreed to be paid, kept, and performed by the Howland Improvement Company, the said lessor, namely, the Atlantic & North Carolina Railroad Company, has demised, let, hired, farmed out, and delivered, and by these presents doth demise, let, hire, farm out, and deliver to the said lessee, namely, the Howland Improvement Company, the entire railroad of the lessor, with all its franchises, privileges, rights of transportation, works, and property, including among other things its superstructure, roadbed, and rights of way incident thereto, situated in the state of North Carolina, and extending from Morehead City, in the county of Carteret, to the city of Goldsboro, in the county of Wayne, in the said state; and also all depots, houses, shops, piers, wharves, water fronts, water privileges, buildings, fixtures, engines, cars, and railroad equipment, and all franchises, rights, and privileges and 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

other things, if any, of whatsoever kind and nature, to the said lessor belonging and necessary, incident, appurtenant to the free, easy, and convenient operation of the said railroad leased hereby and now or heretofore used in that behalf; and also including the property situated in the said Morehead City, known as the Atlantic Hotel, with all its rights, privileges, hereditaments, and appurtenances, and the furniture, fixtures, equipments, and appliances now therein or used therewith, and also all lands and interests in lands, timber, timber rights, and contracts now owned by the lessor, for the full term of ninety-one (91) years and four (4) months from and after the 1st day of September, 1904, and to be fully ended, commencing the 1st day of September, 1904." And, further, a covenant of indemnity as follows: "And the lessee further covenants to and with the lessor, its successors and assigns, to indemnify and save harmless the said lessor against and from any and all damages which may be recovered from or against it, according to law, by reason of any failure of the said lessee, its agents, employees, successors, or assigns, to perform in all things, or its or their violation of, their duties and obligations, whereby the lessor may become liable to any party injured or sustaining injury in his or her person, reputation, or property; and the lessor, on its part, covenants to and with the lessee, that, whenever any suit or action shall be instituted against it, the said lessor, for any causes of action for which the lessee would be liable to the lessor under the terms of this lease, the lessor will immediately give due notice and tender defense of such suit or action to the lessee,—such notice to be given to the resident agent of the lessee at either of the following named places, to wit: Morehead City, New Bern, Kinston, or Goldsboro, all in the state of North Carolina." And further: "It is further agreed between the parties that all cash on hand and all bills and accounts receivable, due and payable to the lessor at the date this lease goes into effect, shall not pass by this conveyance; nor shall the lessee be liable for any debts of the said lessor at said date."

On the findings of fact and conclusions of law there was judgment for plaintiff, and defendant excepted and appealed.

Messrs. Aycock & Daniels, Simmons, Ward, & Allen, and Moore & Dunn for appellant.

Messrs. George Rountree and P. M. Pearsall for appellee.

Hoke, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The contract, by reason of which this recovery was had, and its effect and binding force as between the original parties, were construed and determined in Ives v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. 142 N. C. 131, 115 Am. St. Rep. 732, 55 S. E. 74, 9 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 188, and it was there held that the contract was for the cutting and delivery to the present plaintiff, on its right of way, a specified amount of cordwood, and was not, therefore, within the statute of frauds, requiring that contracts concerning land should be in writing. The judgment obtained by Ives in that case having been paid off and discharged, the plaintiff instituted this action to recover of the present defendant the amount of that judgment, and the cost and reasonable expense incurred in defending the suit. Such recovery is resisted on the grounds chiefly: (1) That the contract in question was not assignable. (2) That, as a matter of fact, it was not assigned. But we are of opinion that neither position can be sustained.

While at common law the rights and benefits of a contract, except in the case of the law merchant and in cases where the Crown had an interest, could not be transferred by assignment,—a doctrine which Lord Coke attributes to the “wisdom and policy of the founders of our law” in discouraging maintenance and litigation,” but which Sir Frederick Pollock tells us is better explained as “a logical consequence of the . . . [archaic] view of a contract as creating a strictly personal obligation between the creditor and the debtor” [Pollock, Contr. 4th ed. p. 206].—the rule in its strictness was soon modified in practical application by the common-law courts themselves, and more extensively by the decisions of the courts of equity, and the principles established by these cases have been sanctioned and extended by legislation until now it may be stated as a general rule, that, unless expressly prohibited by statute, or in contravention of some principle of public policy, all ordinary business contracts are assignable, and that actions for breach of same can be maintained by the assignee in his own name. The general doctrine as to the assignability of rights is very well stated in Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence (vol. 3, § 1275), as follows: “What Things in Action Are or Are Not Thus Assignable.—It becomes important, then, in fixing the scope of the equity jurisdiction, to determine what things in action may thus be legally assigned. The following criterion is universally adopted: All things in action which survive and pass to the personal representatives of a decedent creditor as assets, or continue as liabilities against the representatives of a decedent debtor, are, in general, thus assignable. All which do not thus survive, but which die with the person of the creditor or of the debtor, are not assignable. The first of these classes, according to the doctrine prevailing throughout the United States, includes all claims arising from contract, express or implied, with certain well-defined exceptions; and those arising from torts to real or personal property, and from frauds, deceits, and other wrongs whereby an estate, real or personal, is injured, diminished, or damaged. The second class embraces all torts to the person or character where the injury and damage are confined to the body and the feelings, and also those contracts, often implied, the breach of which produces only direct injury and damage, bodily or mental, to the person,—such as promises to marry, injuries done by the want of skill of a medical practitioner, contrary to his implied undertaking, and the like; and also those contracts, so long as they are executory, which stipulate solely for the special personal services, skill, or knowledge of a contracting party.” And an interesting and well-considered article by Prof. Frederic C. Woodward, on the assignability of contracts, will be found in 18 Harvard Law Rev. 23. There is an exception, as indicated in the last part of this citation from Pomeroy, to the effect that executory contracts for personal services involving a personal relation or confidence between the parties cannot be assigned. Lawson, Contr. § 355. And another, equally well established and well-nigh as broad as the rule itself, is that executory contracts imposing liabilities or duties which, in express terms or by fair intendment from the nature of the liabilities themselves, import reliance on the character, skill, business standing, or capacity of the parties, cannot be assigned by one without the assent of the other. This last exception, and the reason upon which it rests, are stated by Justice Gray, delivering the opinion in Delaware County v. Diebold Safe & Lock Co. 133 U. S. 488, 33 L. ed. 680, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 404, as follows: “A contract to pay money may doubtless be assigned by the person to whom the money is payable, if there is nothing in the terms of the contract which manifests the intention of the parties to it that it shall not be assignable. But, when rights arising out of contract are coupled with obligations to be performed by the contractor, and involve such a relation of personal confidence that it must have been intended that the rights should be exercised and the obligations performed by him alone, the contract, including both his rights and his obligations, cannot be assigned without the consent of the other party to the original contract,”—citing the case of ting timber, and, among others, one B. W. Ives, for the cutting and delivery to plaintiff of 15,000 cords of wood; and, in pursuance of said contract, the said Ives, prior to the date of said lease, had cut and delivered large quantities of said wood to plaintiff, and, at the time of the execution of said lease, the contract between plaintiff and Ives was in regular course of performance by both parties thereto. (6) That, when the defendant took over the property of the plaintiff under the said lease, all of the locomotives which it received were what are known as 'wood burners,' and it was necessary to have an adequate supply of wood as fuel for said locomotives, and that the defendant used in its railroad operations only those locomotives for several months, and used large quantities of wood as fuel, including a portion of the wood cut and delivered to plaintiff by said Ives under said contract. (7) That some months after defendant had been in the operation of said railroad under the said lease, it changed the locomotives from 'wood burners' to 'coal burners.'

It is well recognized that the object of all rules of interpretation is to arrive at the intention of the parties as expressed in the contract, and that in written contracts which permit of construction, this intent is to be gathered from a perusal of the entire instrument. In Page on Contracts, vol. 2, § 1112, we find it stated: "Since the object of construction is to ascertain the intent of the parties, the contract must be considered as an entirety. The problem is not what the separate parts mean, but what the contract means when considered as a whole." And while, in arriving at this intent, words are prima facie to be given their ordinary meaning, this rule does not obtain when the "context or admissible evidence shows that another meaning was intended." Page, § 1105. And further, in § 1106, it is said that the context and subject-matter may affect the meaning of the words of a contract, especially if, in connection with the subject-matter, the ordinary meaning of the term would give an absurd result. Again, as said by Woods, J., in Merriam v. United States, 107 U. S. 441, 27 L. ed. 533, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540: "It is a fundamental rule that, in the construction of contracts, the courts may look not only to the language employed, but to the subject-matter and surrounding circumstances, and may avail themselves of the same light which the parties possessed when the contract was made." And in Beach on Modern Law of Contracts, vol. 1, § 702, the author says: "To ascertain the intention, regard must be had to the nature of the instrument itself, the condition of the parties executing it, and the objects which they had in view. The words employed, if capable of more than one meaning, are to be given that meaning which it is apparent the parties intended them to have." Applying these accepted rules of construction, and considering the facts and attendant circumstances established by the parol testimony which was properly received for the purpose indicated (Ivey v. Bessemer City Cotton Mills, 143 N. C. 189, 55 S. E. 613; Ward v. Gay, 137 N. C. 397, 49 S. E. 884), we are of the opinion that the contract with Ives for the cutting and delivery of the cordwood came within the descriptive terms of the lease, and was assigned to the lessee as stated. It is true that the terms "demise" and "let" are usually applied to leases and conveyances of real estate, but they both contain the idea of a grant, and when, as in this instance, the parties have used them as the operative words applied to a transfer of timber rights and contracts, passing such interest for ninety-one years and more, by fair interpretation, and considering the nature of the interests, the parties could only have intended an assignment. And the term "contracts" in the descriptive words must have included this contract with Ives to cut cordwood. Referring to the parol testimony competent for the purpose stated, this and another contract with Overman, of like nature, were all the contracts of this kind they had. The terms "land, timber, and timber rights" included all the standing timber, and these two contracts to cut cordwood were the only interests on which the words could operate. The evidence, too, further shows that these two contracts were brought to the attention of the lessee before the contract was entered into; that the one here in question was being carried out by Ives at the time of the lease, and its benefits were, for a short while, accepted by the lessee. We do not attach any importance to the words "now owned by the vendors" at the conclusion of the descriptive words. The rights and benefits of a contract like this are considered as property, and the term "owned by them" is not inapt as a part of the description. Thurber v. La Roque, 105 N. C. 306, 11 S. E. 460. And so, as to the word "timber;" ordinarily this term applies to timber fitted for structural purposes; but it would be entirely improper to give it that significance when the testimony shows that the entire purpose of these holdings, and contracts concerning them, was to supply cordwood for the operating purposes of the railroad. And we think it a fair surmise, permissible in view of the facts and attendant circumstances, that, if the lessee had not decided to change its engines from wood to coal burners, this litigation would never have arisen. If we are correct in our position that the contract was assignable, and that, as a matter of fact, it was assigned, then we are of opinion that plaintiff has the undoubted right to recover of the defendant the amount of the judgment, together with the cost and reasonable attorneys' fees incurred in resisting the suit instituted by Ives. Though the lessee may have repudiated any and all obligations to Ives by reason of this contract, the lessor was not thereby relieved of the obligation to do what was reasonably required to resist recovery. Tillinghast-Styles Co. v. Providence Cotton Mills, 143 N. C. 268, 55 S. E. 621; Bowen v. King, 146 N. C. 385, 59 S. E. 1044. And defendant's obligation, we think, arises by the express covenant of the lease, and in which it is evidently contemplated that resistance to such suits should be made whenever the facts and conditions offered reasonable grounds of defense. One of the stipulations of the lease (page 47, Record) provides as follows: "And the lessee further covenants to and with the lessor, its successors, and assigns, to indemnify and save harmless the said lessor against and from any and all damages which may be recovered from or against it, according to law, by reason of any failure of the said lessee, its agents, employees, successors, or assigns to perform in all things, or its or their violation of, their duties and obligations, whereby the lessor may become liable to any party injured or sustaining injury in his or her person, reputation, or property; and the lessor, on its part, covenants to and with the lessee that, whenever any suit or action shall be instituted against it, the said lessor, for any causes of action for which the lessee would be liable to the lessor under the terms of this lease, the lessor will immediately give due notice and tender defense of such suit or action to the lessee,—such notice to be given to the resident agent of the lessee at either of the following named places, to wit: Morehead City, New Bern, Kinston, or Goldsboro, all in the state of North Carolina."

When the defendant bought and took an assignment of this contract for the delivery of so much cordwood on its right of way, and thus acquired the right to enforce performance by Ives or recover damages for its breach, it assumed the liability to pay for it when delivered. It could not take over the benefits of the contract without bearing its burdens. Defendant took the contract cum onere (Union P. R. Co. v. Douglas County Bank, 42 Neb. 469, 60 N. W. 886; Smith v. Rogers, 14 Ind. 224), and having, in the stipulations quoted, agreed to "save lessor harmless from any and all recovery that may be had against the lessor by reason of the failure of the lessee and its assigns to perform in all things their duties and obligations," the liability to repay the amount comes within the express terms of the covenant of indemnity; and, having duly notified the lessee of the institution of the Ives suit, and "tendered the defense," the reasonable expenses of such defense may also be recovered. The words of this stipulation, "to indemnify against any and all damages which may be recovered against it, according to law, by reason of its failure to perform in all things the duties and obligations, whereby the lessor may become liable," etc., are broad enough to include this obligation to Ives. And, if it were otherwise,—if, as defendant contends, the covenant was only intended to apply to the charter obligations of these companies,—the result would be the same, for while, as heretofore stated, the lessor company was not relieved of the obligation under this contract unless Ives had agreed to accept the lessee in discharge of the former, as between these parties, the lessor and lessee, the force and effect of the assignment were to establish, in any event, a primary liability in the lessee, and, under the general equitable principles of indebitatus assumpsit, the lessor, having been forced to pay, can recover of the lessee the amount of this enforced recovery. Keener, Quasi Contr. p. 396; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1108. In the citation from Keener, supra, it is said: "It may be stated as a general proposition that a plaintiff can recover against a defendant as for money paid to his use to the extent that the claim paid by the plaintiff should have been paid by the defendant." This primary liability of the assignee is well brought out in the case of Cutting Packing Co. v. Packers' Exchange, 86 Cal. 574, 10 L.R.A. 369, 21 Am. St. Rep. 63, 25 Pac. 52. In that case, speaking of the obligation of parties to an imperfect assignment as between themselves, Works, J., for the court, said: "We therefore think it plain that, as the plaintiff, as assignor, was still bound to Blackwood to pay the price stipulated in the contract, notwithstanding the assignment, and as the defendant, as assignee, assumed such obligations, the plaintiff, as between it and the defendant, stood in the nature of a surety for the latter for the performance of the obligation. If this be correct, it then follows that from the assignment an implied contract arose between the plaintiff and defendant, whereby the latter became bound to the former to receive and pay for the apricots according to the terms of the original contract." While this ruling was made to depend to some extent on a section of the California Code, the statute itself is only an embodiment of the generally accepted doctrine applicable to the facts indicated.

The assignment of the Ives contract having established, as between the parties, a primary liability on the part of the defendant lessee, the obligations of that contract would not, by any fair or correct interpretation, be included under the later stipulation of the lease, "that the lessee shall not be liable for any debt of the lessor at that date." This obligation, by the force and effect of the lease and assignment, had become the debt primarily of the lessee. And, for the same reason, the doctrine stated in general terms by Mr. Elliott, in his valuable work on Railroads, § 462, to which we were referred by counsel, "that the lessee, under an authorized lease, is not liable on the contracts of the lessor, in the absence of a stipulation to that effect," does not apply here. This is true when the lessee takes over the franchise and ordinary property of the lessor, without more, but, in the case before us, the lessee has taken the contract, thereby imposing on itself the obligation as a primary liability. And this distinguishes the present case from that of Pennsylvania Co. v. Erie & P. R. Co. 108 Pa. 621. In that decision it was held an oral agreement by the lessor company to give an annual pass in consideration of a release of a right of way through an owner's land was not binding on the lessee. The decision was put on the ground that, while the right of way, which had been obtained by the lessor company, passed under the lease, there was no connection between the two, so as to make them concurrent and dependent stipulations, and therefore, in taking over the road, including the right of way, there was not any implied agreement to make good the oral promise to give a pass. The opinion, on page 629 of 108 Pa., proceeds as follows: "But the parol agreement to provide a pass was no part of the release; the latter was an executed contract, absolute and unconditional in its terms, and a transfer of it, in the absence of an express provision to the contrary, carried with it to the transferee no legal responsibility to the former. Each, it is true, was the consideration of the other, but they were distinct and independent,—one secured a right, whilst the other evidenced a debt of the company." This decision will certainly not extend or apply to the facts presented here, where, as stated, a primary liability of the lessee company was assumed and established by taking over a contract having mutual and dependent stipulations.

The objection to the testimony of one who had been of counsel for Howland, the original lessee, as to the fact that the Ives contract was mentioned and referred to at the time of taking the lease, is without merit. This was a fact necessarily known to both parties, brought out during their negotiation concerning the lease, and could in no sense be considered a confidential communication. Weeks, Attorneys at Law, 289; Wigmore, Ev. 2311, 2312; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 67; Elliott v. Elliott, 3 Neb. (Unof.) 832, 92 N. W. 1008, citing with approval Hills v. State, 61 Neb. 598, 57 L.R.A. 155, 85 N. W. 836.

After giving the case most careful consideration, we find no error in the record, and the judgment below must be affirmed.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

A. P. WHITE, Exr., etc., of William J. Bailey, Deceased, et al.,
v.

BLAND BAILEY, Impleaded, etc., Appt.

(— W. Va. —, 64 S. E. 1019.)

Deed — rescission — covenant — non-performance by grantee.

1. Neither the reservation of a lien for maintenance and support in a deed of conveyance made in consideration of a covenant to support and maintain the grantor, nor the insertion therein of a clause giving him a right to re-enter and use and occupy the land during his life, in case of nonperform-

Headnotes by POFFENBARGER, J.

Case Note. — Does the grantor's right to rescind for breach of condition as to support descend to his heirs or representatives.

This note is confined to cases involving the right of the heirs or representatives of the grantor in a deed conditioned for the support of the grantor or some member of his family to take advantage of a breach of the condition; and cases involving the right of an assignee or of one to whom the grantor subsequently conveyed the premises to take advantage of such a breach have not been included. As to the transferability of a right of entry for breach of conditions in a deed, see note to Bouvier v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 60 L.R.A. 750. Cases have also been excluded where the heirs have sought to have a deed containing such a condition set aside merely because of fraud or undue influence.

The cases involving this question are not numerous, but are very harmonious in sustaining the views expressed in WHITE v. BAILEY.

Thus, in Parker v. Nichols, 7 Pick. 111, it was stated generally that the seisin of the grantee in a deed containing a condition for support is liable to be defeated by the covenantor or his heirs in case there should ance of the covenant, extinguishes, cuts off, or prevents right of rescission in the grantor in the event of failure of the grantee to perform the covenant.

Same — construction — purpose.

2. A deed should be so construed as to give effect to all of its parts and harmonize them; but functions and purposes not expressed nor necessarily implied should not be added after a reasonable and important function for every clause, which the parties may have had in contemplation, has been already perceived.

Same — implication.

3. Generally a provision, effect, or purpose is not read into an instrument as having been implied, unless necessity therefor is found in terms used, or purposes expressed, therein.

Same — intent.

4. The purpose and object of the parties to a deed or other contract, as shown by the instrument itself, read as a whole, at the time of its execution, in the light of the subject-matter, the situation of the parties, and the circumstances surrounding them, constitute the safest and best guide to their intention.

Same — laches — presumption of abandonment.

5. Mere delay, for a long period of time, in asserting a cause of action cognizable in equity only, working no injury or prejudice to the defendant in any way, bars relief only on the presumption of abandonment, which may be overthrown by proof of conduct showing the contrary.

be a breach of the condition. And to the same effect was the decision in Thomas v. Record, 47 Me. 500, 74 Am. Dec. 500.

So, where a deed by a parent to his child, reserving a maintenance to himself, and requiring the payment of his debts, contained a condition giving a right of re-entry to the grantor in case the grantee neglected to pay such debts, and suffered the grantor to be put to cost, trouble, or expense on account of the same, it was held, in Jackson ex dem. Reeves v. Topping, 1 Wend. 388, 19 Am. Dec. 515, that, after the decease of the grantor, the neglect to pay a debt due by him, though not presented until after his decease, worked a forfeiture of the estate; and in an action of ejectment, another of the children of the grantor, who presented such demand, was held entitled to recover his share of the estate as one of the heirs at law for a breach of the condition, although the grantor had not been put to any cost, trouble, or expense on account of the debt, that part of the condition being adjudged operative only during the life of the grantor.

Where a deed contained a condition requiring the grantee and his heirs to support an imbecile son of the grantor, and, upon the latter's death, the condition was broken, it was held, in Cross v. Carson, 8 Blatchf. 138, 44 Am. Dec. 742, that the estate was forfeited and liable to be destroyed by the entry of the grantor's heirs; but, until such entry, the grantee or his heirs would hold the land, and one who had supported the imbecile, but who was a stranger to the deed, could not, as the imbecile's creditor, take advantage of the deed.

Where a deed was conditioned on the support of the grantor and his wife, and provided that, in case of a breach of the condition, the deed should be null and void and the property should revert to the grantors, it was held, in Fluharty v. Fluharty, 54 W. Va. 407, 46 S. E. 199, that a court of equity would take jurisdiction of a bill filed by the heirs of the grantor to set aside and cancel the conveyance for failure on part of the grantees to comply with the conditions of the conveyance.

In a few cases it has been held that the heirs could not maintain the action; but 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

these cases are clearly distinguishable on the facts.

Thus, in Hensley v. Hensley, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 122, 30 S. W. 613, it was held that the heirs of a grantor in a deed conditioned on the support of himself and his wife during their lifetime, and containing a provision, in case of a breach of the condition, for the reversion of the property to the grantor and his wife, or to the survivor, did not, while the widow of the grantor survived, have any such interest in the land as would support an action to set aside the deed for breach of the condition as to the grantor, the widow being the only party in interest.

So, in Harwood v. Shoe, 141 N. C. 161, 53 S. E. 616, it was held that the heirs of a grantor in a deed containing a condition to support her were not, after having compelled the defendant to leave the premises, and, by force, prevented the grantee from carrying out his obligation to her, entitled to have the deed canceled for a breach of the condition.

Where a deed the consideration of which was in part the support and maintenance of the grantor and her son reserved the right to the grantor, in case of a failure to furnish the support, to contract with other parties for such support, it was held, in Arnett v. McGuire, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2319, 67 S. W. 60, that, if the grantor failed to exercise the rights reserved in case of a failure to support, her heirs, after her death, could not maintain an action to set aside the conveyance, as the right was strictly personal. It will be noted that, in this case, there was no provision made for a reversion, but only a mere reservation to the grantor.

As to the right to equitable relief against a forfeiture of an estate for a breach of a condition subsequent, see note to Maginnis v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. 69 L.R.A. 833.

As to necessity of entry or formal declaration of forfeiture as a condition for maintaining action other than for damages, based on breach of condition subsequent in a conveyance of freehold, see case note to Mash v. Bloom, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1188.

only an embodiment of the generally accepted doctrine applicable to the facts indicated.

The assignment of the Ives contract having established, as between the parties, a primary liability on the part of the defendant lessee, the obligations of that contract would not, by any fair or correct interpretation, be included under the later stipulation of the lease, "that the lessee shall not be liable for any debt of the lessor at that date." This obligation, by the force and effect of the lease and assignment, had become the debt primarily of the lessee. And, for the same reason, the doctrine stated in general terms by Mr. Elliott, in his valuable work on Railroads, § 462, to which we were referred by counsel, "that the lessee, under an authorized lease, is not liable on the contracts of the lessor, in the absence of a stipulation to that effect," does not apply here. This is true when the lessee takes over the franchise and ordinary property of the lessor, without more, but, in the case before us, the lessee has taken the contract, thereby imposing on itself the obligation as a primary liability. And this distinguishes the present case from that of Pennsylvania Co. v. Erie & P. R. Co. 108 Pa. 621. In that decision it was held an oral agreement by the lessor company to give an annual pass in consideration of a release of a right of way through an owner's land was not binding on the lessee. The decision was put on the ground that, while the right of way, which had been obtained by the lessor company, passed under the lease, there was no connection between the two, so as to make them concurrent and dependent stipulations, and therefore, in taking over the road, including the right of way, there was not any implied agreement to make good the oral promise to give a pass. The opinion, on page 629 of 108 Pa., proceeds as follows: "But the parol agreement to provide a pass was no part of the release; the latter was an executed contract, absolute and unconditional in its terms, and a transfer of it, in the absence of an express provision to the contrary, carried with it to the transferee no legal responsibility to the former. Each, it is true, was the consideration of the other, but they were distinct and independent,—one secured a right, whilst the other evidenced a debt of the company." This decision will certainly not extend or apply to the facts presented here, where, as stated, a primary liability of the lessee company was assumed and established by taking over a contract having mutual and dependent stipulations.

The objection to the testimony of one who had been of counsel for Howland, the original lessee, as to the fact that the Ives contract was mentioned and referred to at the time of taking the lease, is without merit. This was a fact necessarily known to both parties, brought out during their negotiation concerning the lease, and could in no sense be considered a confidential communication. Weeks, Attorneys at Law, 289; Wigmore, Ev. 2311, 2312; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 67; Elliott v. Elliott, 3 Neb. (Unof.) 832, 92 N. W. 1008, citing with approval Hills v. State, 61 Neb. 598, 57 L.R.A. 155, 85 N. W. 836.

After giving the case most careful consideration, we find no error in the record, and the judgment below must be affirmed.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

A. P. WHITE, Exr., etc., of William J. Bailey, Deceased, et al.,

v.

BLAND BAILEY, Impleaded, etc., Appt.

(— W. Va. —, 64 S. E. 1019.)

Deed — rescission — covenant — non-performance by grantee.

1. Neither the reservation of a lien for maintenance and support in a deed of conveyance made in consideration of a covenant to support and maintain the grantor, nor the insertion therein of a clause giving him a right to re-enter and use and occupy the land during his life, in case of nonperform-

Headnotes by POFFENBARGER, J.

Case Note. — Does the grantor's right to rescind for breach of condition as to support descend to his heirs or representatives.

This note is confined to cases involving the right of the heirs or representatives of the grantor in a deed conditioned for the support of the grantor or some member of his family to take advantage of a breach of the condition; and cases involving the right of an assignee or of one to whom the grantor subsequently conveyed the premises to take advantage of such a breach have not been included. As to the transferability of a right of entry for breach of conditions in a deed, see note to Bouvier v. Baltimore & N. Y. R. Co. 60 L.R.A. 750. Cases have also been excluded where the heirs have sought to have a deed containing such a condition set aside merely because of fraud or undue influence.

The cases involving this question are not numerous, but are very harmonious in sustaining the views expressed in WHITE v. BAILEY.

Thus, in Parker v. Nichols, 7 Pick. 111, it was stated generally that the seisin of the grantee in a deed containing a condition for support is liable to be defeated by the covenantor or his heirs in case there should ance of the covenant, extinguishes, cuts off, or prevents right of rescission in the grantor in the event of failure of the grantee to perform the covenant.

Same — construction — purpose.

2. A deed should be so construed as to give effect to all of its parts and harmonize them; but functions and purposes not expressed nor necessarily implied should not be added after a reasonable and important function for every clause, which the parties may have had in contemplation, has been already perceived.

Same — implication.

3. Generally a provision, effect, or purpose is not read into an instrument as having been implied, unless necessity therefor is found in terms used, or purposes expressed, therein.

be a breach of the condition. And to the same effect was the decision in Thomas v. Record, 47 Me. 500, 74 Am. Dec. 500.

So, where a deed by a parent to his child, reserving a maintenance to himself, and requiring the payment of his debts, contained a condition giving a right of re-entry to the grantor in case the grantee neglected to pay such debts, and suffered the grantor to be put to cost, trouble, or expense on account of the same, it was held, in Jackson ex dem. Reeves v. Topping, 1 Wend. 388, 19 Am. Dec. 515, that, after the decease of the grantor, the neglect to pay a debt due by him, though not presented until after his decease, worked a forfeiture of the estate; and in an action of ejectment, another of the children of the grantor, who presented such demand, was held entitled to recover his share of the estate as one of the heirs at law for a breach of the condition, although the grantor had not been put to any cost, trouble, or expense on account of the debt, that part of the condition being adjudged operative only during the life of the grantor.

Where a deed contained a condition requiring the grantee and his heirs to support an imbecile son of the grantor, and, upon the latter's death, the condition was broken, it was held, in Cross v. Carson, 8 Blatchf. 138, 44 Am. Dec. 742, that the estate was forfeited and liable to be destroyed by the entry of the grantor's heirs; but, until such entry, the grantee or his heirs would hold the land, and one who had supported the imbecile, but who was a stranger to the deed, could not, as the imbecile's creditor, take advantage of the deed.

Where a deed was conditioned on the support of the grantor and his wife, and provided that, in case of a breach of the condition, the deed should be null and void and the property should revert to the grantors, it was held, in Fluharty v. Fluharty, 54 W. Va. 407, 46 S. E. 199, that a court of equity would take jurisdiction of a bill filed by the heirs of the grantor to set aside and cancel the conveyance for failure on part of the grantees to comply with the conditions of the conveyance.

In a few cases it has been held that the heirs could not maintain the action; but 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same — intent.

4. The purpose and object of the parties to a deed or other contract, as shown by the instrument itself, read as a whole, at the time of its execution, in the light of the subject-matter, the situation of the parties, and the circumstances surrounding them, constitute the safest and best guide to their intention.

Same — laches — presumption of abandonment.

5. Mere delay, for a long period of time, in asserting a cause of action cognizable in equity only, working no injury or prejudice to the defendant in any way, bars relief only on the presumption of abandonment, which may be overthrown by proof of conduct showing the contrary.

these cases are clearly distinguishable on the facts.

Thus, in Hensley v. Hensley, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 122, 30 S. W. 613, it was held that the heirs of a grantor in a deed conditioned on the support of himself and his wife during their lifetime, and containing a provision, in case of a breach of the condition, for the reversion of the property to the grantor and his wife, or to the survivor, did not, while the widow of the grantor survived, have any such interest in the land as would support an action to set aside the deed for breach of the condition as to the grantor, the widow being the only party in interest.

So, in Harwood v. Shoe, 141 N. C. 161, 53 S. E. 616, it was held that the heirs of a grantor in a deed containing a condition to support her were not, after having compelled the defendant to leave the premises, and, by force, prevented the grantee from carrying out his obligation to her, entitled to have the deed canceled for a breach of the condition.

Where a deed the consideration of which was in part the support and maintenance of the grantor and her son reserved the right to the grantor, in case of a failure to furnish the support, to contract with other parties for such support, it was held, in Arnett v. McGuire, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2319, 67 S. W. 60, that, if the grantor failed to exercise the rights reserved in case of a failure to support, her heirs, after her death, could not maintain an action to set aside the conveyance, as the right was strictly personal. It will be noted that, in this case, there was no provision made for a reversion, but only a mere reservation to the grantor.

As to the right to equitable relief against a forfeiture of an estate for a breach of a condition subsequent, see note to Magninnis v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. 69 L.R.A. 833.

As to necessity of entry or formal declaration of forfeiture as a condition for maintaining action other than for damages, based on breach of condition subsequent in a conveyance of freehold, see case note to Mash v. Bloom, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1188.

circumstances of the parties. The grantor, seized of a good farm, conceived the idea or purpose of conveying it in fee, in consideration of support and maintenance for himself and his wife. The grantee was a nephew, not a member of his immediate family. There are no words in the deed importing a gift. Tested by its terms, it conveys the land for a valuable consideration and nothing else. The consideration was entire, going to the whole estate conveyed. It is not to be presumed he intended the grantee to have either the fee-simple title or the remainder in fee, without rendering the consideration stipulated for. The construction contended for would have made the deed operate a gift pure and simple as to all except a life estate, and the grantee need never have performed his covenant. Thus, he would have obtained by far the most valuable part of the estate without rendering anything for it. This conflicts with the purpose disclosed by the terms of the deed. It purports a sale of the entire subject, not a gift as to any of it. It bound the grantee to remove to and occupy, use, and cultivate the land, and support and maintain the grantor and his wife on it in a comfortable and careful manner. Under this construction, he need not have done so. He could have compelled the grantor to earn his own living on the land as he had previously done, looking only to him for damages for breach of the covenant, and relying upon the right to sell what had been his own land as security. If unable to earn his living, and compelled to sell the land, he might then have been under the necessity of selling his own roof from over his head. Plainly no such results were ever contemplated by either party.

It is difficult to perceive any distinction between the effect of this clause and that of the clause reserving a lien for support and maintenance, upon the right of rescission. If one is exclusive of that right, why is not the other? The reservation of the lien contemplates possible failure of the grantee to render the support stipulated for, constituting the consideration. It affords a means of relief or remedy on the happening of such a contingency. Its incorporation in the deed shows that it was foreseen by the parties. What more can be said of any other clause giving a right to re-enter and hold the land during the lifetime of the grantor? We have two decisions setting aside deeds conveying land in consideration of a covenant for support, and containing clauses of forfeiture for failure of performance. Goldsmith v. Goldsmith, 46 W. Va. 426, 33 S. E. 266, and Fluharty v. Fluharty, 54 W. Va. 407, 46 S. E. 199. Equity never enforces a forfeiture, and did not do so in those cases. It rescinded the contracts, set them aside wholly, for failure of consideration. The argument used here would have denied equity jurisdiction there, and remitted the plaintiffs to actions at law for recovery of the possession under the forfeiture clauses. Those cases are express authority for the position that the insertion of a forfeiture clause does not preclude right of rescission on the theory of substitution, prescription of an exclusive remedy, or otherwise. These decisions say, in effect, that a mere surmise or conjecture as to intent will not be read into a deed. Necessity in some sense is a prerequisite. It is the ground upon which every implication arises.

The doctrine of laches cannot be invoked. The appellant was not in any sense prejudiced by the delay, and the intent of the grantor not to abandon his right of rescission is placed beyond possibility of doubt. He retained possession until the time of his death. Two years after the deed was made, he endeavored to dispose of the property to other parties by deed and will. Mere delay for a long period of time, standing alone, does no more than raise a presumption of intent to abandon the cause of action, if it be one of exclusive equity jurisdiction. Depue v. Miller (W. Va.) 64 S. E. 740; Hale v. Hale, 62 W. Va. 609, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 221, 59 S. E. 1056; Pusey v. Gardner, 21 W. Va. 469; Cranmer v. McSwords, 24 W. Va. 594; Kerr, Fraud & Mistake, 305; Pickering v. Stamford, 2 Ves. Jr. 583; Southern R. Co. v. Gregg, 101 Va. 308, 43 S. E. 570; Bell v. Wood, 94 Va. 677, 27 S. E. 504. Even long periods of delay do not bar, if the intent to abandon is negatived by conduct of the party showing the contrary. Berry v. Wiedman, 40 W. Va. 36, 52 Am. St. Rep. 866, 20 S. E. 817; Jameson v. Rixey, 94 Va. 342, 64 Am. St. Rep. 726, 26 S. E. 861; Roberts v. King, 10 Gratt. 184.

The only other question deemed worthy of consideration is whether any person other than the grantor can prosecute this right of rescission. If the plaintiff were a mere assignee of the cause of action, his right to sue would be gravely doubtful; but he is the representative of the estate to which it belongs, and sues as such. Hence, there is no shadow of maintenance and champerty, forbidding entry to courts of equity in so many cases reported in the books. Nor is the cause of action one that dies with the person. Fluharty v. Fluharty, cited; Booth v. Fuller, 35 App. Div. 117, 54 N. Y. Supp. 670; Kent v. Davis, 89 Ga. 151, 15 S. E. 457;

Hensley v. Hensley, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 122, 30 S. W. 613.

Seeing no error in the decree, we affirm it, with costs and damages.

Brannon, J., dissenting:

I am decidedly averse to the decision in this case. I go upon the letter of the deed, the contract between the parties. The deed is an absolute grant of the fee. Its consideration, its vital purpose on the grantor's part, was support of himself and wife. To secure this, he chose his own remedies in case of the grantee's default to give such support. He chose two remedies: one, a lien, the other, a right to re-enter and hold for his life; in other words, reserved a life estate on the contingency of failure to support. His only object being support, he did not reserve right to re-enter absolutely and hold the fee, but only for his life, for that was all he asked. He did not desire to take back the fee, but only a life estate. He desired, in case of default, to choose one or the other remedy. He might not want the land, but money for support, and therefore he reserved a lien, which would hold the land liable in a court of equity for money support. On the other hand, he might prefer to hold the use of the land for life, and therefore he reserved a life estate. These remedies were regarded efficient, and as far as he went. He took no note of the fee after his death. Now, the decree takes back, not a life estate, but the fee. For what purpose? To support the grantor and wife? Not at all. They are dead. The grantors only reserved support. It cannot be rendered now, unless we can give bread to the dead. That was the grantor's sole purpose. It cannot be accomplished. The fee goes, not for Bailey's support, but to others. Were it not that the parties fixed their own remedies, I would not hold the opinion which I do hold. Bailey did not sue to enforce the lien. He did not sue to cancel in life. This court gives a remedy taking back the fee; whereas, the grantor stipulated that he could take back only a life estate. That would be sufficient for support, as he considered. I repeat that grantor Bailey inserted a clause of forfeiture for an estate for his life only, and the court gives him a clause of forfeiture forever. He reserved a life estate only, and he could not vest in Broadbudd College a fee by a later deed. In Lowman v. Crawford, 99 Va. 688, 40 S. E. 17, was a deed in consideration of support, and the court held that equity would cancel it for default, giving as its reason that there was no clause of re-entry, indicating that, where there is such a clause, that is the remedy, and that must govern.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

As I have stated, the deed passed to Bland Bailey an absolute fee. There was left in William J. Bailey nothing but the right to re-enter to execute the condition. Failure to support was a condition of forfeiture. Could a grantee of Bailey take the right to enforce this forfeiture? In Schulenberg v. Harriman, 21 Wall. 44, 22 L. ed. 551, an act of Congress enacted that certain lands unsold after ten years should revert to the government if the railroad should not be then completed. The court said that such provision was "no more than a provision that the grant shall be void if a condition subsequent be not performed. In Sheppard's Touchstone, 125, it is said: 'If the words in the close or conclusion of a condition be thus, that the land shall return to the enfeoffor, etc., or that he shall take it again and turn it to his own profit, or that the land shall revert, or that the feoffor shall recipere the land, these are, either of them, good-words in a condition to give a re-entry,—as good as the word "re-enter,"—and by these words the estate will be made conditional.' . . . And it is settled law that no one can take advantage of the nonperformance of a condition subsequent annexed to an estate in fee, but the grantor or his heirs, or the successors of the grantor, if the grant proceed from an artificial person; and, if they do not see fit to assert their right to enforce a forfeiture on that ground, the title remains unimpaired in the grantee. The authorities on this point, with hardly an exception, are all one way from the Year Books down." We find in Tiedeman on Real Property, § 207, this: "Conditions are reserved only to the grantor and his heirs. They cannot be reserved for the benefit of third persons. As a general rule, therefore, only the grantor and his heirs have a right to enter upon condition broken, and they lose their rights if they should convey away the reversion in them. The right of entry is not an estate, not even a possibility of reverter; it is simply a chose in action. And although it has been held that an express condition can be devised with the reversion, and the devisee and his heirs enter for the breach, yet such a condition cannot be aliened or assigned, and does not pass with a grant of the reversion." Hooper v. Cummings, 45 Me. 359, holds: "At common law none but the grantor, his heirs and legal representatives, can take advantage of a breach of condition subsequent. When condition is annexed to a particular estate, and afterwards, by another deed, the reversion is granted by the maker of the condition, the condition is gone." In Nicoll v. New York & E. R. Co. 12 N. Y. 121, it is held that "right of entry is not a reversion or an estate in land, and it will not pass by assignment or by a conveyance of the premises held subject to the condition. Accordingly, where the grantor of premises on condition subsequent afterwards conveyed the same to a third person, and there was subsequently a breach, held, that the latter could not divest the title of the grantee on condition." In Den ex dem. Southard v. Central R. Co. 26 N. J. L. 21, we find it held that a contingent estate or a right for a condition broken was not devisable at common law, and the condition of a deed could only be taken advantage of by a party to it or privies in right and representation, as the heirs of natural persons or the successors of artificial persons. The opinion says: "It is a rule of the common law that none may take advantage of a condition in deed but parties and privies in right and representation, as the heirs of natural persons and the successors of politic persons; and that neither privies nor assignees in law, as lords by escheat, nor in deeds, as grantees of reversions, nor privies in estate, as he to whom the remainder is limited, shall take benefit of entry or re-entry by force of a condition. Shep. Touch. 149; Co. Litt. 214a; Lit. § 347; Doctor & Student, chap. 20, 161; Perkins, § 830; 4 Kent, Com. 127; 2 Cruise, Dig. chap. 2, § 49." In Avelyn v. Ward, 1 Ves. Sr. 422, it is held that, "if there is a devise to a stranger, not the heir at law, upon a condition subsequent, the devisee over cannot take advantage of the breach, for the benefit thereof is not devisable, but must go in privy to the heir at law of the grantor, who must enter for the breach, not the devisee." 2 Washb. Real Prop. 6th ed. § 954, says: "But of conditions in deed no one but he who creates the estate, or his heirs, as, for instance, the heirs of a deviser, or, in case of a devise of the contingent right, such devisee or his heirs, can take advantage by entering and defeating the estate. It is a right which cannot be aliened or assigned or passed by a grant of the reversion at common law." As to the right of the devisee to enforce a condition, the bulk of the common law is against it; and Tiedeman, Real Prop., in note to § 207, p. 279, says that that rule is local in Massachusetts. Why not? A grantee in a deed cannot enforce the condition, and a devisee takes, not by descent, but by purchase, and is a purchaser just as a grantee unless he is heir, and then he takes, not by devise, but by descent. Therefore the Broadbuss College trustees could not enforce that condition, nor could Bailey's executors, for the will gave the executors a naked power, not coupled with title or interest, as the will only gave them power to sell.—23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

invested them with no estate. Having no right to enforce this condition, strangers to it, the trustees and executors cannot rescind in equity. Bailey did not grant the trustees right to sue for rescission, nor did his will grant it to his executors.

Some days after writing the above, I concluded to make further examination, and I have made it, with the result that I am more decided in my dissent than I was then, and I will supplement the above with some other authorities. I would recall to mind that William J. Bailey's deed to Bland Bailey passed from William J. Bailey a fee, every vestige or morsel of title, and vested the same in Bland Bailey forever, unless William J. Bailey had revested himself with title, and that could be done only by re-entry, or the enforcement of the lien and purchase of the land by William J. Bailey. No suit to enforce the lien was brought. No re-entry was made. Therefore, William J. Bailey had no estate in him when he made the deed to the trustees of Broadbuss College or when he made his will. The books teem with the doctrine that, where title has passed with condition subsequent, defeating the estate for its breach by re-entry, there must be re-entry to re-vest the estate in the grantor. In 1854 the case of Nicoll v. New York & E. R. Co. 12 N. Y. 121, was fully considered, and it was held that, "a mere failure to perform such a condition does not divest the title. There must be an entry, or what is made equivalent thereto by the statute, by the grantor or his heirs, for a breach of the condition, to forfeit the estate. This right of entry is not a reversion or an estate in land, and it will not pass by assignment or by a conveyance of the premises held subject to the condition." In 1896 the New York court had this subject again under full consideration in Upington v. Corrigan, 151 N. Y. 143, 37 L.R.A. 794, 45 N. E. 359, and it reiterated this doctrine. It was there said that no action could be maintained by the assignee to recover the land, whether the breach was before or after the assignment; and no one but the grantor or his heirs could take advantage of the forfeiture. That re-entry is required to re-vest, I add the following authorities: Bowen v. Bowen, 18 Conn. 535; Board of Education v. First Baptist Church, 63 Ill. 204; Tallman v. Snow, 35 Me. 342; Hubbard v. Hubbard, 97 Mass. 188, 93 Am. Dec. 75; Morris v. Hoyt, 11 Mich. 9; Adams v. Lindell, 72 Mo. 198; Rollins v. Riley, 44 N. H. 9; Vail v. Long Island R. Co. 106 N. Y. 283, 60 Am. Rep. 449, 12 N. E. 607; Phelps v. Chesson, 34 N. C. (12 Ired. L.) 194; Kibler v. Luther, 18 S. C. 606. Ohio Iron Co. v. Auburn Iron Co. 64 Minn. 404, 67 N. W. 221, holds that "the right of re-entry cannot exist as an independent condition, but only as an incident to an estate or interest for the protection of which it is reserved. . . . The right of re-entry is not an estate or interest in land, nor does it imply the reservation of a reversion; and, when enforced, the grantor is in through the breach of the condition, and not by reverter." The Supreme Court of the United States, in Ruch v. Rock Island, 97 U. S. 693, 24 L. ed. 1101, citing a host of authorities, held that breach of a condition subsequent, not followed by limitation over to a third person, does not, ipso facto, work forfeiture. It only vests in the grantor or his heirs a right of action which cannot be transferred to a stranger, which they cannot, without actual entry, enforce by suit for the land. We find in 5 Ballard on Real Property, note to § 270, that right of re-entry for breach of condition subsequent "is a mere right in action, and not an interest in the land; that it is not assignable nor grantable; that it descends to the grantor's heirs but does not pass by a conveyance."

It may be suggested that these principles of common law everywhere held have been changed by § 5, chap. 71, Code 1899 (Code 1906, § 3024), providing that "any interest in or claim to real estate may be disposed of by deed or will." That statute cannot apply, because it requires some estate or actual interest for the foundation of a claim to come under that statute. It was suggested to the New York court in Nicoll v. New York & E. R. Co. and Upington v. Corrigan, supra, that its statutes of wills read, "Every estate and interest in real property descendible to heirs may be devised;" and another statute said that "expectant estates are descendible, devisable, and alienable in the same manner as estates in possession;" but the court said that these statutes did not change the common-law rule in this matter. The court said that the words "expectant estates" "include every present right and interest, either vested or contingent, which may, by possibility, vest at a future day," yet they do not include the mere possibility of a reverter, which the grantor has after he has conveyed in fee on condition subsequent. He has no present right or interest whatever, and no more control over it than a son has in the estate of his father who is living." The court denied in those two cases that these New York statutes, though very broad, applied to such a case as this. If this statute could be held to change this organic principle of estates, held through the centuries, why did not that most reliable and eminent Virginia author, Prof. Minor, realize it when he laid down in 2 Minor's Institutes, 229, the 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

following statement of the law: "The mere occurrence of the event which constitutes the condition does not, at common law, of itself, defeat the estate, supposing it to be a freehold, because, as a freehold can at common law only be created by the notoriety of livery of seisin, there is needed a corresponding notoriety in order to determine it. This corresponding notoriety is the re-entry of the grantor or his heirs, supposing the grant to be a private one." Our statute (Code 1899, chap. 93, § 1 [Code 1906, § 3394]), giving the grantee of any land let to lease or the reversion the same right against the lessee by action for entry upon any covenant or promise of the lease, has no application. That is between landlord and tenant. There is no lease here. There is no reversion. Nor does § 16 have anything to do with this case. It recognizes, as common law, the rule above stated, requiring actual re-entry, and changes that by dispensing with re-entry, but only by an action of ejectment. It gives no chancery jurisdiction.

But do the principles laid down show that a suit in equity for cancellation of the deed from Bailey to Bailey cannot be maintained? They do, because they show that William J. Bailey had no estate or present interest in the land. It had all gone out of him, and he could not, therefore, pass any interest or estate to the trustees of Broadus College or to his executors. Section 16, chap. 93 (Code 1906, § 3409), will not help them to maintain ejectment, because, to do so, they must have "the right of re-entry," and we have seen that that is not conveyable or assignable; and the trustees and executors did not have a right of re-entry so as to maintain ejectment under § 16. This section does not give—create—right or title. It only gives ejectment to one who already has right on which to enter. It would give Bailey action, without entry, but not his grantees. William J. Bailey did not confer upon them by word or otherwise right to sue for cancellation. Now, I ask, how can a suit for cancellation, or any other legal proceeding, rest upon nothing,—no title, no right? How can the plaintiffs maintain any suit whatever, having no right recognized in law? How can a suit stand upon a nonentity?

I have above discussed the case on the theory that the grantor, Bailey, made no entry under the forfeiture clause, but that theory does not likely apply. He made what in law is re-entry. He was on the land when grantee Bailey left it. The latter yielded the possession to grantor Bailey. It was matter of agreement between them. The grantee Bailey agreed to and thus waived formal re-entry. The grantor

Bailey remained in possession, and assumed authority over the land,—leased it, had it cropped. Even if grantee Bailey had not consented, grantor Bailey, being in sole possession when grantee Bailey quit possession, this, in law, was the equivalent of formal re-entry. Being in possession already, he could not enter upon himself. We cited authority in Guffy v. Hukill, 34 W. Va. 56, 8 L.R.A. 759, 26 Am. St. Rep. 901, 11 S. E. 754, for the proposition that "no man can enter upon himself." 2 Washburn on Real Prop. 6th ed. § 957, says: "If the grantor is himself in possession of the premises when the breach happens, the estate reverts in him at once without any formal act on his part, and he will be presumed, after the breach, to hold for the purpose of enforcing a forfeiture, unless he waive the breach." Therefore, we must treat William J. Bailey as having himself re-entered for breach of condition, and thus reinvested himself with an estate. But what estate was he invested with by such entry? With a life estate by the letter of the deed, not with a fee. Having exercised this right of re-entry, he used the remedy given by the deed. He did this himself, and he could not have that remedy and also rescission in equity. Having himself used this remedy, that was the extent of his remedy under the letter of the deed, and he could not convey any other remedy, by rescission or otherwise, to Broadus College or others. The only estate he had by such entry was a life estate, and he could confer no greater. "The right to re-enter . . . means the recovery of possession in one way only." Michaels v. Fishel, 169 N. Y. 381, 62 N. E. 425. There it is said that, when parties have used the word "re-enter," it is presumed they used it in the common-law sense. Note 7, 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 216. It was held in that case that the statute remedy by summary proceedings could not be resorted to. I here repeat that, under the cases of Lowman v. Crawford, 99 Va. 688, 40 S. E. 17, and Guffy v. Hukill, 34 W. Va. 49, 8 L.R.A. 759, 26 Am. St. Rep. 901, 11 S. E. 754, where a deed has a clause of re-entry, that is the remedy, and there is not the superadded remedy of rescission, especially where the re-entry is, by deed, only for a life estate. The decision gives a fee; whereas, re-entry, by the letter of the deed, gives only a life estate.

Thus, whether we say that Bailey did not re-enter, or did re-enter, we reach the same conclusion; that is, that the plaintiffs have no right to maintain their suit.

Petition for rehearing denied June 9, 1909.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEALS.

OLAN G. ROOTE, Appt.,
v.

CHARLOTTE E. ROOTE.

(33 App. D. C. 398.)

Divorce — estoppel — premarital intercourse.

That a man had illicit sexual relations with his wife before marriage, and married her while she was an inmate of a house of prostitution, does not destroy his right to a divorce for her refusal to leave such house, and continued acts of adultery.

(June 1, 1909.)

A PPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Supreme Court for the District of Columbia dismissing the bill in a suit for divorce. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William J. Neale for appellant.

No appearance for appellee.

Van Orsdel, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for divorce, brought in the supreme court of the District of Columbia by appellant, Olan G. Roote, complainant below, against his wife, Charlotte E. Roote, alias Lottie E. Roote, alias Alice Williams, defendant. From a decree of the court dismissing the bill, the case comes here on appeal.

It appears that complainant and defendant were married in the city of Washington on April 30, 1907. Defendant, prior to her marriage, had been an inmate of a house of prostitution in this city. Complainant had been in the habit of visiting her at this Case Note. — Effect of complainant's knowledge of spouse's antenuptial unchastity as a bar to divorce for subsequent adultery.

In Baylis v. Baylis, L. R. 1 Prob. & Div. 395, it appeared that petitioner had married a woman of loose character, with whom he had lived for several months previously. Soon after the marriage, she was detected in adultery. The court said: "It has been sometimes supposed that, if a man chooses to marry an immodest woman, he cannot afterwards free himself from her by reason of her unchastity. But there is no such law. Whatever the previous life of a woman may have been, she binds herself by marriage to chastity, and, if she break the conditions of marriage, her husband is entitled to claim its dissolution."

The only other case found upon this question is that of Levy v. Levy, 16 Ill. App. 358, which is cited and sufficiently set out in ROOTE v. ROOTE.

place, and was fully cognizant of the kind of life she was living. The following statement of the testimony of complainant and defendant is inserted as it appears in the record: "The plaintiff, Olan G. Roote, in response to questions by the court, stated: That, at the time of his marriage to the defendant, on April 30th, 1907, he 'must have been drunk;' that after the marriage ceremony, which was performed about 4 o'clock P. M., he and his wife proceeded to a hotel on the north side of Pennsylvania avenue, N. W., in Washington city, where he engaged a room for himself and wife; that they stayed at the hotel for several days, and that he paid for his own and his wife's board and lodging there; that, on the Sunday following, he left Washington for Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where he hoped to obtain employment, and left his wife at the said hotel, and gave her money with which to support herself until he could become permanently settled, he having already paid to the hotel his wife's board in advance; that he stayed in Pittsburgh about a week, and failed to obtain employment, and then went to Baltimore, Maryland; stopped at the latter place for a few days; that, when he returned to the hotel where he had left his wife, he found that she had left, and located her in a house of prostitution on C street, N. W., Washington, District of Columbia; about four months after the marriage he rented two rooms on East Capitol street, and sent a carriage to the house of prostitution where his wife then was living, to bring her to his home, and that, when the carriage arrived, she sent him word that she had changed her mind and would not live with him; and ever since that time the defendant has not lived with the witness; the plaintiff further testified that, prior to his marriage to her, he had met her in Washington and Baltimore on different occasions, but could not remember at what places they had met; upon being further interrogated by the court, he stated that he did not know the name of the hotel on Pennsylvania avenue; that he did not know which side of the street it was on; that he did not know who kept it; that he did not know what streets it was between; that he did not know how many days he had stayed there; that he could not state how much he had paid the hotel for his own and his wife's board while there; that he did not know how much money he gave her to support herself with when he left; that he did not know how much he paid to the hotel for his wife's board in advance; that he did not know for how far in advance he paid the board, and that he could give no idea as to any of these amounts. That his wife had been an inmate of a house of prostitution before he married her; was at the time of the marriage; and that they went together from the house of prostitution to the minister's to be married. The foregoing being the substance of all the testimony given by the plaintiff in open court. The defendant, Charlotte E. Roote, in response to questions by the court, made the following statements: That she had known the plaintiff for about two years prior to their marriage; that, for a long period of time before their marriage, she was a resident of a house of prostitution; that the plaintiff visited her at said house on various occasions, had sexual intercourse with her, knew the nature of her life, both prior to and at the time of their marriage; that, at the time of their marriage, she was living at a house of prostitution located at No. 1440 C street, N. W., Washington, District of Columbia, from which house she went with plaintiff to be married, and which was known to the plaintiff at the time; that they were married about 4 o'clock in the afternoon at the residence of the officiating clergyman on D street, N. W., near Third street, in Washington, District of Columbia; that they went from there to a saloon near Tenth and E streets, where they procured a drink, and later in the evening they proceeded to the house of prostitution from which she was married, and stayed there for two days together, when the plaintiff left her; that, prior to their marriage, plaintiff said that after they were married she would have to stay in the house of prostitution until he got the money to take her out; that they never did stop at a hotel on Pennsylvania avenue or anywhere else at any time; that her husband never went to Pittsburgh, and did not give her any money when he left her; that she was not at any time living with her sister in Baltimore; that, some weeks after leaving the defendant, the plaintiff called to see her, and requested her to leave the house of prostitution, and come and live with him, but she refused; that, about four months after the marriage, her husband again called to see her, and asked her to leave this house and come with him to live, which she agreed to do, provided he would pay the woman with whom she was living the sum of $15 for board which she then owed; that the plaintiff agreed to do, and gave her the money to pay the bill; that, later, during the same day, he telephoned to her that he had secured rooms on East Capitol street, and would send a carriage for her in the evening to bring her preme court. The appeal was duly perfected, and the case filed here for review. On October 7th a plea in bar was filed in this court, asking that the case be dismissed for the reason that the ordinance under which the conviction was had was repealed by the mayor and council of the city of Wichita June 15, 1908, without any saving clause. This plea is supported by a certified copy of the repealing ordinance.

Messrs. J. A. Brubacher and James Conly, for appellant:

The court is bound to take judicial notice of the repeal of the ordinance, and should dismiss the proceeding.

Naylor v. Galesburg, 56 Ill. 285; Kansas City v. Clark, 68 Mo. 588; Barton v. Gadsden, 79 Ala. 495; 1 Beach, Pub. Corp. 526; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 245; South Carolina v. Gaillard, 101 U. S. 433, 25 L. ed. 937; Schoepfin v. Calkins, 5 Misc. 159, 25 N. Y. Supp. 696; Denning v. Yount, 62 Kan. 217, 50 L.R.A. 103, 61 Pac. 803; Maryland use of Washington County v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 3 How. 553, 11 L. ed. 722; Speckert v. Louisville, 78 Ky. 287; Tuton v. State, 4 Tex. App. 472; Monroe v. State, 8 Tex. App. 343; Spears v. Modoc County, 101 Cal. 303, 35 Pac. 869.

Mr. Fred B. Stanley, for appellee:

Superior courts do not take judicial notice of city ordinances.

12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 168; 16 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 898; Case v. Mobile, 30 Ala. 538; Garvin v. Wells, 8 Iowa, 286; Cox v.

pendency of the appeal, a judgment of reversal will be entered. Keller v. State, supra.

It was held, in Aaron v. State, 40 Ala. 307, where a conviction had been affirmed by the supreme court, but the death sentence was not executed upon the day fixed therefor, and the accused was again brought before the court, that the repeal of the act under which he was convicted subsequent to the day first set for his execution was a "legal reason" within a statute permitting the court "to inquire into the circumstances of the case, to see whether or not any legal reason existed why he should not be again sentenced to death," entitling him to be discharged.

And a saving clause in the repealing act, providing that it should not affect any pending prosecution, being of a penal nature, and requiring a strict construction, does not apply to such a case, as it is not a "pending" proceeding. Ibid.

Where, pending an appeal, and after the expiration of the time set for execution in a capital case, the law under which one was convicted was repealed, and a new act adopted which fixed the penalty for murder at imprisonment at hard labor for one year, after which the death penalty was to be inflicted when designated by the governor, it was held, in Hartung v. People, 22 N. Y. 95, to be void as to the case at bar, as an ex post facto law, by imposing a double punishment greater than that existing when the accused committed the crime of murder. However, the court, not being judicially able to see that, upon a new trial, the accused might not be convicted of manslaughter in some inferior degree, a new trial was ordered, notwithstanding it was held that there was no error on the first trial.

In discussing the extent to which changes of punishment might be applied to prior convictions, the court, in the last case, said: "It would be perfectly competent for the legislature, by a general law, to remit any separable portion of the prescribed punishment. For instance, if the punishment were fine and imprisonment, a law which should dispense with either the fine or the imprisonment, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

onment might, I think, be lawfully applied to existing offenses; and so, in my opinion, the term of imprisonment might be reduced, or the number of stripes diminished in cases punishable in that manner. Anything which, if applied to an individual sentence, would fairly fall within the idea of a remission of a part of the sentence, would not be liable to objection."

And where a conviction in a capital case was reversed and a new trial ordered, and, in the interim before the new trial was had, the penalty for the offense was reduced to imprisonment, in the absence of a saving clause, the reversal operated as a pardon of the prior offense, and the prisoner must be discharged. Wharton v. State, 5 Coldw. 1, 94 Am. Dec. 214.

But it was held, in State v. Addington, 2 Bail. L. 516, 23 Am. Dec. 150, where a capital sentence has been commuted by a conditional pardon, which the accused does not comply with, that the original judgment is in full force, and the court may fix a time for execution, notwithstanding the fact that, after the pardon, the statute under which he was convicted has been repealed, and a lesser punishment imposed for his offense, as the judgment, having been pronounced, becomes final, and the power of the court is at an end.

So, where a conviction has become final by sentence, and no appeal is pending, it is not affected by the subsequent repeal of the statute under which the conviction occurred. Re Kline, supra. The court said, not only is the case res judicata, and beyond the reach of the court, but it is in process of execution as a final judgment; and the only remedy left to the adjudged criminal, if the case calls for any remedy, is a resort to the pardoning power.

This doctrine is recognized in State v. Johnson, 12 La. 548, and People v. Hobson, infra.

And where, after one charged with the violation of a statute has pleaded nolo contendere, it is repealed, he may not be adjudged guilty and sentenced to pay a fine. Heald v. State, 36 Me. 62.

St. Louis, 11 Mo. 431; Mooney v. Kennett, 19 Mo. 551, 61 Am. Dec. 576; Wilson v. State, 16 Tex. App. 497; Chicago West. Div. R. Co. v. Klauber, 9 Ill. App. 613; Austin v. Walton, 68 Tex. 507, 5 S. W. 70; Keane v. Klausman, 21 Mo. App. 485; Shanfelter v. Baltimore, 80 Md. 483, 27 L.R.A. 648, 31 Atl. 439; St. Louis v. Liessing, 190 Mo. 464, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 918, 109 Am. St. Rep. 774, 89 S. W. 611, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 112; McPherson v. Nichols, 48 Kan. 430, 29 Pac. 679.

Graves, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Numerous assignments of error have been presented, but in argument only one has been seriously discussed. It is insisted that

Where one is convicted of a common-law offense, and, pending an appeal, a statute is passed covering the same subject, which supersedes the common-law action, it does not operate as a discharge from liability under the common-law judgment. Beard v. State, 74 Md. 130, 21 Atl. 700. It was said that there was no express repeal of the common-law penalty, and therefore the effect is different from the repeal of a statute creating an offense, which, of necessity, is obliterated by its repeal, and that that class of cases rests on an entirely different principle from the one applicable here.

But, where one has been convicted of a common-law offense, and judgment has not been pronounced prior to the adoption of an act prohibiting the prosecution by indictment therefor, the act puts an end to the prosecution. Com. v. Duane, 1 Binn. 601, 2 Am. Dec. 497.

Where a conviction in justices' court is reviewed on certiorari, the effect is simply to suspend the judgment of such court, and not to give a trial de novo, as, on affirmance, the order is that the justice's judgment shall be executed; therefore, the repeal of the statute under which conviction was obtained, during the pendency of such writ, does not put an end to the proceeding, and, upon affirmance, the judgment may be executed. People v. Hobson, 48 Mich. 27, 11 N. W. 771.

Statute permitting recovery of pecuniary penalty.

The repeal of a statute of a penal character, imposing a penalty enforceable in a civil action by the state, pending an appeal, terminates the right to recover the penalty. Pensacola & A. R. Co. v. State, 45 Fla. 86, 110 Am. St. Rep. 67, 33 So. 985; State v. Tombeckbee Bank, 11 Stew. (Ala.) 347; Smith v. State, 45 Md. 49; State v. Stone, 43 Wis. 481.

In an admiralty case, the condemnation of a vessel is not effected until final sentence of the appellate court is pronounced, the case being heard de novo; and therefore, the repeal of the law pending the determination of the appeal terminates the proceeding. 23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

the ordinance under which the appellant was prosecuted is void. The argument is based upon the rule announced by this court in the case of Re Van Tuyl, 71 Kan. 659, 81 Pac. 181. In that case it was held by this court that the purpose of the statute authorizing cities to enact ordinances for the suppression of the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, containing substantially the same provisions as the statute enacted for that purpose, was to enlarge the facilities for maintaining the general policy of the state upon that subject, and cities, in the exercise of the power conferred by this statute, must fully comply with its provisions; and an ordinance enacted under this statute, which provided for a less punishment for the offense of selling liquor than Yeaton v. United States, 5 Cranch, 281, 3 L. ed. 101; The Rachel v. United States, 6 Cranch, 329, 3 L. ed. 239.

The repeal of a statute imposing a penalty for the benefit of an individual, pending an appeal, destroys all right to the penalty. Taylor v. Rushing, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 181; Anderson v. Byrnes, 122 Cal. 272, 54 Pac. 821; Denver & R. G. Co. v. Crawford, 11 Colo. 598, 19 Pac. 673; Union P. R. Co. v. Proctor, 12 Colo. 194, 20 Pac. 615; Eaton v. Graham, 11 Ill. 619; Speckert v. Louisville, infra; Mouras v. The A. C. Brewer, 17 La. Ann. 82; Lewis v. Foster, 1 N. H. 61; Cushman v. Hale, 68 Vt. 444, 35 Atl. 382; Palmer v. Conly, 4 Denio, 377. Contra, Dunham v. Anders, 128 N. C. 207, 83 Am. St. Rep. 668, 38 S. E. 832.

Where a statute, after a nonsuit which entitled the successful party to a penalty under it, was repealed before entry and signing of the judgment, his right to the penalty was thereby destroyed. Charrington v. Meatheringham, 2 Mees. & W. 228.

Where the statute imposing a penalty is repealed pending a motion for a new trial, the effect is to avoid the judgment and all proceedings thereunder. Ball v. Tolman, 135 Cal. 375, 87 Am. St. Rep. 110, 67 Pac. 339; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Smith, 96 Ga. 569, 23 S. E. 899.

No vested right is acquired by a judgment for a penalty that cannot be devested by the repeal of the statute upon which the recovery is based. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Crawford; Union P. R. Co. v. Proctor; and Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Smith,—supra.

A statute imposing a penalty to be enforced by a civil action is not within a statute providing that the repeal of any criminal statute shall not affect the prosecution or punishment of any crime committed before such repeal. Pensacola & A. R. Co. v. State, supra.

Municipal ordinances.

The repeal of a municipal ordinance pending an appeal from a conviction thereunder in an inferior court abates the proceeding. Barton v. Gadsden, 79 Ala. 495; Spears v. Modoc County, 101 Cal. 303, 35 Pac. 869; was prescribed by the statute, was void. It was further said that a part of the object of this statute was to have the law of each municipality in the state uniform with the provisions of the statute, so that offenders would be dealt with alike throughout the state. It is urged that, according to this view, a want of uniformity in the punishment prescribed for violators of the law, because of dissimilarity in the condition of jails, would as effectively destroy the uniform operation of the law as an express difference in the punishment prescribed by ordinance. The ordinance in question, enacted in pursuance of this statute, provides for imprisonment in the city jail of Wichita. It is insisted that city jails are not uniform in quality throughout the state. Some may be reasonably comfortable, while others are so exposed to the weather or other uncomfortable and unhealthy conditions as to imperil the lives of those confined therein; that this wide difference in the character of city prisons would make the punishment very unequal if all offenders were to be committed to the city prison, and therefore any ordinance is void which so provides. The logic of this argument seems to go to the extent that incarceration in a clean, comfortable city jail would be less repressive upon offenders than in one which might be offensive and unhealthy, and would amount to a milder degree of punishment in one place than another. We do not concur in this view. The statute, by not prescribing whether the imprisonment imposed shall be in the jail of the county or in the city prison, has left the question open for the determination of the city. It is impossible to make all prisons uniform in character, or equally comfortable; any of them are bad enough. If a city has a suitable jail, this is sufficient. If not, it can arrange for the use of the county jail. The legislature can do no better than to trust the officers of the city in this respect. If a joint keeper in any city thinks the jail there worse than in other cities, the law will permit him to move his business to wherever he can find a jail that is satisfactory. We do not think the ordinance is void, and therefore the judgment of the district court is affirmed.

The plea in bar is based upon the idea that a repeal of the ordinance nullified all proceedings had thereunder, including the judgment and sentence. The decided cases are not entirely harmonious upon this subject. The great weight of authority, as we think, is to the effect that a repeal of an ordinance before judgment places all further proceedings at an end. Before judgment the prosecution is engaged in ascertaining whether the provisions of the ordinance have been violated by the defendant or not. If the ordinance is repealed before this fact has been ascertained, then the inquiry becomes immaterial and useless, as the offense no longer exists, the law authorizing the proceeding having been extinguished. If the repeal occurs after sentence has been pronounced, the court acts upon the judgment, and not upon the ordinance. By the judgment it has been judicially determined that the defendant violated the provisions of the law and incurred the liability therefor. The will of the legislative representative of the people was thereby fulfilled, and it is then beyond the reach of further legislative action. It has been said that if the legislature could nullify the judgments of courts which have been regularly pronounced under a valid law, by repealing the law, this would amount to an appeal from a judicial to a legislative tribunal, which is contrary to well-established and fundamental principles. The question is quite fully discussed in the case of Re Kline, 70 Ohio St. 25, 70 N. E. 511, which is reported in 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 219, where the cases are collected in the notes. Practically the same conclusion is reached in the case of State v. Boyle, 10 Kan. 116.

We think that, after final judgment and sentence, the repeal of the ordinance under which the conviction was had does not relieve the defendant from the sentence. In this case the ordinance was repealed nearly six months after the defendant was sentenced, and therefore cannot affect the execution of the judgment.

The plea in bar is denied.

Petition for rehearing denied December 18, 1908.

Naylor v. Galesburg, 56 Ill. 285; Day v. Clinton, 6 Ill. App. 476; Speckert v. Louisville, 78 Ky. 287; Kansas City v. Clark, 68 Mo. 588; Rutherford v. Swink, 96 Tenn. 564, 35 S. W. 554.

And this doctrine has been applied where an ordinance was repealed after one had been found guilty thereunder, but before judgment was rendered on the verdict, or a motion for a new trial overruled. Earnhart v. Lebanon, 5 Ohio C. 578.

And this doctrine has been applied where the appeal is to a court which tries the case de novo. Barton v. Gadsden; Spears v. Modoc County; Naylor v. Galesburg; Day 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. Clinton; Kansas City v. Clark; and Rutherford v. Swink,—supra.

And the repeal of the repealing ordinance during the pendency of such appeal does not thereby revive the repealed ordinance, so as to sustain the conviction. Rutherford v. Swink and Day v. Clinton, supra.

A statute which saves the proceedings where a law under which they are had is repealed does not apply to municipal ordinances, but solely to laws enacted by the general assembly. Barton v. Gadsden; Spears v. Modoc County; Rutherford v. Swink; and Kansas City v. Clark,—supra.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA, & SANTA FE RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

A. W. BROWN.

(— Kan. —, 102 Pac. 459.)

Master — discharge of employee — cause — freedom of speech.

1. A statute which requires an employer of labor, upon request of a discharged employee, to furnish in writing the true cause or reason for such discharge, is repugnant to the eleventh section of the Bill of Rights of this state, and is invalid.

Same — personal liberty.

2. The duty imposed upon employers by § 2422, Gen. Stat. 1901, is not a police regulation, and is an interference with the personal liberty guaranteed to every citizen by the state and Federal Constitutions.

(June 5, 1909.)

ERROR to the District Court for Lyon County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for an alleged violation of a statute prohibiting blacklisting. Reversed.

Statement by Smith, J.:

Brown, plaintiff below, was in the employ of defendant railway company as a brakeman. It seems that on his run the company had a detective, garbed as a tramp, who rode on the train upon which Brown was employed from Florence to Newton. This detective reported to the train master of the company that Brown had received from him 40 cents as fare for riding between those stations, and had appropriated the same to his own use. Brown was called before the train master at Newton, under whom he was employed, and informed of the charge, and told that, unless he proved his innocence, he would be discharged. Brown asserted his innocence, and offered to be sworn to his statement, but, on such investigation as the company saw fit to make, he was discharged. Thereafter, in accordance with chapter 144, p. 322, Laws 1897, which is republished as §§ 2421-2424, inclusive, Gen. Stat. 1901, he demanded of the company a statement in writing of the true cause or reason for his discharge. This was given on a blank prepared for that purpose, the reason stated being "discharged for cause," and the same was signed by a superintendent of the company. This statement or service letter was delivered to Brown, who thereafter applied for employment in two or three railroad companies and, upon request therefor, presented his service letter, and was refused employment. He also made application to various officers of the defendant company, including the general manager, Hurley, to be reinstated, but this was denied. He thereupon brought this action, and recovered judgment for $300 damages and $30 attorneys' fees. The company brings the case here.

Messrs. W. R. Smith, O. J. Wood, and Alfred A. Scott, for plaintiff in error:

The statute is unconstitutional.

Marx & H. Jeans Clothing Co. v. Watson, 168 Mo. 133, 56 L.R.A. 951, 90 Am. St. Rep. 440, 67 S. W. 391; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Jenkins, 174 Ill. 398, 62 L.R.A. 922, 66 Am. St. Rep. 296, 51 N. E. 811; 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 979; Townshend, Slander & Libel, 4th ed. 429; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Kasson, 37 N. Y. 224; Cooley, Torts, p. 328; New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Schaffer, 65 Ohio St. 414, 62 L.R.A. 931, 87 Am. St. Rep. 628, 62 N. E. 1036; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Ely, 83 Miss. 519, 35 So. 873; Lawton v Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Wallace v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co. 94 Ga. 732, 22 S. E. 579.

Messrs. Buck & Spencer and Kellogg & Kellogg, for defendant in error:

The statute is constitutional.

State ex rel. Scheffer v. Justus, 85 Minn. 279, 56 L.R.A. 757, 89 Am. St. Rep. 550, 88 N. W. 759; Hundley v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 105 Ky. 162, 63 L.R.A. 289, 88 Am. St. Rep. 298, 48 S. W. 429; Wabash R. Co. v. Young, 162 Ind. 102, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1091, 69 N. E. 1003.

Smith, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is not contended that the judgment is excessive, or that it is not supported by sufficient evidence, if the law (Laws 1897, chap. 144, p. 322; Gen. Stat. 1901, § 2422) is valid. The statute required the employer,

Headnotes by SMITH, J.

Note. — No recent cases dealing with the constitutionality of statutes requiring the employer to furnish a discharged employee with the cause of his discharge have been found, but the earlier cases found in a subject note to Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Jenkins, 174 Ill. 398, 62 L.R.A. 922, 66 Am. St. Rep. 296, 51 N. E. 811, and to Wabash R. Co. v. Young, 162 Ind. 102, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1091, 69 N. E. 1003, would 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

seem to indicate that such legislation is not looked upon with favor by the courts, and has not generally been upheld.

In Wallace v. Georgia, C. & N. R. Co. 94 Ga. 732, 22 S. E. 579, discussed in the earlier note, the statute was held a violation of that section of the Constitution granting liberty of speech, which is the main ground upon which the decision in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brown is based.

upon the request of a discharged employee, to furnish in writing the true cause or reason for such discharge. The railroad company did not meet this requirement. Its "service letter," as it is called, stated only that Brown was discharged "for cause." This is not a statement of "the cause" or of any cause.

It is also alleged that the service letter was issued in furtherance of a conspiracy existing between the defendant and other railroad companies to prevent employees of one company from getting employment in another company without the consent of the former employer. This claim is not supported by any evidence. "To constitute a conspiracy, the purpose to be effected by it must be unlawful, either in respect of its nature, or in respect of the means to be employed for its accomplishment." People v. Willis, 24 Misc. 537, 54 N. Y. Supp. 129, 133; People v. Olson, 39 N. Y. S. R. 295, 15 N. Y. Supp. 778, 779; Payne v. Western & A. R. Co. 13 Lea, 507, 521, 49 Am. Rep. 666; 2 Words & Phrases, p. 1460. There was nothing in the evidence to show that there was an unlawful purpose contemplated, or that unlawful means were to be used. All that is shown, in substance, is that, upon Brown's application to two other railroad companies, request was made for his service letter when he informed the employment agent that he had worked for the defendant company, and that, upon the presentation of his letter, employment was refused him. Probably he could have secured employment only upon the presentation of a letter recommending him as a desirable employee, and that a letter stating the true cause of his discharge, which appears to have been sufficient in the mind of the employment agent of the defendant company, to remove him from the employment, would not have availed him. If so, he was not damaged by the failure of the defendant to state the true cause of his discharge.

It may be said that, if the law is valid, the company need have no concern as to the effect of its compliance with the letter of the law. This leads us to the principal contention of the company that the law is unconstitutional; that it is repugnant to the eleventh section of the Bill of Rights of the state of Kansas, which provides that: "All persons may freely speak, write, or publish their sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of such right." It is also contended that the law is repugnant to the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides: "No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

or property without due process of law." It has been conceded in argument that, in the absence of a contract of employment for a definite term, the master may discharge the servant for any reason or for no reason, and that the servant may quit his employment for any reason or for no reason. Such action on the part of the employer or the employee, where no obligation is violated, is an essential element of liberty in action. Can one, then, be compelled to give reason or cause for an action for which he may have no specific reason or cause except perhaps a mere whim or prejudice? Again, is not the freedom to remain silent, to neither write nor publish anything on a certain subject involved as an element in the guaranteed right to "freely speak, write, or publish their sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of such right?" It would seem that the liberty to remain silent is correlative to the freedom to speak. If one must speak, he cannot be said to freely speak.

The statute in question, like its companion statute (Laws 1897, chap. 120, p. 226), was the outgrowth of the financial and business depression preceding that session of the legislature. Employers sought to recoup their loss of incomes by scaling the wages of the employees, and laborers sought to resist the decrease in wages, or to compel an advance, by uniting in labor organizations. The remarks of the late Mr. Justice Greene, in holding the provisions of chapter 120, Laws 1897, unconstitutional, are equally applicable to the provisions of the law in question. An excerpt from the opinion in Coffeyville Vitrified Brick & Tile Co. v. Perry, 69 Kan. 297, 66 L.R.A. 185, 76 Pac. 848, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 936, reads: "Before approaching a discussion of the question, let us exclude any notion that the act in question is a police regulation. It will be observed that it does not affect the public welfare, health, safety, or morals of the community, or prevent the commission of any offense or other manifest evil. Where the object of the act cannot be traced to the accomplishment of some one of these purposes, it is not a police regulation. Besides, the legislature has no power to impair or limit the reasonable and lawful exercise of a right guaranteed by the Constitution, under the guise of a police regulation. It must also be remembered that the right which the plaintiff claimed was violated did not originate in contract, but was purely statutory; therefore the determination of the question whether he has any remedy depends entirely upon the validity of this statute." When the relation of employer and employee has ceased by discharge or by quitting the employment, if the employee has been efficient and trustworthy, the employer may be under a moral obligation to benefit the employee by giving him a statement to that effect. On the other hand, if the employee has been inefficient or untrustworthy, it may be the employer's moral duty to furnish a prospective employer upon request, or perhaps without request, a statement of these facts; but the former employer is under no legal obligation so to do either to his ex-employee, or to the prospective employer. The public has no interest in the matter, and in neither case can such a duty be imposed as a police regulation, and the attempt by statute to impose the furnishing of such a statement is an interference with personal liberty.

The mere matter of time requisite to comply with the requirement of the statute is perhaps a matter of trifling consideration, yet, if the state may compel the sacrifice of a few minutes of the time of one person for another, may it not compel the sacrifice of a few days of time? Where, and upon what principal, shall the limit be placed? Again, if the employer can be compelled to state the true cause of discharge, it implies that he should state the facts as he understands them, and the facts may be in dispute and may be regarded by the employee as libelous. Litigation may result therefrom which might be a great burden to the employer, although successfully defended. We think the state can impose no such possible burden. As in many other relations in life, the employer may be silent and be safe, or, at his option, he may be courteous and fulfil his moral obligation. It is a personal privilege.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to set aside the judgment and to enter judgment for the defendant.

All the Justices concur.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

UNITED STATES NATURAL GAS COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

TALMAGE HICKS, by Next Friend.

(— Ky. —, 119 S. W. 166.)

Proximate cause—unsafe gas apparatus—ignition.

1. The negligence of a gas company in maintaining in a public highway a leaky gate valve in its main, inclosed by a cracked and decayed box, and not the act of a four-year-old boy in throwing a match through a crack into the box, is the cause of an explosion of the gas to the injury of a person in the highway.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Trial—contributory negligence—question of law.

2. The question of the contributory negligence of an eight-year-old child in playing near a leaky gate valve in a gas main cannot be decided by the court as matter of law, although he had been warned by his parents to keep away from it.

(May 19, 1909.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lawrence County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hager & Stewart, for appellant:

The negligence of the gas company, if any was shown, was not the proximate cause of the injury.

Oil Creek & A. R. Co. v. Keighron, 74 Pa. 320; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 4th ed. §§ 26, 31, 35; Chamberlain v. Oshkosh, 84 Wis. 289, 19 L.R.A. 513, 36 Am. St. Rep. 928, 54 N. W. 618; Setter v. Maysville, 114 Ky. 60, 69 S. W. 1074; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Webb, 99 Ky. 332, 35 S. W. 1117; Stone v. Boston & A. R. Co. 171 Mass. 536, 41 L.R.A. 794, 51 N. E. 1; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Long (Ky.) 117 S. W. 359.

Messrs. Pam & Hurd, also for appellant:

The negligence in constructing and maintaining the gas box, if any, was not the proximate cause of the injury.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 34; Friedman v.

Case Note.—May the intervening act of a child break the causal connection between the defendant's negligence and the injury.

This note includes cases which discuss the question whether the act or omission of a child may be an efficient, independent, intervening cause between the negligence of the defendant and the injury to the plaintiff, so as to break the causal connection and relieve the former from liability, and also cases which hold that an intervening act of a child is such a cause. Cases which merely hold that the act or omission was not an intervening cause, without reference to the age of the person responsible therefor, have not been included except so far as they have been used to illuminate the point in question.

In many cases adopting the attractive nuisance doctrine, the act of another child does intervene between the negligence and the injury; as, for example, in many of the turntable cases. It is the turning of the table by one child which immediately causes the injury to the other; but, in the great majority of the cases of this character, the court does not treat it as a case of an intervening cause, but holds that the result must

Snare & T. Co. 71 N. J. L. 605, 70 L.R.A. 147, 108 Am. St. Rep. 764, 61 Atl. 401, 2 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 497; Mangan v. Atterton, 35 L. J. Exch. N. S. 161; Stephenson v. Corder, 71 Kan. 475, 69 L.R.A. 246, 114 Am. St. Rep. 500, 80 Pac. 938; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Columbia, 65 Kan. 390, 58 L.R.A. 399, 69 Pac. 338; Allegheny v. Zimmerman, 95 Pa. 287, 40 Am. Rep. 649; Rodgers v. Missouri P. R. Co. 75 Kan. 222, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 658, 121 Am. St. Rep. 416, 88 Pac. 885, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 441; Stefanowski v. Chain Belt Co. 129 Wis. 484, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 955, 109 N. W. 532; McFarlane v. Sullivan, 99 Wis. 361, 74 N. W. 559, 75 N. W. 71; Conley v. American Exp. Co. 87 Me. 352, 32 Atl. 965; Georgetown Teleph. Co. v. McCullough, 11

Ky. 182, 111 Am. St. Rep. 294, 80 S. W. 782.

Mr. M. S. Burns, for appellee:

The negligence of the gas company was the proximate cause of the injuries.

1 Addison, Torts, 511; 1 Thomp. Neg. p. 304; Wharton, Neg. 112; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Westerfield v. Levis Bros. 43 La. Ann. 67, 9 So. 52; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Boozer, 70 Tex. 530, 8 Am. St. Rep. 615, 8 S. W. 119.

Mr. W. T. Cain also for appellee.

Nunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant prosecutes this appeal from a judgment rendered upon a verdict of a jury have been, or at least ought to have been, foreseen, and consequently the defendant is held liable under the general rule that a negligent person is responsible for all of the consequences of his negligence which ought reasonably to have been foreseen. The same is true of cases involving negligence in selling or giving to children firearms or other dangerous weapons or explosives. Most of these cases either hold that the defendant is not negligent, or hold that he is negligent and liable on the ground that he should have foreseen the consequences. Some cases of this character will be discussed later in the note.

The question in point does not seem to have been discussed in many cases. The general rule seems to be that the fact that the person responsible for the intervening act is a child does not affect the case, but, if the act itself is an intervening, efficient cause, it will break the causal connection between the defendant's negligence and the plaintiff's injury, even though it is the act of an irresponsible child.

This is expressly stated in Otten v. Cohen, 1 N. Y. Supp. 430, where, in an action based on the negligence of the defendant in the maintenance of a sign which fell and injured the plaintiff's child, it was held error to exclude evidence that the sign would not have fallen but for the interference of strangers, and the fact that the boy charged with the interference was under age was no ground for excluding the testimony.

And in Loftus v. Dehail, 133 Cal. 214, 65 Pac. 379, it was held that the act of a boy who, because of his tender years, was not legally responsible therefor, in pushing the plaintiff into an unguarded cellar, and not the negligent act of the defendant in leaving the cellar unguarded, was the proximate cause of the injury to the plaintiff resulting from the fall. The court said: "His act was the proximate cause of the injury, and while he, because of his tender years, would not be legally responsible therefor, the situation of the injured child, who shows that she appreciated the danger to which she was exposed, was no different from what would have been that of an adult who, under similar circumstances, had been thrust over 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the embankment. In this respect, also, is the case to be distinguished from the 'turntable' cases, where several children are engaged in moving the turntable, all being equally ignorant of their danger, and one is injured; for in the present instance it was not in her play, and as part of her play, and in ignorance of the danger of her play, that she was injured. She was injured by the violence of her little brother, in a matter apart."

In the following cases the act of a child was held to be an efficient, intervening act, but the fact that it was a child that was responsible for the act, as distinguished from an adult, is not discussed:

Thus, in O'Connor v. Brucker, 117 Ga. 451, 43 S. E. 731, where the door of a vacant house was left open, and a young child playing therein was injured by the fall of a window which was being raised by a companion, it was held that the owner was not liable therefor, even if it was admitted that he was negligent in leaving the door open, as the injury was caused by the independent, intervening act of the infant's playmate.

So, negligence in failing to fasten one of two guy ropes supporting hoisting shears was held, in Tutein v. Hurley, 98 Mass. 211, 93 Am. Dec. 154, not to be the proximate cause of the fall of the shears where the evidence showed that the shears would not have fallen had not some boys swung in play upon the other rope, although it also appeared that the shears would not have fallen if both ropes had been properly fastened.

And the act of boys in picking up lime negligently allowed by the defendant to escape in the street, where it was being used for building purposes, and carrying it into a vacant lot, and putting it in a can containing water, is the proximate cause of the injury to another boy due to an explosion of the lime when it came into contact with the water. Beetz v. Brooklyn, 10 App. Div. 382, 41 N. Y. Supp. 1009.

So, in Berman v. Schultz, 40 Misc. 212, 81 N. Y. Supp. 647, it was held that the act of some boys in pulling the starting lever of an electric truck was an intervenfor $250 in favor of appellee. Appellant owns and operates pipe lines for the purpose of conveying natural gas from its fields in Martin county, Kentucky, to its customers in several towns in Kentucky, West Virginia, and Ohio. One of its lines passes through a small town in Lawrence county, Kentucky, called Buchanan, and is located in, or partly in, the public road at that point. In the construction and operation of gas lines, it is necessary, for the purpose of cutting off and turning on the gas, to place at intervals along the line what is known as a "gate valve," to be used in case of a break in the line, so that the persons between the break and the fields may have use of gas uninterrupted. The pipes which convey the gas are placed at a depth of 3 or 4 feet in the ground, and, at each place where there is a gate valve, the pipe and valve are incased in a wooden box which extends to the surface of the ground, and is covered with a lid which is fastened on one side with hinges and on the other with a clasp. Appellee alleged, and introduced testimony tending to show, that appellant negligently failed to place at the point referred to in Buchanan a reasonably safe gate valve, and to keep same in a safe condition and repair; and also made like allegations, and introduced testimony to sustain them, with reference to the box which inclosed the gate valve; that, by reason of the defective gate valve, large quantities of gas were allowed to escape; and that, on account of ing cause which would relieve the owner of the truck from liability for any injuries occasioned by the truck before it was stopped, although he may have been negligent in leaving the truck in a condition to be started by the boys.

And the act of a boy in drawing back the upper edge of a large flat stone negligently left by the defendant leaning against an electric light pole, and then allowing it to fall back against the pole, and not the negligence of the defendant, is the proximate cause of an injury to the plaintiff, whose finger was crushed between the pole and the stone as it fell back. March v. Giles, 211 Pa. 17, 60 Atl. 315.

So, the act of a boy in striking defendant's horse, frightened it so that it plunged, broke the halter with which it was tied, ran away, and injured plaintiff was held, in Stephenson v. Corder, 71 Kan. 475, 60 L.R.A. 246, 114 Am. St. Rep. 500, 80 Pac. 938, to be the proximate cause of plaintiff's injury, even though the defendant may have been negligent in using a defective halter.

The invention, by a thirteen-year-old boy, of a device to protect his fingers from the discomfort of handling links upon which he is employed to operate a drill, and which become heated, and require a handling because of defects in the drilling apparatus, which invention is unprecedented in experience, and the use of which results in entangling the boy's hand with the machinery to its injury, was held, in Stefanowski v. Chain Belt Co. 129 Wis. 484, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 955, 109 N. W. 532, to be such an intervening cause as to relieve the master from liability for the defect in the drill. The court said: "Obviously here was such novelty of invention as would almost, if not quite, satisfy the most hypercritical patent examiner. Surely it cannot be that an event which never occurred before in years of human experience, and which could not happen without what amounts to a spasm of inventive genius in an inexperienced boy, is either probable or within reasonable anticipation."

In Luehrmann v. Laclede Gaslight Co. 127 Mo. App. 213, 104 S. W. 1128, it was held 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that a lighting company was not liable for injuries resulting from a shock caused by coming in contact with a wire thrown over an electric light wire by boys in play, which was pushed along the electric light wire until it reached a spot negligently permitted by the company to remain uninsulated. The wire became dangerous only a few minutes before the accident, and upon this point the court distinguished Harrison v. Kansas City Electric Light Co. 195 Mo. 606, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 293, 93 S. W. 951, in which there had been an inspection of the wire for the purpose of locating some "trouble," and the wire hanging over the defendant's wires had not been discovered; the negligence of the defendant was held to be one of the direct and proximate causes, and the act of the boys in throwing the other wire over the defendant's wires was only a concurring cause. It will be noted that this latter case is not strictly within the scope of this note, but it is cited as showing, together with the Luehrmann Case, that the mere fact that the intervening cause was the act of irresponsible children does not affect the liability of the defendant for the results of his negligence.

In some cases where the injury results to the child who is himself responsible for the intervening act, the court discusses it as a question of intervening cause, although it may be that the child could not be held guilty of contributory negligence.

Thus, in Seymour v. Union Stock Yards & Transit Co. 224 Ill. 579, 79 N. E. 950, the plaintiff was attracted by clay piled along a railroad track, and, while there at play, a train passed by, and the boy began touching, playing with, and running alongside of, the slowly-moving cars, and finally fell under them, sustaining the injury complained of. The court said: "Here an element intervened between the acts induced by the allurements of the clay pile and the injury, viz., the movements of the boy in placing himself in contact with, and in running alongside, the cars. . . . The proximate cause of the injury in this case was not the pile of clay, nor any danger with which the boy was brought in contact while gratifying any curiosity or desire excited by that pile. The injury was proximately the defective and rotten condition of the box, appellee was severely burned by the explosion of the gas. These allegations were controverted by appellant, both by pleading and proof.

The manner in which appellee received his injuries was about as follows: At the time of his injuries appellee was about eight years of age. He, with his brother, who was about four years old, and a neighbor boy, who was about seven years old, had been in the public road near this box for some time before the explosion, playing marbles. One of their marbles rolled through a crack into the box. It appears that about this time the neighbor boy went to his home, got some tar paper (it is not shown for what purpose), returned with it and some matches, placed the paper on top of the box, and set fire to it. Appellee at the time was on the box, as he stated, looking for the marble, and his four-year-old brother struck a match, threw it through a crack into the box, causing an explosion instantly, which burned appellee's face, hands, and arms, and singed his eyebrows and hair. His pain was severe. Part of the skin on his face and hands peeled off, and they became sore. Appellee's testimony also conduced to show that the leakage of gas at the valve was considerable, and had continued for several months before the explosion. One witness stated that he had trouble in getting the animal he was riding to pass by it because of the noise made by the escaping gas. The testimony further shows that the box was out of re-caused by the movements of appellant in placing his hands upon, and in running alongside, the cars."

So, in Stark v. Muskegon Traction & Lighting Co. 141 Mich. 575, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 823, 104 N. W. 1100, it was held that the act of a boy in seizing a broken telephone wire, to receive a shock, was the proximate cause of an injury resulting to him, and not the violation of the municipal ordinance as to the manner of stringing the electric light wire which charged the broken one, nor the fact that the wire was imperfectly insulated; and the fact that the boy was not aware of the risk was immaterial.

There are numerous cases holding the defendant liable for the injury, in which it appears that there was an intervening act for which a child was responsible, but, as was suggested above, the majority of these cases do not turn upon the fact that the person responsible for the intervening act was a child.

This question is expressly, determined however, in Akin v. Bradley Engineering & Mach. Co. 48 Wash. 97, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 586, 92 Pac. 903, where it was held that the use, by a boy who had found a dynamite cap, of a dry electric battery which he also found, to explode the cap, was not such an intervening cause as to relieve one guilty of negligence with respect to the care of the cap, from liability to the boy from its explosion. The court said: "An intervening cause, to be a defense in an action of this kind, must ordinarily come from an outside source, as an act of God, or of some human or other agency, independent of the ignorant and inexperienced conduct or omission of the boy in question. The ignorance and inexperience of this boy, if found as stated by his counsel, relieves him from the charge of contributory negligence. If he knew or suspected that this cartridge would explode when brought in contact with the battery, and was old enough, and intelligent or experienced sufficiently, to understand that such an explosion would probably do him serious injury, then he would not be entitled to recover. . . . We think that, when the respondent left these dangerous explosives by the wayside, where it knew that children, naturally attracted by such things, were constantly passing and repassing and playing therewith, it must be held to have known that such children were liable to cause some of said caps to explode in a manner likely to cause them serious injury; and that the explosion of such a cap by a dry battery, in the manner shown herein, did not constitute an intervening cause that should relieve respondent from liability."

The distinction between intervening acts of persons who are sui juris and acts of those who are not is suggested in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. McWhirter, 77 Tex. 356, 19 Am. St. Rep. 755, 14 S. W. 20, which is a turntable case, but the court held that, conceding that the person who put the turntable in motion was sui juris, that would not relieve the defendant from liability under the facts of the case, as it was practically admitted that the turntable was not kept in a proper condition. The court said: "If a railway company should leave its turntable unfastened, or so slightly fastened that children not sui juris can unfasten it and use it, then it should be held liable for an injury resulting from its use by such persons, for, on account of their want of intelligence, the negligence of the company must be deemed the proximate cause of the injury. If a turntable, or like dangerous machinery such as is likely to attract children to it for purposes of amusement, be left unsecured, this is negligence on the part of its owner; and if, while in this condition, it be put in motion by one of sufficient intelligence to make his act negligence, then both parties ought to be held liable for their concurrent negligence, through which one not guilty of contributory negligence is injured."

In Fishburn v. Burlington & N. W. R. Co. 127 Iowa, 483, 103 N. W. 481, the act of the plaintiff, a child six years of age, in putting back a panel of a fence negligently erected by a railroad company on the premises of the plaintiff's father, to its original position, from which it was again blown down injuring the plaintiff, was not a sufficient intervening cause which would relieve the de-pair; that it had rotted near the upper edge of the box, leaving a hole immediately under the lid; that there were holes in the lid the full length thereof, caused by decay and shrinkage of the boards. It is further shown without contradiction that the place in the road where the box was situated was frequented by the children of the village for the purpose of play, and that this was known by the agents of appellant who represented it in that section. Appellee testified that he had been told, by both his father and mother, to keep away from the box; that it was dangerous. Appellant by its testimony tended to contradict the alleged fact that the valve was defective or improperly attached to the pipe, or that gas escaped in any considerable quantities, or that the box was made insecure by reason of the defects referred to. It also conduced to show that it had used care in making inspections of the valve and box and in keeping same in repair. Notwithstanding this, it appears without contradiction that there was enough gas in the box to cause an explosion when the lighted match was thrown into it. Appellant's counsel contend that, even admitting that it was guilty of the negligence charged, it was not the proximate cause of the injuries to appellee; that his injuries were the result of an act of a third person, to wit, the four-year-old boy, who threw the match into the box, and therefore it was entitled to the peremptory instruction asked for by it; and say that, if they are incorrect in this, the proof shows without con-fundant of its negligence. This case makes a distinction between the right of a child to recover in such a case and the right of an adult, but the reason for the distinction is based upon the doctrine of contributory negligence, and not upon the theory of an independent, efficient, intervening cause. The court said: "If the owner of the garden, or any person of mature years interested therein, had discovered the prostrate panels, and restored them to their position against the wire fence, and had thereafter been injured by reason of such panels being again blown down, he might possibly be precluded from a recovery of damages on the ground of contributory negligence; but we feel very certain his act would not be such an independent, intervening cause, disconnected from the primary act complained of, and not reasonably to have been anticipated by the defendants, as would be required to relieve the latter from liability for negligence in the original construction."

A few other cases may be cited as bearing somewhat upon the general question.

Where the defendant, having had a quarrel with a boy in the street of a city, took up a pickax, and followed him into the plaintiff's store whither he had fled, and, in endeavoring to keep out of the defendant's reach, the boy ran against and knocked out the faucet from a cask of wine, by reason of which a quantity of the wine ran out and was wasted, it was held, in Vandenburgh v. Truax, 4 Denio, 464, 47 Am. Dec. 268, that the defendant was liable to the plaintiff for the injuries. This decision is referred to the doctrine of the famous "squib" case, and the fact that the intervening cause was the act of a boy has no apparent effect on the decision.

In Binford v. Johnston, 82 Ind. 426, 42 Am. Rep. 508, the court held that one who sold a child loaded cartridges, and was fully informed as to the use the boy intended to make of them, could not escape liability for resulting injuries, upon the ground that a pistol loaded with one of the cartridges was left lying where a young child could reach it. This decision is based upon the general ground that the resulting injury was one 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) which must have been, or ought to have been, anticipated. The court said: "One who deals with children must anticipate the ordinary behavior of children. The appellant was bound to take notice of the natural conduct of lads like those to whom he sold the cartridges, and it cannot be justly said that the act of the lads in carrying the pistol with them to their home, and leaving it upon the floor within reach of their brother and playmate, was an unnatural or improbable one."

In Nagel v. Missouri P. R. Co. 75 Mo. 653, 42 Am. Rep. 418, the court said: "If defendant was negligent in not securing the turntable so that it could not be revolved by children, to their injury, the mere fact that it was revolved by other children who were playing upon it at the time the child was injured will not excuse defendant, if such act ought to have been foreseen or anticipated by it. That it ought to have been foreseen, and provided against, is shown by the case of Koons v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 65 Mo. 592. Not having been provided against, the original negligence continued and remained a culpable and direct cause of the injury, and the test is to be found in the probable injurious consequences which were to be anticipated, not in the number of subsequent events and agencies which might arise."

In Edgington v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 116 Iowa, 410, 57 L.R.A. 561, 90 N. W. 95, it was held that a railroad company is not relieved from liability to a child injured by an improperly fastened turntable, by the facts that the fastenings were undone, and the table put in motion, by playmates of the injured child. This decision is also referred to the general principles of negligence, and does not turn upon the fact that the intervening act was that of a child. The court said: "In the very nature of things, a child cannot well be injured upon a turntable without the intervention of some other person to revolve the machine. . . . The company's negligence, if it exist, is in the leaving, without proper care, of a danger-tradition that appellee had been warned of the danger in playing around this box, and that he was guilty of such contributory negligence but for which he would not have received his injuries, as to entitle it to a peremptory instruction.

With reference to appellant's first contention, we are of the opinion it is without merit. The jury found under proper instructions that appellant was guilty of negligence in failing properly to construct, and keep in repair, the valve and box. It was negligent in placing this dangerous appliance within a public pass way, and of which the children of the neighborhood made a playground. It was its negligence that created the dangerous contrivance which made it possible for the irresponsible boy to do the act which produced the injury to appellee. Bransom v. Labrot, 81 Ky. 638, 50 Am. Rep. 193, was a case where the child killed was a mere licensee playing on the lot of appellees when some lumber appellees had piled there fell upon it. In that case this court quoted with approval from Addison on Torts, 511, as follows: "It appears to us that a man who leaves in a public place along which persons, and amongst them children, have to pass, a dangerous machine, which may be fatal to anyone who touches it, without any precaution against mischief, is not only guilty of negligence, but of negligence of a very reprehensible character, and not the less so because the imprudent and unauthorized act of another may be necessary to realize the mischief to which the unlawful act or negligence of the defendant has given occasion." The facts in the case at bar are stronger in favor of the person injured than they were in that case, because appellee in the case at bar was neither a trespasser nor a licensee, but was in a public highway, a place he had a right to be. In the famous Turn-Table Case (Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745) the child injured or killed was sitting upon the table when it was put in motion by another child. The court, in that case, determined that the child was entitled to recover, notwithstanding the intervening act of the third person. See also the case of Illinois C. R. Co. v. Wilson, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 684, 63 S. W. 608.

With reference to the second proposition of counsel for appellant, we are of the opinion that the court did not err in refusing the peremptory instruction. The proof shows without contradiction that appellee was only eight years old at the time he received his injuries, an age at which the legal presumption is that he was not accountable for his conduct. He did not realize, nor fully appreciate, his situation and the probable result which might come to him. The general rule is that, when a child reaches the age of fourteen years, the legal presumption is that it knows right from wrong, and it is responsible for its acts. Between that age and seven years, the legal presumption is with the child, and to make it responsible it must be shown by testimony that it had sufficient intelligence and discretion to realize and to know what would be the result of an instrument in the place where it might reasonably have expected children to resort and put it in motion to the injury of themselves or others."

In Harriman v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. 45 Ohio St. 11, 4 Am. St. Rep. 507, 12 N. E. 451, the defendant or its servants negligently placed and left on the track an unexploded signal torpedo at a place which had been used as a crossing. The torpedo was picked up by a boy nine years of age, and carried by him into a crowd of boys near by. Being ignorant of its explosive character, he attempted to open it. The torpedo exploded, and the plaintiff was injured. It was held that, under this state of facts, the negligence of the company's servants was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury, and the act of the boy in carrying the torpedo from where he found it was but a contributing condition which defendant's servants ought to have anticipated as a probable consequence of their negligent act or omission.

In connection with cases involving attractive nuisances, or negligence in regard to firearms, explosives, etc., it is suggested that it is not entirely clear that the question discussed in this note can arise in such cases independent of and unconnected with the peculiar duty chargeable to the alleged negligent person. In all negligence cases the duty, the breach of which is complained of, is always more or less a relative duty,—greater in some cases than in others. It is always "reasonable," but what is reasonable in one case may well be insufficient in another. And in respect to turntables and explosives, the duty is of such a character that, if there is a breach, it may be that the liability of the defendant is determined by the very breach itself, and is not relieved by any intervening act, especially by one of a class to which the peculiar duty is owed. At least, an impression to this effect is given by an examination of numerous cases of this character. UNITED STATES NATURAL GAS CO. v. HICKS and Akin v. Bradley Engineering & Mach. Co. supra, however, seem opposed to this view.

As to liability for injury to children from explosives left accessible to them, see case note to Akin v. Bradley Engineering & Mach. Co. 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 580.

Upon the general question of attractive nuisance, see exhaustive note to Cahill v. E. B. & A. L. Stone & Co. 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1094.

As to liability of railroad company for injury to children playing on turntables, see case note to Pannill v. Potomac, F. & P. R. Co. 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 80.

of its acts. Hence, it is always proper to submit the question of contributory negligence in such cases to the jury. In the case of Illinois C. R. Co. v. Wilson, supra, appellee was a boy nine years old. He, with several other boys of about the same age, was playing with one of appellant's hand cars. In the movement of the car, one of appellee's feet was caught in the cogs and mashed. It seems that he had been warned to keep away from it because it was dangerous; yet this court in that case said the question of his responsibility for his conduct should have been, as it was, submitted to the jury. In the case of Owensboro v. York, 117 Ky. 294, 77 S. W. 1130, appellee, a boy about twelve years of age, with some other boys about the same age, was playing on the streets of the city, and found an electric light wire hanging from some object to within his reach. The boys began to dare each other to touch it, and York said he could take hold of it if he had a board to stand on. He obtained the board, stood upon it, and took hold of the wire, and was killed instantly. He had been told by one of the other boys, who was over fourteen years of age, immediately before he took hold of it, not to do so; that it would kill him. In that case counsel for the city insisted that it was entitled to a peremptory instruction, for the reason that it was shown without contradiction that York knew the danger and voluntarily took the risk, assuming that, if he stood upon the board, the electric current would not hurt him. In discussing this question, the court quoted with approval from the case of Macon v. Paducah Street R. Co. 110 Ky. 680, 62 S. W. 496, as follows: "It was also the province of the jury to determine whether or not plaintiff had, in fact, been warned of the danger of taking hold of the wire, and, if so, whether, considering his age and capacity, and all the other circumstances as shown by the evidence at the time he did take hold of it, he was guilty of such contributory negligence as barred his right to recover in this action." In that case the boy killed was only twelve years of age.

Under these authorities and others that might be cited, we are of the opinion that the lower court committed no error prejudicial to the substantial rights of appellant. Wherefore the judgment is affirmed.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FIRST CIRCUIT.

RE ANNIE M. COLE.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF BIDDEFORD et al.

v.

ANNIE M. COLE, Petitioner.

(90 C. C. A. 50, 163 Fed. 180.)

Bankruptcy — appeal — record.

1. Upon a petition to revise an order in bankruptcy under the act of 1898, the court may search the opinion filed by the district court, not to eke out insufficient findings of fact, but for the purpose of ascertaining the issues which that court considered.

Same — review.

2. A petition for review is the proper method of taking to the circuit court of appeals the question of the correctness of an order committing a bankrupt for failure to Case Note. — Failure or refusal of a bankrupt or person having money or property belonging to a bankrupt to deliver it to trustee, as a contempt of court.

In general.

As a court of bankruptcy is empowered by § 2, ¶ 13, and § 41 of the act of 1898, to enforce obedience to its own orders or those of its officers by fine or imprisonment, one who fails or refuses to turn over to his trustee money or property belonging to a bankrupt's estate may be committed for contempt. Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 46 L. ed. 405, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269, affirming 104 Fed. 530, and reversing 44 C. C. A. 620, 105 Fed. 581; Re Lans, 85 C. C. A. 432, 158 Fed. 610; Samel v. Dodd, 73 C. C. A. 254, 142 Fed. 68; Re Levy, 73 C. C. A. 558, 142 Fed. 442; Schweer v. Brown, 64 C. C. A. 574, 130 Fed. 328; Re Schlesinger, 42 C. C. A. 207, 102 Fed. 117, affirming 97 Fed. 930; Re Purvine, 37 C. C. A. 446, 96 Fed. 192; Re Eddleman, 154 Fed. 160; Re Walder, 142 Fed. 784; Re Alphin & L. Cotton Co. 134 Fed. 477; Re Goldfarb Bros. 131 Fed. 643; Re Felson, 124 Fed. 288; Re Gerstel, 123 Fed. 166; Re Shachter, 119 Fed. 1010; Re Wilson, 116 Fed. 419; Re Taylor, 114 Fed. 607; Re De Gottardi, 114 Fed. 328; Re Levin, 113 Fed. 498; Re Arnett, 112 Fed. 770; Re Anderson, 103 Fed. 854; Ripon Knitting Works v. Schreiber, 101 Fed. 810; Re Deuell, 100 Fed. 633; Re McCormick, 97 Fed. 566; Re Tudor, 96 Fed. 942; Re Speyer, 42 How. Pr. 397, Fed. Cas. No. 13,239; Re Dresser, Fed. Cas. No. 4,077.

The power of the court to punish the violation of such an order as a contempt is no

M. Cole, and what facts, may the district court, or may this court, properly consider with reference to the subject-matter of the pending petition?

Second, can the order brought in question by the pending petition be regarded as valid, or be enforced, unless it is shown that the petitioner, Mrs. Cole, had, at the date of said order, funds, or could then have obtained funds, from which the payment of the amount ordered to be paid by her could then have been made or in any way secured?

Third, what are the facts, pro and con, bearing on all the topics involved in the last preceding question?

Ordered that the case be reargued at the January, 1908, session on the questions propounded by the per curiam passed down this day, and that printed briefs in reference thereto be filed on or before December 21, 1907.

The reargument having been had, Putnam, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court on February 5, 1908:

This petition relates to the same proceeding as that out of which our opinion arose which we passed down on February 16, 1906 (75 C. C. A. 330, 144 Fed. 392); namely, an order of the district court of March 4, 1905, that the bankrupt pay certain moneys to her trustee in bankruptcy. As a sequence thereto, the district court, on November 6, 1906, after suitable intervening proceedings, entered an order that Mrs. Cole stand committed to the marshal of the district, to be Gerstel; Re Shachter; Re Anderson; and Ripon Knitting Works v. Schreiber,—supra.

An order requiring a bankrupt to turn over to a trustee money, the noncompliance with which may be punished by contempt, should not be made, where he denies having the money, and the evidence that he has it is only inferential. Re Friedman, 2 Am. Bankr. Rep. 301.

Where money or property is traced into a bankrupt's hands, the burden rests upon him of making some reasonable explanation of what has become of it, or, at least, that it has ceased to be in his possession and control at the time an order to deliver it to his trustee is made; and a failure to make such explanation when the facts are fresh in his mind justifies an order for contempt. Re Alphin & L. Cotton Co. supra.

Effect of inability to comply with order.

The power to commit for contempt in order to compel a bankrupt to turn over money or property to his trustee should not be exercised where there is a reasonable doubt of his ability, by reason of not having the money or property, to comply with the order. Boyd v. Glucklich, supra; Re Taylor, 114 Fed. 607; Re Friedman, supra; Re Greenberg, 5 Am. Bankr. Rep. 840, 106 Fed. 496; Re Davison, 143 Fed. 673; Re Sax and Re Goldfarb Bros. supra.

And this doctrine will be applied where he has placed money out of his possession or control, no matter how foolishly or wrongfully. Re Goldfarb Bros. supra.

And it would be an abuse of power to commit a married woman for contempt for neglect to comply with an order to turn over money to a trustee, where her ability to comply with the order is doubtful, upon the conjecture that her husband or other person, actual principals in a fraud, may pay the amount for her. Re Davison, supra.

And this doctrine has been applied where an assignee for creditors has paid out money of the assignor for counsel fees, and also spent money retained by him as compensation prior to adjudication of bankruptcy, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

and which he is financially unable to repay, as contempt proceedings cannot be used to compel the performance of something the respondent is unable to perform, even though due to his own fault, or misconception of his legal rights. Sinsheimer v. Simonson, 47 C. C. A. 51, 107 Fed. 898.

Where a payment by a debtor to a bankrupt after the filing of a petition in bankruptcy is invalid as against the assignee, the latter thereby loses nothing, and the bankrupt will not be adjudged guilty of contempt for a failure to deliver to the assignee such portion thereof as he has spent. Re Hayden, Fed. Cas. No. 6,257.

It is not a contempt for a bankrupt to fail to turn over to a trustee, pursuant to order of a referee, money which he had paid to his creditor prior to commencement of an involuntary proceeding. Re Kane, 125 Fed. 984.

So, in Re Greenberg, supra, the court refused to compel a bankrupt to account for such an amount of money as it doubted he had in his possession or under his control at the time the order was applied for, and which had been dissipated through the fraud, profligacy, and waste of his son.

So, one who has been imprisoned one month for disobedience of an order to deliver money to his trustee will be discharged, where it is not certainly known he has the money he is called upon to surrender. Re Taylor, supra.

So, a bankrupt cannot be committed for contempt where he is unable to deliver to his trustee money he collected from his debtor after he had knowledge of the bankruptcy proceedings, and which has passed beyond his control, into the hands of others. The court said that, in the absence of fraud or concealment, the bankruptcy court can only order the delivery of such property as the bankrupt is physically able to deliver up by reason of having the same in his possession or control; and if it appears that he is not physically able to do this, proceedings for contempt by fine and imprisonment would be inconsistent with the principles of individual liberty. American Trust Co. v. Wallis, 61 C. C. A. 342, 126 Fed. 464.

incarcerated until she delivered to her trustee in bankruptcy $2,425, or until otherwise discharged. The petition before us was filed under the statutes in bankruptcy to revise this order of committal in matters of law. The order was in pursuance of a petition filed by the trustee in bankruptcy on June 4, 1906, setting out that Mrs. Cole had not paid over the moneys required by the district court, as we will more fully show. The propositions of the present petitioner which we need to consider are: First, that the district court admitted proofs which it should not have admitted; and, second, that there were not proofs to justify the district court in making the order of committal.

If Mrs. Cole, who had been adjudged a bankrupt by the district court, has wilfully disregarded its order in reference to the payment of money to the trustee, she might be proceeded against under the general powers vested in superior courts of judicature with reference to contempt, or, also, under the 2d section of the act of July 1, 1898, chap. 541, 30 Stat. at L. 545, 546, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3420, which authorizes the district courts in bankruptcy to "enforce obedience by bankrupts, officers, and other persons, to all lawful orders, by fine or imprisonment, or fine and imprisonment." If the proceeding in the district court was taken by virtue of the specific provisions of the statute, it would be the natural presumption that the proper method of reaching us would be that which was in

It was said in Re Adler, 129 Fed. 502, that the remedy under discussion applies only to a tangible fund which can be designated and traced into the possession of a bankrupt, and on which the court can lay its hands, and not to some intangible money supposed to be kept in his possession, which he can be forced to pay by raising or procuring the money to meet the order of the court. No doubt many bankrupts could be made, under coercion of imprisonment, to find the money with which to meet such a demand, and, unless the court can see that the bankrupt is in possession of the money, and withholding it wrongfully, he should not be committed for contempt; still, a bankrupt will be committed for contempt where he has concealed a large portion of his assets, until their value is paid to the trustee.

An order requiring a bankrupt to turn over to the trustee assets found to have been in his possession at the date of bankruptcy is not warranted, when made seven years thereafter, in the absence of proof of his present ability to comply with the order. Re Ruos, 164 Fed. 749.

When property is in bankrupt's possession.

Where property or money is traced to a bankrupt's possession shortly before or at the time of the adjudication of bankruptcy, which he fails or refuses satisfactorily to account for after an opportunity to do so, or his account thereof is improbable and unconvincing, he may be committed for contempt for his failure or refusal to obey an order to turn over the money or the property, or its value, to his trustee. Re Lasky, 163 Fed. 99; Re Shachter, 119 Fed. 1010; Re Wilson, 116 Fed. 419; Re Levy, 73 C. C. A. 558, 142 Fed. 442; Re Rogowski, 166 Fed. 165; Re Felson, 124 Fed. 288; Re Gerstel, 123 Fed. 166; Re Sax, 141 Fed. 223; Re Alphin & L. Cotton Co. 134 Fed. 477; Re Kane, supra; Ripon Knitting Works v. Schreiber, 101 Fed. 810; Re Schulman, 167 Fed. 237; Re Salkey, 6 Biss. 269, Fed. Cas. No. 12,253.

And such an order is justified where the amount of stock a bankrupt had on hand shortly before adjudication clearly appears, and there is also evidence of the amount of goods sold for cash, which was not deposited in bank, and how much was paid out, or, if not paid out, it appears with some degree of certainty how much was retained, as such facts would constitute data upon which to base some fair calculation of the amount in the bankrupt's hands which he should turn over to his trustee. Re Goldfarb Bros. 131 Fed. 643.

In Re Gerstel, supra, it was said that where it is shown that property came into the hands of the bankrupt shortly before the adjudication, and neither the property nor the proceeds are accounted for in the schedule, and the bankrupt, on answer or by examination under oath, fails to make any credible explanation as to what became of it, the court is authorized to consider the property or its proceeds as still in his possession or under his control, and may require it to be produced and delivered to the trustee, and may punish the failure to obey such order by imprisonment for contempt.

Where the books of a bankrupt disclose a large amount of merchandise received within a few months prior to bankruptcy, which is unaccounted for after the bankrupt has been given an opportunity to explain, but failed to appear and testify, an order requiring him to deliver such goods or their proceeds to the trustee, or be imprisoned for contempt on a failure to comply with the order, is justified. Re Levy, supra.

But a bankrupt's books, standing alone, would not be sufficient to justify such order. Ibid.

However, where it appears that a bankrupt, shortly before his failure, has on hand a large stock of merchandise, and, when bankruptcy proceedings are instituted, but a small amount of goods is found, and the stock has been depleted to an extent that could not have occurred in the ordinary course of business, and there are circumstances indicating that goods have been purposely and fraudulently removed so as to prevent their coming into the hands of the trustee, the court may require the bankrupt fact availed of; namely, a petition for revision, under the same act. If, on the other hand, the proceeding in the district court had relation to the general powers vested in superior courts of judicature with reference to contempts, the question would at once arise whether the present petitioner, Mrs. Cole, should not have come to us by writ of error. The parties themselves have made no issue as to either of these topics; but, as this application is without precedent in this court, and without authoritative exposition in all respects in the Supreme Court or in other circuit courts of appeals, and as the extent to which the conclusions in the district court may be reviewed may depend on the nature of the proceeding there, as also on the method taken to obtain a review thereof by this court, it is advisable that we should explain the position further.

When a case comes up on writ of error with reference to a jury-waived trial of a civil case, or to a proceeding for contempt according to the ordinary course of the common law, the then method of raising questions which do not appear on the face of the pleadings would, if applied to this record, very much limit the scope of our examination with regard to the merits. If, on the other hand, the proceeding in this case was that especially authorized by the 2d section of the act of July 1, 1898, so that a petition to revise would presumably be the ordinary way of reaching us, and if, on any petition to revise like that before us, we are not restricted as we would be on a writ of er-to produce the goods or give some reasonable explanation of their disappearance, and, on his failure to do so, may hold him guilty of contempt. Re Rogowski, supra.

It has been held that a contempt order for a failure to turn over money or property to a trustee is justified where it clearly appears that a bankrupt has money or goods in his possession (Re Sax, supra); or has sold a large quantity of merchandise before bankruptcy, and is unable to account for the proceeds (Schweer v. Brown, 64 C. C. A. 574, 130 Fed. 328; Re Kempner, Fed. Cas. No. 7,689); or where a bankrupt's account of the loss of property by theft, in the light of surrounding circumstances, is inconsistent and improbable (Re De Gottardi, 114 Fed. 328; Re Levin, 113 Fed. 498; Re McCormick, 97 Fed. 566); or where his explanation as to the theft is inconsistent with his statement to the police and his creditors, made immediately thereafter (Re Levin, supra); or where the bankrupt's unsubstantiated story as to the loss of money shortly after the adjudication in bankruptcy, as well as his conduct in relation thereto, does not convince the referee of its truth (Re Speyer, 42 How. Pr. 397, Fed. Cas. No. 13,239); or where he has concealed a large portion of his assets (Re Greenberg, supra); or where a bankrupt says he has no explanation for the disappearance of money or property (Re Salkey, supra; Re Deuell, 100 Fed. 633); and has not kept any books or account of goods sold, nor deposited any money in bank, but claims that no merchandise has been spirited away (Re Deuell, supra).

And a bankrupt will be charged with funds lost in dissipation and gambling (Re Wilson, supra); or which he has spent in a debauch, or in taking a long journey in search of employment (Re Tudor, 100 Fed. 796).

It is not sufficient, in order to avoid commitment for contempt, to show that money traced into a bankrupt's hands was given by him to his wife, who had spent it for the benefit of himself and family. Re Kane, 125 Fed. 984.

But it was held, in Re Tudor, supra, that 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a bankrupt should be allowed to deduct from the sum he will be required to deliver to his trustee what he has spent for his reasonable and economical living expenses.

An order committing a bankrupt, a married woman, for contempt, is justified, where she claims to have permitted her husband to sell her homestead and pay his debts with the proceeds, and her testimony touching the disposal of the money is indefinite, unsatisfactory, and inconsistent, and her husband does not testify at all. Moody v. Cole, 148 Fed. 295.

The refusal of a bankrupt to pay to his trustee money received by him shortly before the institution of the bankruptcy proceedings, upon the sale of certain real estate, which he delivered to his wife upon the claim that the property belonged to her, as she had furnished the purchase money, will justify a contempt order. Re Eddleman, 154 Fed. 160.

But he will not be required to turn over that portion of the money his wife has paid to her creditors, as the latter have thus acquired an adverse claim thereto, and the bankrupt cannot be punished for not turning over money claimed adversely by one having possession thereof. Ibid.

It cannot be found beyond a reasonable doubt that a bankrupt improperly disposed of goods on the eve of bankruptcy, sufficient to justify an order requiring him to turn over goods or proceeds of sale, where his uncorroborated testimony is that he sent goods to a brother to sell, and the latter retained a portion of the proceeds in liquidation of an old debt, paid a portion to a sister of the bankrupt for the same purpose, took up a note of the bankrupt at a bank, which had been indorsed by relatives, and paid out the balance in expenses. Re Walder, 142 Fed. 784.

A bankrupt will not be committed for contempt for a failure to deliver to the trustee money not accounted for, the loss of which may be attributed to loose business methods. Re Anderson, 103 Fed. 854.

It was held in Samel v. Dodd, 73 C. C. A. 254, 142 Fed. 68, that the bankruptcy court did not have jurisdiction to require a bankror, our outlook is much broadened, and we are authorized to search the opinions filed in the district court, although not a part of the record in the strict sense of the word, for the purpose of ascertaining at large what were in fact the issues which that court considered. While such opinions cannot be referred to for the purpose of eking out findings of fact when those findings are required to be of record, yet they are constantly made use of when (as, for example, on a writ of error from the Supreme Court to a state tribunal) the appellate tribunal is at liberty to ascertain at large the propositions of the common or statute or constitutional law on which the case proceeded. This a clear rule, a very late application of which is in Burt v. Smith, 203 U. S. 129, 134, 51 L. ed. 121, 126, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 37. As the parties have freely discussed the case at large without objection on either side, we feel safe to adopt the broader view, and it is our present opinion that it is our right so to do. We are supported in this by Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 46 L. ed. 405, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 209. On the whole, we accept for this case the position that the proceeding in the district court was by virtue of the statutory provision expressly authorizing it to compel obedience to its orders; that the way for any party dissatisfied with the conclusion of that court to reach us was by a petition for review; that, on such petition, we can revise any question of law as to which we may justly infer that the district court reached a conclusion, rupt, under penalty of imprisonment for contempt, to turn over to the trustee the value of goods and merchandise found by the referee not to have been accounted for, as he should be required to turn over the specific property. As such an order, the court said, dangerously approaches, if it does not overstep, the line of imprisonment for debt.

And it is no excuse in a proceeding for contempt for a refusal to turn over merchandise shown to have been in the bankrupt's possession, after a full opportunity to account for its absence, that the referee's order did not specify the particular money or property to be turned over. Ripon Knitting Works v. Schreiber, 101 Fed. 810.

When property is in possession of or claimed by third person.

A bankrupt's wife may be committed for contempt for a refusal to obey an order to turn over to his trustee money and property delivered by the bankrupt to her just prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, to which she does not assert ownership, but is advised by counsel not to deliver up unless ordered by the court. Re Moore, 104 Fed. 869.

So, the refusal of an agent of a bankrupt to comply with an order of the referee to deliver assets of the former to the trustee in bankruptcy may be punished by the court upon recommendation of the referee, as a contempt. Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. 1, 46 L. ed. 405, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269, affirming 104 Fed. 530, and reversing 44 C. C. A. 620, 105 Fed. 581.

So, a judgment creditor of a bankrupt may be punished for contempt for disobeying an order to turn over to a trustee the proceeds of a void attachment of a bankrupt's property, paid to him after adjudication of bankruptcy. Re Graessler & Reichwald, 83 C. C. A. 304, 154 Fed. 478.

So, one who claims ownership to certain property in the hands of a bankrupt as bailee, by petitioning for involuntary proceedings, and asserting himself a creditor, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

whose claim of ownership is disallowed and the value of the property, which has been delivered to him, found, may be punished for contempt in not returning the property or its value to the trustee, the question of ownership and value being res judicata. Re Strobel, 163 Fed. 380.

The treasurer of a bankrupt corporation will not be committed for contempt for refusal to deliver to the trustee money in his possession belonging to the bankrupt, where he is under an indictment in a state court for embezzlement thereof. Re Hooks Smelting Co. 146 Fed. 336.

When the person having possession of money or property claims it adversely to the bankrupt, he cannot be required to turn it over to a trustee, or be committed for contempt upon refusing to obey such order. Re Eddleman, supra; Re Mayer, 98 Fed. 839. See also Mueller v. Nugent, supra, where this doctrine is discussed.

When property is in custody of the law.

It was held, in Carling v. Seymour Lumber Co. 51 C. C. A. 1, 113 Fed. 483, reversing 112 Fed. 323, that a bankruptcy court should not make an order requiring a receiver appointed by a state court, on pain of punishment for contempt, to turn over to a trustee assets of a bankrupt in his possession, as comity requires, as a general rule, that an application should be first made to the state court for an order for the possession of such assets.

Where an assignee for creditors is administering the estate of an insolvent when ousted by bankruptcy proceedings, he should not be required to turn over to a trustee in bankruptcy the amount of money of the insolvent which he has paid out for counsel fees before bankruptcy proceedings, and that which he has retained as commission, and has spent, when it appears that he has no means or property of his own, and is unable to borrow money to repay it; as the court cannot, by contempt proceedings, undertake to compel the performance of something the respondent cannot perform, even through his own fault, where it arose through mis-whether formally expressed or not, and whether or not formally presented; and that, to that end, we may search not only the record in that court, but also its opinions.

As said in the opinion passed down by us on February 16, 1906, already referred to, the district court proceeded originally by a consolidated order, directing the bankrupt to turn over to the trustee the money in controversy, and also directing that, in default thereof, she should be committed. There is no doubt that that order was supported by some precedents; but it seemed to us not consonant with the rules intended for the protection of personal liberty, which rules ought to be applied with special strictness where the imprisonment of a citizen is, in any extent, absolutely at the control of a single judge, as is the fact here. Therefore we followed the practice in this particular shown by Mueller v. Nugent, 184 U. S. at page 5, 46 L. ed. 407, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269. The proceedings there were more summary than before us; but the clear essentials were preserved as we directed them to be preserved here, in that the order to turn over the property was entered, notice thereof given to the individual against whom it ran, with an interval of time to comply therewith, and a refusal so to do, before any order was issued as against one in contempt. The fact that we thus, in a certain sense, dissevered the proceedings, gave rise to the contention now made as to what proofs were properly cognizable by the district court on the precise issue now before us. In our opinion we said that "a proceeding for contempt is of a different character from one resulting in a mere order for the payment of money to a trustee in bankruptcy."

We also added: "It is claimed that it is criminal in its nature, while an order for the mere payment of money is purely civil; that it would be justified only by the proofs and the amount of proofs requisite on ordinary criminal issues; and that it is in effect an independent proceeding which can be initiated only after an order for payment of money has been disobeyed, and on an order to show cause, or some other new notice, given to the person alleged to be in default."

On the present proceeding, the petitioner, Mrs. Cole, seems to assume that we ruled all that we said was claimed by her. We were so far therefrom that we added that it was sufficient then to say that the record did not show that she had had any day in court on the question of contempt. The sum and substance of all we authoritatively ruled was that the record should show that an issue had been made in some way on the question of contempt, and that the person adjudged guilty thereof had had an opportunity to be heard in reference thereto.

It now becomes necessary for us to take a definite position with regard to some of the propositions which we then left open, because now it is apparently claimed by the petitioner that the proceeding against her for contempt is not merely criminal in its character, but is governed by the strict rules of ordinary criminal proceedings, even apparently to such an extent that the allegations of the petition, that she be incarcerated for disobedience of an order for payment of money, must be supported by new proofs covering all the issues made thereby, and by witnesses confronting her in accordance with the 6th Amendment to the Constitution. The precise point is that the learned judge of the district court, in connection with the petition for committal, not only heard witnesses produced before him after the filing thereof, including Mrs. Cole, but also, to a certain extent, improperly examined the prior proceedings. The details we will come to hereafter. At the outset we may say it is enough for us to show generally on this point that, while the petition that Mrs. Cole should be incarcerated for contempt may well have raised, to a certain extent, a new issue, as, for example, the specific issue suggested by our previous opinion, whether or not there was in fact conception of his legal rights. Sinsheimer v. Simonson, 47 C. C. A. 51, 107 Fed. 898.

One holding property of a bankrupt under insolvency proceedings in a state court, which are suspended by the passage of the national bankruptcy act, may be punished for contempt for a refusal to turn it over to the marshal. Re Macon Sash, Door, & Lumber Co. 7 Am. Bankr. Rep. 66.

As a bankruptcy court has sole jurisdiction to determine a claim of a vendor to property sold to a bankrupt, it is contempt for the attorneys of the vendor, as well as an officer who seized the property on a writ of replevin, to take it from the sheriff, who has seized it on attachment against the bankrupt prior to the filing of a petition, but who was notified by the referee, after the adjudication of bankruptcy, to hold it for the trustee. Re Walsh Bros. 159 Fed. 560.

But an officer who has seized the property of a bankrupt by legal process prior to an adjudication of bankruptcy, and who, in good faith, upon the advice of counsel, refuses to turn it over to a trustee, will not be punished for contempt, where it appears that the property seized is not worth much more than the lien debt, and that no advantage will accrue to the creditors by requiring him to surrender it to the trustee. Orr v. Tribble, 19 Am. Bankr. Rep. 849.

an inability to obtain possession of the funds in question, which it appears from the record were actually in the hands of her husband, and while also it seems to be conceded on all sides that, before committing for contempt, the court should be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of a wilful refusal or a wilful act on the part of the person proceeded against, yet neither the 6th Amendment to the Constitution, nor any principle shadowed out by it, has strict application to proceedings of the character before us. Eilenbecker v. District Ct. 134 U. S. 31, 39, 33 L. ed. 801, 804, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 424; Re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 596, 39 L. ed. 1092, 1106, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900.

The general rule as to the effect of the first ten Amendments is distinctly stated in Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U. S. 275, 281, 41 L. ed. 715, 717, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 326, 329, as follows: "The law is perfectly well settled that the first ten Amendments to the Constitution, commonly known as the Bill of Rights, were not intended to lay down any novel principles of government, but simply to embody certain guaranties and immunities which we had inherited from our English ancestors, and which had, from time immemorial, been subject to certain well-recognized exceptions arising from the necessities of the case. In incorporating these principles into the fundamental law, there was no intention of disregarding the exceptions, which continued to be recognized as if they had been formally expressed."

It is settled that the general rule thus stated in Robertson v. Baldwin applies to proceedings of the character before us. By necessity such proceedings are sometimes summary, and therefore informal in their character. Eilenbecker v. District Ct. 134 U. S. 31, 38, 33 L. ed. 801, 804, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 424. In Re Savin, 131 U. S. 267, 278, 33 L. ed. 150, 153, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 699, it appeared that objections were made because the court which entered the judgment as for contempt did not require service of interrogatories, according to the older practice. The opinion said that the court could have adopted that mode in trying the question of contempt, but it was not bound to do so. It added: "It could, in its discretion, adopt such mode of determining that question as it deemed proper, provided due regard was had to the essential rules that obtain in the trial of matters of contempt."

The court declared that such proceedings were analogous to proceedings for the removal of an attorney, according to what was done in Randall v. Brigham, 7 Wall. 523, 19 L. ed. 285. In that case there was neither any formal accusation nor formal citation; but it was plain that the attorney understood the nature of the charge against him, and had been afforded ample opportunity to explain the transaction and vindicate his conduct. The opinion in Randall v. Brigham, where it is quoted in Re Savin, continued as follows: "It is not necessary that proceedings against attorneys for malpractice, or any unprofessional conduct, should be founded upon formal allegations against them. Such proceedings are often instituted upon information developed in the progress of a cause, or from what the court learns of the conduct of the attorney from its own observation. Sometimes they are moved by third parties upon affidavit, and sometimes they are taken by the court upon its own motion. All that is requisite to their validity is that, when not taken for matters occurring in open court, in the presence of the judges, notice should be given to the attorney of the charges made, and opportunity afforded him for explanation and defense. The manner in which the proceeding shall be conducted, so that it be without oppression or unfairness, is a matter of judicial regulation."

Certainly, there is nothing in the nature of the thing which permits proceedings for the removal of an attorney to be more informal than those for punishment for contempt. The reverse is the fact, because the loss of a life's occupation is involved in the loss of the right to practise in courts of law.

There can be no question that, in reference to this topic, we may search the rules on practice in equity with safety. Equity rule 90 refers us to the practice of the high court of chancery in England for assistance in that direction, and this rule relates to the time when it was first enacted. Thomson v. Wooster, 114 U. S. 112, 29 L. ed. 108, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 788. There is nothing to show that the rules as to evidence in the Federal courts on proceedings in equity for punishment for contempt are any more stringent than formerly in England, where an issue of fact, when it arose, was often tried on affidavits. 3 Dan. Ch. (1841) 373; 4 Bl. Com. 288. That in the United States affidavits may be thus used is shown by Rapalje, Contempts (1890) § 126. We may also cite the practice as approved by the experienced Judge Hammond in United States v. Anonymous (C. C.) 21 Fed. 761, 767, decided in 1884, and by the likewise experienced Judge Green, of the district of New Jersey, as shown in Mexican Ore Co. v. Mexican Guadalupe Min. Co. (C. C.) 47 Fed. 351, 353, decided in 1891. Affidavits were also used without disapproval before Mr. Justice Nelson in Whipple v. Hutchinson, 4 Blatchf. 190, 191, Fed. Cas. No. 17,517, and before Circuit Judge Bond and District Judge Giles in Birdsell v. Hagerstown Agri. Implement Mfg. Co. 1 Hughes, 59, 63, Fed. Cas. No. 1,436.

The great fullness with which we have explained this proceeding, and the practice in regard thereto, will be found to have been necessary. For example, the petition on which Mrs. Cole was ordered by the district court to be incarcerated is only such as would be required for ordinary supplemental proceedings for recovering a debt. It shows only that Mrs. Cole had been ordered to pay and had not. It contains no allegation that her failure to pay was wilful, nor anything to show that it was not caused by mere inability. Applying strict rules, this, of course, would not be sufficient to put her on the defensive. Nevertheless, the parties have made no issue on this account, they have proceeded to trial on the merits, they appear to have had no misunderstanding as to the fundamental questions involved, and therefore, we pass this by.

The petition in bankruptcy against Mrs. Cole was involuntary, and was filed on November 23, 1903. It alleged that she concealed $2,700, being a part of the sum received by her on September 17, 1903, from the sale of her homestead at Saco, in this state. It described her as then living in Wakefield, in Massachusetts. She was duly adjudicated a bankrupt, and was examined, and thereupon, after a full report of the referee, which report and the statement of facts therein were confirmed by the district court, the order was entered on March 4, 1905, to which our opinion passed down on February 16, 1906, related, as follows: "It is therefore ordered that the bankrupt turn over and deliver to the trustee, within fifteen days, the said sum of $2,425; in default of which she stand committed to the marshal of this district, to be incarcerated until she obeys the order of this court, or is otherwise discharged by due process of law, or until the further order of this court."

The report of the referee on which that order was entered stated fully the transactions leading up to and following the petition in bankruptcy, so far as they affected, or could affect, the issue. It appeared thereby that Mrs. Cole's indebtedness consisted of indorsements of her husband's notes, held by several banks in Biddeford and Saco, amounting in all to $2,725. On September 14, 1903, Mrs. Cole, whose husband then lived at Saco, sold the homestead there for $3,800 in actual cash,—that is, bills,—which bills were paid directly into the hands of Mr. Cole. Less than two weeks after selling the homestead, Mr. and Mrs. Cole together moved to Wakefield, where they established a new home, and where they were when the petition in bankruptcy was filed. A day or two before the close of October, 1903, the cashier of one of the banks holding the notes of Mr. and Mrs. Cole called on them at Wakefield, and sought to secure an adjustment. During the conversation, in reply to a question to Mr. and Mrs. Cole as to what they had to say, she answered: "We have not got anything to say." Other conversation occurred, during which Mrs. Cole said that they did not have the money, adding: "We have sent it to his brother,"—meaning the brother of Mr. Cole. The referee reported also other evidence, including that of Mr. Cole, which suggested, among other things, certain remarkable improbabilities with reference to Mrs. Cole's statement that the money had been sent to Mr. Cole's brother. No reason for moving to Wakefield was suggested except a purpose of carrying out of the jurisdiction the money received for the homestead.

Thereupon, the court found in March, 1905, specifically as follows: "The referee has found affirmatively that the bankrupt has under her control the balance of the fund, to the amount of $2,425, that she had possession or control of it at the date of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, that she has withheld and concealed the same from her trustee, and is now withholding and concealing the same from him."

On the proceeding before us to revise the order of March 4, 1905, we pointed out that we were not then obliged to go into any question whether Mrs. Cole was in manual possession of the money, or exercised such absolute control of it as would enable her to turn it over to the trustee; but, on the case now before us, it remains for us to consider whether, on the record here, we can find that it was permissible for the district court to find a contemptuous—that is, a wilful—refusal on the part of Mrs. Cole to turn over the moneys to the trustee, with the accompanying ability on her part to do so.

On this immediate proceeding Mrs. Cole testified orally, and other testimony was introduced. If the case rested, as Mrs. Cole now claims it should rest, on this subsequent testimony alone, we would be compelled to say, without hesitation, that there were in the record no proofs which would permit the district court, or any court, by reason thereof, to find Mrs. Cole in contempt on March 4, 1905, or at any subsequent time; but, at this hearing, Mr. Anderson appeared for Mrs. Cole, and Mr. Cleaves for the trustee in bankruptcy, and the following occurred:

Mr. Cleaves: I would like to have it appear that I offer the entire record which went to the circuit court of appeals; or rather, I offer all of the testimony and documents which have been taken or used in this case in bankruptcy.

Mr. Anderson: And that, may it please your honor, if your honor considers it,—I understand we are taking it de bene,—I desire to have whatever rights we have saved.

The court: The stenographer is to write out the testimony taken at this hearing, and the offers made by counsel. Upon this record and upon such part of the printed record as the court may find material and legal evidence—upon this evidence counsel shall be heard in court, and are requested also to prepare suitable and sufficient briefs, setting forth their exact positions in the premises.

With reference to this, the opinion of the learned judge of the district court of November 6, 1906, said as follows: "In the case before me I have treated the order to show cause as an independent proceeding, and have applied the rules of evidence pertinent to a criminal case. I find, upon the threshold of the proceeding, the decree of the circuit court of appeals that the bankrupt pay over certain money to the trustee, and that she have her day in court upon the question whether she shall be held to be in contempt. In pursuance of the request of the respondent, I have considered only the testimony of the bankrupt herself, the greater part of which I have given in full, and of Mr. Jordan, her nephew, together with her examination before the referee, which she has verified and made part of her testimony. With reference to the other rulings, requests for which have been preferred by the learned counsel for the respondent, I do not find it necessary to pass upon them affirmatively and in detail; but it will be seen that I have adopted substantially the rules of law which he has invoked in the proceeding. I have also examined the records of the district court, so far as they are material, relevant, and admissible."

Whatever the learned judge might have examined in the records of the district court, according to what we have quoted from him, he would have found nothing except the petition in bankruptcy, the schedules filed by the bankrupt, her prior examination, various proofs of debt, the ordinary bankruptcy proceedings, and the depositions of witnesses, taken in the presence of the bankrupt, and subsequently cross-examination by her. While the introduction of these at the stage of the case to which the petition now before us refers would not be permissible according to the strict rules of the Amendments to the Constitution in reference to criminal procedure, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

yet it would seem that they are of such authority, and arose under such circumstances, that they would come within the various expressions which we have cited from the Supreme Court, in that the use of them would have due regard to substantial rights, and even greater regard thereto than the affidavits which we have seen are sometimes used with reference to proceedings for contempts. Moreover, where a proceeding for contempt is on the heel of a strictly civil proceeding, like a decree in equity, or, in this case, like the order of the court of March 4, 1905, it would be almost an obstruction of justice if the court and parties could not refer back and make liberal use of what led up to the principal decree. But the conclusion we reach renders it unnecessary that we should dispose of all the questions submitted to us, and which we have discussed, or determine what the learned judge of the district court meant by "the records of the district court," etc., or whether he could properly make an examination, as stated by him, without exhibiting to the parties specifically what he regarded as material and admissible, so that the parties might make a direct issue with reference thereto if they saw fit. Examining all the proceedings which it is possible for the learned judge to have examined, we think we have stated the most significant facts that appear therefrom, and, although the case is a troublesome one, yet, taking it by and large, notwithstanding the combined judgment of both the learned judge of the district court and the referee, which, of course, in accordance with the decisions, should have great weight on a question of fact like this, we find that there was in fact not sufficient evidence of the kind which the law requires on the exact issue pending here; that is to say, whether Mrs. Cole wilfully refused to pay over moneys which it was necessary to show that she could pay over at the specific date to which the orders of the court properly related. Under the rules which touch petitions of this character, which permit only revision in matter of law, we could not interfere with the decree of the district court of March, 1905, because, under the circumstances, we would not be justified in declaring that there was not sufficient to permit the district court to pass on the question whether, as a result of collusion between Mrs. Cole and her husband, a mere debt, according to the rules of civil procedure, might not have been established against both her and her husband, or either of them; but, when it comes to the proposition that, at any specific date or time to which the proceedings might refer, Mrs. Cole had so completely under her control funds which she could command prices per pound by means of the fact that the line bisects such value figure.

The No. 63 scale is made for the use of butchers or the fish market trade, for the purpose of weighing heavier articles than ordinary groceries, and for the purpose of weighing articles of smaller and lower values. Its chart is as large as can reasonably be made, and yet not be so heavy as to cause friction in its operation, and, at the same time, not have a centrifugal motion or a sort of a "fly wheel motion" as it rotates. The front of the scale faces the operator, and through the opposite side of the stationary cylinder, which faces the purchaser, is an opening showing the inverse weight graduation, but no computed values. Hence, in every weighing on the scale the purchaser sees the exact weight that is being given him by means of the weight graduate upon the purchaser's side of the scale, and, if the scale is brought to balance, that fact will show upon the purchaser's side as well as upon the dealer's side of the scale. The computed values that are placed upon the chart are mere matters of arithmetic, found by multiplying the weight by the price per pound. The result of the computation is placed exactly opposite the proper weight graduation, so that each of the weight graduations for 2 ounces is in direct alignment with the computed value opposite, and this computed value must necessarily be indicated simultaneously with the indication of weight. In these computations there are no fractions whatever. Anything less than one-half cent is disregarded; anything amounting to a half cent or more is called a whole cent. The result would be that any fraction less than one-half cent is given to the purchaser, and any fraction amounting to half a cent or more goes to the dealer.

The case was heard upon pleadings and proofs, taken in open court. The scales in question and other scales manufactured by a competing company were introduced at the hearing in the court below. Many experiments were made before the trial court by witnesses for the complainants and the defendant. The defendant was represented by the attorneys for the competing company, in whose interest evidently the action on the part of the defendant was largely taken. The complainants were represented by the attorneys for the company which sold them the scales. The trial court sustained the complainants' claim and entered a permanent injunction restraining the respondent from condemning their scales.

Mr. Albert H. Meads, with Mr. Fred H. Warren, for appellant:

The scale could be condemned under the police power.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Moneyweight Scale Co. v. McBride, 199 Mass. 503, 85 N. E. 870.

Mr. P. J. M. Hally also for appellant. Messrs. Orla B. Taylor, John M. Zane, and Charles F. Morse, for appellees:

The common council has no implied power to legislate upon the subject of weights and measures, under the general police power.

Dill. Mun. Corp. § 89; Horr & B. Mun. Pol. Ord. § 20.

The ordinance confers arbitrary power upon the city sealer.

Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; State v. Tenant, 110 N. C. 609, 15 L.R.A. 423, 28 Am. St. Rep. 715, 14 S. E. 387; Re Frazee, 63 Mich. 396, 6 Am. St. Rep. 310, 30 N. W. 72; State ex rel. Garrabad v. Dering (Re Garrabad) 84 Wis. 585, 19 L.R.A. 858, 30 Am. St. Rep. 948, 54 N. W. 1104; Baltimore v. Radecke, 49 Md. 217, 33 Am. Rep. 239; Chicago v. Trotter, 136 Ill. 430, 26 N. E. 359; Anderson v. Wellington, 40 Kan. 173, 2 L.R.A. 110, 10 Am. St. Rep. 175, 19 Pac. 719; Barthet v. New Orleans, 24 Fed. 563; Sioux Falls v. Kirby, 6 S. D. 62, 25 L.R.A. 621, 60 N. W. 156.

Grant, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The record presents two questions, one of law and the other of fact. The legal question is: Has the defendant, the sealer of weights and measures of the city of Detroit, the legal authority to determine the accuracy of computing devices, and either to approve or condemn them? The question of fact is: Is the computing device dishonest and false? Or, stated otherwise, Does it give a greater price for the goods weighed and sold than the dealer is entitled to?

1. It is conceded that the scale weighs the goods purchased with absolute accuracy, and that the amount of such weight is correctly exhibited to the purchaser upon one side and to the seller upon the other side of the scale. The sealer is therefore bound under the law to place his seal of approval upon the weighing part of the machine, because it fully complies with the law. If this chart, showing the price of the commodity, was attached in a stationary way upon the front of the scale facing the seller, or upon the wall beside the scale, or upon the counter, so that the seller seeing the weight could look at the chart and find the price, it would still be a computing device, subject to the same criticism that it is when placed upon a revolving drum. The sealer can no more condemn the scale in one case than he can in the other, because in each case the weight is the same and is correct. The seller and purchaser are then upon an equal footing.

The purchaser, knowing the weight and price per ounce or pound, can make the computation himself. The method by which the seller reckons the total price to be paid is of no material consequence to the purchaser. The seller may arrive at the price by mental process or with paper and pencil, or he may have a chart which shows the value of any amount purchased. This process does not enter into the transaction. It can make no difference to the purchaser how the seller arrives at the result. The purchaser is at no disadvantage so long as he is furnished the means to determine the accuracy of the charge made by the seller. The legal question is therefore narrowed to this: Is the sealer of weights and measures clothed with authority to condemn a chart adopted by the seller for his convenience and expedition in making sales?

By an amendment to the ordinance of the city of Detroit in 1906, it was made to read as follows: "The sealer of weights and measures shall test and prove all computing scales as to weights and values, and any such scale which may be found to give any weight other than the correct weight for any money value indicated shall be condemned; otherwise they shall be approved." The Congress of the United States has power to establish and adopt standards of weights and measures. These standards were early adopted by this state, and have continued in force ever since. Mich. Laws 1837, pp. 66, 67, No. 42; Rev. Stat. 1838, pt. 1, title 7, chap. 3, pp. 151-155; Comp. Laws, §§ 4882 et seq. The statute provides for furnishing these weights to each county and township in the state, and for an annual comparison of the scales and weights therein with the standards so furnished. It was held, in McGeorge v. Walker, 65 Mich. 5, 31 N. W. 601, that the only comparison to be made is with the standard weights so furnished. The legislature, by the charter of the city of Detroit, has expressly authorized the common council to regulate weights and measures to be sealed by a city sealer "so as to be made conformable to the standards of weights and measures established by the general laws of the state." Pub. Acts 1857, p. 105, No. 55. This is the sole power conferred by the legislature upon the common council. "Implied powers" are those which arise from, and are necessary to carry out, the powers expressly conferred upon municipalities. Taylor v. Bay City Street R. Co. 80 Mich. 77, 45 N. W. 335. The express power to examine and determine the accuracy of scales as to weights does not, by implication, confer upon the council the right to determine the accuracy of charts, ready reckoners, adding machines, or other devices by which the value of the goods weighed shall be determined. The object of the statute is to determine the accuracy of weighing, not the accuracy of the process by which the price is found. The statute aims to protect the public from false weights and measures, and not from the dishonesty of dealers in reckoning the cost of the goods purchased. Biabee v. McAllen, 39 Minn. 143, 39 N. W. 299; Gundling v. Chicago, 176 Ill. 340, 48 L.R.A. 230, 52 N. E. 44. In the latter case it was held that the power conferred upon the common council "to regulate the sale of meats, poultry, fish, butter, cheese, lard, vegetables, and all other provisions, and to provide for place and manner of selling the same," did not confer upon the council the power to regulate the sale of tobacco.

There is no hint in the charter of any intent on the part of the legislature to confer upon the common council the power to regulate or prescribe methods by which merchants compute the cost of purchases made by their customers, or to supervise adding machines, charts, ready reckoners, or other devices by which the cost is ascertained. It is, however, insisted that this right exists under the general police power inherent in, and conferred upon, municipalities by the very fact of their existence. Under the contention of counsel for the appellant, the common council of every municipality in the state is clothed with power to send its employee into the store of every merchant to investigate and condemn every method employed by the merchant, which, in the judgment of such employee, may be used to state an incorrect result. The statement of the proposition would seem to afford its best refutation. We are cited to no authority holding that a municipality is per se clothed with authority to investigate business transactions between merchants and their customers. The chart in question is conceded to show the correct price for even ounces and for pounds. Only in case of fractions of the odd ounce is it claimed to be susceptible of dishonest operation. A dishonest merchant under any method can defraud his customer who does not himself take care to estimate the cost. The chart saves time to both seller and purchaser, and greatly facilitates business.

Counsel cite and rely upon Harbison v. Knoxville Iron Co. 103 Tenn. 421, 56 L.R.A. 316, 76 Am. St. Rep. 682, 53 S. W. 955, affirmed in 183 U. S. 13, 46 L. ed. 55, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Crawfordsville v. Braden, 130 Ind. 149, 14 L.R.A. 268, 30 Am. St. Rep. 214, 28 N. E. 849; Gundling v. Chicago, supra; Bluedorn v. Missouri P. R. Co. 108 Mo. 439, 32 Am. St. Rep. 615, 18 S. W. 1103; Moneyweight Scale Co. v. McBride, 199 Mass. 503, 85 N. E. 870. Harbison v. Knox- ville Iron Co. did not involve or discuss this inherent police power of a municipal corporation. The act before the court was a legislative act and involved the power of the legislature, and not a municipality. Crawfordsville v. Braden involved the right of a municipality under the expressly conferred power to light its streets, alleys, and other public places with electric light, etc., to furnish electric light for private houses and business places for a consideration. The right to do so was sustained upon the ground that "a light thus produced is safer to property, and more conducive to health, than the ordinary light." Whether, under our Michigan decisions, the rule of the Indiana court would be sustained—quære. In this state the power has been conferred by legislative enactment. In Gundling v. Chicago the sole question, aside from the one above referred to, was whether, under the express authority to provide for and regulate the inspection of tobacco, an ordinance regulating the sale of cigarettes was valid. In Bluedorn v. Missouri P. R. Co. the sole question was the power of the city to regulate the speed of railroad trains through the city. The soundness of that decision cannot be questioned, as it involved not only the right, but the duty of every municipality to protect the lives and persons of its citizens. It, however, furnishes no authority for interference in commercial transactions between its citizens. It is sufficient to say of Moneyweight Scale Co. v. McBride that it involved the inherent power of the legislature, and not of a municipality, the creature of the legislature. It is worthy of remark here that the court in that case held that "the correctness of these scales is not now before us." The court decided that the statute required the charts to be arithmetically correct, and sustained the law upon that basis. It also held that, if it conferred upon the sealer the power to determine the commercial correctness of the chart, it was unconstitutional.

Where power was conferred upon the municipality to prohibit anyone from circulating, distributing, or giving away circulars, handbills, or advertising cards of any description in or upon any of the public streets and alleys of the city, it was held that "this is not an express grant of power to the city of Detroit to pass a by-law or ordinance to prohibit a person from circulating, distributing, or giving away circulars, handbills, or advertising cards of any description, in or upon any of the public streets and alleys of said city, and to punish by fine and imprisonment in the county jail or the Detroit house of correction for violation, and there is no such power implied in these provisions of the charter." People v. Arm- strong, 73 Mich. 288, 2 L.R.A. 721, 16 Am. St. Rep. 578, 41 N. W. 275.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

All we now need to decide is that the power of inspection and regulation in such matters must find its authority in some express provision of the legislature. If, at any time, the legislature, conceiving that dishonest means are employed by merchants in selling their goods, shall enact a law conferring power upon municipalities to supervise and regulate them, it will then be time for the courts to determine the validity of such an enactment. Until then we choose not to discuss it.

The decree is affirmed, with costs.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

JOHN H. WOLL, Respt.,

v.

FRANK VOIGT, Appt.

(105 Minn. 371, 117 N. W. 608.)

Trespass — unlawful occupation — estoppel.

1. The owner, in constructive possession of land at the time of the initiation of trespass, may maintain trespass quare clausum fregit alike for cursory and for prolonged trespasses. A trespasser upon land cannot claim by reason of his unlawful occupation thereof (for less than the legal limitation period) that the real owner, although he had knowledge of the trespass, is estopped to sue for damages for the wrongful acts committed.

Same — abandonment of premises — damages.

2. "Claims for mesne profits are usually consequential to and dependent upon a recovery of the land (in ejectment); yet, where the disseisor has surrendered or abandoned the premises before suit, and the rightful owner is in possession, such owner may maintain trespass for the wrongful entry, and have damages for the same in the nature of mesne profits."

(August 14, 1908.)

Headnotes by JAGGARD, J.

Case Note. — Effect of continued occupation by trespasser for less than the limitation period to estop the owner to maintain trespass q. c. f.

Blew v. Ritz. 82 Minn. 530, 85 N. W. 548, which is sufficiently set forth in WOLL v. VOIGT, followed an earlier case in the same jurisdiction (Wayzata v. Great Northern R. Co. 46 Minn. 505, 49 N. W. 205), which was an action to restrain the defendant from maintaining and operating its railway, and from maintaining buildings, on certain streets of the plaintiff village, and in which it was held that one who entered upon and

A PPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Stearns County granting a new trial after dismissing the complaint in an action brought to recover damages for trespass. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William G. White, for appellant:

In order to maintain trespass quare clausum fregit, the plaintiff must have been in possession of the land at the time the acts of trespass were committed.

Moon v. Avery, 42 Minn. 405, 44 N. W. 257; Olson v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co. 89 Minn. 280, 94 N. W. 871; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. 2d ed. p. 595; 21 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 817; Wilcox v. Conway, 115 Mass. 561; Gould v. Sub-Dist. No. 3, 7 Minn. 203, Gil. 145; Fogg v. Cushing, 40 Me. 315; Cowenhoven v. Brooklyn, 38 Barb. 9; 3 Bingham, Real Prop. 143; Bigelow, Torts, 160.

The complaint in this action is fatally defective, even if the action be considered as one for "trespass to recover mesne profits."

2 Waterman, Trespass, § 1160; 15 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 206, note 71, p. 215, notes, 65-68; Young v. Downey, 145 Mo. 261, 46 S. W. 962; Holmes v. Davis, 10 N. Y. 488; Vandervoort v. Gould, 36 N. Y. 647; Schradsky v. Stimson, 22 C. C. A. 517, 40 U. S. App. 455, 76 Fed. 730.

Messrs. H. S. Locke and Donohue & Stephens, for respondent:

The allegation that plaintiff is seised in fee simple is a sufficient allegation that he has the possession as well as the title.

Gage v. Kaufman, 133 U. S. 471, 33 L. ed. 725, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 406; Blew v. Ritz, 82 Minn. 530, 85 N. W. 548; Schradsky v. Stimson, 22 C. C. A. 515, 40 U. S. App. 455, 76 Fed. 730; Bliss, Code Pl. 176; Betz v. Kansas City Home Teleph. Co. 121 Mo. App. 473, 97 S. W. 207; Cowenhoven v. Brooklyn, 38 Barb. 9; Olson v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co. 89 Minn. 280, 94 N. W. 871; Sutherland, Damages, 363.

Jaggard, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff, in a complaint dated April 17, 1907, alleged that he is, and for more than seven years had been, the owner in fee simple and entitled to the possession of a described tract of land; that on or about November 1, 1902, the defendant unlawfully broke and entered said above-described land, and forcibly used, occupied, and farmed said land, and appropriated the crops and hay grown thereon to his own use from November 1, 1902, until September 1, 1906, to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $400; that, between said last-mentioned dates, the defendant also cut down and carried away the trees and timber of the plaintiff then growing thereon, and converted and disposed of the same to his own use, and otherwise injured said premises, to plaintiff's damage. The complaint sought money judgment in the sum alleged, and other relief. The answer, in addition to denials, set forth that the defendant was the owner in fee, had entered into possession peaceably, had remained in possession for four years, and had made improvements under color of title. It prayed that he be adjudged the owner of the property, or that he have a lien for the reasonable value of improvements made and taxes paid, and for other relief. The reply denied such new matter. On trial, defendant objected to the introduction of any evidence in support of the complaint, and moved for judgment on the pleadings. Because of the form of the action, the court dismissed the action. Subsequently it granted a new trial. This appeal was taken from that order.

The defendant's argument, on principle, as we understand it, is that this, an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, did not lie, because it affirmatively appeared from the allegations of the complaint that, when the alleged acts of trespass were committed, the defendant, and not the plaintiff, was in possession. The necessary construction of the complaint and answer, however, is that defendant went into possession November 2, 1902, and remained in possession about four years thereafter. Plaintiff became the owner, and entitled to the possession, according to the complaint, some time in 1900. "The allegation that the plaintiff is seised in fee simple is a sufficient allegation that he has the possession as well as the title." Gage v. Kaufman, 133 U. S. 471, 33 L. ed. 725, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 406. Accordingly he was in constructive possession of the land of another without right—a mere trespasser and knowing that he was such—could not, no matter to what use he might have put the land, or how much he might have improved it or expended upon it, claim that the owner was estopped, by mere delay in ousting him, to seek any remedy, legal or equitable, appropriate to the case.

In Abbott v. Abbott, 51 Me. 575, which was an action of trespass q. o. f., there is a 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

headnote to the effect that the fact that defendant had been in possession for six years claiming title, and had cultivated the land and made improvements thereon, did not affect the plaintiff's right to maintain such action; but, from an examination of the opinion, it would seem that the fact of the defendant's improvement and cultivation of the land was relied on by him, rather than his possession for less than the statutory period of limitation.

possession at the time of defendant's wrongful entry. Trespass quare clausum fregit undoubtedly lay. Defendant's argument involves the position that, where a trespass has been committed, and the trespasser for some time thereafter "uses, occupies, and farms" the land, this wrongful occupancy avails to make it impossible for the disseised owner to sue in this form of trespass after the premises have been vacated. The statement of this proposition is its refutation. It is elementary that a trespasser's continued occupancy of the premises, when damages complained of were inflicted, neither impairs nor disturbs the owner's right to prevail in trespass quare clausum fregit. Defendant was a trespasser ab initio. It is immaterial, so far as the right of the plaintiff to maintain that action is concerned, whether defendant had possession for four years or for four hours; for there is no pretense in this case that defendant had acquired title by prescription. In a sense every trespasser is in possession of the close he violates. He at least occupies space therein. Trespass quare clausum fregit lies alike for cursory and for prolonged trespasses. "A trespasser upon land cannot claim by reason of his unlawful occupation thereof (for less than the legal limitation period) that the real owner, although with knowledge of the same, is estopped to sue for damages for the wrongful acts committed." Blew v. Ritz, 82 Minn. 530, 85 N. W. 548.

Moon v. Avery, 42 Minn. 405, 44 N. W. 257, is not at all inconsistent with plaintiff's right to prevail. There plaintiff had been the owner of the land in controversy since September 25, 1885. The answer set up that defendant went into possession some three months earlier, on June 10, 1885, and remained in possession until June 5, 1888. "The reply," Collins, J., said, ". . . must be taken as an acknowledgment by the plaintiff that from the day first mentioned [June 10, 1885] to that last named [June 5, 1888] the defendant was in the actual, continuous, and exclusive occupancy and possession of the entire tract of ground. Consequently the plaintiff did not have possession of any part of it, either actual (admitted to have been in another) or constructive, which she could not have had, because of defendant's actual adverse possession." In Olson v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co. 89 Minn. 280, 94 N. W. 871, Collins, J., said: "It is well settled that, in order to maintain an action of trespass quare clausum by one not holding the legal title to land and thus in constructive possession, he must show an actual possession in himself at the time the alleged trespass was committed." The case is not in point. Here plaintiff is assumed to have had the legal title to the land. That the Olson Case "recognizes and affirms." Moon v. Avery, supra, is in nowise inconsistent with plaintiff's right to prevail. In Waterbury Clock Co. v. Irion, 71 Conn. 254, 262, 41 Atl. 827, plaintiff was neither in actual nor constructive possession at the time of the alleged trespass. In Galt v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 157 Ill. 125, 131, 41 N. E. 643, it was not "pretended that the plaintiff was the owner or in possession of the premises at the time of the original entry. . . ." In Collins v. Beatty, 148 Pa. 65, 23 Atl. 982, defendant went into possession under a parol contract prior to a similar contract to sell to plaintiff.

Plaintiff is presumed to have suffered some damage from the unlawful breach of his close. Injury to the freehold follows from the cutting of timber, whose extent plaintiff was entitled to show by way of enhancement of damages. 3 Sutherland, Damages, 375. This showing of damage was abundantly sufficient to sustain the trial court's final order. Moreover, the ruling in Blew v. Ritz, supra, on the subject has never been reversed, viz.: "Claims for mesne profits are usually consequential to and dependent upon a recovery of the land (in ejectment); yet, where the disseisor has surrendered or abandoned the premises before suit, and the rightful owner is in possession, such owner may maintain trespass for the wrongful entry, and have damages for the same in the nature of mesne profits." And see Schradskey v. Stimson, 22 C. C. A. 515, 40 U. S. App. 455, 76 Fed. 730. No reason for changing it has appeared.

Affirmed.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT. (Division 2.)

STATE OF MISSOURI, Resp't.,
v.
SILAS DARLING, Appt.

(216 Mo. 450, 115 S. W. 1002.)

Homicide — assisting assault.

1. One who accompanies another to aid and assist him in assaulting a third cannot escape liability for manslaughter if his companion kills the victim by the use of a deadly weapon, on the theory that he did not know of the intended use of it or consent thereto.

Information — amendment.

2. The insertion of the words "wilfully" and "deliberately" in an information charging murder is within the operation of the statute allowing any information to be amended in matter of form or substance at any time before trial by leave of court, and it is therefore not necessary to reverify it after the alteration.

(February 2, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Cooper County convicting him of manslaughter. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. D. Corum, for appellant:

The defendant did not assault deceased, attempt to assault him, or encourage his brother to assault him; and, unless such brother killed the deceased in the attempt to execute a purpose common to both, defendant is not guilty of anything, and the question of common design must be left to the jury.

White v. People, 139 Ill. 149, 32 Am. St. Rep. 196, 28 N. E. 1083; Cortez v. State, 43 Tex. Crim. Rep. 375, 66 S. W. 459; Omer v. Com. 95 Ky. 353, 25 S. W. 594; Cecil v. State, 44 Tex. Crim. Rep. 450, 72 S. W. 197; Easterlin v. State, 43 Fla. 565, 31 So. 350;

Case Note.—Criminal responsibility of one who aids another in assault in which the latter, without his knowledge or consent, uses a deadly weapon.

In Brown v. State, 28 Ga. 199, the defendant was charged with murder, as principal, in the second degree, and it was held that, although he was connected with the act of killing, yet, if the one who actually did the killing committed the assault with a deadly weapon, and his intention to assault the deceased with such weapon was unknown to the defendant, who supposed that his object was to assault and beat only, and who intended to participate in the assault and battery only, and participated in no design to kill, the latter was guilty of manslaughter only.

But, in Woolweaver v. State, 50 Ohio St. 277, 40 Am. St. Rep. 667, 34 N. E. 352, the defendant was tried for the murder of one who was shot by the defendant's son in a conflict in which the deceased was engaged with others against the defendant's party, and an instruction to the effect that, if the jury found that the defendant knew nothing of his son having a revolver or intending to shoot, and took no part in the killing, and did no overt act to produce that result, the defendant was in no way responsible unless the shot was fired in pursuance of a conspiracy previously formed by them, was held to be a correct statement of the law.

Again, in Bibby v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 65 S. W. 193, it was held that the defendant was not responsible for a homicide if the proof showed that the use of a knife by someone in the defendant's party, while they were all engaged in a general fist fight, was without the knowledge or consent of the accused; or, as the court said: "To 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

State v. Furney, 41 Kan. 115, 13 Am. St. Rep. 262, 21 Pac. 213; State v. May, 142 Mo. 153, 43 S. W. 637; 1 Bishop, New Crim. Law, §§ 461, 637; Hughes, Crim. Law, §§ 1193, 1195.

The court erred in declaring, as a matter of law, that the defendant was liable for the independent act of his brother in assaulting the deceased with a deadly weapon, and that such act was the natural and probable outcome of an attempt merely to whip deceased.

McLeroy v. State, 120 Ala. 285, 25 So. 247; Frank v. State, 27 Ala. 43; Bowers v. State, 24 Tex. App. 542, 5 Am. St. Rep. 901, 7 S. W. 247; Powers v. Com. 110 Ky. 386, 53 L.R.A. 245, 61 S. W. 735; State v. Furney, supra; Lusk v. State, 64 Miss. 845, 2 So. 257.

The test of criminal liability is: Did the parties act together, and was the act done in pursuance of a common design and purpose on which their minds had agreed?

State v. Hickman, 95 Mo. 332, 6 Am. St.

put it more strongly, the proof must show beyond a reasonable doubt that he [defendant] knew Wells was to use the knife beforehand, or that he had knowledge Wells was using the knife at the time he was so using it, and, by some act of his, aided and abetted him in the use of said knife."

R. v. Caton, 12 Cox, C. C. 624, was a prosecution for manslaughter, the defendant and another having committed an assault from which the victim's death resulted in consequence of a blow from a heavy timber which one of the assailants had picked up during the attack. Lush, J., said that the only question for the jury was whether the prisoner struck the fatal blow. "If two men concerted together to fight two other men with their fists, and one struck an unlucky blow causing death, both would be guilty of manslaughter. But if one used a knife or other deadly weapon, such as this piece of timber, without the knowledge or consent of the other, he only who struck with the weapon would be responsible for the death resulting from the blow given by it."

Although the evidence was not considered to present the question of conspiracy or design to assault, yet State v. May, 142 Mo. 135, 43 S. W. 637, cites with approval the rule that one of several who assault a third person may not be held liable where one of the others resorts to the use of a deadly weapon without the knowledge or consent of the first.

Where two bystanders at a fight, without preconcert or any connection with the original quarrel, suddenly take part therein, each acting independently of the other, and one of them, without the knowledge of the other, has a deadly weapon, with which he inflicts a fatal wound upon a combatant, prior to the killing of Samuel Jeffress, Ernest Darling had formed a design to kill said Jeffress, or to inflict upon him some bodily harm, and he, Ernest Darling, armed himself with a deadly weapon, and sought the said Jeffress, and assaulted him with felonious intent of killing him or doing him great bodily harm, and that the said Ernest Darling did assault and kill said Samuel Jeffress; yet, if you further believe from the evidence, that the defendant, Silas Darling, went with his brother, Ernest Darling, to the scene of the killing for the purpose of and with the intention, if necessary, to aid, encourage, or to abet his brother, Ernest Darling, in assaulting said Jeffress, but that the defendant did not know that his brother, Ernest Darling, intended to use a deadly weapon in making such assault, and did not know of a felonious intent on the part of Ernest Darling, but understood at the time that it was the purpose and intention of his brother, Ernest Darling, merely to whip the said Jeffress,—then and in that event, the defendant cannot be guilty of any higher crime than manslaughter in the fourth degree.”

It is insisted by the learned counsel for the defendant that this instruction authorizes the jury to find the defendant guilty of manslaughter in the fourth degree, notwithstanding he only entered into the conspiracy with his brother, Ernest Darling, with the intention merely of assisting Ernest Darling to assault and whip him, and not to kill him. “If,” they say, “the jury had been called upon to determine that the defendant and his brother entertained a common intent to assault the deceased, Jeffress, and that Jeffress was killed in the execution of such common plan by Ernest Darling without resort by him to the use of a deadly weapon, then probably the instruction would have embodied the elements of manslaughter; but to say that a person intending to aid another in making a simple assault on a third party, who does not know that the party whom he intends to aid has a felonious intent against said party, and does not know that his associate has or intends to use a deadly weapon, is guilty of manslaughter, when the person he is aiding resorts to the use of a deadly weapon and takes the life of such a third person therewith, is a monstrous proposition.” If several persons conspire to do an unlawful act, and death happens in the prosecution of the common object, all are alike guilty of the homicide. The act of one of them done in furtherance of the original design is, in the construction of law, the act of all. And he who advises or encourages another to do an illegal act is responsible for all the natural and probable consequences that may arise from its perpetration. 2 Hawk. P. C. chap. 29; 1 Hale, P. C. chap. 34; Russell, Crimes, 24; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 264.

As to this familiar statement of the law, we understand the learned counsel consent. In its eighth instruction the court advised the jury as to what would constitute a conspiracy between the defendant and Ernest Darling, in these words: “That, if the defendant, Silas Darling, with the knowledge of the intention of his brother, Ernest, to so whip Samuel Jeffress, accompanied his brother, Ernest Darling, to the scene of the tragedy for the purpose and with the intention of aiding, encouraging, or assisting his brother, Ernest, if necessary, in making such assault, and was then and there present at the time of such assault for the purpose and with the intention of aiding, encouraging, and abetting his brother, Ernest Darling, therein, if necessary, then the defendant was guilty of manslaughter,” if, as required in the other instructions, Ernest Darling did kill the deceased in pursuance of that understanding. In 1 McClain on Criminal Law, § 196, the author says: “It results from the principle stated in the preceding section, that everyone connected with carrying out a common design to commit a criminal act is concluded and bound by the act of any member of the combination, perpetrated in the prosecution of the common design. But it is not necessary that the crime committed shall have been originally intended. Each is accountable for all the acts of the others done in carrying out the common purpose, whether such acts were originally contemplated or not, if they were the natural and proximate result of carrying out such purpose, and the question whether the result is the natural and probable effect of the wrongful act intended is for the jury. Thus, if several persons agree to commit and enter upon the commission of a crime involving danger to human life, such as robbery, or assault and battery, or resisting an officer or resisting arrest, all are criminally accountable for death caused in the common enterprise. Thus, also, if the unlawful enterprise is likely to meet violent resistance, all will be liable for a felonious assault committed by one of their number in consequence of such resistance, and, if the common design in general involves acts of violence, all who participate in the common plan are equally answerable for acts of others done in pursuance thereof, although the result was not specially intended by them all.” In 1 Wharton’s Criminal Law, § 220, 8th ed. it is said: “It is not necessary that the crime should be part of the original design; it is enough if it be one of the incidental, probable consequences of the execution of that design, and should appear at the moment to one of the participants to be expedient for the common purpose. Thus, where A. and B. go out for the purpose of robbing C., and A., in pursuance of the plan and in furtherance of the robbery, kills C., B. is guilty of murder."

The doctrine on this particular subject is nowhere better reviewed and announced than in Williams v. State, 81 Ala. 1, 60 Am. Rep. 133, 1 So. 179. In that case the court had occasion to consider the statement of Mr. Bishop in 1 Bishop's Criminal Law, 7th ed. 637, in which the learned author says: "If two combine to fight a third with fists, and death accidentally results from a blow inflicted by one, the other also is responsible for the homicide. But, if the one resorts to a deadly weapon without the other's knowledge or consent, he only is thus liable." It is this exception to the general rule upon which the counsel for the defendant insists that the instruction given by the court in this case was erroneous, and he cites this statement of the law by Bishop, and the case of R. v. Caton, 12 Cox, C. C. 624, in support of the proposition.

Speaking of this limitation of the rule by Bishop, the supreme court of Alabama says: "The implied agreement here is evidently not to resort to the use of a deadly weapon, and the use of such weapon is therefore foreign to the contemplation of the parties, and a departure from the common design. It is said by some of the standard authors that, if the specific act agreed to be done was malum in se, the responsibility for unintended results would embrace acts arising from misfortune or chance; but otherwise if such specific act was malum prohibitum merely or lawful. 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, 7th ed. § 331. In some cases the distinction is taken that where persons unlawfully conspire to commit a trespass only, to make all the confederates guilty of murder, the death must ensue in the prosecution of the design. If the unlawful act be a felony, or be more than a trespass, it will be murder in all, 'although the death happened collaterally, or beside the original design.' State v. Shelledy, 8 Iowa, 478. In another recent case the rule was announced that, 'if the unlawful act agreed to be done is dangerous or homicidal in its character, or if its accomplishment will necessarily or probably require the use of force and violence which may result in the taking of life unlawfully, every party to such agreement will be held criminally liable for whatever any of his co-conspirators may do in furtherance of the common design, whether he is present or not.' Lamb v. People, 96 Ill. 73. The question, then, in this case would seem to be, whether, if five or six men combine together to invade a man's household, and they go there armed with deadly weapons for the purpose of attacking and beating him, and, in furtherance of this common design, all of the confederates being present, or near at hand, one of them gets into a difficulty with their common adversary and kills him, all may not be guilty of murder, although they did not all entertain a purpose to kill. The question, we think, must be answered in the affirmative, in the light of both principle and authority. Every man has the right to defend his house against every unlawful invasion, and to defend his person, when within it, against every and all violence, without the necessity of retreat. The experience of mankind shows that very few men will fail to respond to instinct by exercising his right, to the extent even of killing an assailant if necessary. When a mob, conspiring together unlawfully, go to a man's house to do any serious violence to his person, especially in the nighttime, as here, they can expect nothing else than to meet with armed opposition, and the inference is not unreasonable that they intend nothing less than to oppose force to force in the furtherance of their design. The natural and probable consequence of this is homicide, either of one or more of the assailants or of the party thus assailed, and such homicide, when committed by any one of the conspirators, can be nothing less than murder in all who combine to commit the unlawful act of violence, especially if they be near at hand inciting, procuring, or encouraging the furtherance of the act of assault and battery."

In Peden v. State, 61 Miss. 268, several persons conspired together to take one Walker from his house and whip him. He was accordingly taken from his bed and severely beaten, and, in executing this design, one of the confederates struck him a fatal blow with a spade, from which he died. It was held that all were guilty of murder, whether they entertained a purpose to kill Walker or not. See also Brennan v. People, 15 Ill. 512.

That the evidence in this case fully justified the instruction of the court submitting to the jury the defendant's knowledge and intention of the intended assault and determination on the part of his brother, Ernest, to whip the deceased, and whether he had gone with him to aid, assist, and abet in the assault and battery, there can be no doubt whatever. That such an assault and battery is what the text writers denominate malum in se is also plain. It is to be observed that in this case the method and means by which Ernest was to make this assault were not limited, as in the case stated by Mr. Bishop, where they agreed to fight with fists only, and one used a deadly weapon without the knowledge of his confederate, but the evidence showed a conspiracy to assault and whip the deceased without any such limitation. As said by the Alabama supreme court, the defendant knowing of this purpose, and going along to assist in it, could expect nothing else than that the deceased would naturally oppose force to such unlawful design upon his person, as the experience of mankind shows that very few men would tamely submit to such an outrage and indignity, and a natural and probable consequence to such an encounter would be homicide, either of the deceased or of one of them. And the law will hold him responsible for the act of his brother. Most of the adjudicated cases hold that he would be guilty of murder in such a case, and he has no cause to complain that the court limited his offense to manslaughter in the fourth degree. We do not think that the court in this instruction lost sight of the question of common design as between Ernest Darling and the defendant. On the contrary, the liability of the defendant throughout the case was predicated upon the fact of his having entered into the unlawful design to assault and whip the deceased. Neither do we think this is a case falling within the principle that, where one of the conspirators goes outside of the common plan, and commits a fresh and independent act, wholly outside and foreign to the common design, the others are not to be held equally guilty of that act. Taken altogether, we think this instruction was exceedingly favorable to the defendant, and the court did not err in giving it. It follows from what we have already said that in our opinion the court committed no error in refusing to direct the jury to acquit the defendant.

2. After the information was filed and verified, by leave of the court, the prosecuting attorney amended the same by inserting in one place the word "deliberately" and in another "wilfully," but did not reverify the information after the amendment. Defendant moved to quash on the ground that the information was not verified. Section 2481, Rev. Stat. 1899 (Anno. Stat. 1906, p. 1490), provides that "any affidavit or information may be amended in matter of form or substance at any time, by leave of court, before the trial, and, on the trial, as to all matters of form and variance, at the discretion of the court, when the same can be done without prejudice to the substantial rights of the defendant on the merits," etc. This statutory provision was ample authority for the action of the court and prosecuting attorney. When the prosecuting attorney added the two words over his own signature and affidavit, he amended the information, and there was no need of a new affidavit, which was no part of the information. Clearly the insertion of the word "deliberately" did not affect defendant's rights, as he was found guilty of manslaughter only. Counsel concede that an information need not be reverified where unimportant amendments are made. We think the statute is a wise and salutary one, and should not receive a harsh construction. A broad distinction exists between allowing the amendment of an indictment, as it is the act of a grand jury, and an information by a prosecuting attorney, made by leave of court. The latter may very properly be made by the officer who prefers it, and, when he does amend it, there is no occasion for reverifying it.

3. The complaint as to the remarks of the prosecuting attorney, and the action of the court thereon, afford no ground for reversal. It is conceded that the language of the prosecuting attorney was not taken in his exact words, and the trial court, who heard the argument, overruled the point, and we think the whole colloquy taken together fails to show any prejudice. The result shows that the jury were not influenced to find defendant guilty of murder in either degree.

The judgment is affirmed.

All of this division concur.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

JOHN B. ALLEN

v.

CHICAGO, BURLINGTON, & QUINCY
RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.

(82 Neb. 726, 118 N. W. 655.)

Carrier — horses — cars — duty.

1. A railway company engaged in the business of a common carrier is obliged to furnish reasonably safe and suitable cars for the transportation of horses tendered to it for shipment; and, if a car offered a Headnotes by Root, C.

Case Note. — Duty of carrier to furnish bedding for live stock.

If it is shown that it is usual and customary to bed the cars used in the transportation of live stock, and that this is such a precaution as a prudent, competent, and faithful man, experienced in the business, would take, the carrier will be responsible for any injury caused by omission in this regard. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Johnston, 75 Ala. 596, 51 Am. Rep. 489.

In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Clements (Tex. Civ. App.) 115 S. W. 664, it was held that where it was alleged that horses and shipper can only be made thus safe and suitable by the use of bedding, it is the duty of the carrier to furnish that bedding. Same—contract of shipper—effect.

2. Nor is the carrier relieved of that duty by the agreement of the shipper to load and unload his stock, and to feed, water, and care for it in transit.

Evidence—burden of proof.

3. The burden of proof to establish the affirmative of an issue involved in an action rests upon the party alleging the facts constituting that issue, and remains there until the end.

Appeal—admission of irrelevant evidence—effect.

4. In an action for the negligent failure of a carrier to properly bed a car so that it would be reasonably safe for the transpormules were negligently loaded in cars which were not bedded, and the evidence showed that such cars were not bedded, evidence that it was usual and customary for railroads to bed cars in which cattle are shipped was admissible to prove the alleged negligence, since the same reason for bedding cars for the transportation of cattle obtains when they are used for carrying horses or mules.

In Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Mayes, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 31, 97 S. W. 318, it was held that a railway company, having undertaken to bed a car, whether bound to do so or not, was required to exercise at least ordinary care to see that the car was properly bedded.

In East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Johnston, supra, the court took a contrary view to that taken in ALLEN v. CHICAGO, B. & Q. R. Co., and held that the carrier was relieved of its duty of properly bedding the car, by the agreement of the shipper to load and unload his stock, and to feed, water, and care for it in transit.

This Alabama case, contrary to the rule of the Nebraska case, also held that the carrier could defend on the ground that the shipper, or his agent, accepted the car without proper bedding.

In Texas C. R. Co. v. O'Laughlin (Tex. Civ. App.) 72 S. W. 610, it was held that, even though the duty of properly bedding cars devolved primarily upon the carrier, it was a good defense that the shipper was present when the cars were bedded, and, knowing the extent of the bedding, accepted the same and expressed satisfaction therewith.

In Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Silegman (Tex. Civ. App.) 23 S. W. 298, it was held that a common carrier is bound to furnish suitable and safe cars for transporting live stock, and, although a shipper stipulated in the bill of lading, that he accepted the cars, he could show that bedded cars were the only suitable and safe kind, under his allegation that the carrier failed to furnish suitable and safe cars, since the carrier could not, by contract limit its duty as a common carrier.

In Powell v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 32 Pa. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

tation of stock, where the proof is undisputed that the car was unsafe because of improper bedding, testimony concerning the custom of the carrier in preparing other cars for like shipments, if irrelevant, is without prejudice to defendant.

Carrier—horses—delay in shipment—action—jury.

5. Where the evidence tends to establish that a shipment of horses was materially delayed while the stock was in the carrier's possession, and that the stock was in good condition when received by the carrier, and injured and damaged when delivered to the consignee,—it is not error to submit the question of unreasonable delay to the jury.

Trial—instructions—construction.

6. An instruction which, if standing alone, might be erroneous, may not be so

414, 75 Am. Dec. 564, where a shipper asked for tan for bedding for his mare, it was held to be flagrant negligence for the carrier's shipping agent, not only to stand by and suffer straw to be used for bedding, but to suggest and encourage its use, contrary to a rule of the carrier which forbade it, and, the straw having caught fire from sparks from the locomotive and injured the mare, the carrier was liable, although the shipper signed a release from any and all claims for damage or injury to his mare while in the carrier's cars.

But, in St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Butler, 82 Ark. 469, 102 S. W. 378, it was held that a stipulation based upon a valuable consideration, exempting the carrier from liability for loss or damage arising from want of bedding, was valid and binding.

And, in Gilleland v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 119 Ga. 789, 47 S. E. 336, it was held that the duty of providing proper bedding could be made to devolve entirely upon the shipper by contract based upon the ground of a reduced rate of freight and free transportation to the shipper.

In Texas C. R. Co. v. O'Laughlin, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 640, 84 S. W. 1104, it was held that, although a common carrier, under its bill of lading, would not be liable for damages growing out of the negligence of its connecting carriers, it might and would be liable for damages resulting from its own negligence in failing properly to bed the cars in the first place, even though the injuries causing such damages did not develop until after the cattle had left its line, and were in the hands of the connecting carriers.

In Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Thomas, 89 Ala. 294, 18 Am. St. Rep. 119, 7 So. 762, it was held that a railroad company, having received cattle to be delivered to a point on a connecting road, and at the connecting point having transferred them to cars furnished by the connecting carrier, was bound to permit the shipper to provide suitable bedding for the cars, as he had agreed to do, or itself to provide the bedding with reasonable care and diligence.

In McDaniel v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co.

when considered with other instructions upon the same subject, given in connection therewith.

(November 19, 1908.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for York County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for injury to live stock while in defendant's possession for transportation. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. J. E. Kelby, George M. Spurlock, F. E. Bishop, Fred M. Deweese, and Halleck F. Rose for appellant.

Messrs. Gilbert Brothers, for appellee:

Proper bedding is an incident of a suitable car.

5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 433; Powell v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 32 Pa. 414, 75 Am. Dec. 584; McDaniel v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 24 Iowa, 412; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Dishman, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 250, 91 S. W. 828.

The company is not released from duty to bed, by the fact that the shipper's agent, after he got there and found the car was not bedded, proceeded under the direction of the station agent to have the car bedded himself in the best manner he could.

Loomer v. Thomas, 38 Neb. 277, 56 N. W. 973.

Evidence of a usage or custom by which the carrier is to bed the car, known to it, and upon which it had acted in making previous shipments, is admissible.

24 Iowa, 412, the carrier was held liable for injury to cattle, it appearing that they were put in a car properly bedded by the owners; that a journal of the car was found to be hot, and, at a station where no bedding could be procured, the cattle were put into another car, which contained no bedding, after which they were injured because of the want of bedding.

In Atchison v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 80 Mo. 213, in which it appeared that the shipper of cattle expressly contracted "to load and unload said stock at his own risk," and alleged in his petition that the stock was damaged "by reason of the defendant, its agents, servants, and employees negligently furnishing and causing said cattle to be loaded on and in a defective and unsound car,"—it was held that testimony respecting the bedding of the car was improperly admitted, since, if bedding the cattle was embraced in the term "loading," the risk of their being improperly bedded was incident to, and included within, the risk assumed by the shipper; and, if, on the other hand, bedding the cattle was not within that term, then such evidence was outside the allegations of the petition.

In Burgher v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo. App.) 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Johnston, 75 Ala. 506, 51 Am. Rep. 489; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 816.

Root, C., filed the following opinion:

In December, 1905, plaintiff shipped over defendant's railway a car load of horses from Venango to York, Nebraska. In transit three of the animals were so injured as to cause their death, and the remaining twenty-one were, it is claimed, also damaged. Plaintiff recovered judgment for defendant's alleged negligence, and defendant appeals.

1. Exception is taken to the instructions of the court that the alleged negligence of defendant in not properly bedding the car wherein the horses were shipped was an element in plaintiff's cause of action. The horses were transported by virtue of a stock shipper's contract, which provided, among other things: "And in consideration of free transportation for ——— persons, designated by the first party, who have indorsed their names hereon in the presence of the agent, hereby given by said railway company such persons to accompany the stock, it is agreed that the said cars, and the said animals contained therein, are and shall be in the sole charge of such persons, for the purpose of attention to and care of said animals, and that the said railway company shall not be responsible for such attention and care. It is agreed that said animals are to be loaded, unloaded, watered, and fed by the owner or his agents in charge; that the second party shall not be liable for loss from theft, heat or cold, jumping from car or other escape, injury in loading or unloading, injury which animals may cause to themselves or to each other, or which results from the nature or propensities of such animals, and that the railway company does not agree to deliver the stock at destination at any specified time, nor for any particular market." Bearing in mind that the verdict for plaintiff resolves all disputed questions of fact in his favor, it may be said that Venango is situated in the western part of the state; that plaintiff maintains a stock ranch in the vicinity of said town, but resides in York, some 300 miles distant. Plaintiff's son, who was in charge of the ranch, telephoned defendant's agent at Venango that he wanted a 30-foot stock car, well bedded, next Sunday night, to ship a load of horses to York, and the agent later informed the young man that the car was ready. The horses were driven to the station Sunday afternoon, and plaintiff's son then learned that the car was not bedded, and that the floor thereof was new construction, and very hard and smooth. Defendant's agent stated that they were out of bedding, and suggested that Allen had better procure and spread over the car floor some manure, which he could secure at a livery stable. Two such loads were thus placed in the car. The evidence is uncontradicted that the car, unless bedded with sand, cinders, hay, or straw, was not safe for the transportation of horses, and that the addition of the manure furnished little, if any, additional security.

120 S. W. 673, it was held that where the cause of action relied upon in the petition did not count upon a breach of contract to furnish bedded cars, but proceeded entirely upon the carrier's common-law liability to transport the cattle within a reasonable time after it received them, and there was no issue whatever joined between the parties in respect of any obligation on the part of the carrier to bed the cars, proof relative thereto was wholly foreign to the issue, and inadmissible.

In Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wright (Tex. Civ. App.) 87 S. W. 191, it was held that where plaintiff specifically averred the causes to which the alleged injuries were due, and did not include improper bedding, evidence relative thereto should have been excluded.

In Texas & P. R. Co. v. Dishman, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 250, 91 S. W. 828, it was held that there was no error in refusing a carrier's instruction which sought to have the jury find against the shipper if the car in which his horses were shipped was improperly bedded, when it had neither pleaded nor proved that he had undertaken to bed the car for such shipment.

It is patent from an inspection of the bill of exceptions that a considerable part of plaintiff's loss can be traced directly to a lack of bedding in the car. Defendant argues that, by reason of the contract, and independent of it, the duty rested on plaintiff to bed the car. That, especially in the matter of shipping horses, because of the opinions of different shippers, it is impossible to adopt any method of bedding that would be uniformly satisfactory, and that when defendant furnished the shipper a sound, properly constructed car for the transportation of his stock, its duty as a common carrier, so far as the car was concerned, was discharged. We are of opinion, however, that it was the defendant's duty to furnish plaintiff a reasonably suitable and safe car for the transportation of his horses. That if the car furnished could only be made reasonably suitable and safe by bedding it with sand, cinders, hay, straw, or some like substance, it was defendant's duty to provide that bedding, and that it could not relieve itself of such liability by suggesting that plaintiff use some other and insufficient article for said purpose. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The railway's obligation is implied from the nature of its business as a common carrier, and the fact that it undertook, in that capacity, to transport plaintiff's horses; and it was not essential that the bill of lading should recite that the company had agreed to bed the car so as to make it safe for the shipment of his horses. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Silegman (Tex. Civ. App.) 23 S. W. 298. Nor was defendant relieved of that liability by the fact that plaintiff's agent accepted the car without proper bedding. Peters v. New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. 16 La. Ann. 222, 79 Am. Dec. 578; Hunt v. Nutt (Tex. Civ. App.) 27 S. W. 1031; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Brosius (Tex. Civ. App.) 105 S. W. 1131. Nor did the written contract exempt defendant from such liability. It nowhere purports to place the burden on the shipper of bedding or otherwise preparing the car, and we are not inclined to extend defendant's exemption beyond the strict letter of the agreement. Nor will the fact that captious shippers might prefer bedding other than that furnished by the carrier excuse it from discharging its obligation. If the car is bedded so as to be reasonably safe, the shipper can ask no more from the carrier, and, if he indulges his whim or judgment to change conditions, he takes his own risk so far as the alteration may be concerned. Instruction No. 3, requested by the defendant, was properly refused.

2. Complaint is made that the court instructed the jury that the burden was on defendant to prove that plaintiff was guilty of negligence which contributed to his loss. The instruction was correct. Defendant had pleaded certain facts as constituting contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff. The pleadings establish the burden of proof; and, if defendant pleads that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, he assumes the laboring oar in that respect. Rapp v. Sarpy County, 71 Neb. 382, 98 N. W. 1042, 102 N. W. 242.

3. It is urged that the evidence does not tend to establish that the shipment was delayed, but, on the contrary, that the horses were transported in due course of carriage. The freight train left Venango about 10 o'clock at night, remained several hours in Hastings, and arrived in Aurora about 9 o'clock the following night. It was necessary to switch the car from one train to another at the last-named place. At Allen's request the conductor of the Hastings train had telegraphed in the afternoon to Aurora, to hold the Aurora-York train so as to include defendant's car of stock therein. It was dark when the train arrived in Aurora, and some twenty or thirty minutes elapsed between the arrival of the Hastings and the departure of the Aurora train; and Allen, presuming that his car of stock had been switched into and made a part of said train, went into the caboose thereof, although his car of stock was left in the Aurora yards. It is also in evidence that the horses, other than those crippled, were unloaded at Aurora that night, and fed and watered the next day, and then reloaded about noon, so that they were on the track in the car for one-half a day, and not delivered in York for twenty-four hours later than they could have been if promptly transferred at Aurora. The evidence further tends to prove that the horses were in good condition when shipped at Venango, and gaunt and considerably bruised and marked up when unloaded at York. There was sufficient evidence, in our judgment, to warrant submitting this issue to the jury. Nelson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 78 Neb. 57, 110 N. W. 742.

Instruction numbered 5, tendered by defendant, was properly refused because there was no evidence to sustain the assumption or proposition that plaintiff abandoned the horses at Aurora, and for that reason the cars were not transferred at said point. The following day, when plaintiff learned that his horses were still in Aurora, he notified defendant that he would not accept the stock, but later recanted and did receive it.

4. It is contended that the court improperly overruled defendant's objections to testimony tending to prove the custom of defendant in bedding cars for the use of stock. Plaintiff's right to recover on the cause of action set forth in the petition did not depend upon any custom or usage, but upon defendant's obligation to furnish him a car reasonably safe for the shipment of his horses. We are of opinion, however, that the evidence might be received as interpreting the intention and meaning of the parties in entering into the written contract, which was silent on this point. The testimony was undisputed that the car was unsafe for the shipment of horses in the condition in which it was delivered to plaintiff, and the evidence as to said custom was not prejudicially erroneous to defendant, even if it were irrelevant. Code Civ. Proc. § 145.

5. Exception is taken to instruction numbered 4, given by the court, which is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that, although they may believe from the evidence that there was a caretaker in charge of the stock transported by the defendant, still, if you further believe from the evidence that the injuries to said stock, if any, were the result of the negligence of the defendant, and that said injuries were not occasioned or contributed to by the negligence of said caretaker, then the verdict should be for the plaintiff." The instruction is not perfect, and the court should have qualified the reference to defendant's negligence by restricting it to the allegations contained in the petition, but, when this instruction is read in connection with the other instructions of the court on the same subject, it is not misleading, or prejudicially erroneous. Lincoln Traction Co. v. Brookover, 77 Neb. 217, 109 N. W. 168, 111 N. W. 357. The verdict is not excessive, nor for the amount of plaintiff's demand. The trial court was fair in its rulings and charge, and we are of opinion that defendant has had a fair trial, and is not in position to complain.

We therefore recommend that the judgment of the district court be affirmed.

Fawcett and Calkins, CC., concur.

Per Curiam:

For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion, the judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

LYDIA A. TEWKSBURY

v.

CITY OF LINCOLN, Appt.

(— Neb. —, 121 N. W. 994.)

Municipal corporation — defective sidewalk — negligence of agent — liability.

1. The making, improving, repairing, keeping in repair and in a safe condition, of streets and sidewalks by a municipal corporation, relate to its corporate interests only, and it is liable for the wrongful or negligent acts of its agents in performing such duties.

Same — injury — notice.

2. Where a sidewalk is rendered temporarily dangerous by the positive, negligent act of a city of the first class, and a per-

Headnotes by REESE, Ch. J.

Case Note. — Necessity of written notice as to defect as condition of liability of municipal corporation for injuries due to the positive act of its officers or servants.

Where an injury results from a defect in a street, due to the negligent act of an officer or servant of a city, no written notice is required in order to render the city liable in damages, under a char-son in passing over it, immediately or within less than five days thereafter, and in the absence of contributory negligence, receives a personal injury, the provisions of § 110 of the charter (Comp. Stat. 1907, chap. 13, art. 1, § 110), requiring five days' notice of the dangerous condition of the walk to be given the city before the accident, cannot be implied, and the city will be held liable for damages sustained by the person injured.

Same — contributory negligence — jury.

3. Evidence examined, and it is not found, as a matter of law, that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.

Appeal — instructions — objection — affirmance.

4. There being no specific objections ofter provision exempting a city from liability for injuries caused from streets, crossings, bridges, or sidewalks being out of repair, unless so remaining for ten days after special notice in writing is given the mayor or street commissioner. Houston v. Isaacks, 68 Tex. 116, 3 S. W. 693; Houston v. Owen (Tex. Civ. App.) 67 S. W. 788; Dallas v. McAllister (Tex. Civ. App.) 39 S. W. 173; Still v. Houston, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 447, 66 S. W. 76; Hughes v. Fond du Lac, 73 Wis. 380, 41 N. W. 407.

This doctrine was applied in Hughes v. Fond du Lac, supra, where the injury was occasioned by a large wooden roller left in a city street by the agents and servants of the city, as such injury was due to malfeasance, and not to misfeasance.

And this doctrine was applied in Houston v. Isaacks, supra, where an injury was received in consequence of an excavation in a street, made by one who had contracted to gravel it, and the city authorities, having become dissatisfied with the manner in which the work was being performed, had stopped the work, and left the excavation as the contractor had made it.

So, such a charter provision does not exempt a city from liability for ordinary negligence in failing to repair a broken grating near the corner of two of the principle streets and adjacent to the sidewalk, upon which a person stepped, and was injured. Peacock v. Dallas, 89 Tex. 438, 35 S. W. 8.

A charter provision that no action shall be maintained against a city for injuries caused from streets, sewers, etc., being out of repair due to the gross negligence of the city, unless the same shall have remained so for ten days after special notice in writing to the mayor or city engineer, does not apply to an injury caused by the caving in of the sewer in a city street near another break which had existed for two months. Dallas v. McAllister, supra.

And such notice is unnecessary where a city sold the fences on the property ferred to instructions given, nor to the refusal of the trial court to give an instruction asked, and, upon an examination of the whole record, it appearing that the case was fairly submitted to the jury, and no prejudicial error is found to have been committed, the judgment of the district court will be affirmed.

(June 11, 1909.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Lancaster County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

through which a street was opened, and authorized the purchaser to remove them, which he did without filling a hole close beside the walk, where a fence post had been removed, and a pedestrian stepped into the hole and was injured, as the act of the purchaser must be considered that of the city. Still v. Houston, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 447, 66 S. W. 76.

So, in Houston v. Owen, supra, this doctrine was applied where a city drawbridge was defectively constructed, and an employee whose duty it was to operate it thereby received an injury, as such charter provision has no reference to defects growing out of the manner of construction of streets, bridges, or sidewalks.

A statutory requirement of written notice to a city of the dangerous condition of a street, for the purpose of making the adjoining lots chargeable with the expense of repairing the street, has no application to the liability of the city for permitting a nuisance to remain in its street by means of which persons or property are injured. Harper v. Milwaukee, 30 Wis. 365.

But, the failure of a city to construct a crossing in the most substantial manner, which only remotely contributed to an injury to a traveler using it, the proximate cause being the failure to keep the same in repair, and the fact that the crossing had been out of repair for more than ten days prior to the injury, will not render the city liable in the absence of such written notice. Houston v. Vatter, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 298, 74 S. W. 806.

For cases holding that the positive act of a public contractor, or the officers or servants of a municipal corporation, in creating a defect which causes an injury to another, relieves the injured person from establishing either actual or constructive notice of the existence of such defect, see the subject note appended to Elam v. Mt. Sterling, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 689.

And for cases determining what is sufficient constructive or implied notice of defects, see 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 705.

their authority and in their ministerial or corporate character, in the management of property for their own benefit, or in the exercise of powers assumed voluntarily for their own advantage, are impliedly liable for damage caused by the negligence of their officers and agents, though they may be engaged in some work that will inure to the general benefit of the municipality. Grading streets, cleansing sewers, or keeping wharves in safe condition, from which a profit is derived, are duties of this character." See also Shinnick v. Marshalltown, 137 Iowa, 72, 114 N. W. 542; Hitchins Bros. v. Frostburg, 68 Md. 100, 6 Am. St. Rep. 422, 11 Atl. 826; Esberg-Gunst Cigar Co. v. Portland, 34 Or. 282, 43 L.R.A. 435, 75 Am. St. Rep. 651, 55 Pac. 961; Carson v. Genesee, 9 Idaho, 244, 108 Am. St. Rep. 127, 74 Pac. 862. Further discussion would seem to be unnecessary.

2. Is the five days' notice required in the section above quoted necessary? In other words, can the provisions of the section be applied to cases of this kind? We think not. To hold that five days' notice should be given for a wrong committed by the city itself one hour or one day before the occurrence of the accident, and of which the city already has absolute knowledge, would be in the highest degree ludicrous and attribute to the lawmaker a want of foresight, insight, and comprehension, which we cannot do. It is true that the statute provides that the city shall be "absolutely exempt from liability" unless such notice be given, but we must give a reasonable construction to the language of the act. The law never requires an impossible thing. The section presupposes that the defect in the public way must have existed at least five days; otherwise the notice would be impossible. But, even if the notice should be held necessary where the defect is caused by the elements, or the unauthorized act of third parties, it could not with any degree of reason be said that it could be required where the danger was created by the negligent act of the city itself. Suppose a deep water or sewer way trench was excavated across the street just before dark, and no lights or other signals of danger were placed to warn those using the street of its condition, and a person in passing over the street in the dark night, two hours later, with no knowledge of what had been done, should receive any injury by driving or falling into the opening, could one say that the legislature had in mind such a circumstance, and require the five days' notice of the condition of the street? We think not. In Lincoln v. Calvert, 39 Neb. 305, 58 N. W. 115, it is said in the syllabus: "While a city is liable only for injuries resulting from defects 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

brought to its notice or existing under such circumstances that ignorance of the defect amounts in itself to negligence, still, when the defect is caused by the direct act, order, or authority of the city, notice is necessarily implied." In Omaha v. Jensen, 35 Neb. 68, 37 Am. St. Rep. 432, 52 N. W. 833, we said (quoting from the syllabus): "Where a city causes an excavation to be made in a public street, it cannot plead want of notice of the failure to erect barriers to prevent accidents by falling into the excavation. It is its duty to see that such barriers are erected and kept up." In the body of the opinion it is said: "It is claimed the city is not liable because it had no notice, either actual or constructive. In a case of this kind no notice is necessary. The city had authorized the excavation in question, and it was its duty to see that the proper guards were placed around it." See also: Adams v. Oshkosh, 71 Wis. 49, 36 N. W. 614; Springfield v. Le Claire, 40 Ill. 476; Barton v. Syracuse, 36 N. Y. 54; Houston v. Isaacks, 68 Tex. 116, 3 S. W. 693; Still v. Houston, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 447, 66 S. W. 76; note 9 to 28 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 1389.

3. It is suggested that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in stepping on the icy sidewalk and bridge. We find nothing in the evidence by which we can say, as a matter of law, that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. That question was submitted to the jury under proper instructions, and their finding will have to stand.

4. Complaint is made of two instructions given, and one asked by defendant and refused. They are too long to be here copied, nor is it necessary to do so, as there is no specific criticism, and the instructions given fairly covered the whole case, as well as the one refused, and we find no error in them.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

PIERCE COUNTY et al., Resp'ts.

(51 Wash. 12, 97 Pac. 1099.)

Drainage district—land included.

1. Land not benefited may be included in a drainage district the organization of Note.—The above case seems to be one of first impression upon the right to assess land for the preliminary expenses incident to an unsuccessful attempt to form a drainage district, as an extensive search has failed to disclose any other case involving that particular question.

which is authorized by a statute permitting it, where the improvement would be of special benefit to a majority of the lands included within the boundaries of the district.

Same — preliminary expenses — land not benefited.

2. That land included in a drainage district has been found not to be subject to benefit by the proposed improvement will not prevent its assessment for the preliminary expenses of the enterprise, where it is abandoned because the cost is found to exceed the benefit.

Judgment — estoppel — drainage proceedings.

3. One who fails to object to the formation of a drainage district, or the inclusion of his lands therein, or to the proceedings under which the indebtedness of the district for preliminary expenses is determined, is estopped in a proceeding to enforce an assessment against his property for a share of such expenses, to object to anything but the constitutionality of the law under which the proceedings were had.

Drainage — failure of enterprise — costs.

4. The failure of an attempt to organize a drainage district under a valid statute does not prevent the assessment upon the property within its proposed boundaries, of the cost of the preliminary proceedings which resulted in such failure.

Tax — levy — constitutional limitation.

5. Statutory authority to levy a tax to pay the preliminary expenses of organizing a drainage district which fails does not violate a constitutional provision depriving the legislature of power to impose taxes upon the inhabitants of municipal corporations for municipal purposes, since the organization of the district is voluntarily entered into and the burden of paying the expenses necessary to effectuate its object voluntarily assumed.

Statute — amendment — reference to title.

6. A statute complete within itself, providing the procedure for raising the cost of the preliminary expenses of an attempt to organize a drainage district which failed, is not an amendment of the statute authorizing the organization of the district, so as to come within the operation of a constitutional requirement that no statute shall be amended by mere reference to its title.

(November 7, 1908.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Pierce County sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in a suit to enjoin the collection of a tax. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Messrs. B. S. Grosscup and W. C. Morrow, for appellant:

The imposition of a tax or assessment to defray expenses of the improvement district, which failed, is illegal and void as violating the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, as well as the Constitution of the state of Washington.

1 Desty, Taxn. §§ 355 et seq.; 2 Smith, Mun. Corp. §§ 1448, 1469, 1477; Re Westlake Ave. 40 Wash. 144, 82 Pac. 279.

A drainage district is not a municipal corporation.

Middle Kittitas Irrig. Dist. v. Peterson, 4 Wash. 147, 29 Pac. 995.

If the purpose of the burden cannot be considered a public purpose, the legislature must be held to have assumed an authority not conferred in the general grant of legislative power, and which is, therefore, unconstitutional and void.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 606; Citizens' Sav. & L. Asso. v. Topeka, 20 Wall. 655, 22 L. ed. 455.

Messrs. Emmett N. Parker and R. J. Burglehaus, with Messrs. H. G. Rowland and Robert M. Davis, for respondents:

Local assessment burdens do not come within that class of public tax which are limited by the constitutional provision relating to debt limitation upon municipal corporations.

Potter v. Whatcom, 25 Wash. 212, 65 Pac. 197.

The drainage district is such a municipal corporation, or public organization, as the legislature had ample power to create with the powers conferred.

1 Cooley, Taxn. 3d ed. 234.

The act was not an interference of the legislature in local taxation in violation of the constitutional provision.

State ex rel. Seattle v. Carson, 6 Wash. 250, 33 Pac. 428.

Dunbar, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case came up on appeal by the plaintiff from an order and judgment entered by the superior court of Pierce county, sustaining a demurrer to the complaint and dismissing the action. The complaint was addressed to the equity side of the court, and set up substantially the following facts: That the plaintiff is the Northern Pacific Railway Company; that Pierce county is a municipal corporation, and E. M. Lakin is treasurer of the same; that about the 10th day of September, 1904, drainage district No. 4 of the county of Pierce was established; that thereafter the said commissioners commenced a proceeding in the superior court of Pierce county, entitled "Frank R. Spinning, Charles A. Stewart, and T. S. Pierce, as the board of Drainage Commissioners of Drainage District No. 4 of Pierce County, Washington, Plaintiffs, and H. M. Anderson et al., Defendants," for the purpose of prosecuting the construction of a system of drainage within said district; that the plaintiff was joined as defendant in said proceeding, and filed its answer, denying that any benefit would accrue to it or its property by reason of the construction of said drainage ditch; that, upon a trial of the cause, verdict was entered by the jury exempting plaintiff and its property from any assessment on account of the construction of said ditch, on the ground that no benefit would accrue to plaintiff or its property by reason of such construction; that thereafter, on the 13th day of January 1906, said action was ordered to be dismissed by the superior court, for the reason that the estimated cost of the construction of the proposed improvement by said district, including damages to be paid, would exceed the benefit which would be assessed; that thereafter, to wit, on the 10th day of September, 1906, an order and decree was entered in this cause ascertaining the indebtedness, and directing a tax levy, wherein the total amount of warrants or evidences of indebtedness, with accruing interest, was ascertained to be $3,339.75, and the county commissioners were directed to levy a tax on the real estate within said district, exclusive of improvements, sufficient to pay said outstanding warrants and evidences of indebtedness; that thereafter the said county commissioners proceeded to and did levy a pretended tax upon the property of plaintiff in said district, amounting to the sum of $1,388.75; that the tax rolls and records of the defendant Pierce county, Washington, show such taxes levied against plaintiff's main line and side track; that defendants and each of them were threatening to enforce the collection of said pretended taxes by the sale, or attempted sale or conveyance, of said property; that plaintiff is greatly annoyed, injured, and hindered by the said pretended taxes and tax liens, and the assertion of the same by the defendants against plaintiff's property; that said pretended levy of taxes was assumed to be made by virtue of § 6, chap. 67, p. 90, of the Laws of the State of Washington for the Year 1903,—wherefore plaintiff prays that an injunction issue against defendants, and each of them, forever enjoining and restraining them from in any way attempting to enforce the collection of said pretended taxes. Other statements appear in the complaint, which are conclusions of law, and which it is not necessary to set forth. The defendants, through the prosecuting attorney H. G. Rowland, filed a demurrer to the complaint, which demurrer was sustained by the court.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It is the contention of the appellant that an examination of the various provisions of chapter 115, p. 271, Laws 1895, shows that the legislature had in mind but two classes of land to be included within the drainage district; to wit, those receiving benefit by reason of the proposed improvement, and those necessary to be condemned in carrying out the work; and, as it affirmatively appears that the appellant's lands were not benefited by reason of the judgment in that respect, and that the improvement was abandoned, it follows that its lands should not be taxed to pay the expenses of ascertaining whether or not the improvements should be made. This contention is not consistent with the provisions of § 4, chap. 115, p. 274, Laws 1895, for the reason that that section provides for the organization of a district where an improvement would be of special benefit to a majority of the lands included in the proposed boundaries, thereby especially negating the idea suggested by the appellant that the law contemplated the inclusion only of such lands as were benefited; and the constitutionality of this law was determined by this court in Lewis County v. Gordon, 20 Wash. 80, 54 Pac. 779, and subsequent cases. There is nothing in the complaint indicating that the proceedings leading up to the formation of the district were not in strict compliance with the law, nor that there was any objection to the incorporation of appellant's lands into the district. The essential complaint is only that the proceedings for the purpose of raising money to pay the preliminary expenses of the proposed improvement, which failed, were illegal, and that its lands should not be taxed, because it had been determined that they would not have been benefited by the improvement if it had been carried out. It is possible that an investigation to determine the benefits flowing from a proposed improvement might develop the fact that none of the lands in the district would be benefited by the improvement. In such case every owner could put forth the same objection to the payment of his share of the preliminary expenses as does the appellant here, and for the same reason. The improvement not having been made, there seems to be no reason in equity why all the lands in the district should not proportionately pay the expenses which were necessarily incurred in determining the question whether the improvement should be made, it being borne in mind that those expenses were not incurred in making an improvement which failed to benefit certain lands, but were expenses preliminary to determining the question above stated, — a question entirely foreign to any question of assessment of damages or benefits from or by the construction of the improvement. So that, no objection having been made by the appellant, at any stage of the proceedings, to the formation of the district and the inclusion of its lands in said district, nor to the petition and proceedings under which the decree determined the amount of the indebtedness of the district, the right of appeal from all of such proceedings existing, it is estopped to object to anything but the constitutionality of the law under which the assessment is sought to be made and the tax collected, for it seems plain that the provisions of the law have been complied with.

The constitutionality of the original act having been determined, the power complained of here, viz., the power to tax for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act, it seems to us, is necessarily incident to the main power conferred, and is not affected by the fact that the contemplated improvement has failed; for it became necessary, in order to carry out the original scheme contemplated and to determine facts which had to be determined in order to make the scheme effective, to incur the expenses complained of. The legislature in this instance has not violated § 12, article 11, of the State Constitution by imposing any tax upon it.

Nor is it necessary to determine whether this drainage district is a municipal corporation within the meaning of said § 12,* under which the power to assess and collect taxes is especially conferred. The state Constitution is a limitation, and not a grant, of power, and the legislature has supreme authority in the absence of constitutional limitations expressed or necessarily implied. This is an organization voluntarily entered into under powers, regulations, and forms prescribed by the legislature, and the burden of paying the expenses necessary to effectuate the object of the organization was voluntarily assumed by a vote of the people. As we said in State ex rel. Seattle v. Carson, 6 Wash. 250, 33 Pac. 428: "So long, therefore, as the tax is imposed by the corporate authorities, the evil sought to be avoided by the constitutional provisions is not incurred." In this case the burden being self-imposed, there is no room to exclaim against legislative power. Nor do we think that chapter 67, p. 87, Laws 1903, falls under the ban of § 37, article 2, of the Constitution, which provides that "no act shall ever be revised or amended by mere reference to its title, but the act revised or the section amended shall be set forth at full length," for the reason that an examination of the act plainly shows that it is a law of procedure complete within itself.

There appearing to be no valid constitutional objections to the law under which the tax is sought to be collected, and it not appearing that there has been any violation or misconstruction of the law, the judgment is affirmed.

Mount, Rudkin, Fullerton, and Root, JJ., concur. Hadley, Ch. J., and Crow, J., took no part.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

CHARLES J. MCKAIN, Plff. in Err.,

v.

BALTIMORE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY.

(—W. Va. —, 64 S. E. 18.)

Carrier — police — injury to passenger — liability.

1. A special officer appointed and commissioned by the governor at the instance of a railroad company, under the provisions of § 31, chap. 145, Code 1899 (Code 1906, § 4281), and paid by such company for his services, is prima facie a public officer, for

Headnotes by POFFENBARGER, J.

Case Note. — Liability of private person or corporation for acts of special police officer appointed by public authority.

The doctrine of MCKAIN v. BALTIMORE & O. R. Co. represents the great weight of authority on the question of the liability of an employer for the acts of a special policeman. In some cases ordinary watchmen, at the request of their employer, have been sworn in as deputy sheriffs, in order to enable them to make arrests; and in those cases the employer has generally been held

*That provision is as follows: Sec. 12. The legislature shall have no power to impose taxes upon counties, cities, towns, or other municipal corporations, or upon the inhabitants or property thereof, for county, city, town, or other municipal purposes, but may, by general laws, vest in the corporate authorities thereof the power to assess and collect taxes for such purposes. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

whose wrongful acts such company is not liable.

Same — authorized acts — liability.

2. If such an officer is engaged in special service for the company, such as guarding its property or enforcing obedience to its rules and regulations, and does a wrongful act for which the injured party is entitled to damages, and such act was within the scope of such service or employment, the company is liable as in the case of its regular employees, such as conductors and station masters.

Same — unauthorized acts.

3. But the company is not liable for a false arrest, assault and battery, and malicious prosecution, not directed nor instigated by it, and founded upon an alleged breach of the peace at one of its stations, in no way affecting or involving, so far as the evidence discloses, any of its property, rights, or servants, nor growing out of any transaction between the plaintiff and the company, although the plaintiff was rightfully in the station, having a ticket and awaiting the arrival of a train, and the alleged breach of the peace, arrest, and assault and battery, occurred on the premises of the company.

Trial — verdict — evidence — sufficiency.

4. Evidence disclosing the facts and circumstances above stated, and nothing more, is insufficient to sustain a verdict against the railway company, at whose instance the special officer was appointed, and by whom he was paid for his public services, and the trial court properly set it aside.

(March 2, 1909.)

responsible for false arrests by such watchmen.

In Hershey v. O'Neill, 36 Fed. 168, the owner of a store was held not liable for the malicious prosecution and false imprisonment of plaintiff, who was arrested on a charge of the larceny of an umbrella, where it appeared that plaintiff was discovered taking an umbrella from the store and was arrested by a special police officer, appointed by virtue of a state statute to guard the store. It was contended that, as the officer was in the pay and sole employment of defendant, the latter was liable for the arrest and false imprisonment, but the court held that, notwithstanding the fact that the officer was paid by the defendant, he was still a public officer, and acted in his official capacity in making the arrest.

In Wells v. Washington Market Co. 8 Mackey, 385, a person who was employed by the defendant company to collect rents and keep order in the markets, but without authority from the company to make arrests, was also appointed a special policeman to guard the market and make arrests when necessary; and it was held that the company was not liable for an arrest made by such person, since he acted in a dual capacity, being both a private servant and a public officer, and was acting in the capacity of a public officer in making the arrest.

In Hardy v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 58 Ill. App. 278, it was held that the mere fact that a special policeman, commissioned at the request of the railroad company for the guarding of its property, and paid by it, caused the arrest and imprisonment of plaintiffs, who were found picking up potatoes which had been thrown from the cars, did not render the railroad company liable in an action for arrest and false imprisonment, for, while the special policeman testified that he was instructed to arrest people whom he found picking up stuff on the company's grounds, it was not disclosed who gave such instruction.

In Sullivan v. Old Colony R. Co. 148 Mass. 119, 1 L.R.A. 513, 18 N. E. 678, a railroad company was held not liable for the acts of its conductor, who was also a police officer, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

where he, without making an arrest, removed a drunken passenger from the passenger car to the baggage car, using no more force than was necessary, the court saying the statute making conductors police officers, with power to arrest in certain cases, did not do away with their common-law right to remove drunken or disorderly passengers.

In Healey v. Lothrop, 171 Mass. 263, 50 N. E. 540, the keeper of an amusement hall had procured the appointment of a special policeman to keep order on his premises, for whose services he paid, but whose official conduct was governed by the police commissioners and his own sense of public duty. Such keeper was required by statute to give bond to the city treasurer, "to be liable to parties aggrieved by any official misconduct of such police officer, to the same extent as for the torts of agents and servants in their employment," there being a provision for proceedings upon such bond in the same manner as upon bonds of constables. The keeper was held not responsible for the assault and battery on his premises committed by such special police officer, because whatever was done, was done in the capacity of police officer; the court saying that, "had the statute meant to make the officer the servant of the person who applies for his appointment, . . . it would have said so."

In Tolchester Beach Improv. Co. v. Steinmeier, 72 Md. 313, 8 L.R.A. 846, 20 Atl. 188, it was held that a policeman appointed on the application of a corporation, which is required by law to pay his salary, is an officer of the state; and the corporation is not responsible for his acts as such officer in making an arrest, especially if it is not done on the premises of the corporation, since he does not act in the matter as its agent, but as an officer of the state.

In Cordner v. Boston & M. R. Co. 72 N. H. 413, 57 Atl. 234, defendant's conductor had been sworn in as special policeman under a statute providing that "railroad police officers may preserve order within and about the premises and upon the cars of the corporation upon whose petition they were ap-

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Marion County to review an order setting aside a verdict for plaintiff and granting a new trial in an action brought to recover damages for false arrest and assault and battery. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Harry Shaw for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. U. N. Arnett, Jr., and John Bassel for defendant in error.

Poffenbarger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Charles J. McKain complains of an order made by the circuit court of Marion county, setting aside a verdict in his favor for $300, and awarding the defendant, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, a new trial in the case. The action is for damages for false arrest and imprisonment, and assault and battery, alleged to have been committed by the defendant through its agents, and refusal to carry and transport the plaintiff, as it had contracted to do by selling him a ticket. The arrest was predicated on an alleged assault committed at the Fairmont station of the defendant upon Mrs. J. H. Downey, wife of the special officer who made the arrest. The evidence bearing on the question of probable cause therefor is highly conflicting, and renders it one clearly proper for jury determination. The plaintiff denies having molested the lady in any way, and she, her husband, and another man, stoutly assert the contrary, saying he rudely pushed or shoved her as he passed pointed; they may arrest without a warrant all idle, intoxicated, or disorderly persons frequenting such premises or cars, and obstructing or annoying, by their presence or conduct, the traveling public using the same, and all persons committing thereon any offense known to the laws of the state, and may take the persons so arrested to the nearest police station, or other place of lawful detention in the county where the offense was committed." The defendant was held not liable in an action for false imprisonment where such conductor arrested plaintiff for a suspected larceny committed previously to the arrest, especially as the conductor was off duty at the time, and made the arrest at the direction of the city marshal, and there was some question as to the legality of his appointment.

In Tucker v. Erie R. Co. 69 N. J. L. 19, 54 Atl. 557, it was held that railway policemen commissioned by the governor under the act respecting railroads and canals, although appointed on the application of the railway company, receiving their compensation from it, and subject to be divested of their powers by its acts, are nevertheless state officers, charged with the performance of public duties, and, for the proper discharge of their duties and exercise of their official power, are responsible not to the company, but to the state, so that the railroad company was held not liable for the false arrest of plaintiff by such special policemen, on a charge of stealing journals from the cars, since it was not shown that the officers acted at the instigation of the company.

In Tyson v. Joseph H. Bauland Co. 186 N. Y. 397, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 267, 79 N. E. 3, it was held that a shopkeeper was not responsible for the arrest, by a special officer appointed at his request and paid by him, of a person who, under suspicious circumstances, had possession of a satchel stolen from a counter where it had been placed by a customer.

And the same rule is laid down in Samuel v. Wanamaker, 107 App. Div. 433, 95 N. Y. Supp. 270, where the arrest was made by the special policeman outside the store, and 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the company's clerks advised plaintiff's release on the ground that there was insufficient evidence to show that she was guilty of larceny.

And in Thomas v. Canadian P. R. Co. 14 Ont. L. Rep. 55, 8 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 324, the railroad company was held not liable for an arrest by its watchman, who had also, at the company's request, been appointed a constable under a statute empowering him to "act as a constable for the preservation of the peace, and for the security of persons and property against unlawful acts on such railway, and on any other works belonging thereto," etc., where the arrest was made off the company's property, and without its authority, express or implied.

And the same rule was laid in Dennison v. Canadian P. R. Co. 36 N. B. 250, where the arrest was made by one of the company's constables, employed and paid by it, and appointed by the governor, at its request, to do special duty on its line.

And, in Allen v. London & S. W. R. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. 65, a railroad company was held not liable for a false arrest made by its station policeman at the command of its clerk, whose duty it was to issue tickets and keep the till.

So, in Edwards v. Midland R. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 287, it was held that a corporation was not liable for a wrongful arrest and malicious prosecution by a detective policeman employed by it to protect its property.

In Illinois Steel Co. v. Novak, 84 Ill. App. 641, affirmed in 184 Ill. 501, 56 N. E. 966, a railroad company was held liable for an assault and battery inflicted on a trespasser on the company's grounds by the company's servant, who had been sworn in by the police department of the city to act as special policeman to protect the property of the railroad company, to eject trespassers, etc., and who reported to the foreman of the railroad company for his instructions.

In American Exp. Co. v. Patterson, 73 Ind. 430, an express company was held liable for the false imprisonment of plaintiff, who was arrested and fined by its special them, while they were standing and engaged in conversation. It is hardly necessary to say this made a case proper for jury determination, if the railway company is responsible for the acts done by Downey; the arrest, assault and battery, and imprisonment being regarded, agreeably to the finding of the jury, as having been inflicted without probable cause or justification. Downey was a special policeman, commissioned by the governor of the state by virtue of the authority vested in him by § 31 of chapter 145 of the Code of 1899 (Code 1906, § 4281), upon the application of the defendant, and employed and paid by it. He had qualified as such officer, and filed a copy of his oath of office in the clerk's office of the county court of the county in which he made the arrest. His powers are thus defined in the section of the statute above named: "Every police officer appointed under the provisions of this act shall be a conservator of the peace within each county in which any part of said railroad may be situated, and in which such oath or a certified copy thereof shall have been filed with the clerk of the county court or other tribunal established in lieu thereof; and, in addition thereto, he shall possess and may exercise all the powers and authority, and shall be constable on a charge of larceny. In this case the servant was held to have acted within the scope of his employment, as the company had expressly authorized the making of arrests in case of embezzlement or larceny.

So, in Dickson v. Waldron, 135 Ind. 507, 24 L.R.A. 483, 41 Am. St. Rep. 440, 34 N. E. 506, 35 N. E. 1, the proprietor of a theater was held liable for the acts of its janitor and ticket seller, who had also been appointed special policeman for the theater, and who received his instruction and pay from the manager of the theater, where the special policeman, before making the arrest, assaulted the plaintiff several times. The court here held that the policeman's acts in assaulting plaintiff were committed in the course of his employment as servant, and not as police officer, but expressly refused to pass upon the manager's liability for the arrest itself.

In Krulevitz v. Eastern R. Co. 143 Mass. 228, 9 N. E. 613, a finding against the railroad company in an action for arrest, false imprisonment, and malicious prosecution, was sustained where it appeared that the company's conductor, who was also a police officer by virtue of a state statute, with power to arrest in certain cases, informed plaintiff, who had no money to pay for his ride, and whose ticket had expired, that he must get off or be arrested when he reached his destination, but allowed him to ride until the destination was reached, when the conductor had plaintiff arrested by the local authorities, the court saying it was proper for the jury to find from the facts that the conductor, in causing the arrest, acted in his capacity of conductor, and not as officer.

In Foster v. Grand Rapids R. Co. 140 Mich. 689, 104 N. W. 380, a street railway company was held liable in an action for damages for assault and battery, where a special deputy sheriff, who was paid by the street railway company, and whose duty it was to preserve order at a resort owned by the company, and ride upon the cars and prevent disturbances, assaulted a passenger on a car, in assisting the conductor to eject him for nonpayment of fare, since the officer in so doing represented not the public, but his employer.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Brill v. Eddy, 115 Mo. 596, 22 S. W. 488, a railroad company was held liable in an action for personal injuries received by plaintiff while stealing a ride on defendant's train, where the defendant's watchman, who was also a special policeman appointed at the instance of the railroad company, in whose pay and employment as such special policeman as well as watchman he had been for eight years past, caught hold of the boy as he was clinging to a moving car, and negligently pulled him off, not for the purpose of arresting him, but to get the boy away from the car and drive him off the company's grounds.

In King v. Illinois C. R. Co. 69 Miss. 245, 10 So. 42, under a statute empowering railroad station agents to arrest and deliver to the sheriff or other proper officer any person guilty of disorderly conduct about the station, such agent was held not to be an officer of the state, so as to relieve his employer from liability for the false arrest made by him, although the agent supposed he was acting as a conservator of the peace in making the arrest.

In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Warner, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 463, 49 S. W. 254, a jury finding against the railroad company in an action for false imprisonment was upheld where plaintiff was arrested by defendant's station master, who also, at defendant's request, had been appointed a special policeman, for selling tickets on the station platform in violation of a city ordinance, the undisputed evidence being that, at the time of making the arrest, the special policeman was in the employ and pay of the railroad company, and that the arrest was made by him upon its platform while so employed.

In Texas & P. R. Co. v. Bowlin (Tex. Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 918, a railroad company was held liable for the injury to a passenger caused by an assault by its depot policeman, where the passenger, who was slightly intoxicated, turned to re-enter the station after having been started toward his train, whereupon the policeman hit him in the eye with his billy.

In Higby v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 209 Pa. 452, 58 Atl. 858, it was held that under a statute authorizing the arrest, without a warrant, of a person trespassing on cars or entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities, within such counties, as are now, or may hereafter be, vested in or conferred upon the regularly elected or appointed constables of said county." The statute also authorizes any railroad company at whose instance such an appointment has been made to dispense with the services of the officer by filing a notice to that effect, and thereupon his powers "cease and determine."

The reported decisions indicate that statutes similar to ours, providing for the appointment of special police officers at the instance of corporations and payment by them for their services, have been passed in many locomotives, a special police officer in the service of the railroad company acted within the scope of his authority in arresting, without a warrant, a person who had been a trespasser on the railroad company, but who had jumped off the car and was in the act of escaping at the time of the arrest.

It has been held to be a question of fact for the jury whether, when the special policeman performed the acts, he was acting in his capacity as servant or as public officer.

Where the officer was in the pay and employment of a railroad company, being authorized by them to protect its property against trespassers, and shot the plaintiff while he was stealing a ride on one of the trains. Deck v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 100 Md. 168, 108 Am. St. Rep. 399, 59 Atl. 650.

Where the company's watchman, who was paid $50 a month by it to protect its interests on the right of way, to keep tramps from trains, and look after robberies that might occur at stations and on freight cars, to look after persons in an intoxicated condition about the stations, and generally to look after crimes committed against the railroad company on its right of way, but who was at the same time a police officer,—pursued a boy who had been stealing a ride on one of defendant's trains, along the right of way and onto an adjoining field, where a bullet from the officer's pistol killed the boy. Sharp v. Erie R. Co. 184 N. Y. 100, 76 N. E. 923, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 250.

In St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hackett, 58 Ark. 381, 41 Am. St. Rep. 105, 24 S. W. 381, a railroad company was held liable for the malicious injury of plaintiff, who was injured by the company's night watchman, who had also been made a deputy sheriff so that he might arrest trespassers, but who was not under the control of the sheriff, but in the exclusive employ of the company. The court here holds that a sheriff or deputy cannot engage to guard the private property of a railroad, and hence that he was not acting as an officer in the matter, but as a servant within the scope of his employment, while the case of Tolchester Beach Improv. Co. v. Steinmeier, 72 Md. 313, 8 L.R.A. 846, 20 Atl. 188, is distinguished on the ground that in the Steinmeier Case the officer was acting outside the scope of his employment. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) of the states and construed by several of the courts. While no decision of this court deals with the identical questions presented, namely, the status of such an officer and the extent to which his employer is liable for his acts, the numerous decisions of other courts having persuasive authority with us render it comparatively easy to solve these questions. Such officers act, in the opinion of the courts, sometimes as servants of the company employing them, and sometimes as officers of the state. Deck v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 100 Md. 168, 108 Am. St. Rep. 399, 59 Atl. 650; Foster v. Grand Rapids R. Co. 140 Mich. 689, 104 N. W. 380; Brill v. Eddy,

In Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Parsons (Tex.) 113 S. W. 914, it appeared that the railroad company had procured the county sheriff to appoint two deputies, whose duty it was to guard the company's property and to prevent trespass and depredation by tramps, the officers' services to be paid for by the railroad company. One of the deputies, in accordance with his instructions, was compelling some tramps to leave the company's yard when he fired upon plaintiff, injuring him, and the company was held liable, the court saying that the deputy was acting in the course of his employment as watchman, and not as a public officer; but in this case also there seems to have been no authority for the sheriff to appoint a deputy to guard private property.

And in Kastner v. Long Island R. Co. 76 App. Div. 323, 78 N. Y. Supp. 469, a railroad company was held liable for an unlawful arrest by a special officer who had been set to watch people suspected of stealing coal, and instructed, if any of them were caught, to lock them up, although the arrest was made several blocks distant from the premises of the railroad company, and his instructions limited his authority to the premises.

And so, where a mayor, having no legal authority to do so, has appointed a special policeman for the railroad company, which pays his salary, the company is liable for a wrongful arrest made by him. Union Depot & R. Co. v. Smith, 16 Colo. 361, 27 Pac. 329, and Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Galliher, 89 Va. 639, 16 S. E. 935.

But, in O'Donnell v. Canada Foundry Co. 5 Ont. Week. Rep. 215, it was held where the defendant company made application to the high constable of the county for police protection, and two officers of the force were delegated to protect the company's property, for whose services the company paid, but whose instructions were received from the chief constable, that the company was not liable for the false arrest by such officers, since they were not servants, but were public officers.

For cases dealing with the liability of a master for arrest or false imprisonment by a servant employed as detective, policeman, or watchman, generally, see note to Milton v. Missouri P. R. Co. 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 282.

to be made or the plaintiff to be prosecuted, although a floor walker had brought the loss to the attention of the officer, the court held: that the trial court should have directed a verdict for the defendant. The subject of the alleged theft was not goods or property of the store, but money of another customer who happened to be in the store at the time. In Smith v. South Eastern R. Co. L. R. 5 C. P. 640, there had been a controversy between railway servants and the plaintiff. Incidentally a special officer employed and paid by the company assaulted the plaintiff and others. After the struggle was over, the special officer gave the plaintiff into custody. The court held the company not liable, because the act of giving him into custody was beyond the scope of the servant's employment. One of the rules of the company said any officer or servant sworn as a constable for the district or place where he was on duty might take into custody anyone whom he saw commit an assault upon another at any of its stations, for the purpose of putting an end to any fight or affray, but not if the affray had come to an end. It appeared from the evidence of the plaintiff that he was not given into custody until after the fight had ended, and the court said: "We are disposed to draw the inference in fact that Antonio, in giving the plaintiff into custody, was not acting within the scope of his employment by the company, or on behalf of or for the benefit of the company." Agreeably to this, the court said in Dickson v. Waldron, cited supra: "If, however, after entering the theater, he [the officer] should discover appellee in the act of violating a criminal law of the state or a penal ordinance of the city, and should proceed to arrest him for it, such act of arrest would be that of a police officer. And, if such arrest were made on the officer's own motion, without direction, express or implied, on the part of appellants, then appellants would not be responsible."

In view of these precedents and principles, we are of the opinion that the railway company is not liable to the plaintiff for the injuries inflicted upon him. He was not arrested or prosecuted for any act respecting the railway company or its property. The offense with which he was charged was an act done respecting the wife of the prosecuting officer, and did not in anyway involve any right of the company. That it was done upon the premises of the railway company is, in our opinion, immaterial. The motive of the arrest, assault, and prosecution clearly appears to have been either vindication of the law, or a desire on the part of the officer to avenge the insult to his wife or to comply with her wishes; and in none of these aspects of the case would the company be responsible for the acts, however unjustifiable they may have been. Nor is it material that the plaintiff had a return ticket, was lawfully at the station awaiting a train, and was not carried by the railway company. According to the evidence, his losses and injuries were all caused by Downey, not the railway company.

Perceiving no error in the judgment, we affirm it, with costs and damages.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

FRANK RAHLES, Respt.,

v.

J. THOMPSON & SONS MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Appt.

(137 Wis. 506, 118 N. W. 350.)

Pleading — amendment — conditions.

1. It is not error to permit an amendment at the trial of a complaint, which brings about no radical change of issues, without granting a continuance, and to limit the costs to be paid by the plaintiff as a condition to receiving the relief demanded.

Master — instructions — foreigner.

2. The duty of a master to warn of the dangers incident to machinery an adult foreigner who has been in the country only a few years, and cannot speak English, and is illiterate, is only such as he owes to any ordinarily intelligent but inexperienced adult servant.

Same — drop hammer.

3. A master is not required to warn an ordinarily intelligent but inexperienced adult employed about a drop hammer that the pressing down of the treadle when the hammer is uplifted will cause the hammer to fall, and the danger of injury therefrom to his hands should they be under it.

On Rehearing.

Appeal — finding of jury — conclusiveness.

4. The appellate court will not permit a jury to give damages to one person and withhold them from another upon the same evidence in an action for damages for personal injuries upon their conclusion as to his intelligence from his personal appearance, on the theory that, the jury having the witness before them, their finding is binding upon the appellate court.

(November 10, 1908.)

Case Note. — Duty of master as to instructing and warning servant unable to understand English.

In Valente v. American Bridge Co. (Del.) 73 Atl. 395, it was contended that the duty of the master to instruct and warn his APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Rock County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

Statement by Timlin, J.:

Among other references upon the part of the appellant were the following: Vorbrich v. Geuder & P. Co. 96 Wis. 277, 71 N. W. 434; Odegard v. North Wisconsin Lumber Co. 130 Wis. 659, 110 N. W. 809; Malloy v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 109 Wis. 29, 85 N. W. 130; Meisenheimer v. Kellogg, 106 Wis. 30, 81 N. W. 1033; Cole v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 71 Wis. 114, 5 Am. St. Rep. 201, 37 N. W. 84; Wagner v. Plano Mfg. Co. 110 Wis. 48, 85 N. W. 643; Dougherty v. West Superior Iron & Steel Co. 88 Wis. 343, 60 N. W. 274; Dahlke v. Illinois Steel Co. 100 Wis. 431, 76 N. W. 362; Gereg v. Milwaukee Gaslight Co. 128 Wis. 35, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 367, 107 N. W. 289; Grams v. C. Reiss Coal Co. 125 Wis. 1, 102 N. W. 586; Stutz v. Armour, 84 Wis. 623, 54 N. W. 1000; Ralph v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 32 Wis. 177, 14 Am. Rep. 725; Sobey v. Thomas, 39 Wis. 317; Hinton v. Cream City R. Co. 65 Wis. 323, 27 N. W. 147; Smith v. Milwaukee Builders' & T. Exchange, 91 Wis. 360, 30 L.R.A. 504, 51 Am. St. Rep. 912, 64 N. W. 1041.

Among other references upon the part of the respondent were the following: Stat. 1898, § 2669; Hopkins v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 128 Wis. 403, 107 N. W. 330; Stat. 1898, § 2830; Laws 1899, chap. 307; McIlquham v. Barber, 83 Wis. 500, 53 N. W. 902; Johnson v. Ashland Water Co. 71 Wis. 553, 5 Am. St. Rep. 243, 37 N. W. 823; Cobb

v. Simon, 110 Wis. 597, 100 Am. St. Rep. 909, 97 N. W. 276; Wolski v. Knapp-Stout & Co. Co. 90 Wis. 178, 63 N. W. 87; Neilon v. Marinette & M. Paper Co. 75 Wis. 579, 44 N. W. 772; Nadaw v. White River Lumber Co. 76 Wis. 120, 20 Am. St. Rep. 29, 43 N. W. 1135; Yess v. Chicago Brass Co. 124 Wis. 406, 102 N. W. 932; Gussart v. Greenleaf Stone Co. 134 Wis. 418, 114 N. W. 799; Dwyer v. American Exp. Co. 82 Wis. 307, 33 Am. St. Rep. 44, 52 N. W. 304; Wysocki v. Wisconsin Lakes Ice & Cartage Co. 121 Wis. 96, 98 N. W. 950; McMahon v. Ida Min. Co. 95 Wis. 308, 60 Am. St. Rep. 117, 70 N. W. 478; Thompson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 4 McCrary, 629, 14 Fed. 564; Walker v. Simmons Mfg. Co. 131 Wis. 542, 111 N. W. 694; Friemark v. Rosenkrans, 81 Wis. 359, 51 N. W. 557.

Mr. Robert N. McMynn, with Mr. Charles A. Villas, for appellant.

Mr. O. A. Oestreich, with Mr. John L. Fisher, for respondent.

Timlin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The original complaint was quite inartistic, but, after setting forth the age, nationality, and occupation of the plaintiff and his lack of knowledge of the English language, and the corporate character and the business of the defendant, it averred: Lack of knowledge of machinery and of the dangers attending its operation, and lack of experience on the part of the plaintiff. Defendant had and used a described drop hammer, out of repair and defective. Defendant, knowing the plaintiff's want of experience, and without instructing the plaintiff concerning his duties, except as specified, and

Italian servant was imposed because of the servant's ignorance of the English language and his unfamiliarity with the work he was directed to do. The court instructed the jury that the master, in giving instructions and warnings, may, in the absence of knowledge to the contrary, assume that the servant has the knowledge and discernment which a person of his age and intelligence ordinarily possesses, and directed the jury to determine from the evidence whether the servant, by reason of inexperience, inability to speak or understand the English language, and want of proper instructions, was in fact without knowledge of the danger attending his work. On writ of error in (Del.) 73 Atl. 400, the court said that, while it appeared that the servant could neither speak nor understand the English language, it also appeared that he was not entirely unfamiliar with the work he was directed to do, and it was not shown that he was not a man of at least ordinary intelligence, from which it was concluded that the testimony did not tend to show that it 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) was the duty of the master to instruct such servant respecting the work he was ordered to do, and warn him of the dangers incident thereto.

In Lobstein v. Sajatovich, 111 Ill. App. 654, the court stated that, "in the case at bar, the evidence does not, by any means, satisfy us that appellee did not understand English sufficiently to comprehend fully what was said to him in that language;" nevertheless, it laid down the dictum that, in ordinary cases, unless the master's attention is called to the fact that one or more of his employees do not understand the language of the country sufficiently to comprehend his order or warning, it may well be doubted whether he is guilty of negligence or want of ordinary care if he assumes that his employees all understand an order or warning plainly given in the vernacular.

As to the liability of a master as affected by the inability of a fellow servant to understand English, see case note to Beers v. Isaac Prouty & Co. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 39.

without warning the plaintiff that there was any danger in working about the drop hammer, or that it was liable to fall, ordered the plaintiff to assist the operator of the drop hammer. Plaintiff, assisting without knowledge of the danger, was injured by the hammer dropping upon his hand, which, in consequence of this injury, was amputated. That if the said defendant, by its officers or agents, its superintendent and foreman acting as vice principals, had warned or in any manner instructed the plaintiff as to the dangers and the use of the said hammer, the precautions to be taken about the same, plaintiff would not have been injured in any manner and would have avoided the said injury. Again: "That the cause of the injury to this plaintiff was the neglect of the said defendant . . . to warn the said plaintiff of the dangers and of the dangerous condition of the said machine." No defect in the machine having been shown, but the evidence on the part of the plaintiff tending to show that the plaintiff accidentally stepped on the treadle of the drop hammer while having his hand in the path of the descending hammer, the defendant, at the close of the plaintiff's evidence, moved that the plaintiff be nonsuited. Plaintiff then asked leave to amend his complaint, presenting an amended complaint, which is the same as the original complaint, except that therein the negligence of the defendant was predicated not upon any defect in the machine, but upon the ignorance and inexperience of the plaintiff, known to the defendant, and the failure of the defendant to instruct or warn the plaintiff before or at the time of placing plaintiff to work upon the drop hammer. The court allowed this amended complaint to be filed, whereupon counsel for the defendant asked for the "continuance of the case over the term, the immediate taxing by the clerk of this court of the taxable disbursements of the defendant down to this time, and the usual attorney fee of $25. By the court: The motion is granted upon the sole ground that $10 costs be paid forthwith." Exception to this ruling was taken, and error is assigned on this ruling.

We perceive no error in the ruling. It was proper to allow the amendment on the trial. Gates v. Paul, 117 Wis. 170, 94 N. W. 55. Where the complaint is amended on the trial, in order to entitle the defendant to a continuance, he must make a showing, if not by affidavit, at least by a statement to the court, based on the pleadings apparently supporting such statement, that he is unprepared to meet, and cannot, with the evidence at hand or available, meet, the issues raised by the amended complaint. Withee v. Simon, 104 Wis. 116, 80 N. W. 77. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The amendment here brought about no radical change of the issues, and the terms were in the discretion of the court. Illinois Steel Co. v. Budzisz, 106 Wis. 499, 48 L.R.A. 830, 80 Am. St. Rep. 54, 81 N. W. 1027, 82 N. W. 534; McIlquham v. Barber, 83 Wis. 500, 53 N. W. 902; Pellage v. Pellage, 32 Wis. 136, 141; Schaller v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 97 Wis. 31, 71 N. W. 1042. Neither do we think there was error in the rulings relative to the argument made to the jury by plaintiff's attorney. The attorneys for defendant seem to have been quite critical in this regard. It is too much to expect that, in extemporaneous argument to a jury, rules of law will always be accurately understood and precisely stated by the speaker, and it is much easier to be critical of, than to be correct in, such statements. All the other errors assigned go to one point, namely: Was there a duty resting upon defendant to warn the plaintiff of the danger of stepping upon or coming in contact with the treadle, or pointing out to the plaintiff the treadle and its function and the consequence of pressing down thereon?

The plaintiff was a man grown, twenty-four or twenty-five years of age, a Lithuanian by birth, having little or no knowledge of the English language, and had resided in this country four years, and worked at trucking in the shop in question for about a month prior to his injury. This work included bringing material to this drop hammer, and leaving it there to be pressed into shape by the operator of the drop hammer. He had also worked at the back of the drop hammer, cleaning up the dies, on the afternoon of Saturday and for an hour or two on Monday morning, up to the time he was hurt. His place of work was at the back of the drop hammer, and, had he remained there, he would not have come in contact with the treadle; but he testifies that he was directed to also do such work as he might be directed to do by the operator; that a small piece of iron used in wedging or adjusting the die fell out, as it had done several times before, and that, at request of the operator, he went around from the back to the front of the drop hammer, put his hand under the upraised hammer to insert this small piece of iron, and, while so engaged, with his hand in this position, his foot probably came in contact with the treadle, which caused the hammer to drop on his hand. The treadle was a long bar, about 4 inches from the floor, extending in front of the anvil, and about 3 inches beyond at each end, and, of course, was very conspicuous.

The plaintiff was entitled to the rights and subject to the duties of any other adult man. We cannot presume that, because he was born in a foreign country, resided in this country only four years, and could not speak English, and was illiterate, he did not possess ordinary common sense and shrewdness, or that he falls within the legal rules applicable to children. The employer was therefore justified in presuming the plaintiff to be an inexperienced adult of ordinary intelligence. The duty of the employer to instruct or warn such person was only that which the rules of law impose upon him with respect to any ordinarily intelligent but inexperienced adult servant. This rule has been stated affirmatively as follows: "The duty of informing the inexperienced employee of the dangers ordinarily incident to the service is upon the employer." Wolski v. Knapp-Stout & Co. Co. 90 Wis. 178, 63 N. W. 87. "If a master employs a servant to do work in a dangerous place, or where the mode of doing the work is dangerous and apparent to a person of capacity and knowledge of the subject, yet, if the servant employed to do work of such a dangerous character or in a dangerous place, from youth, inexperience, ignorance, or want of general capacity, may fail to appreciate the dangers, it is a breach of duty on the part of the master to expose a servant of such character, even with his own consent, to such dangers, unless he first gives him such instructions or cautions as will enable him to comprehend them and do his work safely, with proper care on his part." Jones v. Florence Min. Co. 66 Wis. 268, 57 Am. Rep. 269, 28 N. W. 207:

The rule as laid down broadly for this state in the foregoing cases is much more favorable to the injured employee than the rule on the subject derived from decisions elsewhere. Labatt, Mast. & S. chap. 16. Negatively it has been said: "Warning is not required against obvious dangers in ordinary operations which are matters of common knowledge to all." Wagner v. Plano Mfg. Co. 110 Wis. 48, 85 N. W. 643. "The duty to instruct, as between master and servant, does not exist as to dangers which are so obvious that the servant must be held, as a matter of law, to be as familiar with them as the master." Groth v. Thomann, 110 Wis. 488, 86 N. W. 178. The master, in order to charge him with this duty, must have known, or ought, in the exercise of reasonable care, to have known, of the inexperience or lack of knowledge of the servant, and also of the dangerous character of the work. Klochinski v. Shores Lumber Co. 93 Wis. 417, 67 N. W. 934; Sherman v. Menominee River Lumber Co. 77 Wis. 14, 45 N. W. 1079. The adult employee is presumed to understand the ordinary risks of his employment. Nash v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 95 Wis. 327, 70 N. W. 293. "Failure 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to instruct or warn an employee as to the risks and hazards attending the employment is not negligence, unless the employer knew, or ought to have known, that such warning and instruction was necessary." Sladky v. Marinette Lumber Co. 107 Wis. 250, 83 N. W. 514. Again: "The duty to instruct does not go so far as to require the master to acquaint the employee with every possible danger to which he may be subjected in the course of his employment. The master has a right to assume that the servant will see and appreciate those dangers which are open and obvious to a person of ordinary comprehension." Dahlke v. Illinois Steel Co. 100 Wis. 431, 76 N. W. 362. To the same effect, Thompson v. Edward P. Allis Co. 89 Wis. 523, 62 N. W. 527.

Applying these rules to the case in hand, it is apparent that the defendant had a right to believe that the plaintiff needed no more instruction than any other adult inexperienced person of ordinary intelligence. In the employment and setting to work of such person, it would be impossible for the employer to forecast all that might thereafter happen by reason of accidental contact with machinery which the employee might be occasionally required to approach. Neither can the employer be expected to take the employee through the shop, and explain to him the name and obvious function of every piece of machinery like a treadle. Even in agricultural labor, which is by many considered the simplest form of employment, it would require days of tuition to thus explain and instruct regarding every implement and device used or with which the employee might occasionally come in contact, from a cream separator to a threshing machine. The fact that a certain device attached to a drop hammer was a treadle, and that, when passed downward, it would release the uplifted hammer, was so obvious and apparent to any person of ordinary intelligence that the omission to instruct, warn, or explain to one not expected to operate that machine or employed for that purpose could not be considered negligence. If this were an omission of duty on the part of the master, it would be hard to say where instruction should stop and what it should include.

The instant case, in its aspect most favorable to the plaintiff, is that the employer directed an adult, an ordinarily intelligent but inexperienced man to work at the back of the drop hammer, cleaning off the dies and anvil, and also to obey the orders of the operator in front of the drop hammer when requested by the latter. The employer failed to instruct the plaintiff as to the identity or the function of the treadle, or as to the danger of pressing down upon or coming in contact with the treadle. The plaintiff was called to the front of the drop hammer by the operator of the drop hammer, and, while there, accidentally touched the treadle with his foot while his hand was under the uplifted hammer, and in this way was injured. The employer was not by law required to explain or instruct against such obvious danger, nor with reference to such obvious function of the treadle, nor to anticipate that the servant was ignorant of the existence or of the function of the treadle of such a machine, which the servant could plainly see in operation, nor was the employer bound to forecast the possibility of the servant coming around to the front of the machine, and accidentally pressing upon the treadle with his foot while his hand was under the uplifted hammer, and warn against the consequences. We are convinced that, under well-settled rules of law, no negligence of the master causing the injury complained of was shown by his omission to caution or instruct the plaintiff in any of the foregoing particulars, and that consequently the judgment should be reversed.

Judgment reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the complaint.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Timlin, J., on January 26, 1909, handed down the following response:

The respondent moves for a rehearing, on the ground that this court erred in holding that, upon the issues made by the pleadings, and evidence in support thereof, the respondent was a person of ordinary intelligence, and also in holding that the appellant was authorized to treat the respondent as such person. Excerpts from the testimony of the respondent, given through an interpreter, are presented, together with the fact that the respondent worked for the appellant at common labor for two months before he was set to work at the back of the drop hammer, and we are reminded that the trial court and the jury had the advantage of seeing the respondent and hearing him testify.

We have considered these points and find no reason to alter the former decision. Taking the testimony of the respondent all together, there is, to our minds, nothing in it to indicate that he was not of ordinary intelligence. He stumbled in some answers, whether by reason of the difficulty of rapid and extemporaneous translation into English by the interpreter, or otherwise, we cannot say; but, in any event, not more than hundreds of witnesses of ordinary intelligence do in the numerous records which it is part of our duty to examine. The fact that the trial court heard and saw the witness cannot in such case change our view of the legal effect of the testimony, for we are unwilling to establish a rule that would permit the jury upon the same evidence to give damages to one man and withhold damages from another upon their conclusion from his personal appearance. The appearance and manner of the witness is of importance in the consideration of questions of fact, taken in connection with other evidence affecting his credibility or his physical or mental condition; but, standing alone, or existing in connection with evidence which prima facie shows ordinary intelligence, this consideration cannot be invoked to uphold a verdict; but, with reference to those persons who require instruction concerning the dangers incident to their work, we notice that there is appended to this brief the name of the same counsel who signed the brief for rehearing in Lynch v. Ryan, 132 Wis. 271, 111 N. W. 707, 112 N. W. 427, referred to in the opinion upon rehearing, found on pages 277 and 280 of 132 Wis.

In the brief of the respondent for rehearing in the instant case, we find such expressions as: "The court deals with the plaintiff as a man made on paper, and, in so doing, ignores his own positive testimony that he knew nothing of the operation of the machine or the function of the treadle." "There is no escape from the decision that the finding of the jury of this fact is supported by some credible evidence, except as a preconceived notion of the general merits of the litigation be permitted to control the decision." "This court must determine the question under an entirely different rule. It should not utterly disregard the jury's findings, and, by assuming the existence of a fact, substitute one of its own, as appears to have been done in this case." "We submit that this decision is unwarranted usurpation by the court of the function of the jury. This court should not, through a process of designating questions of fact as questions of law, under the guise of correcting errors of law, practically abolish trial by jury in personal-injury cases, where the gist of the action is negligence." The counsel for respondent is instructed that this language is in violation of rule 51 of this court (108 N. W. viii.), and that further violations of this rule on his part will not be overlooked. Every person who aspires to practise law should be able to distinguish between argument and mere scolding. "Argument" is a connected discourse based upon reason; a course of reasoning tending and intended to establish a position and to induce belief. "Scolding" is mere clamor, railing, personal reproof. Argument dignifies the orator and instructs and convinces the auditor. Scolding relieves somewhat the hysteria of the scolder, but only amuses or irritates the hearer. Argument is the professional weapon of the lawyer; scolding that of the communis vicatrix. Argument is enjoyed and welcomed in a brief for rehearing; scolding has no proper place therein.

The motion for rehearing is denied, with $25 costs.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

PATRICK McGRORY, Appt.,

v.

ULTIMA THULE, ARKADELPHIA, &
MISSISSIPPI RAILWAY COMPANY.

(— Ark. —, 118 S. W. 710.)

Master — injury to vice principal — liability.

1. A master is not liable for injury to a vice principal due to the negligence of his subordinate, whom the master has exercised ordinary care in selecting.

Same — negligence — proximate cause.

2. The negligence of a railroad company in permitting the drawheads of cars to be-

Case Note. — Liability of master for injury to vice principal by negligence of servant.

There are doubtless numerous cases in which a recovery has been had by a vice principal where the question suggested by the title has not been discussed and apparently has no effect upon the decision, but the case has turned upon other points, or upon the general rules of master and servant. No attempt has been made to gather cases of that character, but this note is confined to cases in which the fact that the injured person was a vice principal has been expressly discussed.

It may be well to call attention to the fact that the term "fellow servant" is applied to a servant in two senses: first, to distinguish him from another servant who is a vice principal; second, to assert that he is in the same common employment as some other servant. In some cases, as in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Howard, infra, the term is used in both senses.

The reported cases are not numerous, and in but few of them is there any extended discussion of the question. In a few cases, which will be noted later, it has been held that the vice principal or superior servant was, under the facts, expressly given a cause of action by a statute. But in the absence of a statute, the general rule seems to be that, although the superior servant is a vice principal as to the subordinate servants, they are, as to him, fellow servants, and the master is not liable for any injuries received by him through their negligence, under the general rule that a master is not liable for injuries caused by the negligence of a fellow servant. The exemption from the application of the fellow servant rule, in favor of 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

come defective, so as to allow too much space or play between the cars, is not the proximate cause of injury to the foot of an employee which is caught between them by the negligent starting of the train while he is attempting to make his way along it, for which purpose he steps upon the drawheads.

(April 19, 1909.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Clark County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries for which defendant was alleged to be responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Wood & Henderson, for appellant:

The employees of defendant who caused the moving of the trains were not fellow servants of plaintiff, who was a vice principal.

St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Rickman, 65 Ark. 138, 45 S. W. 56; Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Becker, 67 Ark. 1, subordinates injured by the negligence of a vice principal, is intended for the benefit of the subordinates only, and does not affect the relationship which the subordinate bears to the vice principal, nor exempt the latter from the application of the general rule.

Thus, in Moore v. Jones, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 391, 39 S. W. 593, it was held that, whether a conductor in charge of a train and his engineer were fellow servants, or the conductor was a vice principal, the latter could not recover from the railroad company for injuries caused by the negligence of the engineer.

And a car hostler, who, under the statute, is a vice principal of his assistants, who was injured while not engaged in such work as to be within the protection of the statute, cannot recover from the railroad company for injuries which were caused by the negligence of his assistants in performing their work, for, while he was not as to that work a fellow servant to them, they were fellow servants to him. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Howard, 97 Tex. 513, 80 S. W. 229.

So, in Linck v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 107 Ky. 370, 54 S. W. 184, it was held that a railroad company was not liable for injuries to a conductor caused by the negligence of the engineer, though the former was acting at the time as brakeman. The court said: "The fact that decedent at the time was performing the duties of brakeman did not change his character or position as conductor. Although the brakeman, if injured under the same conditions, might have recovered of appellee, yet decedent cannot because as to him there was no agent of the company guilty, or charged to be guilty, of negligence."

In a few cases it has been held that a superior servant cannot recover for injuries

46 L.R.A. 814, 77 Am. St. Rep. 78, 53 S. W. 406; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McCain, 67 Ark. 377, 55 S. W. 165; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Thurmond, 70 Ark. 411, 68 S. W. 488; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. McFall, 75 Ark. 30, 69 L.R.A. 217, 86 S. W. 824, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 161.

Messrs T. D. Wynne, J. H. Crawford, and T. D. Crawford, for appellee:

The defendant's employees were fellow servants of plaintiff.

Bloyd v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 58 Ark. 70, 41 Am. St. Rep. 85, 22 S. W. 1089; 2 Labbatt, Mast. & S. § 470; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Gray, 50 L.R.A. 47, 41 C. C. A. 535, 101 Fed. 623.

McCulloch, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, Patrick McGrory, sues his employer, the Ultima Thule, Arkadelphia, & Mississippi Railway Company, for damages resulting from physical injuries received while performing his duties, and alleged to be due to the negligence of other servants for whom the employer is claimed to be responsible. After all the testimony had been introduced, the trial court gave the jury a peremptory instruction to return a verdict in favor of the defendant, and judgment was entered accordingly. Thus, the only question presented here is whether the testimony was sufficient to warrant a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, giving it the strongest probative force which the jury might have accorded to it.

There is little, if any, conflict in the testimony on the material points. The defendant owned a railroad, which it operated as a common carrier through Clark and Dallas counties in Arkansas, and plaintiff was employed as roadmaster and superintendent of construction. He had no authority to employ or discharge train men; but, in the event of accident or wreck of a train on the line, it was his duty to take charge of the train or trains for the purpose of clearing up the wreck and restoring the caused by the negligence of a subordinate, but it does not appear from the cases whether, if the conditions were reversed, and the negligence of the superior caused injuries to the subordinate, the latter would be entitled to recover; and of course if the subordinate would not be entitled to recover, the question discussed in this note would not be presented.

Thus, in Edmonson v. Kentucky C. R. Co. 105 Ky. 479, 49 S. W. 200, 448, reversing on rehearing (Ky.) 46 S. W. 679, it was held that a conductor, who was the chief officer of a train, was not entitled to recover for injuries caused by the negligence of his engineer, as the engineer was his fellow servant.

On the same ground, it was held, in Ragsdale v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 3 Baxt. 426, that a conductor could not recover for injuries due to the negligence of his engineer in failing to obey his orders.

An engineer in a hotel and an elevator boy, where both are subject to the orders of superiors, are fellow servants, so that the former cannot recover for the negligence of the elevator boy, who was to a certain extent under the engineer's orders. McCarty v. Rood Hotel Co. 144 Mo. 397, 46 S. W. 172.

In Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Kelly, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 21, 80 S. W. 1073, it was held that, if the foreman of a gang of men engaged in the work of constructing and extending the defendant's road was free from negligence, and was injured by the concurring negligence of the men operating the car and of the defendant, it would be no defense that the men were under the plaintiff's charge. It will be noticed in this case that it is assumed that defendant itself was negligent as well as the servants, and this fact serves to distinguish the case from the other cases.

As was said above, in a few cases it has been held that the vice principal was clearly within the protection of the statute, and a recovery has been allowed for that reason.

Thus, a railroad company is liable for injuries to an engineer while at work in oiling the engine, caused by the negligence of his fireman, as they were then operating an engine within the meaning of the statute exempting operatives of a railway engine from the fellow servant rule while they are engaged in their work. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Walton (Tex. Civ. App.) 104 S. W. 415.

And in Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Perry, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 81, 85 S. W. 62, it was held that a foreman of a track gang, injured while riding on a hand car, could recover from the company for injuries caused by the negligence of members of the crew, notwithstanding the fact that he was their superior servant, for the injuries were incurred while "operating a railroad" within the meaning of the statute.

So, under a statute making the railroad company liable to a person injured while in the line of his duties to the company, by the negligence of one in charge of an engine upon the railway, it was held, in Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Collins, 168 Ind. 467, 80 N. E. 415, that the company was liable for injuries to a conductor caused by the negligence of his engineer, notwithstanding a rule of the company making the conductor in some respects the superior servant. An earlier decision in the same case reported in 163 Ind. 569, 71 N. E. 661, was virtually to the same effect.

Upon the general question of vice principalship considered with reference to rank of superior servant, see note to Stevens v. Chamberlin, 51 L.R.A. 513.

As to vice principalship as determined with reference to character of the act causing the injury, see note to Lafayette Bridge Co. v. Olsen, 54 L.R.A. 33.

trains to proper service. On such occasions, he had charge of the trains, and his authority was supreme, the conductors and other train men being under his immediate supervision and subject to his orders. The evidence shows, however, that the conductors were left in charge of their trains subject to his orders, and that they were expected to give orders according to their judgment, except when otherwise directed by the plaintiff as superintendent. The latter's orders to train men were given through the conductors. On the occasion of the plaintiff's injury, one of the engines, No. 12, got off the track, and it was necessary to procure the assistance of another engine in getting it back, and plaintiff was notified. He got another engine, No. 14, and, after coupling two flat cars to it, proceeded to the scene of the wreck of engine No. 12. Night fell while the work was going on, and plaintiff went over to engine No. 14 to give an order to the engineer, and, water being up to the track on either side, he undertook to climb upon a flat car attached to the engine, in order to pass over to the engine, and, while doing so, the engine and cars were moved, and his foot was caught between the drawheads. The signal to the engineer to move his engine was given by the conductor in response to the request of the section foreman for the engine to be moved, so that he could repair the track. This was after engine No. 12 had been gotten back on the track. Neither the conductor who gave the signal, nor the engineer of No. 14, knew of the situation of plaintiff when the signal to move the engine was given and acted upon. It was dark, and neither of the train men knew where the plaintiff was, or that he had started over to engine No. 14.

It is contended that the act of the conductor in giving the signal to move the train constituted negligence for which the defendant would be liable. According to the undisputed facts, the plaintiff was a vice principal of the defendant at the time of the injury, and the negligence of the employee, if any, which caused the injury, was that of one of his subordinates. Is the master responsible to a vice principal on account of the negligence of another of its servants, who is a subordinate of the vice principal and under the latter's control? It is plain that the master is not responsible, for that is one of the ordinary risks which the servant assumes when he takes service and assumes control over his subordinates. The master is not bound, under the doctrine of respondeat superior, to indemnify one servant for an injury caused by the negligence of another servant in the same common employment, unless the negligent servant is at the time acting as the master's representative; in other words, the vice principal of the master. 2 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 470; Quebec S. S. Co. v. Merchant, 133 U. S. 375, 33 L. ed. 656, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397. The subordinates of the vice principal, over whom he exercises control, are his fellow servants in a common employment, so far as the responsibility of the master to him for their acts is concerned, and the master discharges his full duty to his vice principal by exercising ordinary care in selecting competent subordinate servants.

It is contended that a contrary doctrine is announced in the case of St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. McFall, 75 Ark. 30, 69 L.R.A. 217, 86 S. W. 824, 5 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 161. We think, however, that that case announced a principle altogether different from the one applicable here. There, the injured party was a conductor on a train, and his injury was caused by the concurring negligence of Adams, the engineer of his train, and the servants in charge of another train. The question there was whether the negligence of Adams, the engineer, which contributed to the injury, should be imputed to McFall so as to deny him the right of recovery; and we held that, inasmuch as Adams was not under the immediate control of McFall, the negligence of the one could not be imputed to the other. The controlling principle in that case was announced in the following language: "It follows, then, that in cases where the injured and negligent do not sustain to each other the relations of master and servant, or principal and agent, or other relation by which alone one is responsible for the act of the other, the contributory negligence of a third person will not be imputed to the party thereby affected, unless he was at the time subject to the control of the injured person, and the wrong, the negligence, was committed at a time when it was within the power of such person to prevent it, and it was his duty to do so, and under circumstances which indicated that he assented to or acquiesced in the wrong by his failure to interfere, or directed it to be done; and that, when the conditions are reversed, the reverse is true,—it will be imputed." Now in the present case, there is no question of imputed negligence involved. The sole question, as before stated, is whether the master is responsible to his representative, or vice principal, for the acts of another servant in the common employment, but who is a subordinate of the former.

There is another allegation of negligence in the complaint, to the effect that the master was guilty of negligence in permitting the drawheads of the flat car to become out of repair, so that too much space or play was allowed between the cars when coupled together. It is contended that but for this negligence there would not have been enough space between the two drawheads for the plaintiff's foot to have gotten down between them, and therefore no injury would have occurred. We are of the opinion, however, that this could not be made the basis of a charge of negligence as the proximate cause of the injury. It could not have been anticipated by the master, in furnishing reasonably safe appliances, that a danger of this sort should be guarded against. It could not have been reasonably anticipated that a servant would place his foot between the drawheads, or, in the discharge of his duties, would permit his foot to get in that position. We can see no causal relation between the alleged act of negligence and the injury, and therefore it could not be made the basis of a recovery.

We do not undertake to decide whether or not, under the facts in this case, the plaintiff himself was, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence in climbing on the car in the darkness without apprising the train men of his presence. It is unnecessary to do so. Upon the whole, we are of the opinion that the undisputed evidence shows affirmatively that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, and the peremptory instruction to the jury was correct.

Affirmed.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

ELLEN M. CAYWOOD, Appt.,

v.

SUPREME LODGE KNIGHTS & LADIES OF HONOR.

(— Ind. —, 86 N. E. 482.)

Insurance — time of suit.

1. A provision requiring suit on a mutual benefit certificate to be brought within a year from the time of death is valid.

Pleading — statutory benefit.

2. To entitle one suing on a mutual benefit certificate to the benefit of a statute rendering void a provision in a policy issued by a foreign life insurance company which limits the time for bringing action on the policy to less than three years from the time of death, he must plead and prove that the insurer is a foreign company.

Insurance — forfeiture — application of credit.

3. The mere fact that a mutual benefit association owes a member for services an amount in excess of an assessment against him for premium on his certificate does not require an application of it upon the assessment, so as to prevent a forfeiture of the certificate for nonpayment of dues.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Pleading — insurance — application of credit — duty.

4. To show default on the part of a mutual benefit company in failing to apply money due a member for services upon an assessment of dues, it is not sufficient to state merely refusal to make the application, but a direction, request, or other authorization to make it should be alleged.

Same — demurrer — admission — conclusion of law.

5. Demurring to a complaint alleging a duty on the part of a mutual benefit company to apply money due a member for services in satisfaction of an assessment of dues does not admit the duty, in the absence of any allegation of facts showing its existence.

Insurance — benefit certificate — defective execution — validity.

6. A mutual benefit certificate, not countersigned as required by its provisions, is not valid in the hands of the beneficiary, in the absence of anything to show a waiver on the part of the association of the defective execution.

(December 15, 1908.)

Case Note. — Does existence of indebtedness from insurer to insured in an amount sufficient to pay premium or assessment prevent forfeiture of policy for nonpayment of premium.

It may be laid down as the general rule, gathered from the cases reviewed in this note, though subject to some exceptions, as will be hereafter seen, that, if an insurer has in its hands sufficient funds presently due the insured to pay an assessment or premium upon his policy when due, it is the former's duty to apply the same so as to prevent a forfeiture of the policy.

Thus, in Supreme Lodge O. M. P. v. Meister, 204 Ill. 527, 68 N. E. 454, it was held that a benefit certificate could not be forfeited while the local lodge to which the assured belonged held sufficient funds of his to pay the assessment for the nonpayment of which the certificate was alleged to be forfeited, it appearing that a former assessment had been paid twice by the assured, so that there remained in the treasury of the local lodge a sufficient amount at the time the assessment in question was made to meet the same.

And in Supreme Lodge, P. A. v. Welsch, 60 Kan. 858 Appx., 57 Pac. 115, it was held that a benefit certificate could not be forfeited upon the ground that the assured had failed to pay an assessment within the time required, where it appeared that he had paid two assessments for which he was not liable.

And the result was the same in Fraternal Aid Asso. v. Powers, 67 Kan. 420, 73 Pac. 65, in which it was shown that, at different times, the assured had made excess payments for dues and assessments. It was contended that these payments should not be credited, because they had been paid before the assessments or dues had accrued. It was held,

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Hancock County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a mutual benefit certificate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. George Young, John M. Bailey, and William Ward Cook, for appellant:

An insurance company cannot, by contract, limit the time in which a suit on a policy may be commenced.

Eagle Ins. Co. v. Lafayette Ins. Co. 9 Ind. 443; Burns's Rev. Stat. 1901, § 4923; Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Brim, 111 Ind. 281, 12 N. E. 315; Develin v. Wood, 2 Ind. 102; French v. Lafayette Ins. Co. 5 McLean, 461, Fed. Cas. No. 5,102; Aetna L. Ins. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 165 Ind. 317, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 422, 112 Am. St. Rep. 232, 75 N. E. 262, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 551; Grant v. Lexington F. L. & M. Ins. Co. 5 Ind. 23, 61 Am. Dec. 74.

The clause, "that no suit against the Supreme Lodge shall be commenced after one year from the death of the member herein assured," is so uncertain, indefinite, and vague, that it is void.

Bauer v. Samson Lodge, K. P. 102 Ind. 262, 1 N. E. 571; Supreme Council, O. C. F. v. Garrigus, 104 Ind. 133, 54 Am. Rep. 298, 3 N. E. 818; Clark, Contr. pp. 10, 63, 64, 185.

An insurance company cannot forfeit a policy for nonpayment of premiums or assessments when it has in its possession money belonging to the assured, from which it could have paid the assessment or pre-however, that such excess should be applied on subsequent and accruing dues and assessments, and that the member would not be deemed to be in default so long as such excess was sufficient to meet the accruing claims against him.

And in Demings v. Supreme Lodge K. P. 20 App. Div. 622, 48 N. Y. Supp. 649, appeal dismissed without opinion in 161 N. Y. 662, 57 N. E. 1108, there was held to be no forfeiture where it appeared that the assured, at the time of his admission into the lodge, paid the first assessment for which he would be liable, in advance, and thereafter, as each assessment was made, the secretary of his lodge was notified to forward his assessment to the supreme lodge secretary, which he did by using the funds received from the advance assessment, and then the section secretary notified the assured to pay that assessment within thirty days to provide for the next assessment, which method of paying assessments continued until the deceased's death, so that each succeeding assessment, including the one upon the nonpayment of which the defendant relied, was paid from the proceeds of the one next preceding.

And in Younghoe v. Grain Shippers' Mut. F. Ins. Asso. 126 Iowa, 374, 102 N. W. 137, it was held that no forfeiture of an insurance policy could be declared because of the assured's failure to pay an assessment, where it appeared that the assured, upon taking out his policy, paid therefor more than he was called upon to pay, and the insurer received the same, and such excess was sufficient to discharge the assessment in question.

So, it was held that there was no forfeiture in Elliot v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. 2 Kan. App. 430, 42 Pac. 1009; Knight v. Supreme Court, O. C. F. 2 Silv. Sup. Ct. 453, 6 N. Y. Supp. 427; Everts v. United States Mut. Acci. Asso. 40 N. Y. S. R. 878, 16 N. Y. Supp. 27; Logsdon v. Supreme Lodge, F. U. 34 Wash. 666, 76 Pac. 292, in all of which it appeared that the assured had paid an assessment for which he was not liable, by reason of the fact that he did not become a full member until after such assessment was made, and he paid thereafter all assessments, except the one in question, and the sum paid in for which he was not liable was sufficient to cover such assessment.

And, in McNaughton v. Des Moines L. Ins. Co. (Wis.) 122 N. W. 764, it was said to be the well-established rule that it is the duty of an insurance company to apply dues from it to an assured (in this case, commissions due the insured for insurance written), presently payable, upon his premium, likewise payable, if necessary to prevent a forfeiture, especially where, from previous transactions between the parties, the assured has a right to rely upon such applications being made.

But, in Leffingwell v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. 86 Iowa, 279, 53 N. W. 243, it was held that the fact that the defendant was indebted to a holder of one of its certificates of membership for wages due as a member of one of its committees did not entitle such member to an equitable application of an amount so due him to the payment of his dues and assessments, in order to avoid a forfeiture of his certificate, where it appeared that the collection of such dues and assessments was made by a subordinate lodge under the rules of the order, and the defendant had no authority to receive assessments direct from the member, or apply any money in its hands, belonging to him, to the payment of such assessment.

And in Pister v. Keystone Mut. Ben. Asso. 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 50, it was held that the insurer was not bound to apply to the payment of an assessment a sum in excess of such assessment, earned by the assured as its agent, where it appeared that the assured was employed at a monthly salary, payable at the end of the month, and that, at the time the premium was due, no part of such salary was due.

Attention may here be called to Leonhard v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. 64 C. C. A. 533, 130 Fed. 287, in which it appeared that a policy was surrendered without the knowledge or the authority of the beneficiary, but without fraud or negligence on the part of the insurer, and other policies were issued in the place of the one sur-mium, and which it has the right to apply to such payment.

Girard L. Ins. Annuity & T. Co. v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 97 Pa. 15, 100 Pa. 172; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 50g; Rogers v. Union Benev. Soc. No. 2, 111 Ky. 598, 55 L.R.A. 605, 64 S. W. 444; Brady v. Coachman's Ben. Asso. 39 N. Y. S. R. 181, 14 N. Y. Supp. 272; Jennings v. Chelsea Div. Ben. Fund Soc. 28 Misc. 556, 59 N. Y. Supp. 862; Columbian Relief Fund Asso. v. Hopper, 24 Ind. App. 169, 53 N. E. 1051; Bulger v. Washington L. Ins. Co. 63 Ga. 328; Hull v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 39 Wis. 397; Franklin L. Ins. Co. v. Wallace, 93 Ind. 7; Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Caldwell, 68 Ark. 505, 58 S. W. 360.

Messrs. William A. Hough and Taylor, Woods, and Willson, for appellee:

rendered. It was held that the beneficiary was not, on repudiating the surrender, entitled to have the premiums paid on the subsequent policies applied in satisfaction of premiums accruing on the original policy after its surrender, in order to prevent its forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums.

The same rules of law have been applied where the insurer has in its hands dividends earned by the assured's policy. Thus, in Girard L. Ins. Annuity & T. Co. v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 97 Pa. 15, it was held that an insurer was bound to apply dividends belonging to a policy holder sufficient to pay an accruing premium, if the premium was not paid, and could not declare the policy forfeited for failure to pay the premium under such circumstances, especially if the insured had been in the habit of applying his dividends to the payment of premiums. The court said that it was inequitable and against the policy of the law to permit an insurance company to forfeit a policy for nonpayment of a premium, when it had in its possession money of the assured to an amount covering the premium, and which it had the power to apply to its payment.

And in Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Hoelzle, Fed. Cas. No. 9,025, it was held that where it was the custom of the insurer to apply dividends, if a policy holder so requested, to the payment of the next premium, the failure to pay a premium would be no defense to the right of recovery, where the assured requested that such application be made, and such a request was refused.

Such dividends, however, must be sufficient to discharge in full the premium or premiums due, otherwise a forfeiture will not be prevented. Bulger v. Washington L. Ins. Co. 63 Ga. 328; Hollister v. Quincy Mut. F. Ins. Co. 118 Mass. 478; Wheeler v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 82 N. Y. 543, 37 Am. Rep. 594.

And in Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Girard L. Ins. Annuity & T. Co. 100 Pa. 172, reversing 38 Phila. Leg. Int. 469, it was held that, in order to bind an insurer to apply divi-

A stipulation in a policy that no action shall be sustained unless commenced within a certain period after loss is valid.

Bacon, Ben. Soc. § 443; Riddlesbarger v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 7 Wall. 386, 19 L. ed. 257; Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Brim, 111 Ind. 281, 12 N. E. 315; O'Laughlin v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 3 McCrary, 543, 11 Fed. 280; Underwriters' Agency v. Sutherland, 55 Ga. 266; Andes Ins. Co. v. Fish, 71 Ill. 620; Glass v. Walker, 66 Mo. 32; Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Lacroix, 45 Tex. 158; Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Lacroix, 35 Tex. 249, 14 Am. Rep. 370; Wilson v. Aetna Ins. Co. 27 Vt. 99.

Such a provision is not against the policy of the statute of limitations.

Riddlesbarger v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. supra; Niblack, Ben. Soc. §§ 370, 371; May, Ins. § 478; Thompson v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 11

dends to the payment of a premium to save the forfeiture of a policy for the nonpayment thereof, the dividends must have been declared before the premium was due. The court said that it would be carrying the rule beyond any recognized principle to hold that profits earned, but not declared as dividends or otherwise, could be treated as funds in the hands of the insurer, applicable to the payment of a premium. "Non constat that such dividends ever will be made."

So, in Bryant v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 109 Fed. 748, and Petrie v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 92 Minn. 489, 100 N. W. 236, a policy which the insurer claimed had lapsed because of the nonpayment of a premium was held not to be entitled to have dividends applied to extend the insurance, where it appeared that, after the premium in question became due, the insurer's directors declared a dividend to participating policies, conditioned upon the payment of the annual premiums, and providing that no such dividend should be payable to policies upon which premiums due had not been paid.

A different rule, however, seems to prevail in Kentucky, since, in Aetna L. Ins. Co. v. Hartley, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 57, 67 S. W. 19, and in Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 115 Ky. 404, 73 S. W. 1020, the insurer was held to have no right to declare dividends conditioned upon the payment of the premium next due.

In Wheeler v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. supra, it was held that the insurer was not bound to apply or pay the dividends on account of the premiums, unless requested by the assured to do so.

In Straube v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 123 Cal. 677, 56 Pac. 546, which was an action brought by the beneficiary in a policy which she had surrendered to the insurer for a cash consideration some time subsequent to a failure to pay the annual premium, the policy having been in force for several years, and the plaintiff alleging fraud by the insurer in procuring the policy from her, the court, Sawy. 276, 25 Fed. 296; Underwriters' Agency v. Sutherland, supra; Fullam v. New York Union Ins. Co. 7 Gray, 61, 66 Am. Dec. 462; De Grove v. Metropolitan Ins. Co. 61 N. Y. 594, 19 Am. Rep. 305; Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Barr, 94 Pa. 345; Peoria M. & F. Ins. Co. v. Whitehill, 25 Ill. 466.

A provision in an insurance policy limiting the time for suit to less than the statute of limitations is valid.

Cray v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. Fed. Cas. No. 3374; Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Aiken, 82 Va. 424; Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Wells, 83 Va. 736, 3 S. E. 349.

Monks, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought by appellant on a benefit certificate issued by appellee, a mutual benefit association, to appellant's without further discussion of the question, said there was "no merit in the appellant's final contention to the effect that the accumulated dividends should have been applied to the payment of premiums upon the policy."

So, it will be the duty of the insurer to apply dividends to the payment of the interest on notes of the assured given for premiums or loans, if it is stipulated between the parties that a failure to pay the interest thereon would forfeit the policy.

Thus, in Smith v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. 2 Tenn. Ch. 727, under a policy expressly providing that, if the assured failed to pay annually in advance the interest on any unpaid note due the insurer, the policy should cease and determine, it was held that such interest became practically a premium, payable annually in advance, and its nonpayment would cause the policy to lapse; but that the company would be bound to apply any dividends to which the policy holder might be then entitled in such manner as to save a forfeiture; that is, first to the payment of the interest.

And in Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Caldwell, 68 Ark. 505, 58 S. W. 355, it was held that, in the absence of any stipulation in the policy, and of any direction otherwise by the assured, as to the application of dividends which had been declared, it was the duty of a mutual insurance company to apply such dividends to the payment of interest on loans made on the policy, when by so doing a forfeiture of all rights and benefits under the policy would be prevented. The court said that this doctrine did not arise out of the peculiar facts of any particular case, and that it did not depend upon contract, custom, or course of dealing for its existence and potency, but that it had its origin in that fundamental principle of justice which compelled one who had funds in his hands belonging to another to use such funds, if at all, for the benefit, and not to the injury, of the owner.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

son, in which she was named as the beneficiary. The amended complaint is in two paragraphs. A demurrer for want of facts was sustained to the complaint, and judgment rendered on demurrer against appellant.

The errors assigned call in question the action of the court in sustaining said demurrer. The benefit certificate sued on contains the following provision: "No suit shall be commenced against the Supreme Lodge after one year from the date of the death of the member." It appears from each paragraph of the complaint that the member to whom the certificate was issued died in the month of September, 1902. This action was commenced June 30, 1905, more than two years after the death of the member named in said certificate. Appellant insists that said provision limiting the time in which

And in Hull v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 39 Wis. 397, it was held, under a contract of insurance requiring interest on outstanding notes due the insurer to be paid in cash, that the insurer was bound to apply dividends to the payment of such interest so as to prevent a forfeiture of the policy, though it had been the uniform practice of the insurer to insist upon cash payments of such interest, and to have the dividends applied to the discharge of the principal. The court said that the dividends due the insured were cash, and if the practice of the company had been to refuse to apply them to the payment of interest on such notes, it had simply violated its agreement.

To the same effect are Franklin L. Ins. Co. v. Wallace, 93 Ind. 7; Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Fort, 82 Ky. 269; Russum v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. 1 Mo. App. 228.

But, in Anderson v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. 1 Flipp. 559, Fed. Cas. No. 362, it was held that the insurer was not required to credit the assured's dividends in accordance with the general rule of law, that is, first upon the interest, and then upon the principal, so as to prevent a forfeiture of a policy which made no special provision for dividend credits, and which required payment annually in advance of the interest on unpaid premium notes, it appearing that the assured had been in the habit of paying the interest on his notes in cash, while his dividends were credited to him upon the principal.

And in Mutual F. Ins. Co. v. Miller Lodge, I. O. O. F. 58 Md. 463, it was held that, even where a dividend had been declared, unless expressly made applicable to the payment of the annual interest on the premium note of the policy holder, the insurer would neither be bound nor justified, in the absence of the assent or request of the insured, so to apply the dividend, even though such application would prevent the forfeiture of the policy.

The general rule was also applied to the disposal of a surplus or guaranty fund in suit must be commenced is void, citing Eagle Ins. Co. v. Lafayette Ins. Co. 9 Ind. 443. The case cited followed French v. Lafayette Ins. Co. 5 McLean, 461, Fed. Cas. No. 5,102, which last-named case was disapproved by the Supreme Court of the United States in Riddlesbarger v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 7 Wall. 386, 19 L. ed. 257. This court, in Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Brim, 111 Ind. 281, 12 N. E. 315, held that such a provision was not void, citing Riddlesbarger v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., supra, and thereby overruled the holding in Engle Ins. Co. v. Lafayette Ins. Co. supra, that such a provision was invalid. It is settled by the great weight of the authorities that a provision in an insurance policy limiting the time in which suit may be brought thereon to a period less than that fixed by statute of limitations is binding, unless it contravenes a statute. Riddlesbarger v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. supra, and cases cited; Lewis v. Metropolitan L. Ins.

Co. 180 Mass. 317, 62 N. E. 369, and cases cited; Sullivan v. Prudential Ins. Co. 172 N. Y. 482, 65 N. E. 288; Fey v. I. O. O. F. Mut. L. Ins. Co. 120 Wis. 358, 98 N. W. 206; Mead v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 68 Kan. 432, 64 L.R.A. 79, 104 Am. St. Rep. 412, 75 Pac. 475, and cases cited; McFarland v. Railway Officials & E. Acci. Asso. 5 Wyo. 126, 27 L.R.A. 48, 63 Am. St. Rep. 29, 38 Pac. 347, 677; Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Brim, supra; 29 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 216; 25 Cyc. Law & Proc. p. 910; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 103, 104; Cooley, Briefs on Insurance, 3964-3967; Bacon, Ben. Soc. § 443; Niblack, Ben. Soc. §§ 370, 371; May, Ins. § 478; Kerr, Ins. p. 423.

We have, however, in this state, a statute (§ 4803, Burns's Anno. Stat. 1908; § 4923, Burns's Anno. Stat. 1901, in force since 1865) which this court has held renders any provision, in the policy of a foreign insurance company doing business in this state, which the assured had a share, in Knights Templars & M. Life Indemnity Co. v. Vail, 206 Ill. 404, 68 N. E. 1103, in which it appeared that the defendant's constitution provided that, after a certain period of membership, each member should receive a bond for his proportion of the surplus or guaranty fund, which bond, without notice, could be used at any time in payment of assessments. It was held that such application of the bond must be made, though the bond was not surrendered in accordance with a stipulation therein, and the constitution of the association further provided that a failure of a member to pay an assessment should, "ipso facto, work a forfeiture and termination of his membership and all benefits arising therefrom."

But, in Mee v. Bankers' Life Asso. 60 Minn. 210, 72 N. W. 74, in which it appeared that the articles of the defendant provided that, in the case of a default on the part of any member, the amount of the assessment on account of such loss should be paid out of his guaranty deposit, but there was no provision made for replacing the fund when used, it was held that such provision did not operate to keep alive and in force a lapsed certificate or to continue a membership, as such provision was for the benefit of the beneficiaries of those who did not default, and not for the benefit of a defaulting member.

In Kelly v. Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. 198 Pa. 147, 47 Atl. 958, reversing 30 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 429, it was held, under a policy of life insurance providing that, after a certain period, the advance insurance fund might be withdrawn, or exchanged for a paid-up policy, or for extended insurance, provided it was legally surrendered at an anniversary of the date of its issue, such surrender was a prerequisite to the exercise of the option to receive extended insurance.

One branch of the subject here offered for discussion, that is, the application by the insurer of benefits to meet assessments due on benefit certificates will be found discussed in the note to Rogers v. Union Benev. Soc. 55 L.R.A. 605. Since the publication of that note, that phase of the question was considered in Albrecht v. People's Life & Annuity Asso. 129 Mich. 444, 89 N. W. 44, in which it appeared that the holder of a benefit certificate providing for the payment of a certain sum monthly in case of total disability, and further stipulating that the nonpayment of an assessment should operate to suspend him from all benefits of the association, became totally disabled while in good standing, and that such disability continued until his death. It was held that, if the contract of insurance entitled the association to demand payment of membership dues or assessments after total disability, it was not contemplated that a forfeiture should be enforced for nonpayment during the period of disability, when, at the same time, there was money in the hands of the association due the assured on account of such disability, which exceeded the sum due from him.

And in Horgan v. Metropolitan Mut. Aid. Asso. 202 Mass. 524, 88 N. E. 890, the by-laws of the association specifically provided that a member being, at any time, sick or disabled, and receiving benefits, could not be debarred from receiving a continuation of such benefits because of his inability to pay his assessment, the president being authorized to deduct from the sums paid him for benefits such amounts as would keep the member in good standing.

In North American Acci. Ins. Co. v. Bowen (Tex. Civ. App.) 102 S. W. 163, it was held to be the duty of the insurer to apply what it owed the insured, under an accident policy, to the payment of premium notes, so as to save the policy from forfeiture, though the exact amount of what was due the assured was undetermined at the date of the maturity of the notes, if the minimum amount for which it was liable was sufficient to pay such notes.

limiting the time within which suit can be brought thereon to less than three years, void. Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Brim, 111 Ind. 281, 288, 289, 12 N. E. 315. It does not appear, from either paragraph of the amended complaint, that appellee is a foreign corporation. There is nothing, therefore, in the complaint, showing that appellant is entitled to the benefit of said § 4803 (4923) supra, in regard to foreign corporations, in this action. It is well settled that, to entitle appellant to the benefit of said § 4803 (4923), supra, she must allege and prove facts which will bring the certificate sued on within its provisions. Weir v. State, 161 Ind. 435, 438, 68 N. E. 1023, and cases cited; Indianapolis & G. Rapid Transit Co. v. Foreman, 162 Ind. 85, 96, 102 Am. St. Rep. 185, 69 N. E. 669, and cases cited. A stipulation limiting the time within which an action may be brought on an insurance policy or certificate, being for the benefit of the company, may be waived by it. 4 Cooley, Briefs on Insurance, 3989-4000; Bacon, Ben. Soc. § 445; Grant v. Lexington F. L. & M. Ins. Co. 5 Ind. 23, 61 Am. Dec. 74; Thompson v. Phenix Ins. Co. 136 U. S. 287, 297-299, 34 L. ed. 408, 413, 414, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1019; Lynchburg Cotton Mill Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 654, and note (79 C. C. A. 464, 149 Fed. 954).

Appellant claims that, if said clause limiting the time within which suit must be brought on said certificate is valid, the allegations of the first paragraph are sufficient to prevent appellee from taking advantage thereof. It is not necessary for us to determine this question, because said paragraph is insufficient for other reasons. It appears from said first paragraph that the certificate was issued in consideration of the premium paid and the payment of $1.05 each month during the life of said John C. Caywood; that the monthly assessment of $1.05 for August, 1902, was not paid, and, on the 30th of said month, appellee forfeited said certificate for the nonpayment of said assessment. Appellant attempts to avoid the effect of the failure to pay said August assessment of $1.05, and said forfeiture of the certificate on that account, for the reason alleged that, during the month of August, appellee owed said Caywood, for services rendered by him for appellee, "the sum of $2, which sum the defendant had the right to apply on the payment of the August assessment of $1.05, and should have applied on the August assessment levied on said policy, but wholly failed to do so; that said defendant refused to apply said sum of $2 on said payment, and, on the 30th day of August, 1902, forfeited said policy, and still retained, and has ever since retained, said $2; that the September assessment of $1.05 was tendered to said defendant, and was refused by it, and said amount was paid into court for the benefit and use of defendant." It has been held that a life insurance policy cannot be forfeited for the nonpayment of a premium or assessment when the company has in its possession dividends declared under said policy sufficient to pay the same, which it has the right to apply to such payment. Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Wallace, 93 Ind. 7; Girard L. Ins. Annuity & T. Co. v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 97 Pa. 15; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Girard L. Ins. Annuity & T. Co. 100 Pa. 172; 3 Cooley, Briefs on Insurance, pp. 2324, 2325, note. The mere allegation that appellee, during the month of August, owed said Caywood $2 for services rendered by him for appellee, did not show any right or duty, on the part of appellee, to apply the same, or any part thereof, to the payment of said August assessment. Willcuts v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 81 Ind. 300; Butler v. American Popular L. Ins. Co. 10 Jones & S. 342; Pister v. Keystone Mut. Ben. Asso. 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 50, 57-59; Smith v. Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. (1882) 11 W. N. C. 295; 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 291; 3 Cooley, Briefs on Insurance, 2324, 2325, note. See also Leffingwell v. Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. 86 Iowa, 279, 53 N. W. 243; Petrie v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 92 Minn. 489, 100 N. W. 236; Irvin v. Rushville Coöperative Teleph. Co. 161 Ind. 524, 69 N. E. 258, and cases cited.

It is said in 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 291: "Where the insured is in the employ of the company, the fact that there were wages due him, at the time of his default in the payment of an assessment, sufficient to pay the assessment, will not prevent a forfeiture for nonpayment, as the company is under no duty to apply such wages to the payment of the assessment." And this was the theory of said paragraph, for it averred, as above set out, that "the defendant had the right to apply said $2 on the payment of the August assessment of $1.05, and should have applied it," and "that the defendant refused to apply said sum of $2 on said payment." It is not sufficient, however, to allege that it was the right or duty of the appellee to apply said $2, or any part thereof, to the payment of the August assessment, the same being the mere conclusion of the pleader, but the facts from which such right or duty arises must be clearly and positively alleged. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Barker, 169 Ind. 680, 681, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 542, 83 N. E. 369; Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Lain, 170 Ind. 84, 83 N. E. 632-634, and cases cited; Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. McCandish, 167 Ind. 648, 651-653, 79 N. E. 903, and cases cited; Buffalo v. Holloway, 5 Am. Dec. 550, 552, and note, p. 554 (7 N.

Y. 493); Wabash R. Co. v. Hassett, 170 Ind. 370, 83 N. E. 705, 708, and authorities cited; Southern Indiana R. Co. v. Fine, 163 Ind. 617, 621, 72 N. E. 589; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Lighthouse, 163 Ind. 247, 251, 252, 71 N. E. 218, 660, and cases cited. "That said defendant refused to apply said sum of $2 on said payment" involves the assumption that appellee had been directed, requested, or otherwise empowered to apply said $2 in payment of said August assessment by said Caywood or his authorized agent,—a fact which was not alleged in said paragraph, and without which it was insufficient. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. McFall, 165 Ind. 574, 581, 76 N. E. 400; Aiken v. Columbus, 167 Ind. 139, 150, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 416, 78 N. E. 657; Malott v. Sample, 164 Ind. 645, 647-652, 74 N. E. 245, and cases cited; Riley v. State, 168 Ind. 657, 660, 81 N. E. 726; Bliss, Code Pl. 3d ed. § 318.

It is well settled that a demurrer admits only such facts as are sufficiently pleaded. Moreover, the benefit certificate sued upon calls for the "protector and secretary of Gage Lodge No. 1663" to countersign said "certificate, and impress the seal" of said subordinate lodge "hereto, rendering the same valid and in full force." Said benefit certificate appears to have been impressed with the seal of said subordinate lodge, but it was not countersigned by the protector and secretary of said subordinate lodge. It cannot be said, therefore, to have been completely executed according to its own provisions. It has been held that an insurance policy is not executed by attaching the insurer's corporate seal, when the names of the president and secretary, called for by the attestation clause, are not signed thereto, nor when the same is not countersigned as required by its provisions. Peoria M. & F. Ins. Co. v. Walser, 22 Ind. 73; Globe Acci. Ins. Co. v. Reid, 19 Ind. App. 203, 47 N. E. 947, 49 N. E. 291, and cases cited; Badger v. American Popular L. Ins. Co. 103 Mass. 244, 4 Am. Rep. 547; McCully v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 18 W. Va. 782; Prall v. Mutual Protection Life Assur. Soc. 5 Daly, 298; Kerr, Ins. pp. 85, 86. It may be the requirement that the same be countersigned by some person or persons named may be waived by the company, but there can be no such presumption from the mere possession thereof, when it has not been countersigned in the manner provided for.

There are no facts alleged in the amended complaint showing that said requirement has in any way been waived by appellee. It follows that the court did not err in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint.

Judgment affirmed.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

JAMES THOMPSON

v.

CHICAGO, BURLINGTON, & QUINCY
RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.

(— Neb. —, 121 N. W. 447.)

Damages — crops — destruction — alfalfa.

Ordinarily the measure of damages for the destruction of growing crops is their value at the time and place of destruction, but, in case of the destruction of a permanent or perennial crop, such as alfalfa, the measure of damages is the difference between the value of the land before and after the destruction of the crop.

(May 21, 1909.)

Headnote by LETTON, J.

Case Note. — Measure of damages for the destruction of perennial crops.

The question as to the measure of damages for the destruction of a perennial crop is one presenting so many various phases and conditions which may affect the result one way or another, that, even aside from the conflict of opinion among the decisions, it is practically impossible to formulate a general rule by which all cases may be governed.

Evidently on the theory that, although grass or other perennials are a part of the realty, yet their value can be measured and ascertained without reference to the value of the soil on which they stand, it has been held in a number of cases that, where grass or other perennial plants of that nature have been destroyed, the measure of damages recoverable is the value of the grass or crop at the time of its destruction.

Among such cases are Atlanta & B. Air Line R. Co. v. Brown (Ala.) 48 So. 73 (destruction of grass by cattle resulting from unrepaired cattle guards); Risae v. Collins, 12 Idaho, 689, 87 Pac. 1006 (destruction of pasture by sheep); Flynt v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 38 Mo. App. 94 (grass and soil carried away by railroad); Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Emmert, 53 Neb. 237, 68 Am. St. Rep. 602, 73 N. W. 540 (destruction of timothy and clover pasture by flood caused by embankment); Richardson v. Northrup, 66 Barb. 85 (destruction of grass in meadow by cattle); Lester v. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. 27 Utah, 470, 101 Am. St. Rep. 988, 76 Pac. 341, 1 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 761 (destruction of lucerne among other crops by poisonous gases); Evans v. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co. 27 Utah, 475, 76 Pac. 1135 (the same).

The same measure of damages was adopted in Byrne v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 38 Minn. 212, 8 Am. St. Rep. 668, 36 N. W. 339, where land was overflowed, preventing the harvesting of the grass. The court, however, said: "We see no reason to doubt APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Franklin County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for injury to certain crops. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. E. Kelby, with Messrs. Byron Clark and Frank E. Bishop, for appellant:

The value of a growing crop in the condition in which it exists at the time of its destruction is the measure of damages.

Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. v. Crum, 30 Neb. 70, 46 N. W. 217; Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. v. Harlin, 50 Neb. 698, 36 L.R.A. 417, 61 Am. St. Rep. 578, 70 N. W. 263; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Emmert, 53 Neb. 237, 68 Am. St. Rep. 602, 73 N. W.

that the actual loss of the perennial crop of grass was susceptible of being proved and measured with reasonable certainty. Whether the damages might have been measured also by the diminution in the rental value, if the case had been presented upon that theory, we need not determine."

In Catlin Consol. Canal Co. v. Euster, 19 Colo. App. 117, 73 Pac. 846, where a crop of alfalfa and oats was submerged by water coming from a canal, the court adopted a rule given by the trial court to the effect that the measure of damage is the value of the crop destroyed, taking into consideration its market value after being harvested, and the cost of seeding, caring for, harvesting, and marketing the crop; and the value of the crop is measured by the amount of crop produced on like and similar lands in the neighborhood in which the land is located, taking into consideration all elements as to the probable yield of the land in controversy.

In Anonymous, 4 Dall. 147, 1 L. ed. 778, where a meadow was watered as the result of the obstruction of a stream, upon it being stipulated by the plaintiff's counsel that their client would release any damages that the jury might give in case the defendant should execute a deed whereby the plaintiff was granted the enjoyment of the water course, the court advised the jury on this condition to find the full value of the meadow as damages.

In Atlanta & B. Air Line R. Co. v. Brown, supra, it was held that where, in an action for injuries to a crop of grass by stock, there was no evidence what the land would have brought for hay and pasturage, and plaintiff proved what the grass destroyed was worth, it is error to instruct the jury that he could recover what the land would have brought for hay and pasturage.

In Shotwell v. Dodge, 8 Wash. 337, 36 Pac. 254, for the failure to furnish water for irrigation, resulting in a partial failure of a crop of hops, the measure of damages adopted was the market value of the crop alleged to be lost over the cost of production, harvesting, and marketing.

In I. & G. N. R. Co. v. Saul, 2-Tex. App. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

540; Berard v. Atchison & N. R. Co. 79 Neb. 830, 113 N. W. 537; Morse v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 81 Neb. 745, 116 N. W. 859.

Mr. George W. Prather for appellee.

Letton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for negligence. Three causes of action are set forth in the petition. The first is for damages caused by fire negligently started by an engine on defendant's right of way, which burned about 10 acres of alfalfa belonging to the plaintiff. The second is for similarly burning some hay and fence, and the third cause of action is for damages to certain fields of corn in the years 1903, 1904, and 1905, respectively, which it is alleged were occasioned by suc-

Civ. Cas. (Willson) 612, the damages recovered for destruction of pasturage by fire were based on the amount the pasturage was worth per day per head of cattle, and how much pasturage it required for one cow.

Where the meadow is only injured, and not totally destroyed, it naturally follows that the owner can recover only corresponding damages.

Thus, in Belch v. Missouri P. R. Co. 18 Mo. App. 80, it was said that the true measure of damages as to the meadow injured is the difference between the value of the meadow before the fire and its value after the fire. If the meadow was utterly destroyed by the fire, the measure of damages would be its value at the time of the fire.

To the same effect is Hamilton v. Des Moines & K. C. R. Co. 84 Iowa, 131, 50 N. W. 567.

In Folsom v. Apple River Log Driving Co. 41 Wis. 602, it was held that, for the destruction of a meadow caused by the flowing of land, the measure of the damages recoverable is the value of so much of the grass as was wholly destroyed and the depreciation in value of the remainder, and not the difference in rental value of the land before and after the injury.

Although a reading of the majority of the above cases would possibly warrant the conclusion that the destruction was limited only to the grass as such, and that the roots were not damaged, it is difficult to say whether the court would apply that measure in case something more was done than the mere destruction of the grass, which is the loss of only one season or part thereof.

This distinction is indicated by the following cases from Texas where, although the measure of damages was held to be the value of the grass at the time of its destruction, yet it was clearly indicated that there was no damage done, or at least asked for, to the realty. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Rheiner (Tex. Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 971; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Horne, 69 Tex. 643, 9 S. W. 440; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Searight, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 593, 28 S. W. 39; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Couch (Tex. Civ. App.) 122 S. W. 67 (grass cessive floods caused by the negligent manner of construction of the railroad embankment, by which flood waters were held back and caused to overflow the land.

1. There seems to be no contention as to the second cause of action, so it will be unnecessary to give it consideration. As to the first cause of action, complaint is made that there was no proof that the engine caused the fire complained of. This objection does not appear to be very seriously argued in the brief. Two witnesses testified that they saw the fire just after it started and before it was off the right of way, that a freight train had just passed, and that it spread from the right of way to the alfalfa field. Other evidence clearly identifies the fire which burned the alfalfa as that which started on the right of way.

2. It is next urged that the court erred in permitting the plaintiff to prove the damages on account of the destruction of the alfalfa crop, by showing the value of the land before the crop was burned and its value after the crop was destroyed, and in instructing the jury that the measure of damages for the loss of the alfalfa would be "the difference in the value of the land with the stand of alfalfa as proved immediately prior to its destruction and the value destroyed by fire). And see the other Texas cases, infra.

In Larson v. Lammers, 81 Minn. 239, 83 N. W. 981, where growing grass and crops were destroyed by the overflow of land, it was held that the damages recoverable were the value of the growing crops at the time they were destroyed, or, if it was impracticable to show such value, the diminution in the rental value of the land by reason of the injury thereto, but the owner was not entitled to both.

It is to be observed that, although the measure of damages in the above cases is stated to be the value of the grass or meadow, or whatever it may be, at the time of its destruction, the courts possibly thereby do not mean that only its value as a severed article can be recovered, but rather its quantum of value as a part of the whole.

In cases concerning measure of damages, the real difficulty often is not so much in stating what is the measure of damages, but rather what evidence is admissible to prove the loss.

In Risse v. Collins, 12 Idaho, 689, 87 Pac. 1006, supra, the court said: "In establishing the damage done, it would have been proper to inquire into the ease or difficulty in securing other pasture near by, and the market price of similar pasture, or the price of such feed stuffs as would have been necessary to keep and feed plaintiffs' live stock, or to have shown the price the plaintiffs could have secured for their pasture, or the number of live stock they could have pastured thereon, and the value per month for the pasturage of each head of such live stock, and such other evidence of kindred and similar import, which would have enabled the jury to intelligently fix the value of the property destroyed at the time of its destruction. Any evidence tending to show what the grass was worth when put to any of the uses for which it was valuable should be admitted. Growing grass that is to be used for grazing purposes differs from other growing crops, in that there is no further expense necessary for cultivation and harvesting in order for the owner to enjoy the full benefits of the crop. In such case the crop is marketable and has a market value whenever it is fit for grazing purposes."

In San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Stone (Tex. Civ. App.) 60 S. W. 461, it was held 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that, where grass destroyed by fire was especially valuable at the time for grazing cattle, and there was no evidence of a market value, in ascertaining the damages the jury should consider the value of the grass so destroyed for the purpose of its use by the owner at the time of its burning.

So, in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Couch, supra, it was held that the value of the grass burned could not be based on the value of the hay he was thereby compelled to feed to his stock. And see the other Texas cases, infra.

In Terre Haute & L. R. Co. v. Walsh, 11 Ind. App. 13, 38 N. E. 534, where a meadow which had been sown four years and upon which three crops had been raised was destroyed by fire from an engine, it was objected by the railroad company that, in order to ascertain the damages, the owner of the meadow should not be permitted to state the relative value of the meadow from the first to the second year, but the court, however, said: "The claim of the appellee was that the meadow had been entirely destroyed. If this was true, the jury, in order to arrive at the approximate amount of the injury, would be entitled to know the probable quantity and quality of hay that could have been made from the meadow but for the fire. It was therefore proper to show, if true, that, as the meadow becomes older the quantity and quality of the hay becomes better on the kind of land upon which this meadow was located, and how long the meadow continues to improve until it begins to deteriorate. This was the nature of the testimony the appellee was permitted to give. It furnished the jury some basis for estimating the value of the meadow before and after the fire, and there was no error in overruling the objection to the testimony."

There are, however, many cases which consider grass or other perennial crops a part of the realty, and therefore these cases hold that, for the destruction of such grass or other perennial crop, the person damaged should recover the difference in value of the realty before and after the destruction.

The following cases so holding were all instances of where a meadow was destroyed by fire: Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Davis, 74 Ill. App. 595; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Irwin, 97 Ill. App. 337; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Almon, 100 Ill. App. 530; Atchison, of the land at and immediately after the destruction of the alfalfa." The court was within the rule approved in Morse v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 81 Neb. 745, 116 N. W. 859. There is a difference in conditions between an ordinary annual crop and a permanent crop, such as alfalfa, which justifies and requires a different rule in the measurement of damages; and we are of the opinion that a fair criterion of the damage suffered by the destruction of a good stand of alfalfa would be the difference between the value of the land with such crop standing and growing upon it and the same land without such crop. We see no error in this instruction. This case is very similar to Anderson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Neb.) 120 N. W. 1114, and several points argued by defendant as to the qualifications of witnesses and the competency of proof are covered by the opinion in that case.

3. As to the third cause of action, we are inclined to think that the complaint of defendant with reference to the manner of proving the damage to the corn crop is well founded. The plaintiff was permitted to show how much a matured crop of corn was worth per acre upon similar land in that locality in each year. In 1903 the corn was destroyed just as it was coming

T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Arthurs, 63 Kan. 404, 65 Pac. 651; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Owens, 6 Kan. App. 515, 50 Pac. 982; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Land, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 74.

In Ward v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 61 Minn. 449, 63 N. W. 1104, where growing grass was destroyed by fire, the court, in disposing of the question of the measure of damages, said: "An action to recover damages for a partial loss or a complete destruction of growing crops, whether annual or perennial, is practically an action to recover for an injury to real property. In principle such an action cannot be distinguished from one brought to recover for an injury to growing trees, nor is the measure of damages at all different, although stated differently. The proof in an action to recover for trees destroyed is all directed to an ascertainment of the difference in the market value of the real property immediately before the injury and immediately after its infliction, this difference being the measure of damages. The proof in a case to recover for injuries to a growing crop is, or should be, confined to estimating the value of the crop destroyed, such value being the measure of damages. There is no substantial distinction or difference between the damages a plaintiff is entitled to recover for the destruction of trees and for the loss of a crop, and the same method of determining those damages should be adopted. The measure of damages in this case must be ascertained by inquiring into the difference in the market value of the real property immediately before the injury and its value immediately after its infliction, and, in ascertaining this difference, evidence that another crop of some character and value may be grown on the land in the same growing period, of the average yield of like crops, of the average market price, the ordinary expense of harvesting and marketing such crops, the condition of that particular crop before the injury, and any other fact existing at the time of the loss tending to show how and to what extent the injury decreased and diminished the value of the farm, may be considered. But evidence of matters occurring subsequently to the injury is not competent."

In Gates v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 44 Mo. App. 488, it was recognized that the destruction of a meadow by fire is an injury to the inheritance.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Morse v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 81 Neb. 745, 116 N. W. 859, it was held that, since the seeding of alfalfa is a hazardous process and often results in failure, the measure of damages for its destruction, in this case by an overflow of water, should be the difference in value of the land before and after the destruction, the court saying that this would be a much safer value of the stand than would the cost of again seeding to alfalfa.

This rule would seem to be especially applicable in case it affirmatively appears that, aside from the grass above the ground, the roots or turf is also destroyed or injured. Black v. Highland Solar Salt Co. 98 App. Div. 409, 90 N. Y. Supp. 338 (destruction of roots of willow slips by salt water); Baker v. Mims, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 413, 37 S. W. 190 (destruction of grass and injury to turf by trespassing cattle); Texas & P. R. Co. v. Tippit, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 710 (injury to turf as well as grass which in this case was "common Texas free grass"); Missouri P. R. Co. v. Rabb, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 63 (destruction of grass by fire); Missouri P. R. Co. v. Patterson, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 713 (the same).

In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Fulmore (Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 688, it was held that the measure of damages for the destruction of sod by fire is the difference in the market value of the land immediately before and after the fire, excluding the value of the grass.

In Jackson v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. (Tex. Civ. App.) 78 S. W. 724, it was held that, in an action against a railroad for damages from fire originating from sparks from an engine, causing the destruction of grass, roots, turf, and sod, it is not error to sustain an objection to testimony concerning the value of the use of the land, and how long it would require the land to return to its former condition, since, as the court said, the true measure of damages for the burning of the grass, roots, turf, and sod was the difference in the market value of the land before and after the burning.

In Wiggins v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R.

up, in 1904 it was destroyed before it had been cultivated, and the third year it had been cultivated once before the flood. The proper measure of damages in such case is the value of the growing crop in the condition in which it exists at the time of its destruction. Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. v. Harlin, 50 Neb. 698, 36 L.R.A. 417, 61 Am. St. Rep. 578, 70 N. W. 263; Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. v. Cram, 30 Neb. 76, 46 N. W. 217. No proof was offered to show the value of the crop at such time, the only evidence being as to the value of a matured crop of corn. The inquiry should have been directed to the value of the crop as it then stood. Under the rule stated in Berard v. Atchison & N. R. Co. 79 Neb. 830, 113 N. W. 537, there was not sufficient competent evidence before the jury as to the value of the crop at the time of its destruction, upon which to base a verdict. The value of a matured crop under like conditions on similar soil in the immediate locality might perhaps, in case the market value of the immature crop was difficult to prove properly, have been shown to the jury with other facts as a means of aiding them to reach a conclusion as to the value at the time of destruction, but this was the only evidence of value before the jury, and was, therefore, misleading in its tendency.

A number of objections were made and overruled to questions relating to the manner in which the flood was caused, several of which were leading in their nature and seem objectionable. The answers to most of them were rambling and discursive in their nature, and neither questions nor answers are models of clearness and perspicuity in the use of language. They should not have been asked or answered in such form, and, while we would not reverse the case if these were the only errors, at another trial the rules of evidence should be more strictly followed.

The jury made special findings as to the amount of damages upon each cause of action. The evidence being sufficient to sustain the verdict as to the first and second causes of action, the judgment of the District Court is reversed and cause remanded, with direction to render judgment on the special findings, as of the date of such findings, in the first and second causes of action, with interest, and for further proceedings as to the third cause of action.

Co. 119 Mo. App. 492, 95 S. W. 311, it was held that, where a meadow is destroyed by fire to the extent that the roots are killed, the measure of damages is the injury done to the inheritance, ascertained by the difference between its value before and after the fire.

In Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jagoe (Tex. Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 717, it was held that, in an action for the burning of a meadow, it is not error to charge the jury to find such sum as will compensate for injury done the turf and roots, taking into consideration the purposes to which the land was appropriated or adopted, instead of declaring the damages to be the difference in the market value of the land immediately before and after the injury, it appearing, in this case, that the evidence of damage relied on all tended to show the depreciation in value of the land as meadow land.

As was also pointed out in the note to Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Beeler, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 930, which discusses the measure of damages for the destruction of fruit trees, and other trees or shrubbery not valuable for their timber or firewood, practically at least, these two methods of measuring the damages, as above discussed, will often lead to the same amount of damages, for at least in those cases where the turf or roots were not injured, and possibly these cases also, the value of the grass as it stood will practically be equivalent to the difference between the land before and after its destruction. And, as was the case in the above-named note, some cases which hold to the rule that the substantive measure of damages is the value of the land before and after the destruction of the grass admit evidence of its value, or the value of the meadow as it stood, to aid the jury in applying that rule.

Cases of this nature are Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Davis; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Arthurs; and Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Owens,—supra.

So, in Wiggins v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 129 Mo. App. 369, 108 S. W. 574, it was held that, although the burning of a timothy meadow, destroying the roots, is held to be an injury to the inheritance (see Wiggins v. St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co. supra) evidence as to the amount of hay that could be produced on the land prior to the fire, the color of the soil, and the price of hay, was admissible as throwing light on the amount of damages according to the rule of measurement prescribed.

The Texas courts have practically reached the same results as those courts which hold that, for the destruction of grass or a meadow, the measure of damages is the difference in value of the realty before and after the destruction, by holding that, in case a meadow is destroyed, both as to the grass as such and the turf or roots, the measure of damages is the value of the grass as it stood upon the ground, and the difference in the value of the land before and after the destruction not taking into consideration the value of the grass.

Cases of this nature, all of which concerned the burning of grass or meadow as the result of negligence by a railroad company, are the following: Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Hogsett, 67 Tex. 685, 4 S. W. 365; Ft. Worth & N. O. R. Co. v. Wallace, 74 Tex. 581, 12 S. W. 227; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 493, 23 S. W. 90; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hendricks (Tex. Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 433; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Pfleger (Tex. Civ. App.) 25 S. W. 792; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Goode, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 245, 26 S. W. 441; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Reagan (Tex. Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 846; International & G. N. R. Co. v. McIver (Tex. Civ. App.) 40 S. W. 438; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Rice Bros. 24 Tex. Civ. App. 374, 59 S. W. 833; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Chittim, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 40, 71 S. W. 294; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Prude, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 144, 86 S. W. 1046; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Neiser (Tex. Civ. App.) 118 S. W. 166. This rule was also recognized in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Ayers (Tex.) 8 S. W. 538.

It will be observed that these cases, in finding the measure of damages to the grass separate and apart from the measure of damages to the realty, and holding that the measure of damages to the grass as such is its value as it stood upon the ground, are practically in line with the cases first set out in the note. Indeed these cases here set out, as in the Texas cases set out in the fore part of the note, take, as the criterion of the value of the grass, the market value if it possesses a market value; otherwise, that is, if the market value is not ascertainable, its value for pasturage, hay, or other purposes.

For the evident reason that many persons value a farm as high without a meadow as with it, in several cases the measure of damages for the destruction of a meadow has been stated to be the cost of reseeded or restoration to its condition before the fire, together with the rental value of land for the purpose for which it was used during the time it was rendered unproductive. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Jones, 59 Ark. 105, 26 S. W. 595; Black v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 122 Iowa, 32, 96 N. W. 984 (grass sown among wheat stubble destroyed).

In Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hixon, 110 Ind. 225, 11 N. E. 285, where a fire was communicated to land valuable only as meadow land, destroying the roots of the grass growing thereon, it was held that evidence of the cost of reseeded, and of its rental value during the time it would not produce a crop of grass, is admissible upon the question of damages.

In Mattis v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Mo. App.) 119 S. W. 998, the court draws a distinction between timothy, meadow, and blue grass,—grasses with which land may be seeded and made to produce annual crops,—and grasses which are not produced from seed sown, and which, when once destroyed, cannot be restored in a season by the agency of man, and holds that, where the roots of the former are destroyed by fire, the measure of damages is the cost of reseeded and loss of rental value, and not the difference in the value of the land before and after.

the fire, which applies only in case of the latter.

In Vermilya v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 66 Iowa, 606, 55 Am. Rep. 279, 24 N. W. 234, for the destruction of a meadow by fire to the extent that the roots of the grass were so burned that the meadow would not produce grass for mowing, the owner was held to be entitled to recover as damages the cost of restoring the meadow to as good condition as it was before the fire. The court said that it was evident that plaintiff could not be fully compensated for his loss unless allowed for the value of the meadow, and no more just or reasonable way of determining that value could be suggested than by inquiring as to the cost of restoring it.

In Bradley v. Iowa C. R. Co. 111 Iowa, 562, 82 N. W. 996, the court, after saying that, in St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Jones, supra, it was held that, where a meadow is destroyed by fire, the measure of damages is the cost of reseeded it, and its rental value until it is restored, said: "This we regard as a more accurate statement of the rule than merely to say that the measure is the cost of restoration. While this might result in giving plaintiff a better meadow than he lost, defendant cannot complain. It must make good the loss it has occasioned. If it cannot do this without doing something more, the plaintiff should not suffer."

In addition to the cost of restoring the meadow and its rental value during the time it is unproductive, it has been held that where, in addition to the roots, it is shown that grass has been destroyed, its value may be recovered also, since by the restoring of a meadow evidently is meant putting the grass roots in the condition they were before the fire. Bradley v. Iowa C. R. Co. supra; Krejci v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 117 Iowa, 344, 90 N. W. 708.

In Knight Bros. v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 122 Mo. App. 38, 98 S. W. 81, it was held that, for the burning of a meadow destroying both the grass and the roots, the true measure of damages is the rental value of the land.

In Broussard v. Sabine & E. T. R. Co. 80 Tex. 329, 16 S. W. 30, it was held that, although ordinarily the measure of damages for the destruction of grass is the value at the time of destruction, yet where, as in this case, the destruction was the result of an overflow, the effect of which was to destroy the use of the land for a considerable time, the measure of damages is the reasonable value of the use of the land for pasturage in the condition it would have been in had it not been overflowed during the time its use was destroyed.

To the same effect is Sabine & E. T. R. Co. v. Broussard, 69 Tex. 617, 7 S. W. 374.

In Horres v. Berkeley Chemical Co. 57 S. C. 189, 52 L.R.A. 36, 35 S. E. 500, where immature cucumber plants and strawberry plants were destroyed by poisonous gases, the court seems to recognize that the damages recoverable are the rental value of the land, the cost of the seeds planted in such land, the cost of the manure and fertilizers, and the cost of the labor employed in their cultivation, it being held in this case that it was error to introduce evidence of the probable yield and net profits of such plants.

In Black v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 122 Iowa, 32, 96 N. W. 984, it was held competent and proper to show the rental value by evidence of what portions of the land not burned actually produced, and by rental value was not meant the general rental value.

Damages recoverable by tenant.

In St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hall, 71 Ark. 302, 74 S. W. 293, it was held that the measure of damages recoverable by a tenant of a meadow, for the destruction of the grass by fire, was the difference between the usable value of the land before and after the grass was burned, down to the time of the trial.

In Blunck v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (Iowa) 115 N. W. 1013, where a tenant sought to recover damages for the flooding of his hay land, preventing him from having it cut, the court held it to be no error for the trial court to instruct the jury that the measure of damages would be the fair and reasonable market value of the hay on the premises in question, that plaintiff was unable to cut at the time of the alleged injury. In this case this value was fixed by estimating the yield in tons per acre, then taking the market value prevailing at the time in the vicinity after deducting therefrom the cost of cutting and stacking.

In Carter v. Wabash R. Co. 128 Mo. App. 57, 106 S. W. 611, where a lessee of a tract of land, whose right as such was restricted to pasturing and cutting hay on the premises, was damaged because of a fire burning the meadow, the jury were instructed by the trial court that the measure of damages was the difference in value at harvest time between the stand of grass actually produced on the land burned over and the stand of grass which, from the evidence, the jury should find said land would have produced at harvest time had the land not burned over, such value to be estimated by the jury at the fair and reasonable market value of the stand of grass at harvest time prior to the actual beginning of the cutting of said grass. Presiding Judge Bland, in an elaborate opinion, approved of this instruction, and took occasion to say: "The difference in the rental value of the land just before and immediately after the fire would not afford plaintiff adequate compensation for the loss, for the reason he was restricted by the terms of his lease from cultivating the land; nor could he sublet it, and, as he had no interest in the soil, he was not entitled to damages for injury to the inheritance, if any. The fire did not interfere with his rights in the property as lessee; therefore his damages cannot be measured by the difference in the rental value of the land burned over and what he agreed to pay per acre as rent. In 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) ordinary cases, the measure of damages for the destruction of a growing crop by fire, as the destruction of a crop of grass, is its value at the time of the fire. . . .

Plaintiff's evidence tends to show that, with the exception of about three acres, the portion of the meadow burned over was practically destroyed, and grew up in weeds and wild grass, and was not worth anything as a meadow at harvest time; it also tends to show that in previous years the yield of hay per acre from the burned portion had equalled or exceeded that of the unburned portion of the meadow. At the times the fires occurred, plaintiff could not pasture the meadow without damaging it, and hence the short green grass, in the condition it was then in, had no appreciable value to him, and it seems to us that nothing less than what the value of the grass would have been, standing on the meadow at harvest time, had it been permitted to mature, will fully compensate plaintiff for his loss, and the most rational and satisfactory way of proving that value was by showing the average product per acre of the portion of the meadow not burned, and . . . it seems to us that proof of what it would have produced the year in which it was burned ought to be admissible where, as in this case, the proof is such as to make it reasonably certain what the land would have produced. . . . If, to prove the damages, it was competent to hear evidence of what the land would have produced but for the fire, it was proper to instruct the jury that the measure of damages was the market value of the crop of hay the land would have produced, less the expense of harvesting and marketing the same; in substance, this is what the court directed the jury to do in estimating the damages, and I can see no substantial objection to the instruction."

The majority of the court, however, considered the instruction given erroneous, and adhered to the doctrine announced in Hunt v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 126 Mo. App. 261, 103 S. W. 133, to the effect that the measure of damages for the destruction of a growing crop of corn is the value of the crop in the field at the time of destruction. The court in the Hunt Case, however, in determining the value of the growing crop, permitted the introduction of evidence of the yield of that part of the crop of corn not damaged, and the market value of the corn in the autumn when matured, in connection with evidence of the cost of cultivation, gathering, and marketing the crop.

Conversion.

In Acree v. Brayton, 75 Iowa, 719, 38 N. W. 171, it was held that one who without right goes upon another's land, and cuts the grass, and makes it into hay, and converts it to his own use, is liable for the value of the hay at the final act of conversion, and the owner's damages are not limited to the value of the grass as it stood upon the ground before the trespass.

In Hosli v. Yokel, 57 Mo. App. 622, it was held that, for wrongfully taking and cutting timothy, the owner was entitled to recover the value of the timothy in the meadow at the time it was cut.

In Hinman v. Heyderstadt, 32 Minn. 250, 20 N. W. 155, it was held that, where one peaceably enters on the premises of another, under a bona fide claim of title, and cuts and removes the grass growing thereon, the owner, in an action by him for the conversion of the hay, can recover only the value of the standing grass, and not the value of the hay after it was removed.

Cases in which a person was permitted to recover according to a certain measure of damages, but which was not recognized as the true measure of damages, although permitted to stand because no prejudicial error was thereby committed, have been expressly excluded from this note.

For measure of damages for injury to, or destruction of, trees or shrubbery not valuable for their timber or firewood, see case note to Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Beeler, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 930.

Measure of damages for injury to, or destruction of, growing crop, see case note to Teller v. Bay & River Dredging Co. 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 267.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

CITY STREET IMPROVEMENT COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
CITY OF MARYSVILLE, Resp't.

(— Cal. —, 101 Pac. 308.)

Public improvement — defects — inspection — estoppel.

1. The approval of the work by the city engineer under whose supervision a contract for public improvement is to be performed will, in the absence of fraud or concealment which prevents a discovery of imperfections, estop the municipality from contesting the contractor's right to the contract price because of failure to perform the work according to the specifications, so far as defects are concerned which were discoverable by reasonable attention to the duties of inspection.

Pleading — public contract — engineer's certificate.

2. The engineer's certificate of completion of the work need not be pleaded in a suit for the contract price of public work, where the statute provides that, in pleading the performance of conditions precedent in a contract, it is not necessary to state the facts showing such performance.

(Beatty, Ch. J., and Angellotti and Shaw, JJ., dissent.)

(March 31, 1909.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Yuba County in 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

defendant's favor, and from an order denying a new trial in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due plaintiff for work done in the construction of a sewer for defendant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William Rix, Bishop, Wheeler, & Hoefler, and Richard Belcher, for appellant:

The certificate of an engineer to whose satisfaction and approval work is to be done is conclusive, in the absence of a showing of fraud, collusion, or mistake, upon the question as to whether the work has been so done.

Omaha v. Hammond, 94 U. S. 98, 24 L. ed. 32; Moore v. Kerr, 65 Cal. 519, 4 Pac. 542; Washington Bridge Co. v. Land & River Improv. Co. 12 Wash. 273, 40 Pac. 982; Kingsley v. Brooklyn, 78 N. Y. 211; Brady v. New York, 132 N. Y. 418, 30 N. E. 757; People ex rel. Ready v. Syracuse, 144 N. Y. 65, 38 N. E. 1006; Williams v. Chicago, S. F. & C. R. Co. 112 Mo. 463, 34 Am. St. Rep. 418, 20 S. W. 631; Baltimore, O. & C. R. Co. v. Scholes, 14 Ind. App. 524, 56 Am. St. Rep. 308, 43 N. E. 156; Sweet v. Morrison, 116 N. Y. 19, 15 Am. St. Rep. 376, 22 N. E. 276; Chism v. Schipper, 51 N. J. L. 1, 2 L.R.A. 544, 14

Case Note. — Conclusiveness, as between municipality and contractor, of decision of engineer or other empowered officers as to matters concerning contract for public improvement.

It will be noticed that this note is confined strictly to the question of conclusiveness as between municipality and contractor, and does not cover the right of property owners to attack such decisions when it is sought to enforce an assessment or tax against them. Neither are cases dealing with the question as to counties within the scope of the note.

Conclusiveness as against city.

In the absence of fraud or bad faith, the decision of such officers is conclusive on the city, where the contract between the parties shows such to have been their intention. Each case, therefore, necessarily depends upon the construction to be given the provisions of the contract.

The decisions of the officers in the following cases were held to be conclusive on the cities, no fraud or bad faith being shown: McGuire v. Rapid City, 6 Dak. 346, 5 L.R.A. 752, 43 N. W. 706 (work in straightening stream to be done to engineer's satisfaction); Com. ex rel. Mercantile Trust Co. v. Pittsburgh, 204 Pa. 219, 53 Atl. 709 (decision of director of public works as to estimates of work on reservoir to be final); Whiteman v. New York, 21 Hun, 117 (decision of engineer as to kind or quantity of work on dam to be conclusive); James- town v. Arter, 55 Misc. 629, 106 N. Y. Supp. 1027 (contract price for constructing sidewalk, to be paid when work and material approved by sidewalk committee and street commissioner); People ex rel. Ready v. Syracuse, 65 Hun, 321, 20 N. Y. Supp. 236, affirmed in 144 N. Y. 63, 38 N. E. 1006 (engineer's stipulated account by which amount of work done and materials furnished to be computed); Nuttall v. Philadelphia, 15 W. N. C. 439 (streets to be cleaned to commissioner's satisfaction); Wyckoff v. Meyers, 44 N. Y. 143 (payment to be made when work finished and certified by architects); Leverich v. New York, 66 Barb. 623 (compensation for keeping streets in condition to be fixed by street commissioners, or any two of them); Omaha v. Hammond, 94 U. S. 98, 24 L. ed. 70 (wells to be completed under engineer's supervision and to his satisfaction); Johnathan Clark & Sons Co. v. Pittsburgh, 217 Pa. 46, 66 Atl. 154 (decision of director of public works as to the amount due for extra work to be final); Smith v. City, 13 Phila. 177 (finding of board of health as to remuneration for extra work to be final and conclusive upon the parties).

Am. St. Rep. 668, 16 Atl. 316; Grube v. Schultheiss, 57 N. Y. 669; Sheffield & B. Coal, Iron, & R. Co. v. Gordon, 151 U. S. 291, 38 L. ed. 166, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 343; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Pennsylvania Coal Co. 50 N. Y. 264; McCauley v. Keller, 130 Pa. 53, 17 Am. St. Rep. 762, 18 Atl. 607; Haughwout v. Hubbard, 131 Cal. 675, 63 Pac. 1078; McGuire v. Rapid City, 6 Dak. 346, 5 L.R.A. 752, 43 N. W. 708; Rusling v. Union Pipe & Constr. Co. 5 App. Div. 448, 39 N. Y. Supp. 217; Wildey v. Fractional School Dist. No. 1, 25 Mich. 424.

So, the measurements of the city's general superintendent of sewers are conclusive, in the absence of fraud or bad faith, where the contract for constructing a sewer provides that he shall finally decide disputes involving the character of the work, its quantity, and the compensation therefor. Shea v. Sewerage & Water Board (La.) 50 So. 166.

Where, to prevent all disputes and litigation, it is agreed that the engineer's decision as to the performance of a paving contract shall be final and conclusive, the city is bound thereby, in the absence of fraud and collusion, although the engineer is negligent and careless, and makes mistakes in reaching his decision. Bowman v. Stewart, 165 Pa. 394, 30 Atl. 988.

So, the certificate of the city's engineer is conclusive as to the amount of work done, where the contract provides that it shall be final, but is not conclusive as to whether such work was authorized to be done by the terms of the contract. Re Morris & C. Dredging Co. 116 App. Div. 257, 101 N. Y. Supp. 726.

And evidence on behalf of the city to contradict certificates of its engineer and surveyor as to the quality and amount of work 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

There was a substantial compliance by plaintiff, and this is all that is required.

Harlan v. Stufflebeem, 87 Cal. 510, 25 Pac. 686; Washington Bridge Co. v. Land & River Improv. Co. 12 Wash. 273, 40 Pac. 982; Kingsley v. Brooklyn, 78 N. Y. 207; Ricketts v. Sisson, 9 Dana, 359, 35 Am. Dec. 142.

The contractor did not warrant that the sewer would be sufficient for the purpose for which it was intended, and, unless there was such a warranty, would not be liable for its failure to fulfil its purpose.

done during a certain period is properly excluded where the contract provides for part payment monthly upon acceptance and approval by the engineer and surveyor. Malone v. Philadelphia, 12 Phila. 270.

So, the city is precluded by the certificates and acceptance of work on streets by the commissioner of public works from showing that the work is not according to specifications, where the contract provides that the work shall be performed to the satisfaction of the commissioner, and in substantial accordance with the specifications. Brady v. New York, 132 N. Y. 415, 30 N. E. 757.

And a clause which was separated from the foregoing one, providing that the city should not be precluded or estopped by any return or certificate made or given by any of its officers from at any time showing the true and correct amount and character of the work done and the materials furnished, was held not to prevent the estoppel of the city by the acceptance and certificates of its officers. Ibid. The court said: "The clause which we have quoted is entirely separated from the concluding portion of the contract, which undertakes to provide how performance shall be ascertained and bindingly declared, and was not intended to trespass on its provisions. It does not provide that such certificates shall not estop the defendant from showing failure of performance, but it shall not estop it from showing the true and correct amount and character of the work done and materials furnished. Not that the city can prevent a contractor from receiving what has been earned under a contract when the certificates shall have been given, but that it may prevent a recovery for a greater amount than the work was worth."

Under a like provision in Quinn v. New York, 16 App. Div. 408, 45 N. Y. Supp. 7, evidence that the amount of concrete required by the contract had not been furnished was held admissible, but evidence that paving blocks were not properly fitted or that they were of improper size, and that joints were not cemented, that the pavement was disintegrated, and that bridge stones were not properly beveled, was held properly excluded. The court said: "The proof excluded amounted simply to showing that the work was not properly done. It was not denied that the pavement was laid, and that it was of the kind contracted for, but Bancroft v. San Francisco Tool Co. 120 Cal. 228, 52 Pac. 496; Sheffield & B. Coal, Iron, & R. Co. v. Gordon, supra; MacKnight Flintic Stone Co. v. New York, 160 N. Y. 73, 54 N. E. 661; Ricketts v. Sisson, supra; Milwaukee Boiler Co. v. Duncan, 87 Wis. 120, 41 Am. St. Rep. 34, 58 N. W. 232.

Messrs. W. H. Carlin, Arthur H. Reddington, and Waldo S. Johnson, for respondent:

The portions of the specifications requiring the proper cementing of the joints and the keeping of the water out of the trenches until the cement had set are clearly and unequivocally specified in and made mandatory by the contract; and, such being the case, it could not, in the nature of things, be within the power of the engineer to permit the plaintiff to vary or depart from them.

McVerry v. Kidwell, 63 Cal. 246; Madison v. American Sanitary Engineering Co. 118 Wis. 480, 95 N. W. 1097; Adlard v. Muldoon, 45 Ill. 193; Sanitary Dist. v. McMahon & M. Co. 110 Ill. App. 524; Lamson v. Marshall, 133 Mich. 250, 95 N. W.

it was said that it was not good of its kind. This, we think, was not within the estoppel clause. The word 'character' which is there used is not, perhaps, an entirely accurate word to express the meaning the parties intended; but a fair construction of the word, as used in this connection, is that the defendant might show the true and correct kind of the work that had been done; that is to say, that the work done was not of the general kind required by the contract. That, we think, is as far as this clause allows the defendant to go in that connection. The certificate of the engineer and the acceptance of the commissioner of public works are the criteria by which it must be judged whether the work was good of its kind; and if that certificate has been given and the work has been accepted, then, in the absence of fraud or palpable mistake, the plaintiff may insist upon the certificate and the defendant cannot question it. There is left then to the defendant, under the estoppel clause, only the right to say that the work accepted was not the work that was agreed to be done by the contract, and that the materials put into it were different from those required by the contract, or were less in amount than the defendant was apparently entitled to under the certificate. It is not at liberty to show, in spite of the certificate, that the materials which were put into the work and accepted were not proper because of some defect in them, or in the way in which the work was done, for they comply in description and kind with those called for under the contract."

To the same effect is People ex rel. Cranford v. Coler, 26 Misc. 509, 57 N. Y. Supp. 461.

Where a paving contract incorporates an ordinance which authorizes the highway committee to appoint inspectors of the work, and directs the city engineer to supervise the work, but expressly provides that no waiver or acceptance of performance by the inspectors or engineers shall bind the city unless their decision is ratified by the highway committee, and it is further provided that the committee and engineer are empowered to determine the amount due, and settle all disputes and make their decision final and conclusive, the acceptance of the work by the engineer and highway committee is conclusive against the city. Sicilian Asphalt Paving Co. v. Williamsport, 186 Pa. 256, 40 Atl. 471.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Where a contract obligates the contractors to follow the instructions of an engineer in constructing a reservoir in respect to any alterations in the plans, and, by direction of the engineer, piles are driven to a less depth than that named in the contract, the contractor is entitled to the price fixed by the contract. Kingsley v. Brooklyn, 78 N. Y. 200.

And recovery may be had by a contractor although the engineer refuses to make the certificate provided for, where a defect in a sewer results from the pipes being laid in water, under such engineer's direction, the contract stipulating that the work was to be done to the satisfaction of the engineer. Lamson v. Marshall, 133 Mich. 250, 95 N. W. 78.

And this is true notwithstanding a provision that, "although the engineer may assent to special means of prosecuting the work in difficult cases, this will not relieve the contractor of the responsibility of the result," since, in this case, it is not an assent, but a positive direction. Ibid.

So, evidence on behalf of the city, tending to show that a sewer is not located at the contract depth, is inadmissible where its engineer had constantly superintended and inspected it and accepted it upon completion, the common council ratified his act, and the sewer was thereafter used. People v. Syracuse, 144 N. Y. 63, 38 N. E. 1006.

And the action of the city council in adopting the report of the surveyor accepting a pavement precludes the city from claiming damages for delay, where the contract provides that such damages shall be paid before the acceptance. Central Bitulithic Paving Co. v. Mt. Clemens, 143 Mich. 259, 106 N. W. 888.

A city which has for many years recognized and accepted a waterworks system as fully complying with a contract cannot afterwards repudiate such recognition, and claim damages for failure to comply with the contract. National Waterworks Co. v. Kansas City, 27 L.R.A. 827, 10 C. C. A. 653, 27 U. S. App. 165, 62 Fed. 853.

And it has been held that, after the superintendent of construction of a road gives a certificate of final estimate on the entire work, and his findings are approved, he has no power subsequently to change his finding as to the proper performance of the work. Mercer Bd. of Internal Improvement v. Dougherty, 3 B. Mon. 446. After review-

78; Dyer v. Middle Kittitas Irrig. Dist. 40 Wash. 238, 82 Pac. 301; Burke v. Kansas City, 34 Mo. App. 570.

On petition for rehearing.

Mr. E. B. Stanwood, also for respondent:

The city is not estopped from contesting the contractor's right to the contract price.

2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 2d ed. §§ 804, 805; Boggs v. Merced Min. Co. 14 Cal. 279; Martin v. Zellerbach, 38 Cal. 300, 99 Am. Dec. 365; McCormick v. Orient Ins. Co. 86 Cal. 260, 24 Pac. 1003; First Nat. Bank v. Maxwell, 123 Cal. 360, 69 Am. St. Rep. 64, 55 Pac. 980; Blood v. LaSerena Land & Water Co. 113 Cal. 227, 41 Pac. 1017, 45 Pac. 252; Carpy v. Dowdell, 115 Cal. 677, 47 Pac. 695; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. State Nat.

Bank, 10 Wall. 604, 19 L. ed. 1008; Morgan v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 96 U. S. 716, 24 L. ed. 743; Henshaw v. Bissell, 18 Wall. 255, 21 L. ed. 835; Kirk v. Hamilton, 102 U. S. 68, 28 L. ed. 79; Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96, 29 L. ed. 811, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 657; Bloomfield v. Charter Oak Nat. Bank, 121 U. S. 121, 30 L. ed. 923, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865; Brant v. Virginia Coal & I. Co. 93 U. S. 326, 23 L. ed. 927.

Per Curiam:

This action was brought to recover the sum of $4,000.07, the balance alleged to be due plaintiff from defendant for labor done and materials furnished in the construction of a portion of a sewer system for the city, under a written contract, a portion of the ing the facts, the court said: "This being the case, we are of opinion that this final estimate was the last judgment which the superintendent was, by the terms of the contract, authorized to give; that the absolute authority vested in him to direct alterations, repairs, and reconstructions, and to determine finally upon the existence and value of deficiencies, and of the entire subordination of the contractors to his will and judgment, all provided for, and probably essential during the progress of the work, are terminated by final estimate or certificate showing, as this one does, that, in his opinion, the work has been completed according to contract. After this act, his future opinions are no longer the decisions of a judge, chosen by the parties, but the mere opinions of a well-informed witness, the weight of which is diminished by being in opposition to his own final estimate, presumptively made after a minute inspection of the work as it proceeded, and an examination satisfactory to himself, to ascertain its completion according to contract; and the board itself, having no more right to withhold payment from a contractor who has completed his work to the satisfaction of the superintendent, than a private individual has to refuse payment of a just debt, cannot itself go behind the acts of its officer, evidencing the satisfactory completion of the road, and its actual adoption for its intended use; but upon proof, not only of actual deficiency in the construction, but of such fraud on the part of the contractors as prevented the superintendent from discovering the defect by the use of such vigilance as belongs to his office."

The engineer's acceptance, however, is not conclusive unless the contract plainly provides that it shall have this effect; and where authority is given the engineer to accept the work as it progresses, providing it is performed according to contract, his approval is not conclusive when the work does not comply therewith. Sterling v. Hurd, 44 Colo. 436, 98 Pac. 174.

And where a contract for constructing a sewer provides that the work shall be according to such directions as the engineer may, from time to time, give in superintending the construction, and according to the plans and specifications, the contractor cannot recover for relaying work which he is required to take up on account of its not being laid to the depth stipulated in the contract, although there is evidence that the pipe was laid at the depth required by the engineer. Burke v. Kansas City, 34 Mo. App. 570.

So, when the terms of a contract provide that the contractor for a sewer purification plant shall operate it for three months, and, if the plant is then working to the satisfaction of the city engineers, the city shall assume control, the engineers' certificate will not bind the city, where the degree of purification clearly provided for by the contract is not produced, since the engineers are not empowered by the contract to declare themselves satisfied with a plant that does not purify the sewage in the manner guaranteed. Madison v. American Sanitary Engineering Co. 118 Wis. 480, 95 N. W. 1097.

And a city engineer's approval of a substitution of material in paving a street will not bind the city and warrant a recovery by the contractor, since the determination of what material shall be used is a legislative function, and cannot be delegated. King Hill Brick Mfg. Co. v. Hamilton, 51 Mo. App. 120.

Where a contract for tunnel excavation provides that the engineer shall determine the quantity of the work, and also all questions relative to the excavation thereof, and that his estimates and conclusion shall be conclusive upon the contractors, but that the city shall not be precluded or estopped from showing the correct amount and character of the work done, the engineer's opinion that certain work is included in and provided for by the contract is not conclusive on the city, although several payments have been made on estimates based on his opinion. O'Brien v. New York, 139 N. Y. 543, 35 N. E. 323.

So, where the certificate of the engineer or superintendent is not made conclusive as demand being for extra work. The total contract price, including extra work amounting to $2,940.16, was $33,731.29, of which defendant had paid plaintiff $29,731.22. Defendant claimed that plaintiff had not performed and had refused to perform the contract according to its terms, and on this ground resisted payment of the alleged balance, and by counterclaim sought to recover the amount alleged to be necessary to complete the work. The trial court sustained this contention of defendant, finding that defendant had already necessarily expended $10,452.69 in completing certain portions of the work according to the contract, and would be required to expend the further sum of $21,525 to fully complete the same, making in all $31,977.69 so to be expended by the city in completing the work. It, therefore, gave judgment in favor of defendant against plaintiff for the difference between said $31,977.69 and the balance due on the contract, $4,000.07, viz., $27,977.62. From this judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial, the plaintiff appeals.

The sewer system contemplated was to consist of sewers laid in the city, a receiving reservoir or sump, an outfall sewer extending from the sump to and beyond the corporate limits of the city, a pumping plant to pump the sewage from the sump to the place of outfall, an irrigation farm on which to discharge the sewage, and flush tanks. The undertaking of plaintiff was to furnish all the labor and material necessary to the performance of the work in a proper manner, nor as to the fact that the materials were according to contract, but merely makes such certificate a condition precedent to the contractor's obtaining payments, the obtaining of the certificate does not bar an action for damages founded upon the alleged breaches of the conditions of a bond to indemnify the city against defective workmanship or use of improper materials. Newark v. New Jersey Asphalt Co. 68 N. J. L. 458, 53 Atl. 294.

And where the contract under which street grading is done requires the obtaining of the certificate of the city engineer before the contractor can recover, but provides that it shall not preclude the city from proving the true and correct amount and character of the work done, the city is not estopped to show the amount of filling actually furnished. Dean v. New York, 45 App. Div. 605, 61 N. Y. Supp. 374.

And the certificate of the city surveyor, that work in making wooden curbs and gutters is done in accordance with the specifications, is not conclusive upon the city, where there is no provision in the contract showing such intention. Rooney v. May, 23 La. Ann. 30.

So, where an act requires the city engineer to file a report with the city council upon completion of work on streets, and this is made part of the contract, such report is not conclusive on the city council, but the duty devolves upon that body to determine whether the work is completed according to contract. Auburn v. State, 170 Ind. 511, 83 N. E. 997, rehearing denied in 170 Ind. 534, 84 N. E. 990.

And the city is not estopped from showing that the performance is not according to contract by the certificate of its engineer that sufficient work has been performed to entitle the contractor to the amount of a warrant, where the contract stipulates that such certificate shall be conclusive only upon the contractor. People ex rel. Rolf v. Coler, 58 App. Div. 131, 68 N. Y. Supp. 448.

Neither does the acceptance of a street by a committee and the city council, for the purpose of assessment, entitle a contractor to recover for the amount of grading estimated in the contract from an established grade, where the city reserves the right to change the grade of the street so as to increase or diminish the amount to be paid, and the answer avers that the city did diminish the amount of grading. Ryan v. Dubuque, 106 Iowa, 312, 76 N. W. 703.

Where a contract provides that the general superintendent shall finally decide all matters of dispute involving the character of work on a sewer, and that when, in the opinion of the engineer, the contract shall be performed, he shall make estimates, the decision of these officers is not absolutely conclusive, but the provisions mean that the engineer has the right to judge the manner in which the work shall be done in order that it comply with the specifications, and that he shall have the right to condemn all work not coming up to that standard; but where it appears that the cause of failure of the sewer to work properly is not defective workmanship, but instability of soil, the judgment of the representatives named, if contrary to the proven facts, is not conclusive against the city. Shea v. Sewerage & Water Board (La.) 50 So. 166.

Where a contract for the construction of a harbor contains a provision that, if the materials mentioned fall short of completing the work according to the plan, the contractor shall have extra compensation, and if they exceed the amount required, a deduction shall be made, stipulating that the excess or deficiency shall be conclusively determined by the engineer, and the contract also contains another clause providing that, if any material alterations in the work are desired, the appraisal of the difference in cost shall be determined by three disinterested persons. The engineer's estimate of the value of the extra work and materials is not conclusive against the city, where a material change of plan is made and no arbitrators have been appointed. Hasbrouck v. Milwaukee, 17 Wis. 266.

And where the decision is arbitrarily made, or bad faith and fraud appear, the decision is not conclusive.

Thus, a sewer district is not concluded by to construct all of the work on such sewage system as was specified in "division A" of the specifications, in strict compliance with the specifications therefor, which were attached to and made a part of the contract. The work specified in that division was the furnishing and laying of some 42,000 feet of sewer pipe (8-inch, 10-inch, 12-inch, and 15-inch) at a specified price per lineal foot according to the size of pipe, and the furnishing of materials and labor in constructing 29 flush tanks, 109 manholes, and 1 overflow, at a specified price for each. Much of the sewer pipe was to be laid several feet below the water level, and it was important that it should be laid so as to prevent, so far as practicable, leakage or seepage from the ground into the pipe. The specifications provided for the best quality of vitrified, salt-glazed, ironstone pipe, which so far as appears, was in fact used. They further provided that the contractor shall pump out or otherwise remove any water or sewage which may be found or may tend to accumulate in the trench, "and the trench is to be kept entirely clear of water until all the mortar is set." They also provided that special care must be taken to properly fill with cement mortar the annular space at the bottom and sides as well as the top of the joints, a neat finish to be given to the joints by a further application of similar mortar to the face of the hub, so as to form a continuous and even-beveled surface from the exterior of said hub to the exterior of the spigot all around. Other prothe acts and mistakes of its inspectors, where they act in bad faith. Guild v. Andrews, 70 C. C. A. 49, 137 Fed. 369.

Good faith, however, on the part of the city's engineer, is presumed in the absence of clear and convincing proof to the contrary. Ibid.

And gross mistakes imply bad faith only when, all the circumstances considered, they cannot be reconciled with good faith. Ibid.

But numerous serious mistakes, readily observable, and uniformly favorable to the contractor, imply bad faith on the part of the engineer in superintending and accepting a sewer. Ibid.

And failure on his part to consider the character and effect of the completed work of a sewer is such a gross departure from duty as to imply bad faith, and render his acceptance of the work inconclusive on the city. Ibid.

Conclusiveness as against contractor.

It is also well settled that, in the absence of fraud or bad faith, contractors with municipalities are concluded by the decisions of engineers and like officers, where the contract contains such a stipulation.

And this rule was applied in the following cases: McCormick v. St. Louis, 166 Mo. 315, 65 S. W. 1038 (commissioner's decision as to amount and kind of work to be paid for to be final); Burnham v. Milwaukee, 69 Wis. 379, 34 N. W. 389 (question of amount due for constructing sewer submitted to arbitrament of board of public works); Green v. Jackson, 60 Ga. 250 (engineer's estimate as to amount and quantity of work to be final and conclusive); Rens v. Grand Rapids, 73 Mich. 237, 41 N. W. 263 (city surveyor to decide additions and deductions to be made or taken from price in consequence of changes); Devlin v. New York, 124 App. Div. 184, 108 N. Y. Supp. 742 (engineer to decide whether sufficient work had been performed to warrant issuance of certificate which was condition precedent to part payment); Mobile v. Shea, 62 C. C. A. 319, 127 Fed. 521 (differences and disputes arising from construction of 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) sewer to be referred to engineer, and his decision to be final).

In McCormick v. St. Louis, supra, the court, in passing upon its power to set aside such findings, said: "Without going into a discussion of the question as to the conditions under which the courts have power and authority to set aside awards or estimates made by a chosen third party under the terms of a contract (such as is found in the agreement between plaintiff and defendant herein), suffice it to say, the court's authority is exercised in such cases only when it is shown that the arbitrator, in the exercise of the authority conferred upon him by the contract, has acted corruptly, grossly impartial, or in ignorance of, or in misapprehension of, facts; and unless one of these conditions is alleged and shown, under a petition properly framed to raise that issue, the courts will not interfere to nullify the action of the arbitrator, done in obedience to the mutual agreement of the contracting parties; or, what will amount to the same, act in disregard of the estimates."

So, the contractor is bound by the decision of the engineer as to the payment to which the former is entitled, where the contract provides that all disputes shall be referred to the engineer, and that his decision shall be final and conclusive, although it appears that the engineer was negligent and ignorant of the facts upon which he based his decision. McManus v. Philadelphia, 201 Pa. 632, 51 Atl. 322.

And the certificate of an engineer as to the quantity of filling done is conclusive on the contractor, where the contract provides that he shall be bound by such certificate, and he cannot show that the engineer adopted an erroneous method of determining the level, by reason of which extra filling was required. Smith v. New York, 12 App. Div. 391, 42 N. Y. Supp. 522.

To the same effect is Thilemann v. New York, 66 App. Div. 455, 73 N. Y. Supp. 352.

Likewise, the decision of a city engineer that material excavated shall not be classed as rock is conclusive on the contractor, where the contract provides that the engivisions as to the manner of laying need not be mentioned, as they are not material here.

The work was to be done, according to the contract, "in obedience to such directions as may, from time to time, be given by the engineer in charge, appointed by the said city of Marysville, or his authorized agent or agents." It was provided in the specifications that, after the sewers and their appurtenances "have been properly constructed and inspected," clay or fine earth shall be carefully deposited in the trench so as not to disturb the work, and the trench then refilled; that, in case of doubt as to the correct interpretation of the specifications, the matter may be submitted to the engineer in charge, whose decision shall be final; that all materials for work must be satisfactory to the engineer in charge, "and all work, and the order and methods of work, will be under the direction and must be to the satisfaction of the engineer in charge;" that the representatives of the engineer in charge are to be given all desired facilities for the inspection of materials and processes used or to be used in connection with the work; that all rejected material is to be removed from the work at once; that any workman or tools that shall not meet the approval of the engineer in charge shall be ordered from the work at the request of said engineer, and such workmen and tools as shall meet the approval of such engineer in charge must be immediately substituted. They further provided: "Progress payments will be made upon esneer shall, in all cases, determine the quality of all materials, and that his decision shall be final. Atchison v. Rackliffe, 78 Kan. 320, 96 Pac. 477.

And the decision of the mechanical engineer of the city is conclusive on the contractor as to the work done, payments made, and amount due the city as damages for breach of a contract to construct engines for waterworks, where it is provided that such engineer's decision shall be final and conclusive. Hostetter v. Pittsburgh, 107 Pa. 419.

So, recovery by a contractor cannot be had where the obtaining of an engineer's certificate is made a condition precedent, and the certificate is refused without fraud, malice, or capriciousness, because the work does not comply with the terms of the contract. Schmidt v. North Yakima, 12 Wash. 121, 40 Pac. 790.

And the decision of the superintendent of school buildings is conclusive upon the contractor as to whether the work on a schoolhouse is being performed according to contract, where there is a provision that such superintendent shall be the final arbitrator. Jones v. New York, 60 App. Div. 161, 70 N. Y. Supp. 46, affirmed in 174 N. Y. 517, 66 N. E. 1113.

Where a contract for constructing a bridge provides that the return of the engineer shall be the account by which the contractor's compensation shall be calculated, and that, in case of dispute, his decision shall be final, his decision is conclusive on the contractor as to the value of stone taken from the old bridge and used in the new. Dillon v. Syracuse, 29 N. Y. S. R. 912.

But, where there is no provision that the decision shall be final, it does not have this effect.

Thus, under a contract providing that payments for work on sidewalks shall be made upon estimates made by the engineer of the park commissioners, the contractor is not bound by the final estimate of such engineer, which states the amount of work done incorrectly, and the error may be corrected by a subsequent estimate made by another engineer, who is the successor of 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the first. West Chicago Park v. Schilling, 117 Ill. App. 525.

And it is competent for a contractor, in an action against a city, to prove the number of yards excavated by other evidence than the final estimate of the city engineer, although the contract provides that the engineer, shall make estimates of the work as it progresses, and also that he shall make a final estimate of all work done. Sherman v. New York, 1 N. Y. 316.

And an engineer whose decision is agreed upon as final between the parties as to differences arising as to matters included in the contract cannot bind the contractor by his decision as to work and material not covered by the contract. Salt Lake City v. Smith, 43 C. C. A. 637, 104 Fed. 457. The court said: "The stipulation in such contracts that all questions, differences, or controversies which may arise between the corporation and the contractor under or in reference to the agreement and the specifications, or the performance or nonperformance of the work to which they relate, shall be referred to the engineer, and his decision thereof shall be final and conclusive upon both parties, does not give the engineer jurisdiction to determine that work which is not done under the contract or specifications, and which is not governed by them, was performed under the agreement, and is controlled by it, and his decision to that effect is not conclusive upon the parties. Neither an engineer nor a judge who has no jurisdiction of a question can confer jurisdiction of it upon himself by erroneously deciding that he has it."

So, the engineer's final estimate, made under a contract containing a provision that his decision should be final and conclusive, is conclusive so far as the finding is made according to the terms of the submission, but his finding allowing a less rate of compensation than was plainly agreed upon is ultra vires, and not conclusive on the contractor. Drhew v. Altoona, 121 Pa. 401, 15 Atl. 636.

To the same effect is Fisher v. South Williamsport, 1 Pa. Super. Ct. 386.

And the decision of the street commistimates of the value of work done during each month to the extent of seventy-five (75) per cent of the work done during such month. These payments will be made by warrants on the city treasurer, as provided by law. The estimates to be made by the engineer in charge. Final payment, including deferred payments, will be made in the same manner upon the completion of the work to the satisfaction and approval of the engineer in charge."

Plaintiff commenced work under the contract in September, 1903, and proceeded steadily therewith, making the necessary excavations, laying the pipe and doing the other work, and refilling the trenches, until April, 1904, when the work was apparently supposed by all parties to be completed. Mr. Marsden Manson was the engineer in charge, and had furnished the specifications. He was assisted by Mr. Edward F. Haas, his associate. The work was done under the more immediate supervision of a superintendent for the city, employed by the city at the suggestion of Mr. Manson,—one Cyrus Dam, who had under him four inspectors appointed by the city, there being at all times an inspector for the city supervising each gang of plaintiff's men employed on the work. There was also an engineer employed by the city at the suggestion of Manson to give the lines and grades,—one H. G.

Butler. No complaint was made as to the manner of work or kind of materials during the progress of the work, except in one or two instances, where the matter was at once remedied, and the work progressed to completion to the apparent satisfaction and approval of everybody engaged in supervising the work.

Each month a progress estimate was furnished by the engineer to the common council, certifying the amount and value of the work done up to the 1st day of the month, with a statement of the amount due the plaintiff. These were similar in form, that of December 4, 1903, which may be taken as a sample, being as follows:

San Francisco, Cal., Dec. 4, 1903.

To the Mayor and Common Council of the city of Marysville,

Gentlemen:—

This is to certify that the following work has been done up to December 1, 1903, by the various contractors for sewer work now under construction in the city of Marysville, and that an estimate of the reasonable value of said work, in accordance with the various contracts, is as follows:

City Street Improvement Co.

[Here follows itemized statement of number of feet of pipe laid and other work.]

sioner upon the question of law as to the effect which the failure of a city to have bridge piers completed within a certain time has upon its right to demand liquidated damages under a contract to complete the bridge at a certain time is outside the authority of such commissioner, who is empowered by the contract finally to determine the amount or quantity of the work, and decide all questions arising relative to the execution of the contract, and his decision upon the question is not binding upon the contractor. King Iron Bridge & Mfg. Co. v. St. Louis, 10 L.R.A. 826, 43 Fed. 768.

And a contractor is not precluded by the engineer's certificate given under a provision that the certificate and return of such engineer shall be conclusive as to the amount of materials furnished and work done, where the certificate is based upon an erroneous construction of the contract, and deliberately excludes work done by the contractor, although it may have been made with an honest purpose. Burke v. New York, 7 App. Div. 128, 40 N. Y. Supp. 81.

So, where a contract for constructing a sewer provides that, if the city becomes dissatisfied, it may finish the work, and the expense shall be allowed in accordance with the decision of the city engineer, whose decision shall be final, the engineer's report covering only the work done and material used by the contractor to whom the city relet the contract upon becoming dissatisfied, and which shows that it refers only to the matters between the city and the last contractor, is not a decision which concludes the first contractor. San Antonio v. Marshall (Tex. Civ. App.) 85 S. W. 315.

And where a contract for constructing a sewer provides that, upon default, the city may proceed with the work, and that the expenses shall be paid by the contractor to the city under the decision of the city engineer, the engineer's decision is not binding on the contractor in the absence of evidence that the contract under which the work was completed was reasonable or the best that could be obtained. Marshall v. San Antonio (Tex. Civ. App.) 63 S. W. 138.

And where bad faith appears or the decision is arbitrary, the contractor is not concluded.

Thus, where the refusal of sewer commissioners to certify the completion of a contract is unreasonable, recovery can be had although the contract provides that payment shall not be made until the certificates have been obtained. Ross v. New York, 85 App. Div. 611, 82 N. Y. Supp. 920.

So, a contractor is not concluded by the decision of the commissioners and engineer of the municipality, where the power is exercised in an arbitrary manner, and he may recover for breach of contract where the city unreasonably compels him to relay a pavement. Gearty v. New York, 171 N. Y. 61, 63 N. E. 804.

Total	$13,603 57
Less 25 per cent	3,400 89
75 per cent of total	$10,202 68
Amount due on main contract ($7,399.28 having already been paid)	2,803 40
Extra work ordered and completed	58 75
Total amount due	$ 2,862 15

Respectfully submitted,
 Edw. F. Haas,
 Associate Engineer.
 Approved: Marsden Manson.

On receipt of each of these certificates the amount stated therein to be due was paid to plaintiff.

On March 31, 1904, a certificate signed by Mr. Haas, and approved by Mr. Manson, was presented to the common council, which covered all the work done by plaintiff. It stated that all the work specified therein, valued at $32,064.29, had been done, that 75 per cent of the total thereof was $24,798.22, of which $22,951.46 had been paid, and that there was due on the main contract $1,846.76. It further stated that extras ordered and completed were of the value of $630, of which $225.50 had been paid, leaving $404.50 due. Mr. Manson was present at this meeting, and orally reported that the work was practically completed; all, in fact, except three joints of pipe and one manhole, which were not laid and completed by reason of the request of the city to defer the work, and that he thought the plaintiff might be safely paid all but about $1,000 of the amount. Thereupon the city paid the amount certified as due, together with $4,266 of the 25 per cent deferred payments, leaving $4,000.07 unpaid. The unfinished work was completed within a few days thereafter.

Almost immediately thereafter, the sewers having been connected, the engineer and his associate caused a test to be made to ascertain the amount of leakage of water into the pipes laid by plaintiff. It was found that, from the whole system, there was flowing through the main pipe leading to the sump 1,100 gallons of water a minute, which reached that point and could only reach it by reason of leakage into the sewer pipe laid by plaintiff. This flow was three fourths of the carrying capacity of the pipe. The test was also made by districts, and it was found that the leakage into the pipes was not confined to any particular section, but existed all over that portion of the system laid under the water level. It had been estimated by the engineers that, with the

And the contractor is not deprived of his right of recovery where the city engineer and committee arbitrarily refuse to issue the certificate provided for by the contract as a condition precedent to payment, it appearing that the work is in substantial conformity with the contract. Elizabeth v. Fitzgerald, 52 C. C. A. 321, 114 Fed. 547. The court said: "Had, then, the defendant's officers the right to arbitrarily refuse the certificates and approval called for by the contract? Both in reason and upon authority it is clear that they had not. 'When the consideration furnished is of such a nature that its value will be lost to the plaintiff, either wholly or in great part, unless paid for, a just hesitation must be felt, and clear language required, before deciding that payment is left to the will, or even to the idiosyncrasies, of the interested party. In doubtful cases courts have been inclined to construe agreements of this class as agreements to do the thing in such a way as reasonably ought to satisfy the defendant.'"

So, arbitrarily driving a contractor who is complying with his contract, from the work, will not prevent recovery by him, although the contract provides for a reservation of a part of the money until the contract is certified as completed and the work accepted. Kingsley v. Brooklyn, 78 N. Y. 200.

And where a contract provides that a garbage furnace is not to be paid for until it is "completed and tested according to the 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

satisfaction of the committee," the committee cannot defeat the contractor's right of recovery by capriciously and unreasonably refusing to express its satisfaction with the work. Parlin & O. Co. v. Greenville, 61 C. C. A. 591, 127 Fed. 55. The court said: "The courts have had frequent occasion to construe contracts for the rendition of services, the manufacture of articles, and the construction or improvement of works, wherein it was agreed as a condition precedent to payment, that the services, articles, construction, or improvement should be satisfactory to the promisor. Such contracts are of two kinds: First, where the right of decision is completely reserved to the promisor, without his being required to disclose the reasons for his determination, and all right to inquire into the grounds of his decision or to examine and overhaul his determination by the promisee or the courts is absolutely excluded. The law regards the parties as competent to contract in that manner, and, if the contract is to that effect, it is the law of the case. Second, where the promisor is held to have undertaken to act reasonably and fairly, and to found his determination on grounds which are reasonable, just, and sensible. Where the construction of the contract puts it in the second class, it follows, as a necessary implication, that the promisor's decision, in point of correctness and the adequacy of his grounds, is open to judicial determination."

sewer laid in strict accord with the plans and specifications, the total flow from leakage would be approximately only 45 gallons a minute, and their testimony, with that of Mr. Connick, sufficiently supported the conclusion that such would have been the case. The test made it evident that somebody had blundered. Mr. Manson thereupon, on April 23, 1904, notified the common council that the seepage was far in excess of any reasonable amount, and that it would be necessary radically to correct the work before any use could be made of the sewer system. He stated that it was not possible to determine the exact cause of this without a critical examination of the joints, but that, from what had been brought to his notice, he was satisfied that most of it was due, either to the washing out of the mortar before it had had time to set, or to the fact that the joints were not adequately filled with mortar. Three sections were specified as especially defective, and it was recommended that these sections, an aggregate of thirteen blocks, be uncovered, and the leakage remedied. The common council notified plaintiff in writing of this recommendation, and directed it to proceed to comply therewith. Plaintiff claimed it had completed its contract, and did nothing. A subsequent general notice to complete its contract was ordered on May 13, 1904, and was sent to the president and secretary of plaintiff by registered mail. The common council thereupon advertised for bids for doing said work of uncovering, cleaning, and remortaring the joints and refilling the trenches on the thirteen blocks, and received no bids, whereupon they resolved that the city should do the work. They proceeded with such work by day labor under superintendents for the city, and, at the time of the trial, had expended $10,452.69 in doing such work on some of the blocks specified, as well as on other blocks not specified. The evidence was sufficient to support the conclusion that, for the work done, the amount expended was not unreasonable. The evidence is also sufficient to support the conclusion that the pipes and the cement thereon were not materially disturbed by the work of uncovering. After the first portion of the work had been uncovered, which was where the most leakage had been apparent, and the pipes and joints washed off, a careful inspection thereof was made, and it was found that on by far the greater portion of the joints there was either no cement at all on the lower half, or there were holes therein, while the cement on the upper half was all right. The same thing appeared in the other sections of pipe subsequently uncovered by the city for the purpose of repair. There was evidence sufficient to support the conclusion that the work of repairing these joints was substantially in accord with the original specifications, and, where this work has been done, the leakage has been so far reduced as to come within the original estimate of the engineers. The inference is irresistible that the trouble was due to a failure on the part of the employees of the contractor to conform to the specifications, either in failing to properly apply the cement on the lower half of the joints, or in failing to keep the trenches free from water during the laying of the pipe and until the cement mortar was set. The latter was apparently the principal cause. The testimony shows that, owing to heavy rains and the ordinary seepage of water in the ground, it was an exceedingly difficult matter to keep the trenches free of water, but that it was possible. Plaintiff used a pump for this purpose, and when in operation this pump ordinarily sufficed. When the work of repair was done it was found possible by the employees of the city to keep the water away from the joints for the requisite time. There was much testimony as to the original work, which showed a constant and reckless disregard by plaintiff's employees of the requirement as to water in the trenches, and that this was so was practically demonstrated by the condition in which the joints were found on being uncovered. Not only was there much evidence to show that much of the pipe was laid by the employees when there was water in the trenches to such an extent that the lower portions of the pipe and joints were in the water, but it also appeared that it was of frequent occurrence for the pump to break down, or for the man operating it to stop work during the night, with the result that water would rise in the trenches and reach the newly laid pipe, much of which had been partially covered with earth. As we have said, the condition of the work when uncovered was such as to practically demonstrate that there had been almost uniform disregard by plaintiff's employees of this important provision of the specifications. Mr. Manson and his associate, Mr. Haas, saw the work only occasionally, and had no knowledge of any failure on the part of the contractor in regard to this matter, no information being given them by the contractor or by any person engaged in superintending or inspecting the work.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The estimate as to necessary future work is based upon the fact of excessive leakage still apparent in various sections, where the old work has not as yet been uncovered, and the cost thereof estimated by experts, who calculated in the light of the knowledge afforded by the cost of the work already done.

The trial court held that plaintiff did not perform, and has not performed, all or any of the terms or conditions of its contract on its part provided to be done and performed; "that, among other material matters in which it failed and neglected to perform the contract, it did not lay and cement the joints of the pipe therein referred to according to said contract and specifications." It is contended by plaintiff that these findings are unsupported by the evidence, and this contention presents the real question in the case. For the purpose of considering it, we have made a statement of the evidence that we deem material.

It is earnestly contended that the city is estopped to deny the completion of the work by reason of its failure to object as the work progressed, and by reason of the signing of certificates by the engineer from month to month, and, upon the supposed completion of the work, evidencing his approval thereof. Contracts of the kind here considered are not new to the law. The stipulation in such contracts that the engineers' estimate should be final has been held valid and binding by the courts of England, by those of the various states of the Union, and by the Federal tribunals. The superior court of Missouri has this to say of such stipulations: "By such a stipulation, the parties constitute the engineer an arbitrator, and the provision is held, if anything, more binding than an ordinary submission, for the reason that it enters into and becomes a part of the consideration of the contract, without which it would not, in all probability, have been made. It has its origin in contracts for the building of important and extensive government works, and was designed to avoid harassing litigation over questions that can only be determined honestly by those possessed of scientific knowledge." Williams v. Chicago, S. F. & C. R. Co. 112 Mo. 487, 34 Am. St. Rep. 403, 20 S. W. 631.

It would be difficult to find a case where the contract more clearly contemplated that the work of plaintiff should be done under the constant immediate supervision and direction of the engineer in charge and his subordinates, and inspected and rejected or approved as it progressed and before the trenches were refilled with earth. This, we think, is amply evident from the contract itself, which includes the specifications, and was certainly the practical construction given it by the parties throughout. As we have seen, the work was all done under the supervision of the subordinates appointed by the city at the engineer's request, and who were his representatives upon the ground, and were there for no other purpose than to see that the materials furnished and the work done by plaintiff's employees were, in all respects, as required by the contract, and to require compliance with the contract as the work progressed, whenever any departure therefrom was observed. The defects now alleged in regard to the work, viz., that water was allowed to be in the trenches to such an extent as to injure the cement before it had set, and the failure on the part of workmen properly to apply the cement to the lower half of many of the joints, were matters which, assuming that they did occur, should have been observed by the engineer, through his representatives, at the time the work was being done, and when they could have easily been remedied. No portion of the work could be properly covered with earth until it had been inspected and found in proper shape, and there is no pretense that any of it was so covered prior to such inspection as was desired or requested by the inspectors. When it was allowed to be so covered, there was a practical approval and acceptance of the work by the engineer, through his representatives, and this acceptance was affirmed and approved from month to month by his own certificates to the common council of the city, stating the amount of work done by plaintiff to the first of the current month and the amount due therefor. These certificates necessarily implied that the work so certified was done according to the specifications and to his approval. The final certificate showed all the agreed work to be done, necessarily to the approval and satisfaction of the engineer, and this certificate was re-enforced by the oral statement of the engineer to the same effect, made to the council at the meeting at which it was received, except that it appeared from such oral statement that a few joints of pipe and a manhole certified completed had not been completed because of a request of the city that they should be deferred for a few days. Under these circumstances, we think that the city is clearly estopped to urge that plaintiff has not performed its contract.

Authorities upon this point are not wanting. It must be borne in mind that we are speaking of a case where there was no fraud on the part of the contractor operating to prevent a discovery of any imperfection, for there was not the slightest basis in the evidence for a conclusion to that effect. The most that could be contended is that there was evidence tending to show lack of care on the part of certain employees of plaintiff to comply fully at all times with the specifications in doing the work, and such a lack of care as should have been observed and remedied before the work was finally covered. In the case of Schliess v. Grand Rapids, 131 Mich. 52, 90 N. W. 700, the supreme court of Michigan said: "The conduct of the defendant, through its inspector and architect and board of public works, estops it from now claiming that the contract was not fulfilled. Its authorized agents were there during the entire progress of the work, charged with the duty to see that it was properly done. The city, through its board of public works, acted weekly upon the reports made, and paid the amounts due for the estimates. The law would not permit defendant to see this work go on, to ratify it day after day and week by week, to see plaintiff putting in stone not in exact accord with the contract, and then say, when the work is done, 'You have not complied with the contract.' Its time to accept or reject was when the work was being done. It could not lull the plaintiff into the belief that this work was satisfactory, and, when completed, reject it."

In Wildey v. Fractional School Dist. No. 1, 25 Mich. 419, the work was to be done under the direction of the architect and to his entire satisfaction, and an overseer was to supervise the work for the district. The court said: "Whatever passed under his [the owner's] inspection as the work progressed, and was, in good faith, approved by him, expressly or by implication, was not open to objection on the part of the defendant afterward."

In Laycock v. Moon, 97 Wis. 59, 72 N. W. 372, the action was for the balance alleged to be due for the stone and brick work of a barn, and the defense was that the work had not been fully performed, in that the walls had not been slushed or pointed with mortar, and improper stones had been used. The contract provided that the plaintiff should make a complete and workmanlike job to the entire satisfaction of the proprietor and architect, the whole of the work to be inspected as it went on. It was held that the defendant and his architect were bound to make inspection of the work and materials as the work progressed, that the contract implied that the work and materials were to be accepted or rejected at the time of inspection, and during the progress of the work, and that, as the alleged defects were obvious to the stipulated inspection, they could not avail defendant after the completion of the work.

In Ashland Lime, Salt, & Cement Co. v. Shores, 105 Wis. 122, 81 N. W. 136, where the contract provided that a building should be constructed according to certain plans and specifications, to the satisfaction of the architect, "who shall inspect all material and work as the building is constructed," and who was invested with power to reject any material or work not deemed by him to be in compliance with the contract, it was held that the manifest intent was that unsatisfactory material or construction should be promptly rejected; that the architect should not, by silence, allow unsatisfactory construction to proceed to a point where its removal from the building would be attended with serious loss to the builder, and that a failure to reject seasonably operated as a waiver.

See also Beswick v. Platt, 140 Pa. 28, 21 Atl. 306; Carroll County v. O'Connor, 137 Ind. 622, 37 N. E. 16, 35 N. E. 1006, 1012; Laycock v. Parker, 103 Wis. 161, 79 N. W. 330, 331; Potomac S. B. Co. v. Harlan & H. Co. 66 Md. 42, 4 Atl. 903; Lamson v. Marshall, 133 Mich. 250, 95 N. W. 78; Standard Stamping Co. v. Hemminghaus, 157 Mo. 23, 57 S. W. 746.

In Ashland Lime, Salt, & Cement Co. v. Shores, supra, this rule was declared to state a reasonable and just doctrine in cases of this nature. The court, through Marshall, J., said that where the owner stipulated for inspection and approval as the building is constructed, and for a representative of his own to compel compliance with the contract at every step, if such representative failed to perform his duty, the loss should fall on the owner, and not be shifted to the builder, who may have been lured into the belief that his work and material were satisfactory till too late to remedy defects therein without serious loss; that the owner should look to his architects; that he should be and is bound the same as if he were upon the ground himself, charged with the duty of accepting or rejecting material or construction as soon as there is a reasonable opportunity for the inspection of it. It was said that this is but an application of the elementary principle that, where property is delivered by one person to another, as fulfilling an executory contract between them requiring such delivery, and the latter neglects to notify the former that the property is not accepted as complying with the contract within a reasonable time after a fair opportunity to inspect it, an acceptance will be inferred; and that "any considerable delay in that regard must operate, by all equitable considerations, as an acceptance, except as to defects not discoverable by reasonable attention to the duties of inspection."

There is no basis in the record for the conclusion that the alleged defects were such as were not discoverable by reasonable attention to the duties of inspection. So far as the water being at times in the trenches before the mortar had time to set is concerned, that fact and the resultant damage, if any, to the cement, were as discoverable by a reasonable inspection prior to the filling in of the trenches as they ever could be. The same is true as to any carelessness of the workmen employed in putting cement on the lower portion of the joints.

It is urged that to allow the acceptance by the engineer and his subordinates thus, to operate as an estoppel on the city would be to allow them to vary plain and unambiguous terms of the contract between plaintiff and defendant, to the detriment of defendant. But, as was said in Standard Stamping Co. v. Hemminghaus, supra, where a similar contract was made, it was entirely competent for the city, through its engineer and his subordinates, to determine that the sewer, as laid in the open trench and ready to be covered with earth, was just what the contract required. Having seen it, and having had the fullest opportunity of inspecting it, all of those defects which were visible, or could have been ascertained by a reasonable inspection, were waived. In other words, the question whether the work was in accord with the contract was thus finally determined so far as such defects were concerned, in the absence of bad faith or fraud on the part of the contractor. The contractor could not be held responsible for any mere negligence or mistake on the part of the city's agent in the matter of such inspection.

The cases cited by learned counsel for defendant on this point, other than Lamson v. Marshall, supra, and Burke v. Kansas City, 34 Mo. App. 570, do not appear applicable under the facts of this case. Lamson v. Marshall, supra, has already been cited herein as supporting the views we have stated. If there is anything in Burke v. Kansas City, supra (a decision of the court of appeals for Kansas City), in conflict with that view, it must be disregarded, in view of the later decision of the supreme court of Missouri in Standard Stamping Co. v. Hemminghaus, supra. The case of Schmidt v. North Yakima, 12 Wash. 121, 40 Pac. 790, a case much relied on by counsel, was one where the evidence showed that the contractor deliberately planned to escape the responsibilities of his contract by furnishing inferior materials and inferior workmen to place the materials on the ground, and tried over and over to secretly work in rejected material, to such an extent that the city refused to allow him to finish the work, and the engineer refused to give any certificate as to the work done. It was held that he had been guilty of such fraud that he could not recover in any form of action.

As we have said, there was nothing here to indicate any lack of good faith on the part of the contractor, or the slightest disposition to conform to any direction of the engineer and his subordinates,—nothing to serve as a basis for the conclusion that there was any fraud. Nor was there anything to indicate any effort by it or any of its employees to hamper or restrict the engineer or any of his subordinates in the matter of inspection.

Respondent's counsel contend that the plaintiff should not be permitted to show anything indicating an estoppel, because the certificates of the engineer were not set forth, either in substance or otherwise, in the complaint. We do not think it was necessary to plead the certificates specially. Section 457 of the Code of Civil Procedure is as follows: "In pleading the performance of conditions precedent in a contract, it is not necessary to state the facts showing such performance, but it may be stated generally that the party duly performed all the conditions on his part; and, if such allegations be controverted, the party pleading must establish, on the trial, the facts showing such performance." The complaint did plead the contract in terms. Under that contract, one of the conditions precedent to demand by and payment to plaintiff of progress and final instalments of the contract price was the approval of the engineer. Under the statute just quoted, this condition precedent was not necessarily the subject of a special plea. The ultimate fact to be alleged was the performance of the work under the contract. The certificates, although, in the absence of fraud, conclusive as to that fact, are nevertheless but evidence of it.

There are no other alleged errors requiring special notice.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for new trial in accordance with the suggestions set forth above.

Angellotti, J., dissenting:

I dissent. It is not possible under the evidence to escape the conclusion that the plaintiff did not substantially perform the terms of its contract. The evidence shows an almost uniform and utter disregard by plaintiff's employees of one or the other of two plain and unambiguous provisions of the contract, absolutely essential to protection against excessive leakage of sewer pipe laid below the water level, and inserted for the purpose of such protection, the result being that the work, as turned over to defendant, could not have served the purpose for which it was intended.

So far as the claim that the certificates of the engineer constituted an estoppel is concerned, the question presented is a simple one. It may be assumed, as was held by the trial court and the district court of appeal, that the engineer was, by the terms of the contract, made the arbiter, whose decision upon the question of performance should bind the respective parties. But it is recognized by all the authorities, and is admitted by learned counsel for plaintiff, that such a decision is conclusive only in the absence of a showing of fraud, collusion, or mistake of fact. Where it is shown that the decision was obtained through fraud, collusion, or such mistake of fact as is ground for relief in equity, the effect of the approval is overcome. 3 Page, Contr. § 1409. The trial court was amply warranted in concluding that Mr. Manson had given these certificates in absolute ignorance of the manner in which the work certified had been done,—a matter as to which plaintiff must be held to have had full knowledge, and upon the assumption, warranted under the circumstances, that plaintiff had, in doing it, complied with these all-important provisions in the specifications.

As to the claim that the city is estopped from denying that the work was performed in accordance with the contract by reason of the fact that it was done under the supervision of a superintendent, an assistant engineer to give the lines and grades, and inspectors, all appointed by it for the purpose, who failed to make objection thereto, and, allowed plaintiff, by their silence, to believe that it was satisfactory until it was too late to remedy it except at great expense, there is a line of authorities holding that, where it is the evident intention of the contract that the work shall be inspected as it progresses, and unsatisfactory material or labor rejected at once, and the owner has a representative on the ground to oversee the work as it is done, and to guard against defective material or labor, defects which were observed by the owner's representative, or which would have been discovered by him by reasonable inspection, are waived by the owner, in the absence of fraud on the part of the contractor. See Schliess v. Grand Rapids, 131 Mich. 52, 90 N. W. 700; Willey v. Fractional School Dist. No. 1, 25 Mich. 419; Laycock v. Moon, 97 Wis. 59, 72 N. W. 372; Ashland Lime, Salt, & Cement Co. v. Shores, 105 Wis. 122, 81 N. W. 136. It has been said that it is a reasonable and just doctrine that, in such cases the loss should fall on the owner, and not be shifted to the builder, who may have been lured into the belief that his work and material were satisfactory until too late to remedy defects therein without serious loss, and that any considerable delay in manifesting disapproval will operate, by equitable considerations, as an acceptance, except as to defects not discoverable by reasonable attention to the duties of inspection. Ashland Lime, Salt, & Cement Co. v. Shores, supra. The rule is, of course, based entirely on equitable considerations, and we have not found any case where it has been applied to such a substantial departure by the contractor from plain and unambiguous terms of his contract as is found to exist here,—a departure which must be held to have been knowingly made, and which, as the contractor must have known, would necessarily have the effect of materially impairing the efficacy of the new sewer system, of which its work was an essential and important part. In the case at bar, it was, of course, the duty of the superintendent and inspectors employed by the city to notice such failure to comply with the specifications on the part of the contractor as were obvious, or could be ascertained by the exercise of reasonable care on their part, and to require such compliance; or, at least, to bring the matter to the attention of the engineer, Mr. Manson. But if, through ignorance or carelessness, they failed to perform their duty in this regard, plaintiff would not be warranted in assuming from their silence that the city was willing to waive a plain requirement so important to the success of the work. It knew that the inspectors were there simply for the purpose of requiring conformity on its part to the terms of the contract, and were without authority to waive any material provisions thereof; it knew that it was essential to the protection of the pipe against excessive leakage that the cement mortar put on the joints should be protected against water until it had time to set; and it knew that, for this purpose, the contract imposed upon it the obligation of keeping the trenches entirely clear of water until the mortar on the pipes therein had set. Unless we are to hold that the knowledge of its representatives in charge of the work as to the manner in which the work was being done was not the knowledge of plaintiff itself, which, of course, cannot be held, the evidence was sufficient to support the conclusion that plaintiff knew that this substantial provision as to water in the trenches was being almost constantly disregarded by its agents, and that the work being done could not be satisfactory to the engineer in charge when ultimately put to a proper test, and the failure to comply actually discovered by him. As to such a failure under such circumstances, no equitable consideration exists in favor of the contractor which will serve as the basis for an application of the doctrine as to waiver and estoppel. See, generally, Wait, Engineering & A. Jur. §§ 388, 446, 467, 468.

It should be stated in this connection that there was sufficient support in the evidence for the conclusion that the inspectors and superintendent for the city, actually supervising the doing of the work, could not, by the exercise of all reasonable care, have known of the extent to which the provision of the specifications as to keeping the trenches clear of water was violated, inasmuch as the evidence tended to show that the failure to operate the pump, and the consequent flooding of the trenches, generally occurred during the night hours, when they were off duty; the result being that new work, on which the mortar had not set, and which had in some cases been already partially covered with earth, was washed to such an extent as to remove the cement therefrom.

Beatty, Ch. J., dissenting:

I dissent. In addition to what is said by Justice Angellotti, I desire to emphasize the point that the condition of the sewer pipe when uncovered shows conclusively that many of the joints had never been cemented on the lower half, or that the water had been allowed to rise in the trenches where they were laid before the cement had time to set. If this fact could have been known by the inspectors appointed by the city to watch the work as it progressed, it must have been known by the representatives of the contractor in charge of the work. They must have known, in other words, that the contract was being violated, and that the sewer, as constructed; would be practically valueless when turned over to the city. They must have known that the reports of the city's inspectors, to the effect that the work was being done according to the contract, were false and deceptive. This knowledge on the part of its agents in charge of the work, knowledge which must be imputed to the plaintiff, deprives it of any claim to the estoppel upon which it relies,

Shaw, J.:

I concur in both of the foregoing dissenting opinions.

Petition for rehearing denied April 29, 1909.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

JOHN H. BARTON et al. Appts.,

v.

RIVERSIDE WATER COMPANY et al.,
Respts.

(— Cal. —, 101 Pac. 790.)

Subterranean water — diversion — estoppel.

1. Owners of land over a subterranean basin, who have been accustomed to use the water therefrom, will not be granted an injunction to restrain the taking of water from the basin by a public-service corporation to supply people beyond its limits, through wells which it sinks to maintain 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the amount of its original appropriation during periods of drought, where, with full knowledge of the facts, they stand by until large amounts of money have been expended upon the wells, and they have been in operation for at least two years.

Same — diversion — change.

2. A public-service corporation which has acquired the right to take water from a common basin for public use, by means of artesian wells, may change the place of diversion within the basin so long as it takes no more water than the amount to which it has acquired the right.

Same — cuts — wells.

3. One who, by long-continued use by means of cuts and trenches, acquires a right to take water from a saturated stratum where the water of a subterranean basin flows therefrom, may, in seasons of drought, as against persons having rights subsequently acquired, sink wells in the stratum, and pump water therefrom, so long as he takes no more than the quantity of water to which he is entitled.

(April 21, 1909.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court for San Bernardino County in defendants' favor in an action to enjoin alleged wrongful diversions of water from a subterranean basin. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Byron Waters and O. C. Haskell for appellants.

Messrs. Collier & Carnahan, for respondent West Riverside 350-Inch Water Company:

A party may lawfully appropriate waters within the bed or channel of a stream and Case Note. — Correlative rights in percolating water.

The earlier cases and a full discussion of the question of the correlative rights in percolating water are found in notes to Southern P. R. Co. v. Dufour, 19 L.R.A. 92; Katz v. Walkinshaw, 64 L.R.A. 236; and Erickson v. Crookston Waterworks, Power, & Light Co. 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 650. An examination of those notes will reveal that while the earlier decisions laid down the general rule of absolute right in percolating waters, the great majority of the recent cases have receded from that view, and favor the doctrine of confining each landowner to a reasonable use of such water.

An application of this doctrine is especially well illustrated by the recent case of Hathorn v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. 194 N. Y. 326, post, 436, 87 N. E. 504.

A recent case of importance on this question is Meeker v. East Orange (N. J.) 74 Atl. 379, where it was held that a city which, for the purpose of supplying its inhabitants at a distance with water, sank on its land artesian wells, through which it drew out percolating water, was liable in from its subsurface flow by proper works and development, providing such appropriation does not impair the rights of others superior to his own.

Vineland Irrig. Dist. v. Azusa Irrigating Co. 126 Cal. 486, 46 L.R.A. 820, 58 Pac. 1057; Charnock v. Higuerra, 111 Cal. 481, 32 L.R.A. 190, 52 Am. St. Rep. 195, 44 Pac. 171.

Messrs. Houghton & Houghton, John S. Chapman, Henry Goodsell, and Charles R. Gray for other respondents.

Shaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment of nonsuit in favor of said defendants.

The action is to enjoin alleged diversions of water from an artesian basin alleged to exist in the San Bernardino valley. Each plaintiff is the owner of a tract of farming land situated over the said basin, on which he has been accustomed to use the waters of the basin. Some of them obtain the water by means of pumps, or artesian wells, and others by diversions from natural streams forced to the surface from subterranean strata within the basin by the pressure of the water from the higher lands surrounding it. The respective tracts of land owned by the several plaintiffs are not contiguous, but are situated in different parts of the basin and several miles apart. The basin is extensive, embracing something over 30 square miles. It is of irregular outline, and somewhat circular in shape. The city of San Bernardino is situated near the center of it. It is alleged that the defendants, without right or authority, by means of artesian wells naturally flowing, and other wells operated by pumps, are diverting from the basin, and carrying to lands not situated therein, or in the watershed contributing thereto, large quantities of water from the said basin, to be used for irrigation and other purposes on said outside lands; that, by reason of these diversions, the waters of said basin are depleted, the level thereof lowered, and the common supply of plaintiffs diminished and exhausted to such an extent that the plaintiff's lands are deprived of the use of the waters of the basin, to the great damage of the respective plaintiffs. By the term "basin" we do not mean to imply that its floor is level. The central part of it slopes slightly toward the outlet at the southwest corner. During some extraordinary floods the Santa Ana river flows on the surface through the basin and over its outlet. The lands of several of the plaintiffs do not lie within the limits of the basin as the same is claimed to exist by the plaintiffs themselves. These lands are situated below the outlet of the basin, in a sandy formation, which it is claimed is saturated with water overflowing from the basin. As to these lands, the claim of the plaintiffs is that the depletion of the waters in the basin, by the alleged unlawful diversions of the defendants, diminishes the overflow to such an extent that the plaintiffs owning these lands are unable to obtain from such overflow sufficient water to irrigate their lands as they have heretofore done.

The plaintiffs allege that the water is confined in the basin by a dike of impervious material, which by some convulsion of nature has been thrown across the southwest and lower corner of the basin, extending from bed rock upward to about 40 feet below the surface of the ground. This vertical space of 40 feet it is claimed is occupied by a deposit of sandy material, similar to that within the basin, through which the water passes underground, over the dike, into the lands below, except in damages for injuries caused thereby to an adjoining owner. It will be noticed that this case reverses the decision of the supreme court fully set out in the note in 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 650, and places New Jersey in line with the other jurisdictions applying the rule of correlative rights to percolating water.

Another case illustrative of the development of the doctrine of reasonable use is Burr v. MacLay Rancho Water Co. 154 Cal. 428, 98 Pac. 260. In this case the owner of three blocks of land, all of them situated over a subterranean basin, sought to enjoin an adjoining landowner from pumping water from wells and transporting such water to distant lands; it appeared that the complainant had wells on only one block of land, and, until a recent time before the bringing of the suit, had not irrigated his other land from that well. In regard to the relative rights in the use of the water, it 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

was held (1) following Katz v. Walkinshaw, 141 Cal. 116, 64 L.R.A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35, 74 Pac. 766, 70 Pac. 663, that the right of the landowner to a quantity of percolating water necessary for use on the tract on which the well was located was paramount to that of the adjoining landowner, who sought to take the water to distant land; and (2) that the adjoining landowner's appropriation of the water for distant lands was also subject to the reasonable use of the water upon the other overlying land, but upon which theretofore the water had not been used; especially where it appeared that the land had been acquired because of its natural advantages respecting the water.

But see BARTON v. RIVERSIDE WATER CO. For cases on constitutionalality of statutes to prevent waste of subterranean water, natural gas, or oil, see case note to Hathorn v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. post, 436.

unusual floods, during which there is a surface stream there flowing. This so-called outlet is 1 mile or more in width. The diversions of water complained of are, for the most part, made above this alleged dike and within the artesian basin proper, but some of them are made from the sandy formation below the alleged dike. The complaint alleges, in effect, that the artesian basin and the land immediately surrounding it are composed of a mass of sand, gravel, and other porous material, and that the water therein forms a common supply for the plaintiffs, so connected, because of the character of the material in which it lies and its free movement therein, that a diversion of water from one part of the basin is practically a diversion from the whole, and decreases the common supply of all of them, though not affecting them all to the same extent. It is upon this theory that they all unite in one action, claiming that the injury to be enjoined is a common injury to all. These allegations are denied, and the answers pleaded misjoinder of causes of action and of plaintiffs and defendants, respectively. It is earnestly insisted, particularly by the attorney for the Riverside Highlands Water Company, in a very able and elaborate brief, that there is no common supply, and that there is consequently a misjoinder. We think that there is some evidence in support of the allegations of the complaint on this point, and, at all events, we will assume, for the purposes of this decision, that these allegations are sufficiently established, and will not discuss the question of misjoinder. We think that the motion for a nonsuit was properly granted upon other grounds.

1. The Riverside Water Company is engaged in the business of taking water from this basin, and carrying it to Riverside for sale and distribution in that community, for irrigation and other purposes. It is a public-service corporation, and the water it obtains from this basin is devoted by it to the use of the community at Riverside. It has been in charge of this public use for many years. The exact time does not appear, but the evidence shows that it began some time prior to 1887, and that it has continued ever since. Originally the water was all taken from Warm creek,—a stream rising within the basin by reason of hydraulic pressure in the underlying strata. Under natural conditions this stream carried from 3,500 to 4,000 miners' inches of water, all of which was taken by said company and appropriated to said public use. From 1893 to 1900 there was a series of very dry years, the average annual rainfall being only 11.19 inches.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The average for the decade from 1883 to 1893 was 20.10 inches, and the general average since records have been kept is 15.62. The three seasons of 1897-98, 1898-99, and 1899-1900 were excessively dry, giving an average of only 8.12 inches. This prolonged drought combined with the effect of large additional diversions of the waters of the basin by other persons, for whom none of the defendants were in any wise responsible, caused the natural flow of Warm creek to decrease gradually to about one half its former quantity. This decrease made it necessary for the Riverside Water Company, in order to supply those dependent upon it, to find means of obtaining more water. For that purpose, and soon after the decrease became apparent, it began putting down artesian wells in the basin, and it has ever since continued to do so as its needs required, not with the intent to increase its diversion from the basin, but to keep it up to the original quantity. The evidence shows that this new method of securing the water was in use at least as far back as the year 1895. In 1899 and 1900, owing to the excessive drought aforesaid, and additional diversions by others, additional wells were bored by this company, and it is these wells against which the chief complaint is made, as against this defendant. The wells are deep, and the expense of boring them must have been considerable. There was an absolute necessity for more water to serve the public use. The fact that the wells were being bored, and that the water obtained thereby was taken to Riverside to supply the previous use, was notorious. The fact that these diversions would decrease the common supply of all the plaintiffs was obvious, and must have been known to each of them. The complaint alleges that the diversions of all the defendants by means of wells had been going on continuously for at least two years before the action was begun. The complaint was filed on June 4, 1904. It is not seriously claimed that any of the plaintiffs were ignorant of these facts. Most of them, as witnesses, testified to knowledge thereof; many of them declaring that the wells of this company, bored in the years 1899 and 1900, immediately affected their own wells. No objection or protest against the boring of these wells by the Riverside Water Company was ever made by any of the plaintiffs. The first hint of any claim that these diversions were made without right on the part of the respective defendants was manifested by the beginning of this action.

So far as this company is concerned, the case comes within the rule established in Fresno Street R. Co. v. Southern P. R. Co. 135 Cal. 207, 67 Pac. 773, and followed in Southern California R. Co. v. Slauson (Cal.) 68 Pac. 107, and Crescent Canal Co. v. Montgomery, 143 Cal. 252, 65 L.R.A. 940, 76 Pac. 1032. This rule, briefly stated, is that where one whose property is taken for a public use has stood by without objection, knowing that it was so taken and applied, and has allowed the public use to be instituted and carried on at great expense, and has permitted the people benefited thereby to adapt themselves to the new conditions, and avail themselves of the conveniences and advantages thereby afforded, he cannot thereafter maintain an action to enjoin the continuance of such public use, or to recover possession of the property so taken, but will be relegated to an action for damages. The rule was mentioned in Katz v. Walkinshaw, 141 Cal. 136, 64 L.R.A. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 35, 74 Pac. 772, 70 Pac. 663, a case involving the waters of this basin, where the court, evidently referring to cases such as that here presented, and avowedly intending to suggest a rule of decision in such cases, said: "Where the complainant has stood by while the development was made for public use, and has suffered it to proceed at large expense to successful operation, having reasonable cause to believe it would affect his own water supply, the injunction should be refused."

We may concede, for the purposes of this case only, that the more recent diversions of the company by means of wells are not a continuance of its ancient right to divert the waters naturally flowing in Warm creek, and that the wells do not constitute a mere change of the means and place of diversion of the water to which the said company's right had been established. We may assume that the company is in the same position, with respect to these wells, as it would be if the boring thereof had been the inception of its operations. So assuming, it still remains true that the plaintiffs knew of these diversions of water from the basin, and either knew, or had good cause to believe, that the water was being taken from their own source of supply, and that such taking tended to exhaust the supply; that it was carried away for use outside the basin in a community depending thereon, and which, we may presume, had settled and established itself there in reliance upon the continuance of that supply (Crescent Canal Co. v. Montgomery, supra); that great expense in the meantime had been incurred in maintaining the supply and the works necessary for its distribution; and that, so knowing, they stood by for at least nine years after the well boring had begun, and by their own admission, two years after it was completed, and uttered no word of complaint or protest. The injunction against this defendant was properly refused on this ground.

The decision in Katz v. Walkinshaw was rendered, and the previous cases on the subject of percolating waters thereby overruled, because of our conviction that the doctrine that the owner of the soil was the absolute owner of the waters percolating therein, and could extract the same at will regardless of the effect on other lands, is unsuited to our conditions, and would constantly tend to produce injustice and render insecure the title to water supplies devoted to beneficial use. The doctrine of correlative rights in such waters, declared in that case, was adopted because it was deemed necessary for the protection of present and future uses of such waters against the unreasonable and remediless invasions that would be allowable under the doctrine of absolute and irresponsible ownership. It was perceived that the decision would be regarded as an innovation, and that it might cause suits to be begun to prevent the continuance of uses of such waters previously made. While adhering to, and fully approving, the doctrine announced in Katz v. Walkinshaw, especially in respect to uses of percolating water having their beginning after that decision was made, we desire to say that a clear case must be made to justify an injunction to prevent a continuance of the beneficial use of such waters, begun in good faith before that decision, and which was in full operation at that time, which is the condition presented by the case at bar. This action was begun only a few months after that decision became final.

2. The wells of the Riverside Highland Water Company are of more recent construction, and perhaps, as to some of them, there may be no laches or estoppel against the plaintiffs. But the injunction against this company was properly refused on still another ground. It is established by the evidence that the said defendant had originally obtained the water solely by means of artesian wells; that, for ten years or more before the action was begun, it had been maintaining such wells in the northwestern part of the basin, several miles distant from the new wells here complained of, and that from said wells defendant had obtained a flow of about 400 inches of water, which it had been continuously transporting to places of use outside the basin, distributing the same to its customers, and that by this means large and valuable improvements had been made in the territory to which this water had been conducted. It had gained the undisputed right to take the water by this means and to this place. From the causes heretofore mentioned its wells began to fail, and the new wells complained of were thereupon sunk in the same basin, solely for the purpose of obtaining enough water, in connection with its old wells, to keep up its former supply to its former customers. The new wells take from the same supply as the old ones, and the total amount taken has not been and is not to be increased. They constitute a mere change of the place of diversion, without injury to others. In the case of running streams, the right to make such a change is well settled, and it is clearly just. Ramelli v. Irish, 96 Cal. 217, 31 Pac. 41; Davis v. Gale, 32 Cal. 34, 91 Am. Dec. 554; Jacobs v. Lorenz, 98 Cal. 340, 33 Pac. 119; Smith v. Corbit, 116 Cal. 592, 48 Pac. 725. The rule is the same with regard to underground streams. Vineland Irrig. Dist. v. Azusa Irrigating Co. 126 Cal. 495, 46 L.R.A. 820, 58 Pac. 1057. We think the reasons of the rule apply with equal, if not greater, force to one having a right to take a definite quantity of water from a basin of permeable material saturated with water, and not composing part of any stream, conceding this basin to be of that character, as plaintiffs claim, and that said defendant is accordingly acting within its established rights in maintaining these new wells.

3. The same observations apply to the West Riverside 350-Inch Water Company. This company is not, strictly speaking, a public-service corporation, delivering water to a public use. It is engaged in procuring 350 inches of water for its stockholders, and delivering it only to stockholders, in proportion to their respective amounts of stock, for use on their respective tracts of land. See McFadden v. Los Angeles County, 74 Cal. 571, 16 Pac. 397, and Hildreth v. Montecito Creek Water Co. 139 Cal. 29, 72 Pac. 395. It obtains the 350 inches of water from the region immediately below the dike above mentioned, where, as plaintiffs claim, the overflow from the basin saturates the sandy soil composing what is really the bed or wash of the Santa Ana river. Originally this company obtained the water by means of open cuts in the wash, beginning at the surface and running up stream on a less grade than the surface of the ground, reaching a depth of some 10 or 12 feet at the upper ends; the waters in the soil being thereby collected and conducted into its canal. Because of the prolonged drought and diversions from the water supply, above mentioned, the water level lowered so that the cuts no longer collected the amount of 350 inches required by its stockholders. Thereupon the company sunk wells in the wash, and inserted therein pumps, by means whereof it obtained the requisite quantity of water, obviously from the same source of supply. There is no pressure upon the water in these wells. During the dry season the pumping lowers the water level at the pumps about 25 feet below the natural level. How far the cones of depression extend in the sandy soil at such times does not appear, but during the rainy season the former level is restored. The land of the nearest plaintiff is over a mile away, and not directly in the course of the wash. It is at least doubtful if the wells of this defendant affect the water in his land, but, conceding that they do diminish his supply, and that of some other of the plaintiffs, they cannot complain of the action of this defendant in simply adopting different means of collecting the water to which it had, by means of long use, acquired an undoubted right. The evidence shows that it had been diverting the water from this wash continuously for a period of at least fifteen years before the beginning of the action, and that its right to do so by means of its cuts and trenches was not disputed. Its right to the water being thus established, it had a clear right, upon the principles heretofore stated, to continue to divert the water by changing its method of obtaining it.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: Angellotti, J.; Sloss, J.; Henshaw, J.; Melvin, J.; Lorigan, J.

SOUTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

PATRICK B. MCCARTHY, Appt.,
v.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF RAPID CITY, Respt.

(— S. D. —, 121 N. W. 853.)

Usury — national bank — penalty.

Under the provision in the Federal statutes for recovery of a penalty against a national bank to which usury is paid if the action is brought within two years from the time the usurious transaction occurs, the limitation period begins to run from the time money is applied with the knowledge and consent of the borrower, in satisfaction of usurious interest; and it is not necessary that the payments should have been sufficient to satisfy the original loan, with legal interest.

(May 21, 1909.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pennington County in defendant's favor and from an order denying a new trial in an action brought to recover statutory penalties for the acceptance of usurious interest. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles W. Brown and Schraeder & Lewis for appellant.

Messrs. Buell & Gardner for respondent.

Whiting, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This cause comes before this court upon an appeal from the judgment of the circuit court and from the order of said court denying a new trial. The action was one brought by the plaintiff and appellant, Patrick B. McCarthy, against the defendant and respondent, First National Bank of Rapid City, to recover penalties in the sum of $7,605.48, being twice the amount of usurious interest which plaintiff claims he paid to the defendant, and that defendant received, in violation of §§ 5197 and 5198 of the United States Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3493). For the purposes of this appeal, the following facts may be taken as established: In August, 1887, plaintiff borrowed of defendant $4,000, evidenced by four promissory notes of $1,000 each, payable three, six, nine, and twelve months after date, with interest on each note at 18 per cent per annum until paid. These notes were extended until August 7, 1888, when a new note in the sum of $4,000 was given by plaintiff, his wife, and one other party. This note was due in ninety days, with interest at 18 per cent per annum. Considerable interest upon this note was paid, but no part of the principal, and on May 22, 1889, a new note was given, signed by plaintiff, his wife, and a third party, which said note was for $5,000, due in one year, bearing interest at 12 per cent per annum. Nine hundred dollars was paid and indorsed as interest upon this note, and on July 22, 1891, a new note of $5,000 was given by plaintiff and his wife, the same due in six months, bearing interest at 12 per cent per annum. This last note was secured by a mortgage upon real estate belonging to the makers. It is admitted that the only consideration for this last note was the original $4,000 loaned to plaintiff, together with certain usurious interest upon such original loan. It is admitted that the plaintiff made a large number of payments, dating from February 8, 1892, down to January 2, 1896, upon this note, all of which payments were indorsed upon said note as interest, and upon February 17, 1896, the plaintiff and his wife gave to defendant two notes in renewal, one for $5,000, due in four months, with 12 per cent interest, the other for $675.50, due in thirty days, with 12 per cent interest; this last note purporting to be interest upon the note of July 22, 1891. Payments as and for interest were made upon the last $5,000 note; the last payment being made on or before January 1, 1897. It is alleged and admitted that the total payments by way of interest, and which were by the defendants applied as interest, upon the several notes, aggregated the sum of $3,802.74, for twice which the plaintiff brought this action. On January 25, 1897, the defendant in this action commenced an action against the plaintiff and his wife for the foreclosure of the mortgage securing the above-mentioned notes, and to recover the amount due by the terms of said mortgage and notes thereby secured. The plaintiff herein appeared as defendant in said action, set up the facts hereinbefore stated in regard to the usurious interest on the original notes, and prayed that said mortgage and notes be adjudged to be usurious and be purged of the usury therein. Such proceedings were afterwards had that, in May, 1901, judgment was rendered in the trial court in favor of the defendant in this action, and against the plaintiff herein and his wife, whereby it was held that the said bank could recover the full amount apparently due under said notes. From this judgment the present plaintiff appealed, and this court, in the case of First Nat. Bank v. McCarthy, 18 S. D. 218, 100 N. W. 14, modified the judgment of the trial court, holding that, under said evidence, it appeared that the said indebtedness evidenced by the notes sued upon was usurious in all sums exceeding the original $4,000, and ordered that judgment be entered for said $4,000, together with certain sums which the bank had paid for and on account of taxes on the land described in the mortgage. Judgment in conformity with the opinion of this court having been entered, it was alleged in the complaint in this action that, on January 21, 1905, the plaintiff paid to the clerk of the circuit court the said judgment in full, and on said day said judgment was duly satisfied and discharged of record. This action was commenced January 25, 1905. Prior to the trial below, upon motion of the defendant, the paragraph relating to the payment of said judgment was stricken out, and, upon trial, the plaintiff sought to offer proof of the fact of the payment of such judgment, which proof was rejected, and also asked to have the allegations concerning payment of the said judgment reinstated in the complaint, so that proof of the same might be received, and this request to amend was refused. It is the theory of the plaintiff and appellant that, inasmuch as the total amount of payments prior to the rendition of the judgment above referred to did not amount to the original loan of $4,000, until such judgment was paid, no cause of action arose in plaintiff's favor against the defendant for the penalties provided by § 5198, above referred to. It is the theory and claim of the defense that, at the time any payment was made by plaintiff on any of said notes as interest, and so appropriated and applied by the defendant, that immediately a cause of action for the penalty provided by said § 5198 accrued, and that the statute of limitations provided by said section commenced to run. In fact, in their briefs, both parties admitted, there being no dispute as to the facts, the sole question was whether or not the plaintiff's cause of action to recover the penalty claimed in his complaint is barred under and by virtue of the provisions of § 5198 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Note.—The authorities passing upon the question as to when the statute of limitations begins to run against an action to recover the penalty from a national bank for taking usury are gathered in a subdivision of the subject note to Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Gentry, 56 L.R.A. 673. A search shows that this note, supplemented by the exhaustive treatment of the cases by the court in McCarthy v. First Nat. Bank, disposes of all but one of the cases passing upon the question.

The case of Daingerfield Nat. Bank v. Ragland, 181 U. S. 45, 45 L. ed. 738, 21 Sup. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Ct. Rep. 536, included in the note in 56 L.R.A., was followed in Lasater v. First Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 72 S. W. 1054, reversed upon other grounds in 196 U. S. 115, 49 L. ed. 408, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206. The entire principal and interest had been paid in this case, and it was held that the "usurious transaction occurred," in contemplation of the statute, when the interest was paid; and as it appeared that the first instalment had been paid more than two years prior to the commencement of suit, the right to recover on this payment was held to be barred.

The Revised Statutes of the United States provide: Section 5197: "Any association may take, receive, reserve, and charge on any loan or discount made or upon any note, bill of exchange, or other evidences of debt, interest at the rate allowed by the laws of the state, territory, or district where the bank is located, and no more. . . ." Section 5198: "The taking, receiving, reserving, or charging a rate of interest greater than is allowed by the preceding section, when knowingly done, shall be deemed a forfeiture of the entire interest which the note, bill, or other evidence of debt carries with it, or which has been agreed to be paid thereon. In case the greater rate of interest has been paid, the person by whom it has been paid, or his legal representatives, may recover back, in an action in the nature of an action of debt, twice the amount of the interest thus paid, from the association taking or receiving the same, provided such action is commenced within two years from the time the usurious transaction occurred. . . . " This cause has been very fully briefed on behalf of each party, and a large number of authorities have been cited, and the briefs contain extensive quotations from the holdings of the several courts, both Federal and state; and, while a reading of the two sections of the Federal statute above referred to might not at first awaken any doubt as to the meaning of the several parts thereof, yet a reading of the cases cited apparently presents for consideration an irreconcilable conflict of opinion as to the legal effect of such sections. We believe, however, that a thorough study of these cases, together with the facts in each case, will show, with possibly one or two exceptions, that there is no real conflict upon the construction which should be given to these sections as applied to the facts in this case. In reviewing and analyzing many of the decisions, as we shall do herein, it will be found that many of the cases cited in support of appellant's contention are based upon some previous rulings in these or other cases, which rulings will be found not to support the position claimed for them. In view of the importance of the question herein involved, and the apparent conflict between the opinions of courts of very highest rank, we deem ourselves justified in a somewhat extended consideration of this case.

It will be noticed that there are two entirely different parts to § 5198, supra,—the first provides for forfeiture of all interest unpaid when usury has been contracted for and such usury enters into the note or the consideration for such note; the second provides for an action to recover as a penalty double all interest paid, whenever such interest so paid is in part usurious. The courts uniformly hold that, under the first, a debtor can defend against the paying of any interest, either legal or usurious; while, on the other hand, if, in fact, he has made any payment or payments on interest, even to the extent of paying usurious interest, he cannot plead such payment either as a credit on the principal or as an offset or counterclaim to the principal, but his only remedy for such usury paid is found in the second part of said section, and consists solely in his right, in a separate suit brought under the second part of said section, to recover the penalty therein provided for. In other words, that the common-law remedy by a suit or counterclaim for money had and received will not lie. Schuyler Nat. Bank v. Gadsden, 191 U. S. 451, 48 L. ed. 258, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 129; Haseltine v. Central Nat. Bank, 183 U. S. 132, 46 L. ed. 118, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50; Driesbach v. National Bank, 104 U. S. 52, 26 L. ed. 658; Barnet v. Muncie Nat. Bank, 98 U. S. 555, 25 L. ed. 212; Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Dearing, 91 U. S. 29, 23 L. ed. 196; Walsh v. Mayer, 111 U. S. 31, 28 L. ed. 338, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 260; Stephens v. Monongahela Nat. Bank, 111 U. S. 197, 28 L. ed. 399, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336. We call particular attention to the above propositions, as they seem to us very material upon the construction to be placed on this question of when the statute of limitations begins to run, and these holdings will be hereinafter referred to. The courts also uniformly hold that the including of interest in a renewal note is not a payment of such interest, so as to entitle maker to sue for the penalty provided for payment. Neither is the deduction of a discount from the amount of the note, taken at the time of giving the note, a payment of such discount, so as to authorize a suit for the penalty providing the amount of the discount is usurious. Brown v. Marion Nat. Bank, 169 U. S. 416, 42 L. ed. 801, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; Driesbach v. National Bank, supra; Louisville Trust Co. v. Kentucky Nat. Bank (C. C.) 102 Fed. 442; McBroom v. Scottish Mortg. & Land Invest. Co. 153 U. S. 318, 38 L. ed. 729, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 852; Harvey v. National L. Ins. Co. 60 Vt. 209, 14 Atl. 7; First Nat. Bank v. McInturff, 3 Kan. App. 536, 43 Pac. 839. These cases are based upon the theory that the mere reserving of a discount or the including of accrued usurious interest in a renewal note, while it may be the "reserving or charging" of usury, it is not the "paying" of same.

Where the authorities divide is upon the question of whether, when the maker of a note has paid money thereon which the payee, with maker's knowledge and consent, has applied in payment of usurious interest, a cause of action at once arises for the penalty provided by § 5198, regardless of whether the principal debt has been paid, or whether, on the other hand, no such action arises on behalf of the maker of such note until he has made payment thereon in excess of the original debt and legal interest thereon. The respondents take the first position and the appellants the latter, and a determination of this point determines this cause. We think that many of the cases upholding the latter position have erred through not making a careful distinction between cases where payments had been made, which payments had been applied upon usurious interest with the knowledge and consent of the debtor, and cases where such application had been made or attempted to have been made by the creditor without the consent of the debtor. A distinction between the two classes of cases will be noted as running throughout many of the decisions hereinafter referred to. Those cases which uphold the appellant's contention are founded upon the theory that, although the payee may have applied money upon usurious interest, yet, no matter how long the indebtedness may have run, and no matter how many such applications there may have been, and no matter how many renewals had been made by the giving of new notes for amounts greater than would be due if only legal interest had been charged on the prior notes during all this time, which may extend one or even ten years, the doctrine of locus penitentiae will be held to apply on behalf of the payee up to such time as he takes a payment which, with all other payments received, exceeds the amount of the original debt and legal interest; the courts holding that, up to that time, the payee had an election,—he might repent and reapply all the payments, charging only legal interest. The cases supporting respondent's position hold that, while the payee, after contracting to take, receive, or charge an usurious interest, has, at all times, before applying a payment, the benefit of the doctrine of locus penitentiae, yet, if he does actually make the application of a payment to the payment of usurious interest, his election, as against him, is final, and he becomes at once liable for the penalty. And, furthermore, if, when such payment is made and applied, such application is with the consent of the debtor, the maker of the note, then, as against his right of action to recover, the statute immediately commences to run.

It is true there are some early cases brought for the recovery of usurious interest under different statutes, which have held that an equitable rule should apply, and the debtor should not be entitled to recover a penalty until he has done equity by paying the debt with legal interest in full; but we fail to see wherein any equitable question can arise in this class of cases. These statutes were enacted for the purpose of preventing the taking of usurious interest, and to punish the creditor for contracting for the receiving of usury. There certainly is no question of equity, as ordinarily understood, in any statute providing for penalty, forfeiture, or punishment. On the other hand, what the debtor is entitled to recover by way of penalty or to avoid by way of forfeiture is nothing to which he is equitably entitled, but is based more on the principle underlying the rule of punitive damages.

It is not to recover simply what he has suffered, but, at the same time, to punish the creditor for wrongdoing. Neither does it seem to us that there is either reason or logic in attempting to apply the rule of locus penitentie to any case where a party has made an absolute application of money received by him, and continued his business transactions with the party making the payment, upon the basis of such application. Of course, all laws against usury are based upon the idea that the contracting for or taking of the same is a wrong. It might as well be said that the embezzler, after converting the thing embezzled, or the thief, after taking the thing stolen, when the converting and taking had been with criminal intent, still has the locus penitentie, and can purge his soul of the crime. As we have noted above, the courts are unanimous in holding that, under this statute, the maker of a note, when sued thereon, cannot plead the payments of usury either as a credit on the note or as a counterclaim or offset. So in the case at bar; when the plaintiffs were sued on the notes herein, they could not plead in any manner, as a defense to the principal of said note, any part of the large sum which they had paid as interest. Why was this? Because they were payments which had, by the act of both parties, already been applied on usury. It may well then be asked, Can these payments be held to have been such payments for one purpose, to wit, to prevent the debtor from receiving a credit therefor, while, on the other hand, the law be allowed to step in and relieve the payee who has made this application, and say to him, "You have done no wrong for which you can be holden, because, perchance, the debtor has been unable to pay the debt." In considering any interpretation to be put on the section in question, it is well to bear in mind two other propositions sustained by the courts. The penalty to be recovered is twice all the interest that has been paid, not merely twice the excess which has been paid above legal interest. First Nat. Bank v. Watt, 184 U. S. 151, 46 L. ed. 475, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 457; Louisville Trust Co. v. Kentucky Nat. Bank (C. C.) 87 Fed. 143. The action for the penalty can only be brought by the party who made the payment or by his representatives. Lealos v. Union Nat. Bank, 9 N. D. 60, 81 N. W. 56.

Let us consider briefly the results which might flow from the enforcement of the rule contended for by the appellants. A party giving a note makes numerous payments, which have been applied upon usurious interest with his consent. This note is secured on real estate. He sells the land, and the purchaser assumes the indebtedness, and then pays the note. Who would have a right to recover for the penalty? A debtor and creditor, having had usurious dealings for several years, reach an adjustment of the balance which they consider should be paid by the debtor, and which balance could only be reached by crediting some other previous payment upon usurious interest. A new note is given upon this settlement, which new note draws legal interest. The debtor pays this conventional interest for more than two years, but no part of the principal. The conventional interest is the extreme legal interest allowed by statute. The debtor sues to recover the penalty provided by the Federal statute. Under appellant's contention he cannot recover; but, while the result reached is just and right, the reason upon which the same is based is not because whatever wrong has been done by the creditor is barred by the statute, but rather upon the ground that the creditor has yet a chance to repent of the wrong done years before, and the appellants would hold that if, on repenting, he afterwards receives the principal of this new note, he will render himself liable to an action for the penalty; though perchance, if, at the time he took the usury, he had stolen debtor's horse or committed any other crime except murder, not only the limitations as to time for criminal prosecutions would have run, but the regular six-year statute fixing the time within which actions for damages might be brought may have run. A party gives a note under exactly the same conditions as last above mentioned, and, after paying conventional interest for one or more years to his creditor, a national bank, such bank then assigns the note to a party, not a national bank, and the debtor continues to pay the conventional rate of interest, but no part of the principal. Under appellant's theory no recovery could be had. Neither could there be under respondent's theory. But, suppose debtor finally pays the principal; then, under appellant's theory, if the note had not been assigned, the payee would be liable for the penalty. Under the facts as stated, where there had been an assignment of the note, who would be liable? Instead of the above case, where a settlement had been attempted to be made so that the new contract should be fair and without usury, take a case where a note is given for $1,000, and $100 discount is deducted, $900 being paid to the debtor, and such note drawing 12 per cent interest. Here we have usury in the new contract. Then, letting the facts as to the payment of interest and principal and as to the assignment of the note be as in the illustrations above given, it will be found that the results will be exactly the same on appellant's theory while the moral wrong is entirely different; but under respondent's theory, the remedy would in each case fit the wrong. Suppose a case where the note is given for the exact amount loaned, but the note provides for a usurious rate of interest; such interest is paid from year to year with the knowledge and consent of the debtor, and settlement made on that basis, but such payments never amounted to the principal of the note. This is practically the case at bar, except that we will suppose the payments of interest as made were part, at least, within two years of the time debtor seeks to recover. The debtor, under appellant's theory, cannot recover, and there will never come a time within which he can recover unless he shall pay enough to amount to the principal, together with perhaps hundreds of dollars of legal interest. He has absolutely no remedy against the party who has crushed him, but who still perchance holds a debt against him as large as the original loan; but, if he can raise enough money to pay even one dollar more, and this, with what he did pay before, should exceed such principal and legal interest, then immediately he shall have a cause of action, not for this excess over the principal and legal interest, which, in this case, would be less than a dollar, but for twice all the interest he has ever paid, no matter whether for two or twenty years in the past, which penalty might amount to more than the principal of the debt. Many further illustrations might be given, but the above we think are sufficient to show, not only the injustice of appellant's position, but the unsoundness from a legal point of view.

Nevertheless there are authorities that apparently hold squarely to the theory contended for by appellants, and other authorities which have been so construed by some courts and are so construed by the appellants. We will call attention to each and every one of the cases cited by appellant. An examination of the four cases below will show that neither of them is in any manner in point as sustaining appellant's position. First Nat. Bank v. Childs, 130 Mass. 519, 39 Am. Rep. 474; Hall v. First Nat. Bank, 30 Neb. 99, 46 N. W. 151; Talbot v. First Nat. Bank, 185 U. S. 172, 46 L. ed. 857, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612; Wheaton v. Hibbard, 20 Johns. 290, 11 Am. Dec. 284. The case of Smith v. Robinson, 10 Allen, 130, was based upon a state statute, and was a suit in equity to redeem land from foreclosure. The party seeking to redeem had asked credit for three times the amount of usury included in the face of the note secured by the mortgage. There was no evidence that this usurious interest had ever in fact been paid. It will thus be seen that that case has no application to the facts in the case at bar, where payments had actually been made, and, by mutual consent, applied in settlement of the usurious interest. In Saunders v. Lambert, 7 Gray, 484, there was no application of the money paid to any usurious interest. Stevens v. Lincoln, 7 Met. 525, merely decided that including usury in the note or check is not a payment of such usury. Harvey v. National L. Ins. Co. 60 Vt. 209, 14 Atl. 7, virtually held that the taking of usury as a discount at the time the note is given is not a payment of usury. Kendall v. Crouch, 88 Ky. 199, 11 S. W. 587, was a case in which usury was included in a renewal note, and it was held not to be a payment of usury. Cotton States Bldg. Co. v. Feightal, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 575, 67 S. W. 524, is not a national bank case, and is controlled by rulings of the state court, whereby all usurious interest is applied on principal, and the penalty is only imposed where amount paid exceeds principal and interest. Louisville Trust Co. v. Kentucky Nat. Bank (C. C.) 87 Fed. 143, holds the same as Kendall v. Crouch, supra, and this holding is approved in the same case in 102 Fed. 442, in which case the court hold flatly with the contention of respondent herein. After reciting the facts, which are very similar to the facts in this case, wherein it is shown that there had been a long course of usurious transactions between the parties, and which at last finally culminated in the giving of $30,000 in settlement, and after referring to the statutes of Kentucky under which the court held the money which had been paid prior to the giving of this note would have necessarily been applied on the interest even if usurious, the court says: "All interest, whether excessive or otherwise, which had been charged by the defendant up to the giving of that note, under the stress of the statutory provisions last referred to, must probably be considered as having been 'extinguished' by the payment then made; and, if this be so, the statute of limitations as to this phase of the case began to run as of that date, which was more than two years before this action was brought. But, apart from the provision of the Kentucky statute just quoted, and whatever weight it may be entitled to, it would be difficult either to reach or to sustain any other conclusion than that it was intended, alike by the defendant and by Thomas & Son, that everything, including interest, usury, as such, and a large amount of principal, was settled at that date, except the $30,000 note then given. Thomas & Son were always in need of money. They borrowed it. They voluntarily paid the excessive interest. They manifested no election to reclaim it at the time of the settlement of July 8, 1893, and no other conclusion could be fair than that it was meant upon that occasion to extinguish every obligation of the defendant and of Thomas & Son, respectively, except that of the latter to pay to the bank $30,000, as provided for in the note of that date."

The case of First Nat. Bank v. McInturff, 3 Kan. App. 536, 43 Pac. 839, holds directly with the appellant in this case, and bases its holding, not upon the doctrine of locus penitentiae, but the court says: "It is contended by the defendant in error that the record discloses that the bank treated each of the renewal notes as a payment of the note formerly given, and that, therefore, he was entitled to recover upon each of said notes so treated by the bank as having been paid. This position is not well taken. Each of the notes given after the maturity of the original note of this series was simply a renewal, and was so treated by all parties. Any payment which may have been made upon either the original or either of the renewals of this series would, in an action brought upon said note, be credited as payment upon the principal sum; all interest being forfeited in the event that it was shown that the transaction was tainted with usury. But a cause of action would not arise for the penalty prescribed by statute until a sufficient amount had been paid to cover the principal sum represented by said series of notes. First Nat. Bank v. Turner, 3 Kan. App. 352, 42 Pac. 936." There is no other discussion as to the reason for this holding, and upon examination of the case cited (3 Kan. App. 352, 42 Pac. 936) there is the bare holding that the statute does not run until the principal debt is paid. There is no discussion whatever as to the reasons for this holding, and the only authority cited in support is the case of First Nat. Bank v. Grimes, also a Kansas case, found in 49 Kan. 219, 30 Pac. 474. Upon an examination of First Nat. Bank v. Grimes, it will be found that the only question involved in the determination of that case was whether the following charge of the trial court to the jury was correct: "If you should find from the evidence in this case that the original note was renewed from time to time without making a new and separate contract, and that usurious interest was embraced in such renewal notes, then you are instructed that the mere renewal of the original note would not purge the transaction of usury if you should in fact find that there was usury in the original note." This instruction was certainly correct law, and in no way inconsistent with respondent's contention in this case. We therefore find upon analysis that 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the Kansas cases have neither weight in reasoning nor from the authorities which they cite. In passing, we would state that this case of First Nat. Bank v. Grimes refers extensively to the case of Driesbach v. National Bank, supra, as holding that the penalty provided for the taking of usury cannot extinguish or affect the principal, but that the remedy for same must be enforced as the statute prescribed. As we have before noted, this is the uniform holding of the courts, and it is readily seen that it is entirely inconsistent with the theory that, regardless of the acts of the parties, the courts can apply all payments to legal interest and principal, although the parties have agreed upon a usurious interest. If, in any case, the court, regardless of the acts of the parties, has a right to so apply the payments, then it should apply them at all times, in that manner crediting all payments above legal interest upon the principal of the note wherever the facts are as in the Driesbach Case.

Appellant cites the case of Scottish Mortg. & Land Invest. Co. v. McBroom, 6 N. M. 573, 30 Pac. 859, as well as the same case in 153 U. S. 318, 38 L. ed. 729, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 852, and, inasmuch as it is the different constructions put upon this last case which have led to the apparent doubt as to what the law of the Federal courts is, it is well to consider the same to some length. In the territorial court the statement of facts shows that a loan was made and note given for $65,000, but a discount of $6,500 was taken out and the balance paid over to the maker of the note. The real question involved in this case was whether or not the reservation of such $6,500 was a payment of usury when so reserved, under which the maker of the note could sue and recover penalty provided by the statutes of the territory. It appears that such statutes provided as a penalty the recovery of three times the excess of the money paid over the legal interest. It will thus be seen that the real question involved in the case at bar was not to be found in the McBroom Case. There can be no question under the authorities that the reservation of this discount did not amount to a payment, but the trouble which has arisen over this case is from the fact that the court went into a long review of the history of the laws against usury, referring to the doctrine of locus penitentiae, and concluding that there can be no recovery of penalty until more than the principal and legal interest have been paid, although, as is readily seen, this question was in no manner before the court, and that, therefore, what was said by the court on that point was mere obiter dictum in the McBroom Case.

In this case, both in the territorial and Federal courts, there will be found cited as authority the following cases: Stevens v. Lincoln, 7 Met. 525; Saunders v. Lambert, 7 Gray, 484; Harvey v. National L. Ins. Co. 60 Vt. 209, 14 Atl. 7; Hall v. First Nat. Bank, 30 Neb. 99, 46 N. W. 151; Brown v. Second Nat. Bank, 72 Pa. 209; Kearney v. First Nat. Bank, 129 Pa. 577, 18 Atl. 598; Neal v. Rouse, 93 Ky. 151, 19 S. W. 171. We have already reviewed the first three cases above mentioned; and, as regards the others, we can only say that, if there is anything in any of one of them that seems capable of such a construction as would uphold the dictum in the McBroom Case, it will be found that every one of such cases, if susceptible of such construction, has been reversed by the later decisions of the same courts, holding flatly with the respondent herein. First Nat. Bank v. Smith, 36 Neb. 199, 54 N. W. 255; Monongahela Nat. Bank v. Overholt, 96 Pa. 327; Louisville Trust Co. v. Kentucky Nat. Bank (C. C.) 102 Fed. 442; Second Nat. Bank v. Fitzpatrick, 111 Ky. 228, 62 L.R.A. 599, 63 S. W. 459. It will thus be seen that there is no support in the authorities cited for the obiter dictum found in the McBroom Case in both courts. In the Federal court in the McBroom Case, the court cites the case of Wright v. Laing, 3 Barn. & C. 165-168, and it would seem that a careful consideration of this authority, accepting its reasoning as sound, would be sufficient to destroy the contention of appellant, even if, in the McBroom decision, there can be found anything which would indicate that the court rendering it would have held with the appellant under the facts in this case. The following is from such quotation: "None of the payments were appropriated by either party at the times of payment. If the law ought now to make such an appropriation as the pleader has supposed in this count, the count will be sustained by the proof; otherwise not. . . . Because, peradventure, the lender might repent the illegal bargain, and refuse to receive the full amount of the second bill, and the law will allow him the opportunity of doing so, that he might not be deemed a receiver of usurious interest without clear evidence that he had not only bargained to receive, but had actually received, such interest." These two quotations contain exactly the legal propositions contended for by respondent herein as we understand its position. We cannot therefore see wherein it can be claimed that the McBroom Case in any way supports the appellant. The case of Haseltine v. Central Nat. Bank, 155 Mo. 66, 56 S. W. 895, holds directly with the appellant, but bases its holding solely upon the interpretation which it claims the United States Supreme Court had put upon the statute in the McBroom Case, and the court also claims that, in their view, the case of Brown v. Marion Nat. Bank, to which we will hereafter refer, is in no manner conflicting with their interpretation of the McBroom Case, and it concludes by saying that its consideration of the statute is based upon the position taken by courts of equity under the statute of 12 Anne. In the case of First Nat. Bank v. Denson, 115 Ala. 650, 22 So. 518, we have facts exactly similar to those in the case at bar, and the court holds flatly with the appellant. This case also cites for its authority the McBroom Case and the case of Duncan v. First Nat. Bank, Fed. Cas. No. 4,135, to which latter case we do not have access, and cannot ascertain the facts therein except as they appear in the quotation from the judge's charge, found in appellant's brief. From this quotation it would appear that the legal proposition laid down is as contended for by appellants, but it does not appear that the facts were such as to require the court to go to the extent it did. The only usurious transaction clearly shown to have occurred over two years before the action was brought was the reserving of a discount when the loan was originally made, which we have already seen was not a payment of usury. The facts, as stated, do not show whether or not there was any payment of usury more than two years before such action was brought.

We have now reviewed every authority cited by the appellants, and we think that an analysis of the same will show either a decision given when the matter passed upon was not in issue, or else a decision which was based upon some other authority that does not support the position taken by the court citing same.

We will now consider the cases in support of the respondent's position. First of these, the case of Brown v. Marion Nat. Bank, 169 U. S. 416, 42 L. ed. 801, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390, in which the decision was rendered by Justice Harlan, who also wrote the decision in the McBroom Case. This case of Brown v. Marion Nat. Bank we find frequently referred to, and the courts seem in great conflict as to what Justice Harlan meant by what he said. It would seem that there is no chance for quibble. In one place he says: "The words, 'in case the greater rate of interest has been paid,' in § 5193, refer to interest actually paid, as distinguished from interest included in the note and only 'agreed to be paid.' If, for instance, one executes his note to a national bank for a named sum as evidence of a loan to him of that amount, to be paid in one year, at 10 per cent interest, such a rate of interest being illegal, and if renewal notes are executed each year for five successive years, without any money being in fact paid by the borrower, each renewal note including past interest, legal and usurious, the sum included in the last note in excess of the sum originally loaned would be interest which that note carried or which was agreed to be paid, and not, as to any part of it, interest paid. It is difficult to tell from the record when there were actual payments of usurious interest as such. Sometimes interest is said to have been paid when it is evident that it was only included in a renewal note. . . . If at any time the obligee actually pays usurious interest as such, the usurious transaction must be held to have then, and not before, occurred, and he must sue within two years thereafter." From the above quotation it seems clear that Justice Harlan could not have had in mind the fact that the statute of limitations would not commence to run until more than the principal debt had been paid, and that he did have in mind the fact that there was such a thing as the payment of interest which would become a payment for all purposes, including the creating of a cause of action in favor of the debtor, and which would start the running of the statute. In the case of Smith v. First Nat. Bank, 70 App. Div. 376, 75 N. Y. Supp. 131, the court says: "The confusion which has arisen over the question as to when the statute of limitations commences to run upon payments of excessive interest in contravention of the section referred to is attributable in a large measure in failing to distinguish between an actual payment and one that is carried along with the principal indebtedness." It then refers to the McBroom Case and analyzes it must as we have above, showing that the question before them was not in the McBroom Case, that that was a case of money paid by the plaintiff, and, in referring to the facts in the case before them, the New York court says: "When the payment of interest or discount was made, that transaction was completed, and the defendant had no election after that to apply this in reduction of the note. That principle only applies where the discount is added to the note." And the New York case refers to the case of Brown v. Marion Nat. Bank, supra, stating that Justice Harlan, in such case, recognized the distinction that they have made, and shows that to be true by quoting from the Brown Case the two quotations we have given above.

In the case of Lynch v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 22 W. Va. 554, 46 Am. Rep. 520, the court quotes an instruction that was asked 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

for by the defendant in the trial court, and states that the following was the correct rule of law: "If the jury believe from the evidence that a greater rate of interest than the rate of 6 per centum per annum was paid by the plaintiff to the defendant on the several loans described in the declaration, and that such greater rate of interest was knowingly received by the defendant upon such loans and discounts, the plaintiff in this action is entitled to recover twice the amount of such interest so paid by the plaintiff to the defendant within two years prior to the commencement of this suit. The jury cannot find for the plaintiff the amount of any interest or twice the amount of any interest which was not so paid within two years from the bringing of this suit upon the notes or renewals executed more than two years prior to the bringing of this suit." In the case of Monongahela Nat. Bank v. Overholt, 96 Pa. 327, the court says: "Upon the actual payment by the borrower and receipt of the illegal interest by the bank, the right of action accrues, and can be maintained, whether the debt has been paid or not. This cannot be more clearly expressed than in the words of the statute, and decisions under other statutes having little similarity to this do not warrant departure from the plain meaning of the remedial and punitive provision." And, again, the court says, in speaking of the remedy of the debtor: "He may recover back twice the amount of interest thus paid by action in the nature of debt, and this is akin to double or treble damages for injuries, allowed by certain statutes for the twofold purpose of compensation and example." In Lebanon Nat. Bank v. Karmany, 98 Pa. 65, the court, in referring to the question of election, or what we have termed the locus penitentiae, says: "If such interest be paid, the offending bank is liable in an action for twice the amount. That liability is incurred the moment the bank takes the illegal interest. The intentment is to prevent banks contracting or receiving more than lawful interest for the use of money. To permit a bank which had actually received illegal interest when sued for the penalty to chop round and call it a credit on the principal would vitiate the vindictory clause of the statute. In such case the taking would amount to nothing more than a contracting to receive. The statute inflicts twice the penalty for taking that it does for contracting." In the case of Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Forman (Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Gentry) 111 Ky. 206, 50 L.R.A. 673, 63 S. W. 454, 757, we have a divided court; four sustaining the majority opinion and three dissenting. In the majority opinion are found these suggestive APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pike County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Sheppard, Goodykoontz, & Scheu and A. E. Auxler, for appellant:

Loss of child is not a recoverable damage.

Tunncliffe v. Bay Cities Consol. R. Co. 102 Mich. 624, 32 L.R.A. 142, 61 N. W. 11; Hawkins v. Front Street Cable R. Co. 3 Wash. 592, 16 L.R.A. 808, 28 Am. St. Rep. 72, 28 Pac. 1021.

No recovery can be had for impairment of health and suffering growing out of the death and premature birth of the child of a pregnant woman, by reason of injuries negligently inflicted.

Hawkins v. Front Street Cable R. Co. supra.

The miscarriage could not have been anticipated, and is the remote, and not proximate, result of defendant's negligence.

Mitchell v. Rochester R. Co. 151 N. Y. 107, 34 L.R.A. 783, 56 Am. St. Rep. 604, 45 N. E. 354.

Messrs. P. B. Stratton, W. A. Daugherty, and Roscoe Vanover for appellee.

O'Rear, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant is a common carrier, operating a railroad extending through Pike county.

see notes to Huston v. Freemansburg, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49, and Chittick v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1073.

In none of the recent cases has it been held that damages are not recoverable for a miscarriage, and in but few cases has the court apparently deemed it necessary to discuss the right.

Thus, in Witrak v. Nassau Electric R. Co. 52 App. Div. 234, 65 N. Y. Supp. 257, it was held that so far as a miscarriage or the delayed delivery of a stillborn child augments the mother's physical injury, pain, or suffering, so far is it proper to be considered on the question of damages.

And in Colorado Springs & I. R. Co. v. Nichols, 41 Colo. 272, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215, 92 Pac. 691, it was held that a carrier by whose negligence a pregnant woman, who is its passenger, is thrown violently to the floor and injured, so that she suffers a miscarriage, cannot escape liability to her in damages for her injuries because they would not have occurred had she not been pregnant.

So, in St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Ferguson, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 460, 64 S. W. 797, it was insisted that, without knowledge of the delicate condition of the woman, the degree of care imposed by law upon the railroad company was that due to all persons in the usual and ordinary physical condition, and not such as might have been due to one "in the light of attending circumstances;" but the court said: "Humanity is heir to many ills and distinctive conditions requiring notice and peculiar care, and those commonly and constantly engaged in their transportation for hire ought not to be heard to say, in excuse for their negligence, 'We were without notice of the fact.'"

As to whether the defendant ought to have anticipated the condition of the female plaintiff, the court said, in Kimberly v. Howland, 143 N. C. 398, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 545, 55 S. E. 778: "It is true defendant did not know at the time he fired the blast, that the feme plaintiff was lying in bed in her home in a pregnant condition, but he or his agents knew it was a dwelling house and that in well-regulated families such conditions occasionally exist. While the defendant could not foresee the exact consequences of his act, he ought, in the exercise of ordinary care, to have known that he was subjecting plaintiff and his family to danger, and to have taken proper precautions to guard against it."

So, in the following cases, a miscarriage was considered a proper element of damages, although in some of the cases it was so considered without discussion: Engle v. Simmons, 148 Ala. 92, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 96, 121 Am. St. Rep. 59, 41 So. 1023, 12 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 740; Thomas v. Gates, 126 Cal. 1, 58 Pac. 315; Loomis v. Hollister, 75 Conn. 275, 53 Atl. 579; North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Shreve, 171 Ill. 438, 49 N. E. 534; Chicago v. Ogden, 227 Ill. 595, 81 N. E. 698; Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Ertrachter, 228 Ill. 114, 81 N. E. 816; Chicago v. Wieland, 139 Ill. App. 197; North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Smadraff, 89 Ill. App. 411, affirmed in 189 Ill. 155, 59 N. E. 527; Etzkorn v. Oelwein (Iowa) 120 N. W. 636; Louisville R. Co. v. Oppenheimer, 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1141, 104 S. W. 720; Berger v. St. Paul City R. Co. 95 Minn. 84, 103 N. W. 724; Finer v. Nichols, 122 Mo. App. 497, 99 S. W. 808; Hosty v. Moulton Water Co. (Mont.) 102 Pac. 568; Sparks v. North Tonawanda, 106 N. Y. Supp. 44; Vester v. Rhode Island Co. (R. I.) 67 Atl. 444; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Mitchell, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 197, 60 S. W. 891; El Paso Electric R. Co. v. Sierra (Tex. Civ. App.) 109 S. W. 986; Citizens' R. Co. v. Griffin (Tex. Civ. App.) 109 S. W. 999; Durham v. Spokane, 27 Wash. 615, 68 Pac. 383; McKeon v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 94 Wis. 477, 35 L.R.A. 252, 59 Am. St. Rep. 909, 69 N. W. 175.

The following cases present somewhat unusual features:

In Birmingham R. Light & P. Co. v. Hinton (Ala.) 48 So. 546, where the plaintiff's intestate died from blood poisoning following a miscarriage, it was held that the railroad company was liable for the death if the miscarriage was the proximate result of its negligence.

Kentucky. Appellee was a passenger on a train on appellant's road, and claims to have sustained injuries in a collision between its train and a log train being operated on the same road by a lessee or licensee of appellant. It was the same collision under consideration in the appeal of this appellant against Harriett Blankenship (this day decided), 118 S. W. 315. It was there held that appellant was liable for the negligence of the lessee where injury was thereby inflicted upon appellant's passenger. The additional questions presented in this case are: Did appellee receive the injuries for which she sues as the result of that collision, and did the trial court correctly submit to the jury elements of her injury for which the law allows a recovery?

Appellee claims that she was enceinte, being about four months advanced with child; that in the collision she was thrown upon her side and bruised and stunned, so that she was made sick and caused to abort. The evidence on her behalf was that in the collision she was thrown violently upon her side, causing her great pain, following the temporary stunning; that within a half hour afterward her menstruation reappeared, and for the first time since she had conceived, and that that evening she had violent pains in her abdomen, which she describes as "bearing down pains;" that these pains continued intermittently for some days, and she consulted a midwife with reference to them. Acting upon her advice, she remained as quiet as she could, hoping that the trouble

In Sullivan v. Old Colony Street R. Co. 197 Mass. 512, 125 Am. St. Rep. 378, 83 N. E. 1091, it was held that the defendant's negligent act resulting in injuries to the plaintiff might be the proximate cause of a miscarriage, notwithstanding the fact that the child was conceived seven months after the injuries. The plaintiff's intervening act could not be deemed a voluntary intervening act, as the perpetuation of the human race cannot be termed a voluntary act, but it rests upon instincts and desires which are fundamentally imperative.

Where the evidence showed that the plaintiff had suffered a miscarriage immediately after the injury, and subsequently suffered a second, it was held, in Rapid Transit R. Co. v. Smith, 98 Tex. 553, 86 S. W. 322, that the court should have instructed the jury that evidence of the second miscarriage should be considered in determining the extent of the injury only, and not for the purpose of allowing specific damages for that miscarriage itself.

In Prescott v. Robinson, 74 N. H. 460, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 594, 124 Am. St. Rep. 987, 69 Atl. 522, it was held that damages for personal injuries to a pregnant woman may include compensation for mental suffering because of probable deformity of the child resulting from the injury, as well as for her disappointment at the birth of a deformed child, but not for regret because of the child's suffering on account of the deformity. In regard to allowing a recovery because of the probable deformity of the child, the court said: "If a fetus is deemed to constitute a part of the mother's person, an injury to it is plainly an injury to her, as much as an injury to her hand or arm would be. And it would seem to follow that she has as much right not to be harmed in the one respect as in the other."

Upon the general subject of mental anguish as an element of damages for personal injuries to a pregnant woman, see case note to Prescott v. Robinson, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 594.

23 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Additional suffering caused by miscarriage.

In some cases the question has arisen whether all of the suffering caused by miscarriage is to be considered in assessing the damages, or whether the jury are to take into consideration the fact that a certain amount of suffering would have ensued in the natural course of events.

Thus, in Morris v. St. Paul City R. Co. 105 Minn. 276, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598, 117 N. W. 500, it was held that the pain and suffering which would naturally have come to the mother cannot be deducted from the pain and suffering occasioned by a miscarriage which resulted from the defendant's negligence.

But, in Hawkins v. Front Street Cable R. Co. 3 Wash. 592, 16 L.R.A. 808, 28 Am. St. Rep. 72, 28 Pac. 1021, it was held that only the increased pain and suffering caused by the miscarriage, over what would naturally have been, was to be considered by the jury, as it was not just to impose upon a merely careless tortfeasor liability for more of the plaintiff's trouble than he had caused.

On the trial of a civil action for the recovery of damages for an alleged assault upon a woman pregnant with child, an alleged result being miscarriage, it was held, in Plonty v. Murphy, 82 Minn. 268, 84 N. W. 1005, that it is not necessary, in order for the plaintiff to recover substantial damages for this particular injury, that she show by testimony that she suffered more pain or increased illness or greater impairment of health than she would if the delivery of the child had been at the proper time and in the natural way.

As to offset against damages for suffering for miscarriage, of suffering which would have resulted from natural parturition, see case note to Morris v. St. Paul City R. Co. 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598.

Loss of offspring.

The loss of offspring is generally held not to be a proper element of damage.

Thus, in Witrak v. Nassau Electric R. Co. 52 App. Div. 234, 65 N. Y. Supp. 257, was merely threatened and would pass; but it continued for a week or so, becoming worse, when she was delivered of a child stillborn. She claims, also, that she continued to suffer from the effects of the injury by reason of a displacement of her womb, and had not finally recovered from the effects at the time of the trial. It may be that the latter claim was not supported by the evidence, and was, in fact, shown not to be true. But what view the jury took of that particular feature of the case we cannot tell, nor does it appear to be material now, as there was clearly enough in the case to sustain the very modest verdict returned in appellee's behalf,—$500.

The trial court, in instructing the jury, after defining care and negligence, gave this as the law of the case: "If the jury should believe and find from the evidence that, while the plaintiff was a passenger upon defendant's train, the defendant company, by its agents or servants in control of said train, knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known, that the log train of the Hurricane Lumber Company was upon its tracks, and ran its passenger train into and collided with said log train, and that by reason of said collision the plaintiff sustained any injury causing plaintiff to miscarry or give premature birth to her child, or caused plaintiff womb trouble, they will find for the plaintiff such sum in damages as they may believe from the evidence she has sustained, so the sum so found, if anything, does not exceed $10,000; and, if the jury should not so believe and find, they will find

for the defendant. If the jury should find for the plaintiff, they will only take into consideration in estimating the damages the mental and physical suffering, if any, and the permanent reduction in plaintiff's power to earn money, if any, caused by said injuries." Appellant insists that "there is little doubt that the jury awarded this verdict against appellant, not because of believing her health was to any extent impaired by reason of this miscarriage, but for the loss of the child." Tunnicliffe v. Bay Cities Consol. R. Co. 102 Mich. 624, 32 L.R.A. 142, 61 N. W. 11; and Hawkins v. Front Street Cable R. Co. 3 Wash. 592, 16 L.R.A. 808, 28 Am. St. Rep. 72, 28 Pac. 1021, are cited as holding that a recovery by the mother against one negligently causing the death of the child in her womb and its premature birth is not allowed. The question decided in the first-named case was that the loss of the society and prospective earnings of the child is not a proper element of damages in an action by a married woman for injuries which resulted in a miscarriage. The trial court in that case had charged the jury that, "if the plaintiff lost a child by reason of the liability of the defendant in this case, you may give damage for it. The society, enjoyment, and prospective services of the child is a recognized element in that regard, and you may give what it is reasonably worth." In commenting upon that charge the supreme court of Michigan wrote: "This charge was clearly erroneous. There was, of course, no proof in the case as to the prospective earnings it was held that the effect of a miscarriage in depriving the mother of offspring cannot be taken into account at all as an element of damage, as the injury is too remote and speculative.

So, in Sullivan v. Old Colony Street R. Co. supra, it was held proper to exclude the death of the child as an element of damage.

And in Prescott v. Robinson, supra, it was said that the death of the child and the mother's loss of the comfort and enjoyment of the company of a living child are too remote consequences of her injury to be considered by a jury in assessing her damages.

So, in Morris v. St. Paul City R. Co. supra, it was held that, when an injury to a woman results in a miscarriage, she is entitled to recover such damages as will fairly compensate her for the pain and suffering occasioned by the miscarriage, but not for the pain and suffering occasioned by the loss of the child. And to the same effect was the decision in Hosty v. Moulton Water Co. (Mont.) 102 Pac. 568.

Pleading the miscarriage.

In a few cases it has been held that, in order to entitle the plaintiff to a recovery 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

for miscarriage, it must be expressly pleaded.

Thus, in Florence v. Snook, 20 Colo. App. 356, 78 Pac. 994, the court said: "Pregnancy is not the usual and natural condition of women. It is an unusual or peculiar condition or state of health. A miscarriage can only result from an injury to a woman when in this unusual and peculiar condition, and, when relied upon to increase the damages claimed, must be pleaded."

So, in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Roney, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 1326, 108 S. W. 343, the court said that, where the result of an accident is so unusual as the miscarriage of a pregnant woman, they thought that the defendant should be notified by the pleadings that such a result will be complained of.

But, in Clukey v. Seattle Electric Co. 27 Wash. 70, 67 Pac. 379, where the complaint alleged merely that the plaintiff was "hurt and injured in and about the breast, waist, and abdomen," and that she had unnatural internal bleeding, the court said that certainly a miscarriage would naturally result from the state of facts alleged; and evidence relating to a miscarriage was held to have been properly admitted.

of the child, even if the mother would be the proper person to recover for such loss. Nor would the loss of the child's society be a proper element of damages. While the jury are allowed to consider the case with all its facts, and to take into account, for the purpose of compensation, not only the physical pain, but also mental suffering, in determining the award of damages, and while of necessity this involves to some extent a consideration of the nature of the injury, and cannot exclude from the consideration of the jury the fact that the physical and mental suffering of the mother, by reason of such an injury, would be more intense than in the case of the ordinary fracture of a limb, yet beyond this it would not be competent for the jury to go, and to attempt to compensate for the sorrow and grieving of the mother." That court did allow a recovery for the injury done the plaintiff, and its consequences in causing her to abort her child, including the physical and mental suffering she endured in the travail which was the result of the injury. What was denied was that element of mental distress which is characterized as sentimental, and which followed after, or may have followed after, the physical pain caused by the injury had subsided. This is shown by the quotation by the court with approval of this excerpt from the opinion in Bovee v. Danville, 53 Vt. 183: "If the violence done her person resulted in the miscarriage, the miscarriage was a legitimate result of such negligence. Any physical or mental suffering attending the miscarriage is a part of it, and a proper subject of compensation. But the rule goes no further. Any injured feelings following the miscarriage, not part of the pain naturally attending it, are too remote to be considered an element of damage. If the plaintiff lamented the loss of her offspring, such grief involves too much an element of sentiment to be left to the conjecture and caprice of a jury. If, like Rachel, she wept for her children, and would not be comforted, a question of continuing damage is presented, too delicate to be weighed by any scales which the law has yet invented." In the case at bar the instruction of the trial court did not allow a recovery for any sentimental suffering not involved in, and attendant upon, the physical pain endured by the plaintiff and accompanying the injury and the miscarriage caused by it. While it may be true that no scales have yet been invented by the law for weighing purely sentimental grief, it is also true that none are known to the law which separates mental suffering caused by physical injury into its various elements, and apports some as actionable and others as nonactionable. Distress of mind caused by and accompanying a physical injury is an element of damage which the law compensates. It is no more true that all minds do not suffer alike than that all bodies are not equally susceptible to pain. While physiologically all pain may be said to be mental as the law uses the term, it is recognized that pain is physical when a nerve is impinged. But there is always some mental pain. The latter grows out of the former, is produced by it, and is the former extended as a physiological consequence. It would be as impossible in speculation as in fact to say how much of the mental suffering was the co-operation of the nerves of the brain with those of the body, and how much was psychological. Hence the law attempts no separation, but allows recovery for all the suffering, both bodily and mental, which is the direct result of and accompanies a physical injury. If the injury inflicted is continuing, or develops in stages, as from a fracture to septicemia, and thence amputation, it is deemed one injury, and all pain caused by and accompanying it throughout its several stages is an element of the damages which may be recovered. So, if a bodily injury is inflicted upon a pregnant woman, which directly or in natural consequence results in a miscarriage, the latter event is deemed a part of the original injury.

The other case cited and relied upon by appellant (Hawkins v. Front Street Cable R. Co.) goes further than we understand the authorities to justify, and further than we are willing to follow. It was there held that proof that an unborn child died, and was prematurely delivered, because of negligent injuries to its mother, is not sufficient to establish her right to recover substantial damages for the injury. The court held that, if the plaintiff showed "impairment of health and suffering growing out of the death and premature birth of her child, which would not have attended its birth at the usual time, either alive or dead, and also that the child's death is attributable to a negligent injury which she received," she could recover for her suffering and impaired health. "But," the court added, "she must show the injury by appropriate evidence, and the mere proof that the child died, and was prematurely delivered, as a result of the accident, would not be sufficient to presume substantial damage therefrom." The reasoning of the Washington supreme court is that the pregnant woman must in time have delivered the child, and that, as the pain of its birth was inevitable, that it was prematurely brought about could not alone be actionable; that, in order to allow the woman to re-

was merely threatened and would pass; but it continued for a week or so, becoming worse, when she was delivered of a child stillborn. She claims, also, that she continued to suffer from the effects of the injury by reason of a displacement of her womb, and had not finally recovered from the effects at the time of the trial. It may be that the latter claim was not supported by the evidence, and was, in fact, shown not to be true. But what view the jury took of that particular feature of the case we cannot tell, nor does it appear to be material now, as there was clearly enough in the case to sustain the very modest verdict returned in appellee's behalf,—$500.

The trial court, in instructing the jury, after defining care and negligence, gave this as the law of the case: "If the jury should believe and find from the evidence that, while the plaintiff was a passenger upon defendant's train, the defendant company, by its agents or servants in control of said train, knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known, that the log train of the Hurricane Lumber Company was upon its tracks, and ran its passenger train into and collided with said log train, and that by reason of said collision the plaintiff sustained any injury causing plaintiff to miscarry or give premature birth to her child, or caused plaintiff womb trouble, they will find for the plaintiff such sum in damages as they may believe from the evidence she has sustained, so the sum so found, if anything, does not exceed $10,000; and, if the jury should not so believe and find, they will find

for the defendant. If the jury should find for the plaintiff, they will only take into consideration in estimating the damages the mental and physical suffering, if any, and the permanent reduction in plaintiff's power to earn money, if any, caused by said injuries." Appellant insists that "there is little doubt that the jury awarded this verdict against appellant, not because of believing her health was to any extent impaired by reason of this miscarriage, but for the loss of the child." Tunncliffe v. Bay Cities Consol. R. Co. 102 Mich. 624, 32 L.R.A. 142, 61 N. W. 11; and Hawkins v. Front Street Cable R. Co. 3 Wash. 592, 16 L.R.A. 808, 28 Am. St. Rep. 72, 28 Pac. 1021, are cited as holding that a recovery by the mother against one negligently causing the death of the child in her womb and its premature birth is not allowed. The question decided in the first-named case was that the loss of the society and prospective earnings of the child is not a proper element of damages in an action by a married woman for injuries which resulted in a miscarriage. The trial court in that case had charged the jury that, "if the plaintiff lost a child by reason of the liability of the defendant in this case, you may give damage for it. The society, enjoyment, and prospective services of the child is a recognized element in that regard, and you may give what it is reasonably worth." In commenting upon that charge the supreme court of Michigan wrote: "This charge was clearly erroneous. There was, of course, no proof in the case as to the prospective earnings it was held that the effect of a miscarriage in depriving the mother of offspring cannot be taken into account at all as an element of damage, as the injury is too remote and speculative.

So, in Sullivan v. Old Colony Street R. Co. supra, it was held proper to exclude the death of the child as an element of damage.

And in Prescott v. Robinson, supra, it was said that the death of the child and the mother's loss of the comfort and enjoyment of the company of a living child are too remote consequences of her injury to be considered by a jury in assessing her damages.

So, in Morris v. St. Paul City R. Co. supra, it was held that, when an injury to a woman results in a miscarriage, she is entitled to recover such damages as will fairly compensate her for the pain and suffering occasioned by the miscarriage, but not for the pain and suffering occasioned by the loss of the child. And to the same effect was the decision in Hosty v. Moulton Water Co. (Mont.) 102 Pac. 568.

Pleading the miscarriage.

In a few cases it has been held that, in order to entitle the plaintiff to a recovery 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

for miscarriage, it must be expressly pleaded.

Thus, in Florence v. Snook, 20 Colo. App. 356, 78 Pac. 994, the court said: "Pregnancy is not the usual and natural condition of women. It is an unusual or peculiar condition or state of health. A miscarriage can only result from an injury to a woman when in this unusual and peculiar condition, and, when relied upon to increase the damages claimed, must be pleaded."

So, in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Roney, 32 Ky. L. Rep. 1326, 108 S. W. 343, the court said that, where the result of an accident is so unusual as the miscarriage of a pregnant woman, they thought that the defendant should be notified by the pleadings that such a result will be complained of.

But, in Clukey v. Seattle Electric Co. 27 Wash. 70, 67 Pac. 379, where the complaint alleged merely that the plaintiff was "hurt and injured in and about the breast, waist, and abdomen," and that she had unnatural internal bleeding, the court said that certainly a miscarriage would naturally result from the state of facts alleged; and evidence relating to a miscarriage was held to have been properly admitted.

of the child, even if the mother would be the proper person to recover for such loss. Nor would the loss of the child's society be a proper element of damages. While the jury are allowed to consider the case with all its facts, and to take into account, for the purpose of compensation, not only the physical pain, but also mental suffering, in determining the award of damages, and while of necessity this involves to some extent a consideration of the nature of the injury, and cannot exclude from the consideration of the jury the fact that the physical and mental suffering of the mother, by reason of such an injury, would be more intense than in the case of the ordinary fracture of a limb, yet beyond this it would not be competent for the jury to go, and to attempt to compensate for the sorrow and grieving of the mother." That court did allow a recovery for the injury done the plaintiff, and its consequences in causing her to abort her child, including the physical and mental suffering she endured in the travail which was the result of the injury. What was denied was that element of mental distress which is characterized as sentimental, and which followed after, or may have followed after, the physical pain caused by the injury had subsided. This is shown by the quotation by the court with approval of this excerpt from the opinion in Bovee v. Danville, 53 Vt. 183: "If the violence done her person resulted in the miscarriage, the miscarriage was a legitimate result of such negligence. Any physical or mental suffering attending the miscarriage is a part of it, and a proper subject of compensation. But the rule goes no further. Any injured feelings following the miscarriage, not part of the pain naturally attending it, are too remote to be considered an element of damage. If the plaintiff lamented the loss of her offspring, such grief involves too much an element of sentiment to be left to the conjecture and caprice of a jury. If, like Rachel, she wept for her children, and would not be comforted, a question of continuing damage is presented, too delicate to be weighed by any scales which the law has yet invented." In the case at bar the instruction of the trial court did not allow a recovery for any sentimental suffering not involved in, and attendant upon, the physical pain endured by the plaintiff and accompanying the injury and the miscarriage caused by it. While it may be true that no scales have yet been invented by the law for weighing purely sentimental grief, it is also true that none are known to the law which separates mental suffering caused by physical injury into its various elements, and apportions some as actionable and others as nonactionable. Distress of mind caused by and accompanying a physical injury is an element of damage which the law compensates. It is no more true that all minds do not suffer alike than that all bodies are not equally susceptible to pain. While physiologically all pain may be said to be mental as the law uses the term, it is recognized that pain is physical when a nerve is impinged. But there is always some mental pain. The latter grows out of the former, is produced by it, and is the former extended as a physiological consequence. It would be as impossible in speculation as in fact to say how much of the mental suffering was the co-operation of the nerves of the brain with those of the body, and how much was psychological. Hence the law attempts no separation, but allows recovery for all the suffering, both bodily and mental, which is the direct result of and accompanies a physical injury. If the injury inflicted is continuing, or develops in stages, as from a fracture to septicemia, and thence amputation, it is deemed one injury, and all pain caused by and accompanying it throughout its several stages is an element of the damages which may be recovered. So, if a bodily injury is inflicted upon a pregnant woman, which directly or in natural consequence results in a miscarriage, the latter event is deemed a part of the original injury.

The other case cited and relied upon by appellant (Hawkins v. Front Street Cable R. Co.) goes further than we understand the authorities to justify, and further than we are willing to follow. It was there held that proof that an unborn child died, and was prematurely delivered, because of negligent injuries to its mother, is not sufficient to establish her right to recover substantial damages for the injury. The court held that, if the plaintiff showed "impairment of health and suffering growing out of the death and premature birth of her child, which would not have attended its birth at the usual time, either alive or dead, and also that the child's death is attributable to a negligent injury which she received," she could recover for her suffering and impaired health. "But," the court added, "she must show the injury by appropriate evidence, and the mere proof that the child died, and was prematurely delivered, as a result of the accident, would not be sufficient to presume substantial damage therefrom." The reasoning of the Washington supreme court is that the pregnant woman must in time have delivered the child, and that, as the pain of its birth was inevitable, that it was prematurely brought about could not alone be actionable; that, in order to allow the woman to recover for the miscarriage caused her, she must have suffered pain or ill health which would not have followed at the usual time of the birth of the child, dead or alive. Whether the pain of childbirth is greater in the one instance than in the other is not shown. Whether the mother would have suffered more pain at a subsequent time, or whether her health would then have been impaired, we fail to see how it could have been shown. But it is our opinion of the law that the woman has the right to bear her child in nature's way and time. When, by negligent violence to her person, she is caused to give it premature birth, whether it be dead or alive, or whether the pain attending its birth be greater or less than at the ordinary season, she is damaged. She is made to suffer physically and mentally at a time when she otherwise would not have to suffer. The great function of her sex has been interfered with. We all know that nature penalizes heavily infractions of its laws on this score. Such an event cannot be unimportant to the woman, either as it affects her body or her mental equilibrium. If one enters my house tortiously and disturbs my peace, the law gives compensation. If by noises, odors, or unsightly objects, he tortiously interferes with my free enjoyment of my premises, he is liable to me. If he negligently causes my cow to abort her calf, he is liable for the injury to the cow and the loss of the calf. 1 Thomp. Neg. § 156. If, then, he negligently injures the body of a woman, disturbing and deranging nature's functions, so that the fetus of her child is destroyed, and she caused to abort it, why may not she have legal complaint against the wrongdoer for her bodily suffering and her mental suffering accompanying and growing out of it? If, in the collision, she had had a tooth knocked out, there would be no doubt of her right of action, although had she lived she would have lost the tooth in every probability, and maybe have suffered as much or more pain from it, and in having it pulled, than she experienced in having it knocked out by the defendant's negligence.

We hold that a negligent act inflicting bodily injury upon the plaintiff, a woman enccinte, whereby her child dies and is caused to be born prematurely, gives the woman the right of action against the wrongdoer for her injury, including the mental and physical suffering endured as a natural and proximate result of the injury to her person. That is as far as the instructions in this case allowed the jury to go, and is the only feature of that question presented for our review. There was 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

evidence to take the case to the jury and to support its finding.

Judgment affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

v.

NEW YORK CENTRAL & HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD COMPANY.

(Two cases.)

(202 Mass. 394, 88 N. E. 764.)

Highway — obstruction — railroad cars — intent.

A railroad company cannot escape liability under a statute providing that it shall not in any case, obstruct, use, or occupy a highway with cars or engines for more than five minutes at one time, by the fact that the cars could not be moved because the valves of the air brakes were maliciously opened by strangers, without defendant's knowledge.

(May 25, 1909.)

Case Note. — Act of third person as excuse to railroad for blocking street crossing.

In Cleveland, C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Wyant, 114 Ind. 525, 5 Am. St. Rep. 644, 17 N. E. 118, it was held that if a car was placed by a railroad company at a point so as not to obstruct the highway, and was afterwards moved across the highway by the unauthorized interference of boys, over whom the company had no control, it was not liable, unless it negligently permitted the car to remain upon the highway an unreasonable length of time.

In Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Kaste, 11 Ill. App. 536, it was held that a railroad company which had only a temporary right to run its engine and cars over tracks which were the exclusive property of another company was not liable for the act of the latter company in obstructing a street crossing with its own cars.

The question as to the liability of a railroad company for acts done while the property was in the hands of a receiver is, of course, much broader than the subject of this note. It may not, however, be improper to refer to State v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 88 Iowa, 689, 56 N. W. 400, holding that a railroad company cannot be convicted for erecting or maintaining an obstruction over or upon a highway during the time the property was in the hands of a receiver, over whose acts the company had no control; and State v. Vermont C. R. Co. 30 Vt. 108, to the same effect with respect to blocking a street crossing with freight trains while the road was in the hands of a receiver.

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Middlesex County, made during the trial of an action brought to recover penalties for obstructing a public street in violation of a statute, which resulted in a verdict of guilty. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George L. Mayberry for defendant.

Mr. John J. Higgins for the Commonwealth.

Braley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By Stat. 1906, chap. 463, pt. 2. § 155, chapter 111, § 196, of the Revised Laws, is incorporated without change; and by § 159 of part 3, the provisions being the same as those of existing statutes, § 155 is to be construed as a continuation of § 196, and not as a new enactment. Accordingly these complaints may be properly described as brought under § 196, which, so far as material, provides that "no railroad corporation . . . or its . . . servants or agents, shall wilfully or negligently obstruct, or unnecessarily or unreasonably use or occupy, a highway, town way, or street, nor in any case obstruct, use, or occupy it with cars or engines for more than five minutes at one time," without incurring a prescribed penalty for each violation. It was undisputed that, on two separate days, the defendant's cars obstructed, or occupied for more than the time permitted, a street which presumably was a public way, although not so described. The defendant does not question that, under the decision in Com. v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 112 Mass. 412, where an earlier act, of which the present statute is substantially a re-enactment, was considered, it would be no excuse if the obstruction was accidental, or could not have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable diligence. But, the valves to the air brakes having been maliciously opened by strangers, without the knowledge of the defendant or its servants, so that the train could not be operated within the period, owing to the delay required not only to find and close the valves, but also to furnish a fresh supply of air, it contends that their interference constitutes a full defense. See Stat. 1906, pt. 2, chap. 463, § 239; Rev. Laws, chap. 111, § 255. Or, as defined in Com. v. Elwell, 2 Met. 190, 192, 35 Am. Dec. 398, "if a man does an act which would be otherwise criminal, through mistake or accident, or by force, or the compulsion of others, in which his own will and mind do not instigate him to the act, or concur in it, it is matter of defense." If, at common law, crime when committed by the individual consists of acts done with an evil intent, in statutory offenses created in the exercise of the police power, unless a wrongful intent or guilty knowledge, commonly designated by the use of the words "wilfully" or "maliciously," is made an essential element of the prohibited act, the violator may be convicted and punished, even if he has no design to disobey the law. Com. v. Bradford, 9 Met. 268; Com. v. Wentworth, 118 Mass. 441; Com. v. Connelly, 163 Mass. 539, 40 N. E. 862; Com. v. Lavery, 188 Mass. 13, 16, 73 N. E. 884. It is because of this familiar doctrine, inherent in the construction of statutes which prohibit, under a penalty, acts and conduct which otherwise are not generally deemed immoral or criminal, that convictions for the sale of liquor, where the seller had no just ground to believe it was intoxicating, or of imitation butter by the defendant's agent without a descriptive wrapper, which, though furnished, he failed, from mere carelessness, to use, or an inadvertent sale by the defendant's servant of milk not of standard quality, and the admission of a minor to a pool room, where the defendant neither knew, nor had any reason to believe, he was under age, have been sustained. Com. v. Savery, 145 Mass. 212, 13 N. E. 611; Com. v. Daly, 148 Mass. 428, 19 N. E. 209; Com. v. Warren, 160 Mass. 533, 36 N. E. 308; Com. v. Gray, 150 Mass. 327, 329, 23 N. E. 47; Com. v. Emmons, 98 Mass. 6. In other jurisdictions, in the construction of similar statutes, proof of moral turpitude, or a guilty mind, has never been deemed necessary to sustain a conviction. Barnes v. State, 19 Conn. 398; State v. Smith, 10 R. I. 258; People v. West, 106 N. Y. 293, 60 Am. Rep. 452, 12 N. E. 610; Com. v. Zelt, 138 Pa. 615, 11 L.R.A. 602, 21 Atl. 7; Farmer v. People, 77 Ill. 322; Humpeler v. People, 92 Ill. 400; Jamison v. Burton, 43 Iowa, 282; State v. Hartfel, 24 Wis. 60; R. v. Woodrow, 15 Mees. & W. 404; R. v. Payne, 10 Cox, C. C. 231.

If we turn to the language of the statute, the acts for which the defendant has been convicted are positively forbidden. It was within legislative authority to have extended the qualifying words of "wilfully" or "negligently," which describe the offense defined in the first clause of the sentence in § 196, to the unlawful acts with which the defendant is charged. The history of this legislation, from its origin to the latest revision, however, indicates clearly a public policy which, in the language employed to define the offense, recognizes no extenuating circumstances of the nature relied on by the defendant. Stat. 1854, chap. 378, p. 280; Gen. Stat. 1860, chap. 63, § 68; Stat. 1871, chap. 83, p. 485, § 1; Stat. 1874, chap. 372, p. 389, § 129; Stat. 1895, chap.

173, p. 178; Rev. Laws, chap. 111, § 196; Stat. 1906, chap. 463, pt. 2, § 155; Com. v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. ubi supra. By common law as well as under Rev. Laws, chap. 53, the unlawful obstruction of a public way, by whomsoever caused, is an indictable offense. Com. v. King, 13 Met. 115; Com. v. Old Colony & F. River R. Co. 14 Gray, 93. And under Rev. Laws, chap. 111, § 124, the rights of the community are recognized as paramount, for a railroad which is laid out across a public way must be so constructed as not to obstruct it. Holliston v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 195 Mass. 299, 81 N. E. 204. If this section is read with § 196, the reason for the unqualified language of the last section is unmistakable. The accommodation of public travel, for which the ways have been provided and are maintained, requires that at grade crossings travelers shall not be subjected to prolonged delays arising from their occupancy by the cars or engines of a railroad company. It was within the province of the legislature to fix the time during which a grade crossing could be encumbered, and this adjustment between its use by the public and by the railroad must be treated as not only reasonable, but final, until the statute is either modified or repealed. In the practical control of movements of its cars or trains, no claim has been advanced, nor was there any proof at the trial, that, by competent supervision, even if necessarily required to be more or less constant, the defendant would not have been able to have prevented the mischief caused by intermeddlers. Whatever its ignorance of the facts may have been, the defendant was bound, at its peril, to know and obey the law, and its failure to adopt such precautions as might be necessary to enable it to comply with the statute furnishes no ground of justification or defense. Com. v. Mash, 7 Met. 472; Com. v. Curtis, 9 Allen, 266; Parker v. Alder [1899] L. R. 1 Q. B. 20.

Exceptions overruled.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

HATTIE KEITH, Admr., etc., of Gant Keith, Deceased,

v.

CHICAGO, BURLINGTON, & QUINCY RAILROAD COMPANY et al., Appts.

(82 Neb. 12, 116 N. W. 957.)

Benefit contract — "physical inability to work" — construction.

1. Railway employees only were permitted to join the relief department of the defendant company, an institution organized to pay disability benefits to members. The contract for benefits provided: "The word 'disability' shall be held to mean physical inability to work." Held, that the words "physical inability to work" mean inability to perform such labor as the injured member was engaged in at the time of his injury, or similar labor which would enable him to earn wages equally as remunerative.

Headnotes by EPPERSON, C.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same — partial recovery — effect.

2. Under the provisions of such contract, if an injured member of the relief department recovers so that he is able to perform such work as is contemplated in the contract, or similar work equally as desirable and remunerative, then the obligation of the defendants to pay disability benefits ceases. But recovery sufficient to enable him to earn much smaller wages at some other employment, or employment procured through the charity or indulgence of friends or relatives, when, in fact, he has not recovered from his disabilities, is insufficient to release defendants.

(June 4, 1908.)

Case Note. — What constitutes disability within meaning of accident or health policy.

The early cases upon this question are gathered in the note to Turner v. Fidelity & C. Co. 38 L.R.A. 529, and this note includes only the decisions which have considered the point since that time.

Cases passing merely on the question of what constitutes an immediate or continuous disability are not included, and decisions passing only on the point of what amounts to a loss of different members of the body are not within the scope of the note.

For cases involving provisions making confinement to the house a condition of the disability warranting a recovery of benefits, see note to Breil v. Claus Groth Plattsduchen Vereen, post, 359.

Inability to do anything.

As stated in the note to Turner v. Fidelity & C. Co. supra, where the insured is injured in such a way as to prevent his doing anything, he is plainly disabled, and entitled to receive the benefits stipulated for.

Thus, recovery, under a clause in an accident policy insuring against injuries which are immediately, continuously, and wholly disabling, may be had by a traveling salesman where his arm is broken, by reason of which, and ill health resulting therefrom, he is totally prevented from carrying on his usual business. Gordon v. United States Casualty Co. (Tenn. Ch. App.) 54 S. W. 98.

And one who is a farmer, and a part of the time operates a portable sawmill, is entitled to benefits in an association providing therefor on a member's becoming unable to direct or perform the kind of business or labor which he has always followed, and by which alone he can thereafter earn APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Douglas County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a relief fund certificate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Greene, Breckinridge, & Matters and W. H. Hatteroth for appellants.

Messrs. Smyth & Smith, for appellee:

The fact that the injured employee was not able to earn as much, and that this inability was due to the injury received, prove conclusively that he was still disabled.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Olsen, 70 Neb. 569, 97 N. W. 831, 99 N. W. 847.

Epperson, C., filed the following opinion:

This action was instituted by Gant Keith in his lifetime, and later prosecuted by the administratrix of his estate, against the a livelihood, where it appears that his right arm was almost severed by a saw and is practically useless. Beach v. Supreme Tent, K. M. 177 N. Y. 100, 69 N. E. 281.

So, where an accident policy allows benefits when an injury shall "wholly and continuously disable him from transacting any and every kind of business," total disability within the meaning of the provision is shown by evidence that a supervising builder received an injury which he thought slight; that ten days later he became lame; that, although he remained at the mill where he was working, he was unable to supervise the work and employed another; that he traveled unattended in search of medical aid, gave some time to correspondence, and was in possession of his mental faculties, but substantially his entire time was given to trying to obtain relief from the injury, and, from suffering, anxiety, and time devoted to his efforts to obtain relief, he was entirely incapacitated for business. United States Casualty Co. v. Hanson, 20 Colo. App. 393, 79 Pac. 176.

Ability to do some small act.

And generally insured's ability to do some small act will not prevent recovery.

Thus, it is held that the "total disability" contemplated by a benefit certificate does not mean a state of absolute helplessness, and the fact that insured walked to his physician's office was held not to prevent recovery where he was entirely incapacitated for work or business. Mutual Ben. Asso. v. Nancarrow, 18 Colo. App. 274, 71 Pac. 423.

And where a benefit certificate entitles the member to benefits in case he is totally and permanently incapacitated from performing manual labor, the term "manual labor" implies the ability for such sustained exercise and use of the hands at labor as will enable the insured thereby to earn, or assist in earning, a livelihood, and the fact

Chicago, Burlington, & Quincy Railroad Company and the Chicago, Burlington, & Quincy Railway Company, to recover $638.70, alleged to be due upon a certificate of membership in the relief fund of the Burlington Voluntary Relief Department, for disability benefits at the rate of 75 cents a day from December 10, 1901, to April 4, 1904, at which time the said Gant Keith died. On September 11, 1900, the deceased entered the employ of the railway company as a switchman, and became a member of the relief department. Three days later, while thus employed, he received an injury from which it appears he never fully recovered. He was entitled to receive from the relief fund $1.50 a day for fifty-two weeks, and thereafter 75 cents a day during the continuance of his disability. He received such relief until December 10, 1901, at which time the defendants refused further payment, claiming that his disability had then that he can use his hands for a brief period will not prevent recovery as for "total incapacity," where he is not able to sustain his efforts a sufficient time to enable him to make a living. Grand Lodge, B. L. F. v. Orrell, 206 Ill. 208, 59 N. E. 68.

So, where an accident policy provides for payment in case insured is wholly disabled from doing any work, or any part thereof, from the date of the accident, a brakeman is not precluded from recovering by the fact that he made two runs after the accident, but was obliged to employ a substitute on each, or by the fact that he did trivial work on his farm, which was shown to be work which he would have done had he been following his usual occupation. Wall v. Continental Casualty Co. 111 Mo. App. 504, 86 S. W. 491.

And, the fact that a physician, from a sense of professional duty, attends a near-by patient after his knee is injured, is not sufficient to show that he was not continuously and wholly disabled, where he could scarcely move at all the next day and, the following day, the knee was put in splints, and he was forced to remain in bed three weeks. Brendon v. Traders & Travelers' Acci. Co. 84 App. Div. 530, 82 N. Y. Supp. 860.

Ability to attend to part of usual business.

Where ability to perform part of insured's usual occupation exists, the right of recovery depends largely upon the facts and the particular provisions of the contract, but the cases on the question cannot be said to be entirely in harmony.

Thus, it has been held that an instruction in an action on an accident policy, to find for the plaintiff if the insured, a cattle buyer, was rendered insane to such a degree that he was prevented from performing any and every kind of duty essential to his business in a manner "reasonably as effective" as he could have performed it if ceased. At one time Keith attempted to resume his duties as a switchman, but was unable to do so. It is undisputed that he was disabled until December 10, 1901. At that time he reported for work to his employing officer, who tendered him some position as a utility man at the rate of $35 a month. This employment Keith refused, either because he was unable to do the work or because the wages offered were unsatisfactory. He then obtained employment as a bartender in his brother's saloon until April, 1902, and thereafter, until his death, was in the employ of one Dwyer, who succeeded his brother in the saloon business. While in the employ of his brother and for the first year of his employment by Dwyer, he received $50 a month wages, and thereafter

$60 a month. During all this time Keith could not place the injured foot upon the ground naturally. He was required to use a crutch or a cane. The toes of the foot stood upright. Every night the foot was swollen. But as bartender he was able to spare his foot, not being required to stand upon it during all the time he was on duty. The evidence shows that he kept a chair behind the bar, which he used whenever he could; that he was enabled a part of the time at least to use a foot rest. By reason of the injury he was required to quit work occasionally, sometimes one day and sometimes more, and some days he would have to quit for a short time only. His employer testified, in substance, that he was not a good man so far as his work was concerned, not injured, is erroneous where the policy provides for benefit in case the insured is wholly disabled and prevented from performing any and every kind of duty pertaining to his occupation. Fidelity & C. Co. v. Getzendanner, 93 Tex. 487, 53 S. W. 838, 55 S. W. 179, 56 S. W. 326. The court said: "To say that one who is disabled by an injury is wholly disabled to do a thing merely because he cannot do it 'in a manner reasonably as effective as the same would have been performed if the injury had not been sustained,' seems to us a solecism in language, if it does not involve a contradiction in terms. A carpenter with a sprained finger might not be able to pursue his calling as effectively as if he had not received the injury, and at the same time he might be able to do, without serious inconvenience, 90 per cent as much work as he could have done before the accident happened. Clearly, he would not be 'wholly disabled and prevented from performing any and every kind of duty pertaining to his occupation.' And such is the case with many other physical injuries. The effectiveness of the performance may be impaired although the injured person may not be wholly disabled to perform a duty. The charge involves a technical error, as we think, and can only be justified upon the theory that the slightest impairment of the mental faculties wholly disables one who is engaged in buying and selling from pursuing his avocation. Such, however, is not the fact, for there are infinite gradations in mental deterioration, and it is a matter of common knowledge that persons with some degree of cerebral disturbance may continue to prosecute with reasonable efficiency a business which requires the exercise of judgment and discretion."

So, the loss of the left arm by a druggist does not constitute a total disability within the meaning of a contract of a fraternal organization, providing for payment of benefits whenever a member becomes totally disabled from following his usual or regular business, occupation, or profession. Smith v. Supreme Lodge, O. S. F. 62 Kan. 75, 61 Pac. 416.
23 L. R. A. (N. S.)

And one is not wholly and continuously disabled from performing any and every kind of duty pertaining to his occupation, within the meaning of an accident policy, where he was previously employed as lumpner in a granite yard, where his duties involved the overseeing of boxing and loading, and it appears that he is still employed by the same firm in superintending the work which he had been previously doing. Bylow v. Union Casualty & Surety Co. 72 Vt. 325, 47 Atl. 1066.

So, where an accident policy allows indemnity to a section foreman while he is wholly disabled from transacting any and every kind of business pertaining to his occupation, he cannot recover benefits after he returns to his position of foreman, over the same number of hands and at the same salary as before. Rayburn v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co. 141 N. C. 425, 54 S. E. 283.

And where an accident policy allows indemnity when the injury wholly disables the insured from transacting any and every kind of business pertaining to his occupation, one classed as a capitalist cannot recover where his hand is cut and the tendons injured, but he is able to be at his office every day and attend to practically all of the usual routine, although he is greatly inconvenienced by the injury. Coad v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 61 Neb. 563, 85 N. W. 558.

And where insured has lost no time from business on account of an injury resulting in hernia, and has been promoted since receiving it, no recovery can be had under an accident policy containing provisions allowing benefits when the insured is wholly disabled and prevented from engaging in any productive occupation. Etna L. Ins. Co. v. Lasseter, 153 Ala. 630, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 252, 45 So. 166.

So, under an accident policy indemnifying for injuries wholly disabling insured from transacting any of the duties pertaining to his occupation as a merchant, recovery can be had while he is totally unable to attend to duties at the store, but not during the time he is able to perform some of the work around his store, although there are many duties that he cannot perform.

but from a business standpoint that he was very well thought of; that he took a good deal of interest in the place; that he had many friends throughout the country, and was a good talker. In the court below the plaintiff recovered judgment in the full amount claimed, and defendants appeal.

The rights of the parties depend upon the construction of a part of one section of the regulations of the relief department in force at the time deceased became a member, and which is as follows: "Wherever used in these regulations, the word 'disability' shall be held to mean physical inability to work by reason of sickness or accidental injury, and the word 'disabled' shall apply to members thus physically unable to work." It is the defendants' contention that the words "physical inability to work," as used above, mean physical inability to do any work whereby one could maintain himself, and that the deceased, having recovered from his injury so as to be able to perform the duties of a bartender, was under no disability within the meaning of the regulations quoted. The trial court refused an instruction submitting this theory to the jury. Instead he gave an instruction in which he said: "By the word 'disability' is meant inability to perform the ordinary duties in the employment in which Keith was engaged at the time of his injury." It would, indeed, be a harsh rule which would require the relief department to pay to its members continuously the relief promised during disability, in the event that such McKinley v. Banker's Acci. Ins. Co. 106 Iowa, 81, 75 N. W. 670.

And in Shirts v. Phoenix Acci. & Sick Ben. Asso. 135 Mich. 439, 97 N. W. 966, where insured was entitled to benefits only when wholly incapacitated from transacting any and every kind of business, and while confined to the house, his right to benefits was held to be terminated by his going to his store for a couple of hours and superintending his business.

But recovery has been allowed by some courts although insured is still able to perform a part of his duties.

Thus, in James v. United States Casualty Co. 113 Mo. App. 622, 88 S. W. 125, where a clause of an accident policy insured against loss which immediately, continuously, and wholly disabled the holder, it was held that the latter, a queen's-ware merchant having separate wholesale and retail stores, might recover although he was able to be at his place of business daily, and write checks, approve orders, and dictate letters, but could do none of the principal matters pertaining to his business, and could not get about the store or from one of his stores to the other, as before. The court, in speaking of a provision intended to explain "totally," said: "But stress is laid by defendant's able counsel upon a part of the clause above set out, which, itself, assumes to define what is meant by wholly disabled, wherein it is said that the assured must be totally unable to perform any part of his duties. We do not consider that such provision has any material control over the other portion of the clause. When parties enter into a contract it must be assumed that they intended that which, in certain events or contingencies, would mean something and have some effective force. And so it has been held that, if a promissory note reads that A promises not to pay B $100, the word 'not' will be disregarded, since the parties must have meant something by the execution of the note. . . . The occupation of a merchant calls for both mental and physical exertion. If 'wholly disabled' means that he shall, literally, be totally unable to perform any part of his business, then mental capacity exercised in merely directing, in a single instance, a matter the most trivial, as, for instance, to sweep the floor, or the physical effort of doing it himself, would bar a recovery on the policy. Total mental disability means that one must have his mental faculties entirely suspended; and total physical disability means the loss of power to move. It cannot be that the parties intended that, before an assured could recover on the policy, he should lie the full period of his injury in a state of coma. To interpret the clause in its contractual sense, as defendant seeks to have us do, would render the contract utterly useless to an assured, and would be nothing short, practically speaking, of collecting a premium without rendering a consideration. We therefore find ourselves driven back to the position taken by the authorities on the construction of the first part of the clause; viz., that the disability meant is a disability as to the performance of any substantial part of the business."

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And it has been held that disability within the meaning of a provision allowing benefits "for the immediate, continuous loss of such business time as may necessarily result" is shown by evidence that a chief railroad clerk fell when bowling and injured his knee so that he was prevented from doing substantially all of the necessary and material things of his occupation in his accustomed and usual manner. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Branham, 34 Ind. App. 243, 70 N. E. 174.

So, a carpenter who loses the use of his left arm, but is still able to do light work, is nevertheless entitled to sick benefits from a lodge allowing benefits only when the member is "sick and unable to work." Platt-deutsche Grot Gilde v. Ross, 117 Ill. App. 247. The court said: "We cannot concur in the contention of appellant's counsel that 'to obtain sick benefits a member must be actually sick, and so sick as to be unable to do work of any kind. He cannot draw sick benefits and earn money at the same time.' If this construction of the words 'sick and unable to work' be correct, it member, although unable to resume the employment in which he was engaged at the time of the injury, should so far recover as to be physically able to earn wages equal to or greater than the wages earned by him in such employment. Such construction cannot be given to the provisions of this contract. If an injured member of the relief department recovers to the extent that he is no longer disabled in the performance of the work contemplated or similar work,—that is, employment equally as desirable and remunerative,—then the obligation of the defendants to pay disability benefits ceases. The work contemplated is the work of railway employees. The purpose of the department is to partially indemnify its members against the loss of wages occasioned by their inability to perform such labor. In other words, the "disability" for which partial indemnity is paid is the disability which prevents the member from doing the "work" contemplated in the contract, and which results in his financial loss. The regulations of the relief department are similar to the by-laws of a mutual insurance company. They enter into and become a part of the contract. Indemnity to the injured member, and not profits, is the object of the department. This would be defeated if an injured member should be permitted to collect the benefits provided after he had recovered to such an extent that he could enter a similar employment equally as desirable and remunerative. In Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Olsen, 70 Neb. 570, 99 N. W. 847, in would follow that a person who earned $5 a day before he became sick would have no right to a benefit if capable of earning 10 or 20 cents a day, or any sum, however small, afterwards. The by-law must receive a reasonable construction. Its meaning evidently is that so long as a man is not restored to his full health, and is substantially unable to do such work or make such a living as he did before, he is entitled to the benefit."

And the fact that the manager of a clothing company is able to do minor and trivial things, not requiring much time or physical labor, will not prevent a recovery under a provision of a policy allowing benefits when insured is wholly disabled from performing any and every kind of business pertaining to his occupation, where he is unable to do the things which constitute substantially all of his occupation. Commercial Travelers' Mut. Acci. Asso. v. Springsteen, 23 Ind. App. 657, 55 N. E. 973.

So, the fact that a farmer is able to direct his business, and do some of the work himself, will not prevent his recovering as for total disability if he is wholly disabled from doing all the substantial and material acts necessary to be done. Foglesong v. Modern Brotherhood, 121 Mo. App. 548, 97 S. W. 240.

And it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that a shoe dealer whose shoulder is injured so that he is unable to attend to his business, although he has been to his store, is not entitled to recover under a policy allowing benefits where insured is wholly disabled from transacting any and every kind of business pertaining to his occupation. Thayer v. Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. 68 N. H. 577, 41 Atl. 182. The court said: "As long as one is in full possession of his mental faculties, he is capable of transacting some parts of his business, whatever it may be, although he is incapable of physical action. If the words, 'wholly disable him from transacting any and every kind of business pertaining to the occupation under which he is insured,' were to be construed literally, the defendants would be liable in no case unless, by the accident, the insured should 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

lose his life or his reason. . . . It is certain that neither party intended such a result. It cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff's disability was not sufficient to entitle him to compensation under the terms of the policy."

So, a finding by the jury that the insured was wholly and continuously disabled from attending to every kind of business pertaining to his occupation from the first day of his injury will not be set aside as not sustained by the evidence, where it appears that insured swallowed a pin, but, for a considerable time, with the exception of a day or two, he was at his place of business, but did not perform the duties usually demanded by his occupation. Order of United Commercial Travelers v. Barnes, 72 Kan. 309, 82 Pac. 1099, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 809.

And where the regulations of a benefit association provide that the word "disability" shall be held to mean physical inability to work, the decision of the medical examiner that a carpenter who has suffered an amputation of a leg by reason of his injury is "able to work" will not be construed to mean that he has recovered from his disability, where the evidence shows that, at the same time, the examiner declared the insured able to do light work, but still disabled. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Olsen, 70 Neb. 559, 97 N. W. 831, rehearing denied in 70 Neb. 570, 99 N. W. 847.

Ability to work in other occupation.

As stated in the note to Turner v. Fidelity & C. Co. supra, the question of a disability when insured is still able to work in some other occupation depends largely on the terms of the contract defining the disability.

It has been held that the words "to earn a livelihood in an employment suited to his capacity," contained in the regulations of a relief society, formed to relieve unfortunate members during the time when, by accident, they are prevented from earning a livelihood, refer to his capacity as it exists after the injury, at the time of application for benefits, and not his capacity as it existed the opinion overruling the motion for rehearing, it is said: "There seems to be force in the argument that, if the plaintiff had recovered from the injury so as to be able to perform labor similar and equivalent to that required in the employment in which he was engaged at the time of the accident, or was able to perform the duties of an engagement that was open and available to him whereby he could support and maintain himself as he was able to do before the accident, he was 'able to work' within the meaning of that expression in the contract." This is a correct rule, and should be adhered to whenever applicable. Defendants invoke it here. It follows, of course, that the instruction given herein was erroneous, in that it defined "disability" as prior to the injury. Hunt v. Northern C. R. Co. 124 App. Div. 43, 108 N. Y. Supp. 267.

And where a flagman earning $75 a month loses an arm, but there is no other evidence of disability, and it appears that he subsequently accepted a position as messenger at $40 a month, which he retained for some time and voluntarily resigned, the evidence does not show that he is unable to earn a livelihood within the foregoing provision. Ibid.

So, where a certificate of a mutual benefit association was made payable in case of total disability to follow any avocation, an instruction that the fact that a man may work continuously for a few months is not conclusive evidence that he can follow some vocation, but that, if the jury find that insured could keep a newspaper or peanut stand or could follow any line of employment, he could not recover, is not prejudicial to the insurer, where the jury are told that the question of his ability to follow an avocation is for them to decide. Starling v. Supreme Council R. T. T. 108 Mich. 440, 62 Am. St. Rep. 709, 66 N. W. 340.

But, under a by-law providing that, when a member becomes "totally and permanently disabled, . . . from following any occupation whatever," he shall be paid a sum by the order, one who previously has been strong and vigorous and able to do heavy manual labor is entitled to the benefit where he received an injury which paralyzed his leg entirely, and was otherwise disabled thereby so that he was incapable of performing any work requiring travel or exercise; and this was held true although insured, at the time of trial, was the nominal manager of a mine, for which service he received his board. Monahan v. Supreme Lodge, O. C. K. 88 Minn. 224, 92 N. W. 972.

And in Foglesong v. Modern Brotherhood, 121 Mo. App. 548, 97 S. W. 240, where a benefit certificate provided for indemnity in case of "permanent and total disability of said member, which renders him unable to carry on or conduct any vocation or calling," the court refused to construe the provision to mean that no recovery could be had

"inability to perform the ordinary duties in the employment in which Keith was engaged at the time of his injuries." But, as we view it, this error was without prejudice. Under the evidence the judgment rendered was the only one permissible. Keith never became physically able to resume his work as a switchman; nor did he ever become physically able to earn wages in any similar employment; nor was he ever able to earn wages equal to the wages of a switchman. He was retained as a bartender notwithstanding his physical defects, which partially incapacitated him. A review of the evidence leads us to the conclusion that he was able to hold this position by reason of his employer's indulgence, and, further, because of a tenacity of purpose on his part if insured was able to carry on any vocation whatever. It was there said: "But we are unwilling to adopt such a doctrine, the effect of which would be, practically, to reduce all such contracts to nullities and to make them the instruments of extracting dues from policy holders without creating any liability on the part of the insurers. Common knowledge of the occupations in the lives of men and women teach us that there is scarcely any kind of disability that prevents them from following some vocation or other, except in cases of complete mental inertia. We have examples of persons without hearing, and without sight, following a vocation,—some without feet, and some without hands, engaged in business. The achievements of disabled persons are seemingly marvelous. Under defendant's theory, the plaintiff might embark in the peanut trade, or follow the business of selling shoe strings or lead pencils, or follow some similar calling, in which instances, under the rule invoked, there would be no disability within the meaning of the policy. In our opinion, such was not within the contemplation of the parties. In order to carry out the intent of the parties, it is our duty to disregard the broad language used, which would have the effect to defeat the purpose of the contract and render it a nullity. It has been said: 'The policy is the law by which the mutual rights and liabilities of the parties are to be measured, and should be construed strictly against the insurer where they narrow the range and force of the allegation, or provide for forfeiture.' . . . The language of the policy, 'permanent and total disability of said member, which renders him unable to carry on or conduct any vocation or calling,' the vocation of the insured not being designated, should be construed as meaning, if anything, the vocation or calling which he might be following at the time he became disabled, and not any vocation whatever, which he might be able to follow after he had been disabled. . . . We have seen to what absurd consequences a literal construction of the language would lead."

To the same effect is Wall v. Continental

Bishop v. United States Casualty Co. 99 App. Div. 530, 91 N. Y. Supp. 176; Dunning v. Massachusetts Mut. Acci. Asso. 99 Me. 390, 59 Atl. 535.

Mr. William F. Wappich, for appellee:

The plaintiff was constantly confined to the house, within the meaning of the insurance contract.

Hoffman v. Michigan Home & Hospital Asso. 128 Mich. 323, 54 L.R.A. 746, 87 N. W. 265; Turner v. Fidelity & C. Co. 112 Mich. 425, 38 L.R.A. 529, 67 Am. St. Rep. 428, 70 N. W. 898; Hohn v. Inter-State Casualty Co. 115 Mich. 79, 72 N. W. 1105; Coad v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 61 Neb. 563, 85 N. W. 558.

Epperson, C., filed the following opinion:

On May 29, 1906, the plaintiff was, and for several years had been, a member of the defendant society. This society is a mutual fraternal association, organized for the purpose of paying sick benefits to its members at the rate of $8 per week, exclusive of the first week of sickness, and for a period not icy of insurance is to be construed liberally to that end; and for this reason conditions and provisos therein will be strictly construed against the insurers, because their object is to limit the scope and defeat the purpose of the principal contract. . . . The evident purpose of the policy, construed as a whole, was to indemnify the insured from loss occasioned through illness, by providing for the payment to him of certain benefits while incapacitated for performing labor. When so incapacitated, he was disabled within the meaning and intent of the policy. It was not necessary that he be helpless, or that he remain in bed, or in the house, during such illness, when it might advance his recovery and correspondingly relieve the company from its obligations to him, if he should take some exercise and expose himself to the healing influences of sunshine and fresh air, provided he is entirely incapacitated for work or business on account of his illness."

To the same effect is Scales v. Masonic Protective Asso. 70 N. H. 490, 48 Atl. 1084. The court, in that case, said: "It would be generally understood that a sick person was confined 'to' the house, although he went into the dooryard to take sun baths or get fresh air. To the strict constructionist, the phrase 'to the house' does not mean the same as 'in the house.' 'To' signifies direction, connection with, appurtenant; while 'in' signifies the quality of being interior. Strictly speaking, confinement to a house differs from confinement in a house. According to the strictly literal meaning of the words, the plaintiff was 'absolutely, necessarily, continuously confined to his house,' notwithstanding he spent a portion of the time in his dooryard, as stated in the case."

But, as before stated, the decisions are not 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

exceeding twenty-six weeks. No policies, certificates, or contracts are issued to its members, but liability is fixed by the rules and regulations adopted for its government, and which provide, omitting provisions not pertinent: "Every member of the society is entitled to sick benefits if his sickness is such that the member must remain constantly in the house and under the care and treatment of a registered physician." On the 29th of May, the plaintiff was suffering with cataracts of the eyes. This trouble continued until after the institution of this action, on November 13, 1906. Plaintiff sued to recover a balance due for twenty-three weeks' benefit; defendant having paid him for five weeks. He recovered in the court below, and defendant appealed.

About the second week of his said illness, and acting under the directions of his physician, he went to a hospital, where an operation was performed, and where he was retained for a period of two weeks for treatment. He then went to his home, in the city of Omaha, where his physician resided, and where also the hospital was maintained.

in entire harmony. Most of them, however, may be reconciled on the ground that the conditions of the contracts are different.

Thus it has been held that where a sick benefit policy provides for allowance while insured is "necessarily, entirely, and continuously confined to the house," there can be no recovery for the period during which insured went out for airings, although he acted under his physician's orders. Cooper v. Phoenix Acci. & Sick Ben. Asso. 141 Mich. 478, 104 N. W. 734. The court, after noting the difference in the provision of the policies in Hoffman v. Michigan Home & Hospital Asso. supra, and that in the one under consideration, said: "In the clause now before us the words are 'necessarily, entirely, and continuously confined to the house.' The contract is not one of indemnity for disability caused by a felon. It is only when the resulting disability is of such nature that the holder of the policy is necessarily, entirely, and continuously confined to his house that indemnity is promised. If the provision had been written expressly to meet and avoid the effect of the reasoning in the case referred to, it could not have well been made stronger."

And where a health policy insures against disease "necessitating continuous confinement indoors and treatment by a regularly qualified physician," a complaint which only alleges that the insured was wholly unable to transact any part of his business is bad on demurrer. Bishop v. United States Casualty Co. 99 App. Div. 530, 91 N. Y. Supp. 176. The court said: "It seems clear that the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover his weekly indemnity unless his physical disability was such as reasonably to necessitate continuous confinement to his house and medical treatment. In other words, no

His physician never visited him at his home, nor did plaintiff perpetually remain within the house. He stepped into the yard occasionally, and went from one to four times each week to his physician's office. He returned to the hospital a few weeks later (the exact time is not disclosed), and again remained about two weeks and suffered additional operations. He then spent two months at his home until October or November, and then returned once more to the hospital for further operations. This brings us to the time the suit was instituted, and perhaps beyond such time. The exact dates of the plaintiff's confinement in the hospital are not given; but it is reasonable to presume that such periods prior to the institution of this suit did not exceed six weeks. Plaintiff experienced considerable pain and inflammation of the eyes; but his physical condition was such that he did not need to remain within the house, except when in the hospital, and he was strong enough to go to his physician's office. When he did so, he was accompanied by some member of his family. This was necessary on account of his defective eyesight. On two or three occasions prior to the institution of the suit, he went to the place of business of the president of the defendant society, and made demands for the sick benefits sued for. The defendant admitted a liability for five weeks of his sickness, covering, we presume, the time plaintiff was in the hospital, but refused liability for the remainder of the time, claiming that the plaintiff was not required by his sickness to remain in the house.

The rules and regulations of the defendant association constitute the agreement between the parties, and, in construing it, it is necessary to give force to the meaning which the parties evidently intended the words used should have. We are convinced that the only interpretation which may be given to this contract is that the defendant intended to pay to its members a weekly benefit during sickness, provided the sickness was such as would disable the member from departing from the house for the purpose of attending to the ordinary affairs of life. That a person "must remain constantly in the house" does not necessarily mean that matter what the nature of the malady may have been, and no matter though it may have totally disqualified him from performing his business, if it did not require him to remain indoors, and if the professional services were not reasonably required, it was not within the contemplation of the contract that the assured should have indemnity. The plaintiff undertook to allege part of the requisite consequences of his disease and omitted the balance. Without proof of that, the judgment in his favor could not be sustained; and I think that, without its allegation, he should not be permitted to reverse the decision sustaining the demurrer."

So it has been held, under a provision of a health policy that "no disability shall constitute a claim . . . where the claimant is able to leave his bed or house . . . nor during any period of convalescence, nor when the attendance of a physician is not required every second day at the bedside," that no recovery can be had for the time subsequent to the date that the insured left his bed, went out for air and recreation, and made a visit out of town for his health, especially where there was evidence that a physician visited him only once. Liston v. New York Casualty Co. 28 Misc. 240, 58 N. Y. Supp. 1090.

And it has been held that where a policy provides for payment in case of disability and necessary confinement to the house, there can be no recovery unless there is evidence of necessary confinement to the house as well as of disability. Schneps v. Fidelity & C. Co. 101 N. Y. Supp. 106.

So it has been held, under provisions of a health policy allowing benefits where the disability is continuous, complete, and total, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) and requires absolute and necessary confinement to the house, that recovery cannot be had by one suffering from iritis, where he is not necessarily confined to the house. Dunning v. Massachusetts Mut. Acci. Asso. 99 Me. 390, 59 Atl. 535. The court said: "The defendant company had a right to frame its health policy upon the assumption that confinement to the house would be found so tedious and irksome that few would submit to it except under compulsion of a severe illness. It had a right to make 'absolute and necessary confinement to the house' a conclusive test of the disability, and a condition precedent to the right of recovery. It has inserted this condition in the contract in plain and unambiguous language, and it is not suggested that any principle of public policy is thereby contravened. To hold that this requirement is not a condition precedent is to defeat the obvious intention disclosed by the terms employed, and to substitute for the plaintiff's policy a contract not made by the parties."

Where an accident policy provides for benefits when insured is "wholly incapacitated from transacting any and every kind of work or business pertaining to his occupation, and, as a result thereof, be confined to the house or bed," he cannot recover benefits after he goes to his store and sits around a couple of hours, superintending his business. Shirts v. Phoenix Acci. & Sick Ben. Asso. 135 Mich. 439, 97 N. W. 966. The court did not attempt to distinguish this case from Hoffman v. Michigan Home & Hospital Asso. supra, but said that the circumstances of the two cases were so different that the same rule did not apply.

one must remain perpetually within the four walls of a house. Within the meaning of the by-law quoted, one is confined to the house by sickness if his condition is such that he is unable to attend to the ordinary affairs of life, and is required to remain in the house, except when making necessary visits to his physician. It cannot be said that a patient is not confined to his house constantly during an illness which is characterized by recurring periods of severity, although at intervals he may occasionally step into his yard, or make visits to his physician, or other short and unusual trips; he at all times being unable to resume the ordinary duties or pleasures of life.

In Hoffman v. Michigan Home Hospital Asso. 128 Mich. 323, 54 L.R.A. 746, 87 N. W. 265, it was held that a similar contract is not defeated by the fact that the insured went out by direction of his physician for an occasional and necessary airing, if, by reason of the illness, he was continuously confined to the house the larger portion of the time. In the case at bar, there can be no doubt but that the plaintiff, was entitled to recover during the time he was in the hospital. With reference to the intervening periods of time, it cannot be said that he was convalescing, except following his last visit to the hospital, and as to that time we are not concerned. Between operations he was simply undergoing treatment for the purpose of preparing for the following operation. At all times he suffered intense pain. There was inflammation about the eyes, and there can be no doubt but that he was physically disabled from attending to his daily business or from enjoying the ordinary pleasures of life. The construction placed upon the contract by the trial court and the jury was consistent with the above.

We find no error in the record, and recommend that the judgment be affirmed.

Good, Calkins, and Duffie, CC., concur.

Per Curlam:

For the reasons given in the foregoing opinion, the judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied June 25, 1909.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

THOMAS DENNISON

v.

DAILY NEWS PUBLISHING COMPANY,
Appt.

(82 Neb. 675, 118 N. W. 568.)

Libel — evidence — identification of plaintiff.

1. In a civil action to recover damages

Headnotes by EPPERSON, C.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

for libel, it is proper to produce evidence showing the relations existing between the plaintiff and the author of the alleged libel, for the purpose of proving that the plaintiff was the person referred to, when his name does not appear in the article, and defendant does not admit that he is the one referred to.

Same — damages — grief.

2. Neither the grief experienced by the plaintiff's wife upon reading an alleged libelous article regarding plaintiff, nor the influence of her grief upon the plaintiff's mind, are elements of damage recoverable in action for libel.

Same — evidence — publication of retraction.

3. In a civil action for libel in this state, wherein punitive damages are not recoverable, neither evidence of defendant's refusal to publish a retraction, nor evidence that others, who had also published the alleged libel, had published a retraction, is admissible for the purpose of enhancing the plaintiff's recovery.

Same — identification of plaintiff.

4. In such case the editor of defendant's paper, in which the alleged libel was published, should not be required, upon objection, to testify as to whom he "considered" and "supposed" the article referred.

(November 19, 1908.)

Case Note. — Admissibility of evidence of family relations of plaintiff on question of damages in an action for libel or slander.

It may be laid down as a general rule of law, supported by all the authorities, that evidence as to whether the plaintiff is married, as to the existence of children or other relatives, is admissible as an important factor on the question of damages. Rhodes v. Naglee, 66 Cal. 677, 6 Pac. 863; Dixon v. Allen, 69 Cal. 527, 11 Pac. 179; Smith v. Hubbell, 142 Mich. 637, 106 N. W. 547; Clements v. Maloney, 55 Mo. 352; Morey v. Morning Journal Asso. 123 N. Y. 207, 9 L.R.A. 621, 20 Am. St. Rep. 730, 25 N. E. 161, affirming 17 N. Y. S. R. 206, 1 N. Y. Supp. 475; Bechler v. Steever, 2 Whart. 313; Klumph v. Dunn, 66 Pa. 141, 5 Am. Rep. 355; Binder v. Pottstown Daily News Pub. Co. 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 411.

Thus, in Enquirer Co. v. Johnston, 18 C. C. A. 628, 34 U. S. App. 607, 72 Fed. 443, in which the libel complained of imputed unchastity to the plaintiff, the court held that the plaintiff was properly permitted to testify as to the number and ages of her children, and said that the children were a part of her environment, and that her relation to them was such as to make the injury of herself more acute and permanent, and such as might render her more sensitive to, and more helpless against, the wrong done.

And in Cahill v. Murphy, 94 Cal. 29, 28 Am. St. Rep. 88, 30 Pac. 195, in which it was held that it was competent, on the APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Douglas County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for libel. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. J. H. Van Dusen and Irving F. Baxter for appellant.

Mr. W. J. Connell for appellee.

Epperson, C., filed the following opinion:

On the night of November 22, 1904, in the city of Omaha, the home of Elmer E. Thomas, attorney for the Civic Federation, while it was occupied by himself and his family, was partially wrecked by the explosion of a dynamite bomb, brought about by some person unknown, with the probable intention of murdering said Thomas. On November 26, 1904, the defendant herein published in the Omaha Daily News an address delivered by Mr. Thomas at a mass meeting of citizens of Omaha, which, with unimportant matters omitted, is as follows: "When I began this fight as attorney for the Civic Federation, I saw at the outset a man who stood across the path of good government in this city. It was necessary that this man be driven out of the city. It is because of the fight made on that man that my family has been placed in jeopardy of their lives. When Richard L. Metcalf, editor of the World Herald, opposed the se-question of damages, for the plaintiff to prove the number and ages of her children, the court went on to say that such rule rested upon the principle that, as mental suffering entitles the plaintiff to compensation in cases of this character, such suffering may be increased and the damages consequently enhanced by the fact that members of the plaintiff's family will suffer by reason of the disgrace visited upon the plaintiff by the slanderous charge.

And in Barnes v. Campbell, 60 N. H. 27, in which it was held that evidence that the plaintiff had a wife and child, was competent on the question of damages, the court said: "The plaintiff was entitled to compensation for mental suffering, and that suffering might be heightened, and his damages consequently increased, by the fact that his wife and child would suffer from the disgrace thrown upon him by the charge that he was a thief."

And in Enos v. Enos, 135 N. Y. 609, 32 N. E. 123, in which the libel complained of imputed unchastity to the plaintiff, and also charged her with theft, it was held that it was competent to permit proof that the plaintiff had a family of young children, as bearing upon the question of damages. To quote from the opinion: "It certainly was a serious aggravation that the words were spoken of a mother, having children who would be disgraced by such a charge."

Upon the same principle, it was held, in Washington Times Co. v. Downey, 26 App. D. C. 258, 6 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 765, that testimony that a female plaintiff had no parents living was admissible. The court said: "Mental suffering being a recognized element of the damages recoverable, it was not error to let the jury be put in a situation to consider whether that mental suffering might not be more poignant as well as certain in the case of a single woman without parents to sustain and comfort her when charged with the disgraceful conduct."

Attention may be here called to Gaines v. Gaines, 109 Ill. App. 226, in which an instruction of the trial court that as much protection was due a man's reputation with his family as with strangers was objected to by the defendant, upon the ground that the plaintiff had no other family than his father, and in which the court defined the word "family" to include parents, children, and servants, and added that it made no difference whether it consisted of one, few, or many besides the plaintiff.

It will be noticed that all of the above cases are confined to the question of the admissibility of evidence as to the plaintiff's family relations, and do not consider the question whether testimony as to the effect of libel or slander upon the feelings of the plaintiff's relatives would be admissible to enhance the plaintiff's damages. Upon that question the conclusion reached in DENNISON v. DAILY NEWS PUB. CO. finds support in Sheftall v. Central R. Co. 123 Ga. 589, 51 S. E. 646, in which evidence as to the effect of the alleged libel upon the members of the plaintiff's family when the matter was discussed at home was held to be properly rejected. To quote from the opinion: "If the writing was a libel, it could have no other effect than an injurious one upon the feelings of anyone interested in the plaintiff, and human experience, and not direct testimony, was all that was necessary to convey this to the jury."

And in Guy v. Gregory, 9 Car. & P. 584, it was held that the plaintiff could not, in an action for libel, recover damages for the sufferings of his wife. Upon a further contention by the plaintiff that he should be allowed to give general evidence of the effect of the libels upon his wife, because they referred to her in direct terms, Coleridge, J., said: "If you had stated her illness on the record, you could not have gone into evidence of it; and I think you cannot do so the more, as you have not stated it."

And in Couch v. Mining Journal Co. 130 Mich. 294, 89 N. W. 936, testimony of the plaintiff as to the effect that the libel had upon his wife, which testimony was limited by instruction to the injury to the plaintiff's feelings by reason of the effect of the libel upon his wife, was held to be inadmissible, for the reason that it was not specially set out in the declaration. The court expressly refused to say whether such testimony would be competent under any circumstances.

lection of a certain chief of police, this man hired a slugger to dog his footsteps. Whenever Mr. Metcalf and his family went out at night, this thug followed him for the purpose of intimidating his wife and family. A few years ago, Walter Moise, a saloon keeper, offended this same man, and a convict, Al Green, now in the Missouri penitentiary, says this person offered him $5,000 to kill Moise. County Attorney Shields offended this same individual, and a convict in the Iowa penitentiary says he offered $3,000 to dynamite Shield's house. It is important that the unholy alliance between the officials and this man be broken up. The police can scour the cornfields, run down the long and short man, or the glass-eyed man, search the cellars of respected citizens, but when we say, 'Here is the man who knows who did it,' we can get nothing done. Who threw the bomb? This man either threw that bomb, hired someone to throw it, or knows who did it. He has educated and sent out more thieves than any other man in the country. He has the reputation, among great detective agencies, of being one of the greatest criminals in the United States, and yet he is harbored here." This action was instituted by the plaintiff, who alleged that he is the individual referred to in the speech of Elmer E. Thomas, published as aforesaid; that said publication is libelous, and sought to recover general damages in the sum of $50,000. A judgment of $7,500 was obtained in the court below, and defendant has appealed.

1. Upon trial, the plaintiff was permitted, over objection, to testify that Elmer E. Thomas, who uttered the words reproduced in the alleged libelous article, had appeared as an attorney against the plaintiff in certain prosecutions pending against the latter in Iowa, and also in proceedings in this state, for the extradition of plaintiff. Such actions were pending at the time the Thomas speech was made and published. We find no error in the admission of this testimony. Evidence showing the relations existing between the plaintiff and the author of the alleged libelous utterance is proper for the purpose of showing that the article referred to the plaintiff when his name is not mentioned therein, and the pleadings do not admit that he is the party referred to. Some of the testimony in this regard, however, was otherwise incompetent. For instance, plaintiff testified: "He [meaning Thomas] had been over in Harrison county, Iowa, and had the assistance of a man out of the penitentiary; . . . had me indicted over there on two charges." These are but the conclusions of the witness, and probably would have been stricken from the record had defendant requested it.

2. The plaintiff testified that he had first read the libelous article while absent from his home.

Over objections he was further permitted to testify as follows:

Q. Where again do you say you saw it?

A. At home.

Q. Under what conditions as affecting your mental condition, or causing you pain or anguish of mind?

A. My wife had it, and was reading it and was crying.

Defendant moved to strike out the last answer of the witness as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. The motion was overruled.

Q. And did that condition affect you, as far as the pain and anguish of mind is concerned?

A. That worried me all of the time. The worry was so I could not eat or sleep as I used to.

A motion to strike out this last-quoted answer was also overruled. It is not contended by the plaintiff that he is entitled to recover for the suffering endured by his wife, but it is urged that the testimony is admissible to show that his suffering was greater because of the grief which the publication caused her. In actions for libel or slander, plaintiff is entitled to prove that he has a family, and of whom it consists. Such evidence bears directly upon the question of damage. Cahill v. Murphy, 94 Cal. 29, 28 Am. St. Rep. 88, 30 Pac. 195; Enos v. Enos, 135 N. Y. 609, 32 N. E. 123; Klumph v. Dunn, 66 Pa. 141, 5 Am. Rep. 355; Enquirer Co. v. Johnston, 18 C. C. A. 628, 34 U. S. App. 607, 72 Fed. 443. It shows, in part, his position in society. Such evidence is admissible for the purpose of proving that the plaintiff has a family, whose disgrace, shame, or humiliation by reason of the libel increase his mental suffering. In Cahill v. Murphy, supra, it was held: "Mental suffering is an element for which damages may be recovered in an action for slander, and such suffering may be increased, and the damages consequently enhanced, by the fact that the members of the plaintiff's family suffer by reason of a disgrace visited upon him or her by the slanderous charge." Evidence that plaintiff was a married man is admissible, as held in Morey v. Morning Journal Assn., 123 N. Y. 207, 9 L.R.A. 621, 20 Am. St. Rep. 730, 25 N. E. 161, "as bearing upon the hurtful tendency of the libel and the general damage to which he was exposed." There can be no doubt but that the fact that one libeled has a family is an important circumstance which bears upon the question of damages, and this is so because the members of the family suffer by reason of the disgrace visited upon the father and husband. For it is apparent that not only is the finger of scorn, ridicule, disgrace, and shame pointed to the father, but also is directed towards the family; and, because of this fact, his damage is the greater, and his mental suffering accordingly increased. But we do not understand that the mental suffering experienced by the members of his family, nor the effect thereof upon him, can be taken into consideration for the purpose of enhancing the damages which he is entitled to recover. The mental suffering for which one libeled may recover must be the direct, immediate, and approximate effect of the publication. Such mental suffering, therefore, must be that which the plaintiff experienced because the libelous article exposed him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. Upon thorough research we are unable to find where the competency of such evidence has ever been adjudicated. The above-cited cases do not go to this extent. The only case bearing upon the question considered which we have been able to find is Flam v. Lee, 116 Iowa, 289, 93 Am. St. Rep. 242, 90 N. W. 70, wherein it is held: "In an action for malicious prosecution, it was not error to permit plaintiff to show that on his arrest at his home his mother fainted or was prostrated by the shock, and that plaintiff thereby suffered distress of mind." The reasons for the principle are given in the opinion as follows: "But the principal basis of recovery in most actions of this kind is mental suffering and anguish arising from the wrongful charge and arrest; and, if the arrest be made in the presence of one's family or friends, bringing him into shame and humiliation before them, it is a proper matter to be considered as bearing upon the pain inflicted upon him. If, then, in addition to the indignity of his arrest, he sees, as the effect of such act, his wife or mother fall in a faint, and he is forced to leave her in such prostrate and suffering condition, we see no reason why this increased pain, which naturally follows such a situation, shall not be an element in assessing his damages, if he is found entitled to recover at all." The nature of the action, the unwarranted removal of the plaintiff from his family upon a false accusation of murder, we think is sufficient to distinguish that case from this. There the plaintiff, through the wrong inflicted, was taken upon his arrest from his mother, who was in great distress. From the opinion it appears that the rule announced in the syllabus was followed partly, at least, because plaintiff was "forced to leave her in such a prostrate and suffering condition."

We have considered the harm and the benefits which would result from the adoption of a rule which would permit the admission of such evidence, and are apprehensive that its adoption and application would meet with considerable difficulty. Would the rule apply only when the plaintiff had observed the demonstration of his wife's mental suffering, or would it also be extended to the litigant who had not observed the evidences of his wife's distress, although conscious that she suffered, and whereby he himself was distressed? Should the defendant in libel be permitted to prove that the plaintiff's wife experienced or demonstrated no grief? Yet, if the rule is adopted, the defendant would be permitted to refute the evidence which the plaintiff would be permitted to introduce. Can it be considered that a man with a large family is entitled to recover greater damages under otherwise like circumstances than a man with a smaller family? In the event that some of plaintiff's family experienced grief and others did not, what rule then would apply? If the emotional feelings demonstrated by a plaintiff's wife are caused through love and sympathy, is that not a benefit to him instead of a damage? If the libelous article alienates her affections, his damages are thereby increased, according to a former decision of this court. Case v. Case, 45 Neb. 493, 63 N. W. 867. If some of plaintiff's family demonstrate hatred as a result of the publication, and some sympathy, should he be allowed damages by reason of the effect either condition has upon his mind? If the wife remained indifferent, her husband might, and probably would, suffer by reason thereof. It is not our purpose to argue that the emotions experienced by a wife under such circumstances, no matter what form they may take, may not be distressing to the husband. Although her sympathy may be of value to him, yet the fact that it is required or made necessary by the illegal act of the defendant would naturally cause him distress. But it cannot be said as a matter of law, nor does it seem susceptible of proof, that a husband, under circumstances such as surrounded the plaintiff herein, was damaged more than he would have been had the conduct and emotions of his wife been different. Even if such damage could be considered the proximate result of the wrong done, it is so difficult of measurement that it seems necessary to exclude it entirely. Mental distress caused by sympathy for another's suffering is not a recoverable element of damage. It is true that the publication complained of was the cause of the wife's grief, but to permit the plaintiff to recover because his mental suffering was thereby made the greater would be to permit him to recover because of his sympathy for her.

We arrive at no satisfactory conclusion, except that the plaintiff, in an action to recover general damages for libel, may only prove in this regard the fact that he has a wife and children, and their position in society.

3. Two days after the publication of the article in controversy, the plaintiff visited Mr. Polcar, the editor of the Daily News, and was permitted, over objection, to testify that, in a conversation then had, the plaintiff requested Mr. Polcar to publish a letter which plaintiff had written in answer to Thomas's speech; that the reason he wanted the letter published was he understood that everybody up in Logan and Harrison counties, Iowa, where the criminal proceedings were pending against plaintiff, looked to the Daily News to get the inside facts in regard to plaintiff's case, and that the Bee and the World Herald, and other daily papers in which the alleged libelous article had also been published, had agreed to publish the plaintiff's letter. He was also permitted to prove that the World Herald had published the same. The admission of this testimony was error. The article was libelous per se, and the amount of plaintiff's recovery must be determined by the damages which flow from the acts of the defendant complained of, and not by reason of its omission to publish the article which the plaintiff requested. Defendant's refusal to publish the plaintiff's letter could be construed only as evidence of defendant's malice in publishing the alleged libelous article. But, even then, the evidence would be incompetent for the purpose of enhancing the plaintiff's recovery. Bee Pub. Co. v. World Pub. Co. 59 Neb. 718, 82 N. W. 28. Again, it must be remembered that Thomas's speech was also published in the Bee and the World Herald, two daily newspapers of the city of Omaha of wide circulation. By the objectionable evidence the plaintiff proved that the editors of these two papers had agreed to publish the plaintiff's answer to the alleged libelous article in the other papers, and proof of defendant's refusal to publish the same would only tend to enhance the amount of plaintiff's recovery, for which purpose it was evidently intended. The conduct of other publishers, who also published the alleged libel, in their apparent attempts to lessen the evil results of their publications, is laudable, but in no proper manner can such conduct be considered by the jury for the purpose of determining whether or not the defendant had committed a wrong, or for the purpose of measuring the damage, if a wrong had been done. Many courts of high standing have held that evidence of defendant's refusal to publish a retraction is admissible. But the purpose of such evidence is to prove malice; and, so far as the author of this opinion has observed, the rule is not followed, except in jurisdictions permitting the recovery of punitive damages. The above evidence related to a part of a conversation which plaintiff contends was properly admitted for the purpose of showing to whom the article referred. The remainder of the conversation related to statements of Mr. Polcar that he knew that plaintiff was the person referred to. Mr. Polcar was not an officer of the defendant. It is not shown that he saw the article or knew of it before its publication. His admissions, made two days subsequent to the publication, do not form a part of the res gestæ. We do not say that the evidence of Polcar's admissions was prejudicial; but, if without prejudice, that fact would not justify evidence of the conversation, a part of which related to a refusal to publish plaintiff's answer to Thomas's speech.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

4. Upon the cross-examination of the witness Polcar, he was required, over objection, to testify that, at the time of the publication of Thomas's speech, he considered and supposed that it related to the plaintiff. He had previously testified that he did not know that it referred to the plaintiff. The evidence objected to should have been excluded. Whatever the witness supposed or considered in this regard is immaterial. Plaintiff, however, suggests that this evidence, as well as plaintiff's testimony above referred to, regarding Polcar's admissions, is without prejudice, as it is otherwise well established that plaintiff is the person referred to in Thomas's speech. Plaintiff's competent evidence fairly establishes the fact that he is the person referred to by Mr. Thomas. No attempt was made to prove the contrary. Defendant tried the case upon the theory that plaintiff was the person whose character was assailed by the publication. If the case depended upon this assignment of error, we doubt that we could recommend a reversal. However, upon another trial, this evidence should, and undoubtedly will, be omitted. Defendant further urges that the judgment is excessive. It is unnecessary to consider this assignment. The errors above referred to as prejudicial are so because their tendency is to enhance the damages; and, as the case must be remanded for a new trial, the amount of recovery will be determined from the evidence then taken. Neither do we consider an assignment of error alleging misconduct on the part of plaintiff's counsel. This alleged misconduct pertained to statements made in open court, before the jury, relative to publication in the defendant's paper, at about the time the jury was impaneled to try the case. Upon another er trial it is not probable that such publications will be repeated, nor counsel animated to conduct similar to that complained of here.

We recommend that the judgment of the district court be reversed, and this cause remanded for a new trial.

Duffie and Fawcett, CC., not sitting.
Calkins, C., concurs.

Per Curiam:

For the reasons stated in the foregoing opinion, the judgment of the District Court is reversed, and this case remanded for a new trial.

Petition for rehearing denied.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

CLIFTON L. JARRELL, Appt.,
v.

YOUNG, SMYTH, FIELD COMPANY.

(105 Md. 280, 66 Atl. 50.)

Trial—waiver of exception.

1. Proceeding with the trial after refusal of the court to take the case from the jury waives the exception taken to such refusal.

Same—sale—instruction.

2. When recovery for the purchase price of goods depends upon their having been accepted by the purchaser, and the evidence shows that they were shipped to him, and that he paid the freight both ways, and re-shipped them to the seller, he is entitled to have the jury instructed that, to render him liable, he must have intended to receive the goods and accept them as owner.

Witness—sale—intent.

3. Upon the question whether or not a buyer has received and accepted the goods so as to comply with the statute of frauds in paying the freight and reshipping them, he may be allowed to testify as to his intent.

(March 1, 1907.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Kent County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the purchase price of goods alleged to have been sold and delivered. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hope H. Barroll and James P. Gorter, for appellant:

Under the law of the state of Maryland, to be an acceptance, as required by the statute of frauds, there must be an actual acceptance by the purchaser with intent to take possession as owner.

Belt v. Marriott, 9 Gill, 331; Jones v. Mechanics' Bank, 29 Md. 294, 96 Am. Dec. 533; Corbett v. Wolford, 84 Md. 420, 35 Atl. 1088; Brantly Contr. p. 57.

Defendant might testify as to his intent in the matter.

Fenwick v. State, 63 Md. 239; Phelps v.

Subject Note.—Right of one to testify as to his intent.

I. The common-law rule.

a. Statement of, 368.

b. Retention of common-law rule in some jurisdictions.

1. Generally, 368.

2. The Alabama rule.

(a) Generally, 368.

(b) Application in criminal cases, 369.

(c) Application in civil cases, 370.

(d) Exceptions, 371.

II. Rule under statutes permitting parties to testify.

a. Generally, 372.

b. The test of admissibility, 374.

c. Exceptions and limitations.

1. Varying terms of written instrument, 376.

2. Conclusions of witnesses, 379.

3. Mental operations and intentions depending upon non-existent or supposititious circumstances, 381.

4. Secret and undisclosed intent or motive, 383.

5. Intent of wrongful acts intentionally done, 384.

II. c—continued.

6. Intention shown by acts, declarations, or circumstances, 386.

d. Application.

1. Generally, 387.

2. To homicide, 388.

3. To assaults, 389.

4. To burglary, larceny, robbery, etc., 390.

5. To seduction or alienation, 391.

6. To usury, 391.

7. To libel and slander, 392.

8. To malicious prosecution, 392.

9. To fraud.

(a) Generally, 393.

(b) By false representation, 393.

(c) By insolvent, as against creditors, 395.

10. To residence, occupation, or use.

(a) With reference to domicile, etc., 397.

(b) With reference to homestead, 397.

(c) With reference to abandonment of easement or other rights, 397.

11. To dedication, 398.

George's Creek & C. R. Co. 60 Md. 536; Trader v. Lowe, 45 Md. 1; Friend v. Hamill, 34 Md. 307.

Mr. Lewin W. Wickes, for appellee:

By paying the freight, the appellant accepted and received the goods, and took them into his possession.

Langstaff v. Stix, 64 Miss. 171, 60 Am. Rep. 49, 1 So. 97; Benjamin, Sales, 3d ed. 847.

It is not permissible for a party to say what his intention was when doing a certain thing.

Hewes v. Jordan, 39 Md. 472, 17 Am. Rep. 578; Phelps v. George's Creek & C. R. Co. 60 Md. 539; Lineweaver v. Slagle, 64 Md. 465, 54 Am. Rep. 775, 2 Atl. 693; Ecker v. McAllister, 45 Md. 309.

Boyd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant, who was a merchant at Chestertown, gave the appellee's agent a verbal order for some articles of merchandise, which the appellee claims were to be shipped to him on March 10, 1906; while the appellant contends that they were not to be shipped until the 15th of that month, and that he could, in the meantime, countermand the order. No payment was made on them by the appellant, and, there being no memorandum in writing signed by him, the real question at the trial below was whether there was such acceptance and receipt of them as complied with the requirements of the 17th section of the statute of frauds. A verdict was rendered in favor

II. d—continued.

12. To gambling contracts, 398.

13. To cases involving negligence, 399.

14. To other and miscellaneous matters, 399.

e. Proof by agent or associate, 401.

f. Weight and conclusiveness, 402.

III. Conclusion, 402.

I. The common-law rule.

a. Statement of.

Previous to the enactment of statutes making parties to an action competent witnesses therein, the intent of a party could be shown only by the acts of the party and the circumstances which occurred from which it might be inferred. Zimmerman v. Marchland, 23 Ind. 474.

b. Retention of common-law rule in some jurisdictions.

1. Generally.

An early Indiana case held that the enactment of a statute permitting parties to an action to testify therein as witnesses did not change the common-law rule that the intention of a party can be shown only by the circumstances which occurred from which it might be inferred. Zimmerman v. Marchland, 23 Ind. 474.

But this case was overruled by Greer v. State, 53 Ind. 420, since which decision Indiana courts have been with the great majority supporting the contrary rule.

So, in Bayliss v. Cockcroft, 81 N. Y. 363, it was said that the court does not encourage the reception of testimony as to the mental operations of a party and the intent with which he did an act.

And in Hathaway v. Brown, 18 Minn. 423, Gil. 373, it was said that the majority of this court would be unwilling to concede the correctness of the rule that, where the character of the transaction depends upon the intent of the party, it is competent, when the party is a witness, to inquire of him what his intention was, if the question was then before it.

But, as will be seen by reference to infra II. a, b, both New York and Minnesota have adopted the general rule admitting testimony as to intent when the intent is material.

Alabama, however, apparently all alone, continued to cling and still clings tenaciously to the common-law rule.

And it is there held that a statute making parties competent witnesses in their own favor does not enable them to testify to their own uncommunicated motives or intentions. Burke v. State, 71 Ala. 377.

2. The Alabama rule.

(a) Generally.

The rule of the Alabama cases is that motive or intention is an inferential fact, to be drawn by the jury from the facts and circumstances in evidence. Alexander v. Alexander, 71 Ala. 295; Burke v. State, 71 Ala. 377; Wheelless v. Rhodes, 70 Ala. 419; Whizenant v. State, 71 Ala. 383; McCormick v. Joseph, 77 Ala. 236; Stewart v. State, 78 Ala. 436; Baldwin v. Walker, 91 Ala. 428, 8 So. 364.

And an uncommunicated belief, motive, or intention cannot be testified to by a party to a civil suit, when examined as a witness. Burke v. State, supra; Herring v. Skaggs, 62 Ala. 180, 34 Am. Rep. 4; Wheelless v. Rhodes; Whizenant v. State; McCormick v. Joseph; and Stewart v. State, supra; Alabama Fertilizer Co. v. Reynolds, 79 Ala. 497; Ball v. Farley, 81 Ala. 288, 1 So. 253; Baldwin v. Walker, supra; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Davis, 91 Ala. 615, 8 So. 349; Toliver v. State, 94 Ala. 111, 10 So. 428; Richardson Bros. v. Stringfellow, 100 Ala. 416, 14 So. 283; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Tally, 102 Ala. 25, 15 So. 722; Dean v. State, 105 Ala. 21, 17 So. 28; Mobile Furniture Commission Co. v. Little, 108 Ala. 399, 19 So. 443; Williams v. State, 123 Ala. 39, 26 So. 521; Barker v. State, 126 Ala. 83, 28 So. 589; Hurst v. State, 133 Ala. 96, 31 So. 933; Barnevell of the plaintiff (appellee), and this appeal is from the judgment entered thereon.

A prayer was offered at the close of the plaintiff's case, seeking to take the case from the jury; but, when that was rejected, the defendant called a witness and proceeded with his case. The exception taken to the rejection of that prayer was thereby waived, and is not before us for review. Barabasz v. Kabat, 91 Md. 53, 46 Atl. 337, and other cases since decided.

The defendant's attorney called the defendant, and asked him the following question: "Did you at any time ever intend to receive and accept as owner these goods after you were notified of their receipt at the railroad?" The court sustained an objection to that question, and its ruling is presented by the second bill of exceptions. The third bill of exceptions embraces the rulings on the prayers. Exceptions were taken to the court's action in granting the plaintiff's second prayer, and rejecting the defendant's fifth, and modifying his first, offered at the end of the case. It will be convenient to first consider the rulings on the prayers.

The appellant, not having done anything from which it can be claimed that the 17th section of the statute of frauds had in other respects been complied with, the question was whether he did "accept part of the goods so sold, and actually receive the same,"—to use the language of the statute. The goods were shipped to the appellant at Chestertown from Philadelphia, on the 10th of March, and were received at the railroad

v. Stephens, 142 Ala. 609, 38 So. 662; Lawrence v. Alabama State Land Co. 144 Ala. 524, 41 So. 612; Smith v. State, 145 Ala. 17, 40 So. 957; Vest v. Speakman, 153 Ala. 393, 44 So. 1017; Patterson v. State (Ala.) 47 So. 52.

And the question whether a witness approved or disapproved of a particular act is irrelevant if propounded with the view of eliciting a mere mental view, unaccompanied with acts or words. Burns v. Campbell, 71 Ala. 271.

Nor is evidence concerning the uncommunicated motive or purpose of a witness with reference to certain acts to which he had testified admissible. Reeder v. Huffman, 148 Ala. 472, 41 So. 177.

And a party cannot state his uncommunicated reason for acts or conduct on his part, though he testified to such acts or conduct on cross-examination; it amounting to an admission against his interest. Burks v. Bragg, 89 Ala. 204, 7 So. 156.

Nor can an uncommunicated belief, motive, or intention be stated by a defendant in a criminal case in the unsworn statement which he is allowed by statute to make. Burke v. State and Whizenant v. State, supra.

The reason for the rule that uncommunicated motives and intentions cannot be given in evidence is that such testimony, in its nature, is insusceptible of contradiction. Alabama Fertilizer Co. v. Reynolds, supra.

But, where intention is the fact to be ascertained, objection to proof of it by the testimony of the party entertaining it may be waived; and the evidence, when so introduced, is legal and relevant. Fuller v. Whitlock, 99 Ala. 411, 13 So. 80.

(b) Application in criminal cases.

The intention of a person accused of homicide is a conclusion to be ascertained by the jury from all the facts testified to in the case. Fonville v. State, 91 Ala. 39, 8 So. 688.

And a person on trial for homicide should not be permitted to testify as to the uncommunicated intention with which he did the act which caused the death of the deceased. Lewis v. State, 96 Ala. 6, 38 Am. St. Rep. 75, 11 So. 259; Pate v. State (Ala.) 50 So. 357; Fonville v. State, supra.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

So, a person on trial for murder cannot be asked why he shot the deceased, the question calling for the secret and uncommunicated motive or intention of the accused, and not for facts from which such mental status could be lawfully inferred. Seams v. State, 84 Ala. 410, 4 So. 521.

And a person charged with murder cannot, in testifying as a witness for himself, deny any purpose to engage in the difficulty which resulted in the killing. Stewart v. State, 78 Ala. 436.

Nor can a person on trial for homicide be asked, as a witness in his own behalf, for what purpose he took his gun or pistol to the scene of the homicide. Dean v. State, 105 Ala. 21, 17 So. 28; Smith v. State, 145 Ala. 17, 40 So. 967.

And he may not be asked on direct examination why he did not retreat. Patterson v. State (Ala.) 47 So. 52.

And he cannot be permitted to testify that, just prior to the difficulty resulting in the killing, he was in a fright. Stewart v. State, supra.

Nor can a person on trial for homicide be called upon to testify as to his reason for removing from one place to another, the question calling for a secret and uncommunicated motive. Poe v. State, 155 Ala. 31, 46 So. 521; Gibbs v. State (Ala.) 47 So. 66.

And that a person charged with murder went to the house of the person killed, and asked for matches, is a fact which may properly be testified to; but it is not proper for him to state what he wanted the matches for, this being a secret, uncommunicated motive, inadmissible in evidence. Dent v. State, 105 Ala. 14, 17 So. 94.

Nor can a person on trial for assault with intent to kill be asked if he intended to kill the person assaulted. Fonville v. State, supra.

And a person on trial for assault with intent to murder cannot be asked how he happened to have a pistol on the occasion approval from 2 Starkie on Evidence, 490, that, "in order to satisfy the statute, there must be a delivery of the goods with intent to vest the right of possession in the vendee, and there must be an actual acceptance by the latter, with intent to take possession as owner." That has been since followed a number of times in this court. See Jones v. Mechanics' Bank, 29 Md. 293, 96 Am. Dec. 533; Hewes v. Jordan, 39 Md. 479, 17 Am. Rep. 578; Corbett v. Wolford, 84 Md. 429, 35 Atl. 1088; Cooney v. Hax, 92 Md. 136, 48 Atl. 58; Richardson v. Smith, 101 Md. 19, 70 L.R.A. 321, 109 Am. St. Rep. 552, 60 Atl. 612, 4 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 184. Judge Miller, in Jones v. Mechanics' Bank, referred to the necessity of discrimination "between a sale at common law, which is consummated by delivery, and a sale as affected by this statute;" and referred to the rule quoted in 9 Gill, 335, from Starkie on Evidence, as being "very accurately stated." In Hewes v. Jordan, supra, Judge Alvey discussed the question at length. He said: "That the acceptance and actual receipt of the goods sold, or some part of them, by the vendee, to gratify the statute, must be intended by the parties to effect a final and complete change of property in the goods so actually received, under the contract, would seem to be clear." He quoted with approval from Blackburn on Sales that "it is immaterial whether his (buyer's) refusal to take the goods be reasonable or not. If he refuses the goods, assigning grounds false or frivolous, or assigning no reasons at all,

And, on cross-examination of the defendant in a prosecution for crime, it is permissible to inquire as to his motives for particular acts testified to by him. Patterson v. State (Ala.) 47 So. 52.

And a person on trial for homicide may be asked on cross-examination what he carried his pistol with him for. Ibid.

And where a witness in a prosecution for burglary in which two defendants are charged with having stolen a quantity of meat testifies to having heard a conversation between the defendants, respecting the division of the meat, and details on his direct examination his movements at the time this conversation was overheard, he may be asked on cross-examination as to the reasons for the movements so described by him. Yarbrough v. State, 115 Ala. 92, 22 So. 534.

So, a witness in an action upon a contract, having testified to what took place at an interview between the parties at the plaintiff's house, may be asked on cross-examination how he happened to go with the defendant to the plaintiff's house. Thomason v. Dill, 30 Ala. 444.

And where an assignment was attacked for fraud, and it was shown that the assignor had said that he might make an assignment, and that he might be forced to make one, it is competent for him to rebut any prejudicial inference sought to be drawn from this evidence by any reasonable explanation he can give; but it is not competent for him to state in explanation the uncommunicated intention or purpose which actuated him to make the statement. Richardson Bros. v. Stringfellow, 100 Ala. 416, 14 So. 283.

Likewise, an exception to the rule that a witness cannot testify as to his uncommunicated motives or intentions exists to the effect that where a witness is sought to be impeached by showing by him, on cross-examination, that he has made contradictory statements, he may be asked in rebuttal why he made the statements in question. Williams v. State, supra; Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44.

And a witness for the state in a criminal prosecution, who, on cross-examination, testified that he had taken an active part in the prosecution, and that he cherished unfriendly feelings toward the prisoner, may be asked on re-examination whether his feelings toward the prisoner are such that he would desire to see him convicted though innocent. Campbell v. State, supra.

And, while uncommunicated motives and intentions are not admissible in evidence, where a witness in a prosecution for homicide, after testifying that he saw the difficulty in which the accused was the slayer, admits on cross-examination with a view to impeachment, that he had previously stated that he knew nothing of the difficulty, it is competent, on re-examination by the defendant, for the witness to explain his motive in making such prior statement, such testimony tending to rebut the discredit which his admission, unexplained, would throw upon his evidence. Johnson v. State, 102 Ala. 1, 16 So. 99.

So, a father suing for injuries to his son caused by the negligence of the son's employer may state as a witness whether he consented to his son's working at the foundry of the employer, this being a material fact under the issues, and not a mere uncommunicated mental status of the father. Dimmick Pike Works v. Wood, 139 Ala. 282, 35 So. 885.

And the superintendent of a defendant in an action for malicious prosecution, who swore out a warrant, may testify that he swore it out on his own responsibility, this relating to the capacity in which he acted, and not to his intention or motive. Emerson v. Lowe Mfg. Co. (Ala.) 49 So. 69.

II. Rule under statutes permitting parties to testify.

a. Generally.

The rule that the intent of a person must be inferred from his acts and words had its foundation in necessity created by the rule which excludes parties in interest from the witness stand; and it is modified, if not wholly abrogated, by innovations upon the common law, under which parties are al-it is still clear that he does not accept the goods, and the question is not whether he ought to accept, but whether he has accepted, them. The question of acceptance or not is a question as to what was the intention of the buyer, as signified by his outward acts." The third prayer offered by the defendant in that case, which this court said should have been granted, concluded by saying "that, in order to constitute an acceptance, so as to bring the case within the provisions of the statute of frauds, there must have been an actual acceptance by the defendants, with an intention of taking possession as owners." That prayer is very similar, in its effect, to the one under consideration, which we think the defendant was entitled to have granted. The delivery of the goods to the carrier, and receipt of them by it as carrier, did not operate as such acceptance and receipt as the statute requires (Jones v. Mechanics' Bank, supra), nor did the payment of freight by him (29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 983). The fifth prayer ought also to have been granted. The fact that the defendant's third, which was granted, concludes by saying, "and if the jury shall further find that the defendant did not at any time receive and accept said goods as owner, then the verdict of the jury must be for the defendant," did not correct the error in rejecting the first and fifth. That prayer presented the defendant's theory that it was a conditional sale; that, if he did not need the goods, he could countermand the order; and the lowed to testify in their own behalf. People v. Farrell, 31 Cal. 576.

And when parties to a suit and parties interested in the transactions are permitted by statute to testify, they may testify what their intentions were, where intent is a material issue. Wade v. Odle, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 656, 54 S. W. 786; Berry v. State, 30 Tex. App. 423, 17 S. W. 1080; Gimbel v. Gomprecht (Tex. Civ. App.) 36 S. W. 781; Peightal v. Cotton States Bldg. Co. 25 Tex. Civ. App. 391, 61 S. W. 428; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Armstrong, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 146, 23 S. W. 236; Bertelsen v. Bertelsen, 7 Cal. App. 258, 94 Pac. 80; Barnhart v. Fulkerth, 93 Cal. 497, 29 Pac. 50; Lane v. State, 44 Fla. 105, 32 So. 896; Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Stone, 21 Fla. 555; Alexander v. State, 118 Ga. 26, 44 S. E. 861; Hale v. Robertson, 100 Ga. 168, 27 S. E. 937; Royce v. Gazan, 76 Ga. 79; Dunbar v. Armstrong, 115 Ill. App. 549; Pardridge v. Cutler, 104 Ill. App. 89; Odin Coal Co. v. Denman, 84 Ill. App. 190, affirmed in 185 Ill. 413, 76 Am. St. Rep. 45, 57 N. E. 192; Wohlford v. People, 148 Ill. 296, 36 N. E. 107; Walker v. Johnson, 6 Ind. App. 600, 33 N. E. 267, 34 N. E. 100; Wilson v. Clark, 1 Ind. App. 182, 27 N. E. 310; Ross v. State, 116 Ind. 495, 19 N. E. 451; Heap v. Parrish, 104 Ind. 36, 3 N. E. 549; Over v. Schiffling, 102 Ind. 191, 26 N. E. 91; Sedgwick v. Tucker, 90 Ind. 271; White v. State, 53 Ind. 596; Greer v. State, 53 Ind. 420; Larson v. Thoma (Iowa) 121 N. W. 1059; Dorn v. Cooper (Iowa) 118 N. W. 35; Chew v. O'Hara, 110 Iowa, 81, 81 N. W. 157; Kruse v. Seiffert & W. Lumber Co. 108 Iowa, 352, 79 N. W. 118; Browne v. Hickie, 68 Iowa, 330, 27 N. W. 276; Watson v. Chesire, 18 Iowa, 202, 87 Am. Dec. 382; State v. Wright, 40 La. Ann. 589, 4 So. 486; Cushing v. Friendship, 89 Me. 525, 36 Atl. 1001; Wheelden v. Wilson, 44 Me. 18; Fenwick v. State, 63 Md. 239; Faxon v. Jones, 176 Mass. 206, 57 N. E. 359; Snow v. Paine, 114 Mass. 520; Spalding v. Lowe, 56 Mich. 366, 23 N. W. 46; Berkey v. Judd, 22 Minn. 287; Grout v. Stewart, 96 Minn. 230, 104 N. W. 966; Albion v. Maple Lake, 71 Minn. 503, 74 N. W. 282; Vansickle v. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Brown, 68 Mo. 627; State use of Glaser v. Mason, 24 Mo. App. 321; State v. Banks, 73 Mo. 592; State v. Palmer, 88 Mo. 568; State v. Williams, 95 Mo. 247, 6 Am. St. Rep. 46, 8 S. W. 217; Hackney v. Raymond Bros. Clarke Co. 68 Neb. 624, 94 N. W. 822; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Hiatt, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 587, 95 N. W. 627; Norris v. Morrill, 40 N. H. 395; Hale v. Taylor, 45 N. H. 405; Graves v. Graves, 45 N. H. 323; Delano v. Goodwin, 48 N. H. 203, 97 Am. Dec. 601; Homans v. Corning, 60 N. H. 418; Clark v. Marshall, 62 N. H. 498; Lewis v. Rogers, 2 Jones & S. 64; Durfee v. Bump, 20 N. Y. S. R. 833, 3 N. Y. Supp. 505; People v. Gardner, 73 Hun, 66, 25 N. Y. Supp. 1072; Lally v. Emery, 54 Hun, 517, 8 N. Y. Supp. 135; Learned v. Ryder, 61 Barb. 552; Fiedler v. Darrin, 50 N. Y. 437; Cortland County v. Herkimer County, 44 N. Y. 22; Thurston v. Cornell, 38 N. Y. 281; McKown v. Hunter, 30 N. Y. 625; Nixon v. McKinney, 105 N. C. 23, 11 S. E. 154; State v. Hall, 132 N. C. 1094, 44 S. E. 553; State v. Johnson (N. D.) 118 N. W. 230; State v. Tough, 12 N. D. 425, 96 N. W. 1025; Tucker v. Hendricks, 25 Ohio C. C. 426; Ohio Coal Co. v. Davenport, 37 Ohio St. 194; Mahon v. Rankin (Or.) 102 Pac. 608; Juniata Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Hetzel, 103 Pa. 507; McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 316, 62 Am. Dec. 574; Jackson v. Com. 96 Va. 107, 30 S. E. 452; State v. Evans, 33 W. Va. 417, 10 S. E. 792; Brown v. State, 127 Wis. 193, 106 N. W. 536, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 258; Fischer v. State, 101 Wis. 23, 76 N. W. 594.

The opposite party being entitled to a liberal scope in the cross-examination. Watson v. Chesire, supra.

And this is especially so where the intention with which the act was done may render the act void or may make it valid. Wade v. Odle, supra.

Or when the character of an act depends upon the intent with which it was done. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Noftger, 148 Ind. 101, 47 N. E. 332; Heap v. Parrish, 104 Ind. 36, 3 N. E. 549; Bidinger v. Bishop, 76 Ind. 244; Greer v. State, supra.

appellant could not have had advantage of that prayer unless the jury found those facts in his favor. It follows, from what we have already said, that the plaintiff's prayer should have been rejected, as, on that question, it simply left to the jury to find whether "the said goods were accepted and received by the defendant," without in any way instructing them what those terms meant. Under the circumstances, that was not sufficient and was too general.

2. It only remains to determine whether the court should have allowed the defendant to answer the question stated in the second bill of exceptions. There can be no doubt that the intent of the buyer is material and relevant in a case of this kind, as is shown by the cases above cited. The only question is whether the buyer can testify to his own intent. We do not see any valid reason for excluding such evidence. It is, of course, not conclusive, but the opposite party can prove such facts and circumstances as he can obtain, which reflect upon the question. It might be that a purchaser might do some act which would be conclusive of his intention as to the question whether there has been such an acceptance and receipt as complies with the requirements of the statute of frauds. The court could then instruct the jury that, if they found that the purchaser had done such acts, the statute was complied with, and the mere fact that the purchaser would swear he did not intend thereby to become the owner of the goods would not relieve him. As said in 29 Am. & Eng.

And it is so whether the witness is a party or not. Mahon v. Rankin; Grout v. Stewart; and Albion v. Maple Lake,—supra.

This is the rule of JARRELL v. YOUNG, S. F. Co.

The conduct of a party being in evidence and relevant to the issue, the testimony of such party as to the reason or motive for such conduct is admissible to rebut the inference which such conduct suggests. Macy v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 35 Minn. 200, 28 N. W. 249.

So, parties may be permitted to speak of their mental operations in the doing of an act which is called in question, where the intent with which it was done serves to characterize it. Bayliss v. Cockcroft, 81 N. Y. 363.

And where the issue on a trial is whether there has been a concurrence in understanding of two parties, it is not improper to prove separately the understanding of each. Delano v. Goodwin, 48 N. H. 203, 97 Am. Dec. 601.

And, as a general rule, when malice is directly in issue, a party may testify directly to his friendly feeling toward the other party. Dorn v. Cooper (Iowa) 118 N. W. 35.

An intent is a fact which may be testified to as any other fact. Barker v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 134 Wis. 147, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 533, 126 Am. St. Rep. 1017, 114 N. W. 439; Lally v. Emery, 54 Hun, 517, 8 N. Y. Supp. 135; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Armstrong, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 146, 23 S. E. 236; Conway v. Clinton, 1 Utah, 215.

And the fact that testimony as to the reason or motive for an act is conceived and concealed in the mind of the witness, and that there is no reliable method of disproving it other than may be gathered from the facts and circumstances, may affect the weight of the evidence, but not its competency. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Armstrong, supra; Hamburg v. Wood, 66 Tex. 168, 18 S. W. 623; Thorn v. Helmer, 2 Keyes, 27; Mahon v. Rankin and Conway v. Clinton, supra.

The object of changes in the common law 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

by which parties are allowed to testify in their own behalf was not merely to enable parties to disclose facts wholly within their own knowledge, but also to explain their acts and the motives with which they were performed, and to explain, if need be, what they meant or intended to be understood a meaning, by what they may have said in regard to any material fact. People v. Farrell, 31 Cal. 576.

There is no difference in principle between permitting a witness to testify what his undisclosed intentions were, or whether he had a particular one in doing a specified act, and allowing him to state the undisclosed effect that a certain representation or promise had upon his conduct. Kenyon v. People, 26 N. Y. 203, 84 Am. Dec. 177.

b. The test of admissibility.

The test of the admissibility of evidence of the motive or intent with which an act was done is the materiality of the motive or intent in giving character to the act. State v. King, 86 N. C. 603.

Where the intention of a party is not an issue in a case, his undisclosed wishes are incompetent and immaterial. Leland v. Converse, 181 Mass. 487, 63 N. E. 939; Hankins v. Watkins, 77 Hun, 360, 28 N. Y. Supp. 867.

And where a person was sued for wrongfully and negligently causing injury to another by shooting him, and it was not claimed that his act was intentional, and the recovery was sought only on the ground of his negligence, evidence of his intent was inadmissible. Hankins v. Watkins, supra.

And, in an action by brokers against a married woman, for a balance alleged to be due on account of the purchase and sale by them for her of certain stocks, where the defense is that the transactions were not those of the defendant, but of her husband, she cannot be asked whether the purchase of any of the stocks was in accordance with her wishes, since her intention is not in issue, and therefore her undisclosed wishes are immaterial. Leland v. Converse, 181 Mass. 487, 63 N. E. 939.

Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 982: "Acts of ownership consistent only with the intent to keep the property are often sufficient and sometimes conclusive evidence of acceptance." But, in a case like this, the intention of the appellant, in doing what it was proven he did, was very material, and he should have been permitted to testify to it.

The subject of permitting a party to a suit to testify as to his intention is fully and ably considered in 1 Wigmore on Evidence, § 581. The author mentions, as one argument which is urged against its admissibility, that "such testimony may be falsified without the possibility of detection, and that therefore it is dangerous to permit an interested person to allege, in effect, whatever he pleases as to his own state of mind." He then proceeds to give some answers to the argument, amongst others, that the "assumption is incorrect in fact; namely, that there is no other available and sufficient evidence of intent or motive by which the person's own testimony can be tested and checked; for the evidence from conduct and circumstances and from others' testimony is not only a permissible but a potent source of belief, and is amply sufficient to guard against falsification." He quotes in the text from cases in New York, Vermont, Indiana, and California, and cites, in over four pages of notes, numerous cases where such testimony was held admissible, briefly stating the character of each case.

The decisions in this state are not opposed to the views of that author, in so far as the

Nor does the rule that, where the character of a transaction depends upon the intent of a party, it is competent to inquire of him what his intention was, apply where the question was not one of intent, but was whether the witness had been defrauded. Learned v. Ryder, 61 Barb. 552.

So, the motive of the maker of a note in delivering the same is immaterial in an action against the sureties thereon. Weis v. Morris Bros. 102 Iowa, 327, 71 N. W. 208.

Nor is it material with what motives and under what circumstances a person acted in signing a paper calling, and in attending, a meeting of the directors of a corporation, in which certain assessments were made, and his testimony as to such motives and circumstances is properly excluded. Penobscot R. Co. v. White, 41 Me. 512, 66 Am. Dec. 257.

And where a person charged with attempting to intimidate certain persons by threats has testified that he did not make any such attempt, it is not material error to refuse to allow him to testify as to whether he intended to intimidate such persons. Fischer v. State, 101 Wis. 23, 76 N. W. 594.

And a refusal of a referee to allow a party to testify that he believed that a statement was true is harmless where the witness had testified that he acted on the statement. Morris v. Wells, 4 Silv. Sup. Ct. 34, 7 N. Y. Supp. 61.

When the question of a party's intent is one of the issues in an action, however, he may testify that he had or did not have the intent charged. Hankins v. Watkins, supra.

And when an act and the intent with which it was done must be alleged and proved as distinct acts to constitute a crime, the inference to be deduced may be made and repelled by the direct testimony of the party as to the intent entertained by him. State v. King, 86 N. C. 603; Phifer v. Erwin, 100 N. C. 59, 6 S. E. 672.

And where the fact to be established is the intention with which an act has been done to which, as matter of law, no conclusive presumption attaches, the party whose intention is the subject of inquiry may testify to the nature of his intention, as he might to any other material fact. Phelps v. George's Creek & C. R. Co. 60 Md. 536.

So, where the doing of an act is not disputed, but is affirmed, and whether the act shall be held valid or invalid hangs upon the intent with which it was done, which intent, from its nature, would be formed and held without avowal, he upon whom the intent is charged may testify whether he secretly held such intent when he did the act. Dillon v. Anderson, 43 N. Y. 231; Fiedler v. Darrin, 50 N. Y. 437; Phoenix Mills v. Miller, 25 N. Y. Week. Dig. 290, 4 N. Y. S. R. 787.

And where a mortgage was assailed on the ground of fraud, and whether it was fraudulent depended entirely upon the intent or motive with which it was received, the person receiving it, as a witness on the stand, in his own behalf, may be permitted to testify as to his motive in taking the mortgage. Wheelden v. Wilson, 44 Me. 18.

So, where a person's acts are ambiguous, and the effect thereof depends upon the intention with which they were done, or their good faith is in issue, he may testify as to his reason for doing them. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Hiatt, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 587, 95 N. W. 627; Hackney v. Raymond Bros. Clarke Co. 68 Neb. 624, 94 N. W. 822.

And when, at the time an act susceptible of alternatives was done by one of two parties, and permitted to be done and accepted by the other, nothing was said as to the question under which alternative the act was done, the party permitting and accepting the act may testify as to the object of the act. Funke v. Orient Mut. Ins. Co. 6 Jones & S. 349.

So, if the language of a witness, either written or oral, is introduced to establish an admission not acted on, or having the force of an estoppel, he has the privilege of giving his understanding of its import, and of stating its true meaning in the connection as used by him. Mickey v. Burlington Ins. Co. 35 Iowa, 174, 14 Am. Rep. 494.

And whenever one's actual feelings or in-question has arisen. In Friend v. Hamill, 34 Md. 307, an action was brought by the appellee against the appellants, who were judges of election, to recover damages for refusing to allow him to vote at an election. They were permitted to testify to their own intentions and motives at the time they acted. In Phelps v. George's Creek & C. R. Co. 60 Md. 536, which was an action of deceit, the president and engineer were allowed to testify as to their intentions in doing certain acts and making certain statements. The court said: "We think the weight of authority to be that, where the fact to be established is the intention with which an act has been done, to which act as matter of law no conclusive presumption attaches, as, for instance, the intention of a party in determining his place of residence, the party whose intention is the subject of inquiry may testify to the nature of his intention, as he might to any other material fact. As we have intimated, what credit is to be given the testimony of the witness on this point is for the jury to determine, looking to all the evidence in the cause." In Fenwick v. State, 63 Md. 239, the court held that it was competent for a person on trial for assault with intent to murder to testify as to the purposes for which he procured the instrument with which he committed the assault. See also Roddy v. Finnegan, 43 Md. 501, and Gambrell v. Schooley, 95 Md. 260, 63 L.R.A. 427, 52 Atl. 500.

Such cases as Lineweaver v. Slagle, 64 Md. 465, 54 Am. Rep. 795, 2 Atl. 693, and Ecker v. McAllister, 45 Md. 309, cited by appellee, do not in any way conflict with the general doctrine. As was said in the first of those cases: "Where the law imputes the intent from the acts done by a party, his testimony as to what his intention was in doing the act cannot be received in evidence,"—referring to Ecker v. McAllister, in which case the court went on to say: "Every person of tentions are in issue, as distinguished from his manifestation of them, he may testify directly upon that point. Faxon v. Jones, 176 Mass. 206, 57 N. E. 359.

It is a correct practice to ask a witness if he did an act in good faith, leaving the opposite party, upon cross-examination, to call for details and the collateral circumstances of the transaction, if he desires them. Miner v. Phillips, 42 Ill. 123.

And where a part of the case or defense in an action is based upon the state of mind at a certain time of a party to the action who becomes a witness, it is pertinent and proper that he should state, in answer to leading questions of the opposite party, what was his declaration as to his state of mind at a subsequent time, in reference to a subject alleged by him to have induced that former state of mind which was essential to his cause of action. Livingston v. Keech, 2 Jones & S. 547.

c. Exceptions and Limitations.

1. Varying terms of written instrument.

The rule that a party will be allowed to testify to his intent, either in civil or criminal cases, whenever his intent is material, is subject to the exception that the evidence is not admissible to vary the terms of a written instrument by which he is bound. Nixon v. McKinney, 105 N. C. 23, 11 S. E. 154; Russell v. Haltom, 76 Ark. 506, 89 S. W. 471; Green v. Akers, 55 Ga. 159; Merriam v. Pine City Lumber Co. 23 Minn. 314.

And testimony as to the private intention of a person when he executes a deed is never competent for the purpose of changing its natural and obvious meaning, or adding new provisions when its meaning is clear. Nixon v. McKinney, supra.

And a person who executed to another a 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

bill of sale of goods, absolute on its face, cannot be asked, in an action involving the validity of the bill of sale, if there was any intentional sale made by him. Raymond v. Richmond, 88 N. Y. 671.

Nor can a party to a written contract be permitted to testify, in an action thereon, as to what was the motive or the inducing circumstances which led him to execute it. Thomas v. Loose, 114 Pa. 35, 6 Atl. 326.

And he may not testify as to what he had in mind in the preliminary negotiations, nor state his unexpressed intent in such negotiations. Cornelius v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 74 Kan. 599, 87 Pac. 751.

So, the intention of a grantor in executing a deed must be gathered from the deed itself and from his acts and the surrounding circumstances; and his own statement of his intention is not admissible. Ecker v. McAllister, 45 Md. 290.

And, on an issue whether the plaintiff made a contract for labor with the defendant or his son, the plaintiff cannot testify that he supposed that he was contracting with the father, or that he thought the son was not a man of responsibility. Denman v. Campbell, 7 Hun, 88.

And where an assignment for the benefit of creditors in terms vests in the assignee the right of immediate possession, it is not competent to prove the absence of an agreement at the time of the assignment that the assignor should retain possession of the assigned property, since the assignment speaks for itself and must be judged by its terms. Forbes v. Waller, 25 N. Y. 430.

So, after language is used on which a party relies as a warranty, and on which he has a right to rely, the other party may not go behind a fair understanding from his language, and say, "I did not so intend." Zimmerman v. Brannon, 103 Iowa, 144, 72 N. W. 439; Haywood v. Foster, 16 Ohio, 88.

And a person sued on a warranty of prop-sound mind is presumed to intend the necessary natural or legal consequences of his deliberate act. "This legal presumption may be either conclusive or disputable, depending upon the nature of the act and the character of the intention. And when, by law, the consequences must necessarily follow the act done, the presumption is ordinarily conclusive, and cannot be rebutted by any evidence of a want of such intention." Such a case as this is altogether different. As we have seen, there must be an actual acceptance of goods by the purchaser, with intent to take possession as owner, in order to comply with the statute; and hence it becomes material to ascertain his intention. As we have indicated, there may be acts done which would be conclusive of his intent; but, in this case, the appellant's theory is that he only accepted the goods, in so far as there was any acceptance, for the purpose of reshipping them to the appellee, and not for the purpose of taking possession as owner. Of course, the appellee would not have been concluded by his answer, but could have cross-examined him, and relied on such facts as tended to show that he did take possession, as owner. Oftentimes the circumstances might be such as it would be important to explain the purpose of a purchaser in doing what was claimed to be evidence of acceptance; and, inasmuch as parties are now authorized to testify in their own behalf (unless, of course, there be some statutory disqualification), the purposes of justice may require that he be permitted to testify as to his intention. We are of the opinion that the appellant should have been allowed to so testify.

It follows, from what we have said, that the judgment must be reversed.

Judgment reversed, and new trial awarded, the appellee to pay the costs.

erty sold by him cannot testify that he did not intend to guarantee the property, where his language fairly imports a warranty. Zimmerman v. Brannon, supra.

So, the rule that writings are not to be varied by parol evidence, though such evidence is competent to show the circumstances under which they were made, so that the construction shall be what the parties intended, applies to testimony by the writer of a letter constituting a contract, as to the intent of the writer in writing it. Flower v. Brumbach, 30 Ill. App. 294, affirmed in 131 Ill. 646, 23 N. E. 335.

And where a person's letters to one not a party to the suit are given in evidence against him to disprove the existence of a contract claimed by him, he may show the circumstances under which they were written, but he cannot testify generally as to his intentions or purpose in writing them, and thereby avoid their effect as a statement or declaration of the facts contained in them. Brant v. Gallup, 111 Ill. 487, 53 Am. Rep. 638.

So, while everything that was said and done at the execution of an instrument is evidence in an action founded thereon, the unexpressed intent, motive, or belief of a party thereto is not admissible. Spencer v. Colt, 80 Pa. 314.

And where two persons are named in a contract as joint contractors, and one of them does not sign it, the burden rests upon the other to show that he was not bound as a party by his execution of it until it was also executed by the other; and the party signing cannot testify, in an action based on the contract, that he did not intend to make an individual contract. Dillon v. Anderson, 43 N. Y. 231.

And the testimony of a party to an agreement attacked as fraudulent, as to whether certain representations were made with intent to deceive or mislead, and whether, in 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

his representations, he spoke and acted in good faith and in the belief that what he said was true, is properly excluded as testimony as to his intent. Ballard v. Lockwood, 1 Daly, 158.

In the above case Seymour v. Wilson, 14 N. Y. 567, infra, II. d, 9 (c), was distinguished upon the ground that that case was one to set aside an assignment which was alleged to have been made with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors, which was the sole issue in the cause, and that the question of fraudulent intent was declared by the statute to be a question of fact, and not of law; and the court said that the decision in that case should be confined to the class of cases in which it originated until the court of last resort should otherwise adjudge.

Permitting a person to testify that false and fraudulent representations were the consideration or inducement to her action, however, is not a violation of the rule that a party to a contract shall not testify to his undisclosed purpose or intention for the purpose of nullifying words or acts which are relied on by others, which words and acts themselves are prima facie evidence of the agreement. Com. use of Shaffer v. Julius, 173 Pa. 322, 34 Atl. 21.

And persons who signed an agreement may testify that, at the time of signing it, they believed and relied upon representations made by a third person with reference thereto. Hard v. Ashley, 117 N. Y. 606, 23 N. E. 177.

And a person who signed bonds and a mortgage may testify in an action founded upon them that he did so relying at the time upon a contemporaneous agreement in parol that the mortgagee was to look only to the real estate for payment. Spencer v. Colt, supra.

So, where a wife bought land in her own name with money given her by her husband, v. Young, 124 Iowa, 517, 100 N. W. 694; Schmitt v. San Francisco, 100 Cal. 302, 34 Pac. 961.

The strip in controversy being without designation as a street on the map, and requiring extraneous evidence to explain it, makes it so ambiguous that the defendant was entitled to explain what she intended by said map.

Elliott, Roads & Streets, 1st ed. p. 130.

Messrs. Hass, Garrett, & Dunnigan, with Mr. Leslie R. Hewitt, for respondent.

Sloss, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action by the city of Los Angeles to recover possession of a parcel of land claimed to be part of a public street. Judgment went for plaintiff, and four of the defendants appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

The court finds that, on June 27, 1884, the defendant Elmira Hall, then the owner of a tract of land including the parcel in controversy, caused to be recorded a plat or map in which said tract was divided into lots and blocks, and streets were laid out in connection with the plat, for the use of prospective purchasers of said lots and blocks. By such recording, she offered to dedicate as public highways of the city of Los Angeles the streets shown upon the map. The strip of land in controversy was shown upon the map as a public street, and formed a continuation or extension of Johnston street, a then public and accepted street of the city. The street was thereupon opened for public travel, and remained so until August, 1894. In December, 1890, the city council, by ordinance, accepted said street, so offered to be dedicated, as a public street. The offer to dedicate was never withdrawn or rescinded prior to August, 1904. The appellants attack, as unsupported by the evidence, the findings that there was an offer to dedicate, and that such offer, if any was made, was not revoked prior to acceptance. We think the evidence fully sustains each of these findings. The questions presented can be best explained by a reproduction of the essential features of the map filed by Mrs. Hall in June, 1884:

Nor can a witness state his motive for doing an act when that motive involves a legal conclusion. Hamburg v. Wood, 66 Tex. 168, 18 S. W. 623.

But evidence as to the motive with which a witness did an act is admissible where it is not an opinion or a legal conclusion. Ibid.

And, in an action to recover money paid and laid out at the request of another, charged upon the books of the person paying it, to a third person, the plaintiff should be allowed to give testimony as to any other facts, even mental operations, tending to explain why the entries in their books were against a third person, but he should not be allowed to give mere reasoning in evidence. Volkman v. Feldmann, 10 Jones & S. 44.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And a person who purchased an interest in the business of another on a representation by the latter that it was worth at least a specified sum per year, who sues for damages for false representations upon discovering that the business was worth much less, may testify that he believed the defendant's statements as to the extent of the business, such testimony not consisting of a simple mental process upon the part of the plaintiff, but of a fact. Charbonnel v. Seabury, 23 R. I. 543, 51 Atl. 208.

So, a man testifying as a witness in an action brought by his wife on promissory notes may be asked if, at the time he handed the notes to his wife, he intended to part with the title and give the notes to her,—the question not being objectionable as call-

The land in controversy is the undesignated strip, 94 links in width, running along the westerly line of lot 21. That this strip, south of its intersection with Hall street, as shown on the map, was and is a public street, known as Johnston street, is not disputed by appellants; but they contend that no street was created north of Hall street. It seems perfectly clear that the court was at least authorized, if not bound, to conclude, from a mere inspection of the map itself, that its filing constituted an offer to dedicate, as a public street, the whole of the strip bordering on lots 1 and 21. Dedication is, in each case, a question of intention. Harding v. Jasper, 14 Cal. 643; San Francisco v. Canavan, 42 Cal. 541. The filing of a map showing a subdivision of land into lots and blocks, followed by a sale of lots as designated on the map, constitutes an offer to dedicate to public use the spaces marked thereon as streets. Logan v. Rose, 88 Cal. 263, 26 Pac. 106. We have no doubt that this map did mark the disputed strip as a street. It is true that it is not, on the face of the map, described or named as a street. On the other hand, it is not numbered as a lot, nor is it by lines cut off from the adjoining streets and bounded, as are the lots shown on the plat. It joins Hall street, and, so far as the map shows, furnishes the only means of access to Hall street, and through it to the numbered lots of the subdivision. There is nothing to indicate any distinction or demarcation between the part of the strip ing for a conclusion, and not a fact. Pritchard v. Hirt, 39 Hun, 378.

And a plaintiff testifying in his own behalf may be asked if supplies furnished by him to the defendant after the delivery of the note in suit, and before the maturity thereof, were furnished on the note or not,—the question calling for a fact as well as for a conclusion of the mind of the witness. Lewis v. Rogers, 2 Jones & S. 64.

But, refusal of the court to permit the defendant in an action for wrongfully killing a person to testify that he drew his pistol and fired the fatal shot for the purpose of protecting his life and person is not error, since the statement of the witness is a mere declaration by him that he shot the deceased in self-defense, which is the very question the jury is called upon to determine in the light of all the facts and circumstances in the case. Vawter v. Hultz, 112 Mo. 633, 20 S. W. 689.

And a person charging another with obtaining goods from him under false pretenses cannot be asked by the counsel for the prosecution if he was induced to part with his property on the representations which were made to him at the time by the accused as to his ability and means of payment, and whether on that ground alone he gave the credit, since this would be to leave to him the determination of a fact which it is the province of the jury alone to determine. Com. v. Daniels, 2 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. 332.

Nor may a vendor in a sale impeached as made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors be asked whether he made the sale for any improper purpose, since this leaves the question whether the sale was for a proper or an improper purpose to the conclusion formed by the witness. Blaut v. Gabler, 8 Daly, 48.

And a person who shot another, and against whom an action was brought for damages for the injury, seeking a recovery only on the ground of negligence, cannot testify in the action as to whether he handled his gun carefully, prudently, and cautiously, and whether he had considerable experience in handling a gun, it not being competent to show that, in his opinion, he was not negligent in shooting the plaintiff, that being a question for the jury to decide. Hankins v. Watkins, 77 Hun, 360, 28 N. Y. Supp. 867.

So, a person under prosecution for setting fire to his own woods and negligently suffering it to extend beyond his own land cannot be asked if he negligently omitted to watch, guard, attend, and look after the fire which he had set, for this would be asking the witness to decide the very issue which it was the province of the jury to determine. Sampson v. Hughes, 147 Cal. 62, 81 Pac. 292.

And, in an action for a breach of a contract of sale, the vendor, testifying as a witness, cannot be asked why he kept back the papers and sent them all together with the notice of arrival of the goods purchased, the question calling for what was in the witness's mind. Fresno Home Packing Co. v. Turle & Skidmore, 60 Misc. 79, 111 N. Y. Supp. 839.

3. Mental operations and intentions depending upon nonexistent or supposititious circumstances.

While inquiries as to intent relating to a supposed past fact, and as to what particular intent or design was entertained by the witness on a certain occasion and under existing facts, are permissible, an inquiry not as to any past or existing facts, but as to what would have been the mental operations and desires of the witness under a state of facts contradictory to those which he testified did in fact exist, cannot be made. Cook v. People, 2 Thomp. & C. 404; Learned v. Ryder, 61 Barb. 552.

And it is not error to refuse to permit a party to testify as to a potential intention, depending upon a future contingency, particularly where it does not appear from the record that the contingency suggested did in fact happen. State v. Ferguson, 71 Conn. 227, 41 Atl. 769.

Nor can a witness testify that his conduct would not have been what it was if he north and that south of the northerly line of Hall street, the latter, as we have said, being concededly a public street. As against all this, the fact that the strip is not named or designated as a street does not overcome the inference that it was intended to mark a street or public highway. San Francisco v. Burr, 108 Cal. 460, 41 Pac. 482; London & S. F. Bank v. Oakland, 33 C. C. A. 237, 61 U. S. App. 224, 90 Fed. 691; Rowan v. Portland, 8 B. Mon. 232, 246; Hanson v. Eastman, 21 Minn. 509; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 2d ed. § 119. Nor is any force to be attributed to the circumstance that the northerly end of the strip was cut off by a dotted line. In each of the cases last cited, the land held to be dedicated constituted a cul-de-sac.

had not understood that a claimed fact existed, when such testimony would amount to nothing more than an argument from the witness stand that such claimed fact did exist. Patterson v. Smith, 73 Vt. 360, 50 Atl. 1106.

And a witness should not be permitted to testify what course of action he would have taken if certain specified facts had not occurred. Palmer v. Pinkham, 33 Me. 32.

And a witness may not be asked what would have been his conduct at a past time under a supposed state of facts which did not exist. Cook v. People, supra.

In the above case, Kenyon v. People, 26 N. Y. 203, 84 Am. Dec. 177, infra II. d, 5, was distinguished upon the ground that, in that case, although the question was put in such form that the witness might have answered it by stating that she would not have done under a state of facts which did not exist, yet the question strictly called for no such answer and was not so answered.

So, a person sought to be held as an indorser of notes cannot testify that he would not have indorsed them if it had not been for an express stipulation that he should not be liable thereon. Cake v. Pottsville Bank, 116 Pa. 264, 2 Am. St. Rep. 600, 9 Atl. 302.

And an employee suing his employer for personal injuries caused by a defective appliance cannot be permitted to testify as to whether or not he would have continued to work if his employer had refused to promise to repair. Yerkes v. Northern P. R. Co. 112 Wis. 184, 88 Am. St. Rep. 961, 88 N. W. 33.

Nor can the defendant in an action against a surety on a bond given to secure a loan be asked whether he would have signed the bond in suit unless it had been understood and agreed at a meeting of the directors of the association to which it was given that certain real estate should be mortgaged as security for the loan, and be first liable for its repayment. Juniata Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Hetzel, 103 Pa. 507.

And it is not competent to ask an officer of an insurance company in an action upon a policy issued by the company, in which the defense was fraudulent overvaluation, if

Where rights of individuals have not intervened, an offer to dedicate may be revoked before acceptance by the proper public authorities. Prescott v. Edwards, 117 Cal. 298, 59 Am. St. Rep. 186, 49 Pac. 178; Los Angeles v. Kysor, 125 Cal. 463, 58 Pac. 90. Here, however, the offer was duly accepted by ordinance of the city council, accepting in general terms all streets, parks, etc., theretofore offered to the public for dedication. This was a sufficient acceptance. Eureka v. Armstrong, 83 Cal. 623, 22 Pac. 928, 23 Pac. 1085. On the question of revocation before acceptance, the most that can be said in support of appellants' position is that the evidence was conflicting. There was testimony tending to show that the strip in question had never been used he would have taken the risk at the amount of valuation at which it was taken if he had known that the valuation was based in part on Mexican bonds. Sturm v. Williams, 6 Jones & S. 325.

And where an action upon an insurance policy is defended upon the ground of fraud practised upon the adjusters in procuring an adjustment based upon an inspection of the books of the insured, which had been altered, testimony of the adjusters that they would not have made the adjustment if they had known of the alteration of the books is not admissible, it being merely their opinion as to what they would have done under altered circumstances. Commercial Bank v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 87 Wis. 297, 58 N. W. 391.

So, a witness accustomed to buy and sell lumber, and to haul it in the direction of a proposed new road, cannot be asked, on an application for such road, over which road he intends to haul his lumber in case the new road is built, his intention being immaterial. Hayward v. Bath, 38 N. H. 179.

A purchaser of real estate may be asked, as a witness in an action for commissions for procuring a purchaser, however, whether he would have purchased the property if he had not talked with the broker, such testimony tending to aid in determining whether the broker brought about the sale, or had a material influence in bringing it about. Larson v. Thoma (Iowa) 121 N. W. 1059.

And an agent who made a sale of property in behalf of his principal may testify, on a claim that possession of the property was obtained by fraudulent representations as to the financial ability of the purchaser, that he would not have sold the property to the purchaser if the purchaser had given him such intimation relative to his financial condition as he had testified on the trial that he did give. Whitney Wagon Works v. Moore, 61 Vt. 230, 17 Atl. 1007.

So, a person to whom a telegram was directed which was never delivered may testify, in an action against the telegraph company for mental anguish caused by failure to deliver the telegram, as to what he would as a road, that natural conditions were such as to preclude such use, and that the defendant Hall had at all times kept it fenced at both ends, had a house standing upon it, and had exercised acts of ownership inconsistent with the existence of a public right of way. But, if these circumstances evidenced a revocation of the offer to dedicate, they were met by testimony showing that parties having occasion to reach the land beyond the strip did use it as a passageway, from time to time, and that the southern end of the strip was not closed until after the passage of the ordinance of acceptance. This testimony supports the finding that there had been no revocation prior to acceptance.

A point is made on the refusal of the have done if he had received it. Bright v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 132 N. C. 317, 43 S. E. 841.

And where a principal wired his agent to settle a claim because of a message he received from him which was changed in transmission, he may testify, in an action against the telegraph company for the loss sustained by reason of the settlement, that, if the message had been delivered as sent, he would not have authorized the settlement. Hasbrouck v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 107 Iowa, 160, 70 Am. St. Rep. 181, 77 N. W. 1034.

So, a person who purchased goods of another, supposing the vendor had them on hand, ready for delivery, may be asked, in an action growing out of the failure to deliver, whether he would have entered into the contract if he had known that the vendor did not have the goods on hand to furnish. Mann v. Taylor, 78 Iowa, 355, 43 N. W. 220.

And a shipper of stock by rail, acting under a contract providing that he should look after and feed his stock en route, who was injured by the sudden backing of the train after being told by a brakeman that the train would stand for some time, may testify, in an action for the injury, that, but for the statement of the brakeman, he would not have placed himself in the position he was in when injured, and that, in so doing, he expected the train to stand still. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Armstrong, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 146, 23 S. W. 236.

4. Secret and undisclosed intent or motive.

The mere intention of a party, not manifested by or accompanying any act or declaration, is, as a general rule, not admissible to affect the rights of another. Hale v. Taylor, 45 N. H. 405; Gale v. Belknap County Ins. Co. 41 N. H. 170; Dunbar v. Armstrong, 115 Ill. App. 549; Phoenix Mills v. Miller, 25 N. Y. Week. Dig. 290, 4 N. Y. S. R. 787; Shrader v. Bonker, 65 Barb. 608.

Unless his intentions become a subject of legitimate inquiry. Shrader v. Bonker, supra.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

court below to permit Mrs. Hall to testify that she had not intended to dedicate the alleged street. The position of the appellants is that, inasmuch as the ultimate question, in cases of dedication, is one of intention, the party may be asked to state his intention in performing the acts relied on, as evidencing a dedication. Such testimony has, in cases of this character, been held to be admissible for the purpose of throwing light upon the real nature of acts which were in themselves consistent with the intent to dedicate or not to dedicate. Bidinger v. Bishop, 76 Ind. 244; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Noftsgar, 148 Ind. 101, 47 N. E. 332; Goodfellow v. Riggs, 88 Iowa, 540, 55 N. W. 319; Chicago v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 152 Ill. 561, 38 N.

And a party to a contract may not testify to thoughts and purposes on his part, undisclosed at the time of making the contract, in order to affect its legal import. Cake v. Pottsville Bank, 116 Pa. 264, 2 Am. St. Rep. 600, 9 Atl. 302; Cullmans v. Lindsay, 114 Pa. 166, 6 Atl. 332; Juniata Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Hetzel, 103 Pa. 507; Browne v. Hickie, 68 Iowa, 330, 27 N. W. 276.

And it is error to permit a party to a contract, or his agent, to testify what induced him to execute it. Cullmans v. Lindsay, supra.

Nor can a party to an action prove by his own witness what the mere purpose of the witness's mind had been on a former occasion. Law v. Payson, 32 Me. 521.

And proof of the secret intention or purpose of the writer of a document, as to what he meant to express thereby, is not admissible to bind another, to whom it is addressed and by whom it is acted upon. Willingham v. Sterling Cycle Works, 113 Ga. 953, 39 S. E. 314.

And a person delivering a letter or other writing to another, upon which the latter might act, cannot testify as to his intention when he delivered it. Colborn v. Fry, 23 Ind. App. 485, 55 N. E. 621.

And the writer of a letter upon which a contract for a sale of goods was based, the writer not being a party to the action, cannot be permitted to testify as to the sense in which he used a word occurring therein; the meaning the writer intended to express is immaterial except as the letter itself, in view of the surrounding circumstances known to both sides, discloses that intention. Harrison v. Kirke, 6 Jones & S. 396.

So, where a man purchased land and had the deed made to his daughter, he cannot testify, where the transfer is attacked, that his purpose in taking the deed in the name of his daughter was to keep it in his possession with a view of delivering it to her in case they effected a subsequent arrangement by which he was to have certain rights in consideration of the deed, this being, in substance, an offer to prove the undisclosed purposes of his mind. Shrader v. Bonker, supra.

E. 768. In Helm v. McClure, 107 Cal. 199, 40 Pac. 437, this court said that the testimony of the alleged dedicator, that he had had no intention to dedicate, "was relevant, but not conclusive, evidence of his actual purpose." On the other hand, the rule that the party may give testimony of his actual intent should, we think, be limited to cases where the acts done by him do not manifestly indicate an intent to dedicate. Where they are inconsistent with anything but such intent, he cannot destroy the effect of his own conduct by subsequent declarations that he did not mean to be bound by the necessary import of that conduct. No weight should be given to declarations of an intent contrary to that plainly shown by acts done and acted on long before. "The intention to which courts give heed is not an intention hidden in the mind of the landowner, but an intention manifested by his acts. It is the intention which finds expression in conduct, and not that which is secreted in the heart of the owner, that the law regards." Indianapolis v. Kingsbury, 101 Ind. 201, 213, 51 Am. Rep. 749; Fossion v. Landry, 123 Ind. 136, 24 N. E. 96. See also Morgan v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 96 U. S. 716, 24 L. ed. 743; 4 Wigmore Ev. § 2413, note. In accordance with these views, this court has held it proper to exclude evidence of the unexpressed intention of the landowner, where her acts and deeds plainly indicated that she intended to dedicate, and did dedicate, a street to public use. Brown v. Stark, 83 Cal. 636, 24 Pac. 162. What we have already said concerning the map filed by Mrs. Hall will be sufficient to make clear our reasons for holding, as we do hold, that the paper itself, taken in connection with the

And, on an issue in an action to recover money fraudulently converted by the defendant to his own use, whether there was an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant that certain promises of the defendant were taken in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim against the defendant for his fraud, it is not competent to put in evidence the undisclosed intention of the plaintiff not to accept the written promises of the defendant in satisfaction of his original claim. Tallant v. Stedman, 176 Mass. 460, 57 N. E. 683.

And where an employee of a railroad company was killed while going between moving cars to couple or uncouple them, the conductor of the train cannot be called upon, in an action against the company for causing the killing, for an expression of his undisclosed intention with reference to uncoupling and setting out a car, where such intention was never indicated by him to the person killed, or to anyone else prior to the accident, since the employee could not be charged with the violation of an order conceived in the mind of his superior officer, but never indicated to him. Lowe v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 89 Iowa, 420, 56 N. W. 519.

So, where a person sought to purchase a house and lot through a broker, and later purchased it from the owner, at a lower figure than that given to the broker, the purchaser cannot testify, in an action by the broker for commissions, on an issue as to whether the negotiations were continuous from the time of the first offer till the purchase, whether he had in mind continuously the purchase of the premises in question in case they could be obtained at the figure he desired to pay for them. Hubachek v. Hazard, 83 Minn. 437, 86 N. W. 426.

Permitting a party who had delivered a letter to another to testify as to his intention in doing so, however, though erroneous, is harmless, where the evidence thus given did not tend to change or affect the plain meaning of the words used in the letter itself. Colborn v. Fry, supra. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

5. Intent of wrongful acts intentional-ly done.

When an act forbidden by law is intentionally done, the intent to do the act is the criminal intent which imparts to it the character of an offense; and no one who violates the law which he is conclusively presumed to know can be heard to say that he had no criminal intent in doing the forbidden act. State v. King, 86 N. C. 603; Mettler v. People, 36 Ill. App. 324.

And, in questions of unlawful intent, when the facts of a case conclusively show an illegal purpose, and the party intended to do the act from which the consequences inevitably flowed, he is held to intend both, and cannot be heard to testify to the contrary. Phifer v. Erwin, 100 N. C. 59, 6 S. E. 672.

It is not material in a criminal case to know whether the defendant intended to violate the law: the material question is, Did he intend to do that which the law prohibits? and refusal to permit a party charged with a violation of law to testify as to whether he had any intention of violating the law in doing the act in question is not erroneous. Ross v. State, 116 Ind. 495, 19 N. E. 451.

So, the intent with which a person committed a rape is immaterial, and evidence is not competent to show his intent. State v. La Mont (S. D.) 120 N. W. 1104.

And, when a person knowingly gives such provocation as is calculated to bring about retaliatory violence, and violence does ensue in consequence, he cannot escape responsibility to the criminal law by saying that he did not expect violence from the adversary to whom it was offered because of a supposed want of courage to resent. State v. King, supra.

So, a party to a contract upon which a suit was brought, which was defended on the ground that trades made in pursuance of the contract were violations of the statute against options, cannot be permitted to fact that it was made and filed as the basis for sales of lots delineated thereon, so clearly manifested an intent to offer the strip in question for dedication that the court was fully justified in excluding Mrs. Hall's offer to prove by her own statement that she had a contrary intent. In any view, the exclusion of the proffered testimony, if erroneous, was without prejudice, as her statement would have been entitled to no weight as against her prior unequivocal acts.

It is also urged that the court erred in striking out some of Mrs. Hall's testimony with reference to the preparation of the map. The court's ruling went no further than to strike out her testimony that she had instructed her surveyor to leave a street from Griffin avenue, and that she did not intend to leave Johnston street open beyond the north line of Avenue Twenty-Eight, or to have a line drawn across the space marked "Proposed Street." If she was entitled to show that she was ignorant of the real condition of the map when it was filed, any testimony which she may have given tending to show such ignorance was allowed to stand. Her instructions to her surveyor were mere hearsay. The exclusion of her testimony as to what she intended the map to represent was correct, for reasons already stated.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: Angellotti, J.; Shaw, J.

testify as to his intention when he made the contract, since the other party to the contract could not be affected by any secret intent on his part unless he knowingly participated in it. Scanlon v. Warren, 68 Ill. App. 213, affirmed in 169 Ill. 142, 48 N. E. 410.

And the offense under statutes prohibiting the sale of adulterated milk is established by the proof of the sale of the milk, which is shown to be adulterated when tested by the standard set up by the act; and that the seller had knowledge of the adulteration need not be shown; and he is not entitled to go to the jury upon the question of his guilty knowledge or intent. People v. Schaeffer, 41 Hun, 23.

And where a superintendent of police was tried for receiving a bribe while acting in his official capacity for permitting the prosecution of an illegal business, it is not competent to permit a party paying money to him to testify to the purpose for which he paid it, and that it was paid for protection. State v. Ames, 90 Minn. 183, 96 N. W. 330.

Where one does an act apparently in violation of a criminal statute, however, but in fact under circumstances tending to show a want of guilty intention, the excusing circumstances may be given in evidence on the trial to show his good faith in the transaction, where that is a material element, or he may show that he was ignorant of the facts which would make his acts criminal. Farrell v. State, 32 Ohio St. 456, 30 Am. Rep. 614.

And where the acts of a person are themselves equivocal, and become criminal only by reason of the intent with which they are done, both the act and the intent must unite to constitute the offense, and both facts must be proved in order to convict, and the accused may be permitted to disavow the imputed purpose, and repel the presumption of criminal intent. State v. King, 86 N. C. 603.

So, where a purchaser of a load of hay gave an order of doubtful character for its delivery at his barn, and the person in charge of the load of hay caused it to be taken and left standing upon a sidewalk while it was being unloaded, in violation of an ordinance of the city, it is competent to show by the purchaser that, when he gave the order, he either intended or contemplated, or did not intend or contemplate, a violation of the ordinance by the execution of his order through his agent. Roddy v. Finnegan, 43 Md. 490.

And a person charged with the sale of intoxicating liquors without a license may testify, as tending to show good faith and want of guilty intention, that he bought the bitters alleged to contain intoxicating liquor under the information and belief that they were free from alcoholic properties, and that he sold them honestly, believing from information at the time of the purchase that they were not an intoxicating liquor. Farrell v. State, 32 Ohio St. 456, 30 Am. Rep. 614.

And a person charged with a statutory offense of watering and skimming milk to be supplied to a cheese factory may be asked as a witness if, in skimming his milk, he supposed he was violating the law, as tending to show the intent of his action. Stearns v. Ingraham, 1 Thomp. & C. 218.

But the motive is immaterial if a false representation be made with knowledge of its falsity, and injury ensues, and, in an action for deceit, the question asked of the defendant, "In all your transactions with the plaintiff in regard to this trade, did you act in good or bad faith?" is properly excluded. Anslyn v. Franke, 11 Mo. App. 597.

And where facts constituting a fraud are proved, the intention to deceive sufficiently appears to authorize a finding, and the person entertaining such intent cannot be asked to state his intention. Dulaney v. Rogers, 64 Mo. 201.

And a person who makes representations which are material and known by him to be false cannot excuse himself by showing

The testimony of a person charged with crime, as to his intent, for the purpose of instructing the jury, occupies the same footing as that of any other witness; and where, in a prosecution for homicide, the accused testifies that he did not intend to kill the deceased, he is entitled to an instruction for a lower grade of homicide than murder in either degree. State v. Palmer, 88 Mo. 568.

So, under a statute permitting a party to a civil action to testify in his own behalf, it is competent for him, where the question is whether or not he did a certain act with a fraudulent intent, to testify as to his intention, and to state whether or not, at the time of acting, he considered that he had a right to do the act. Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Stone, 21 Fla. 555.

And a person who has been induced to a certain action by the false and fraudulent representations of another is competent to testify, in an action based thereon, that the false and fraudulent representations were the consideration or inducement to her action. Com. use of Shaffer v. Julius, 173 Pa. 322, 34 Atl. 21; Ohio Coal Co. v. Davenport, 37 Ohio St. 194.

And whether a person believed in the correctness of the exhibit submitted to him, upon which he acted, is a material fact to be proved on an issue with reference to such action, and he may swear directly as to the existence of such belief. Berkey v. Judd, 22 Minn. 287.

So, where a party calls himself as a witness in an action, and is examined in chief, it is the right of the opposite party, by cross-examination, to search out everything in the way of motive that would affect the mind of the witness and its emanations on the trial. Livingston v. Keech, 2 Jones & S. 547.

And a person on trial for homicide may be asked, on cross-examination, whether he was going to shoot the deceased, and whether he had a pistol or not, the accused not having claimed his exemption, or suggested that his answer would criminate him. Litton v. Com. 101 Va. 833, 44 S. E. 923.

And the privilege of declining to answer a question that might subject a witness to criminal prosecution is the privilege of the witness, and not of the party, and where one is both a party and a witness for himself, and is asked a question as to his intention, the answer to which might criminate him, he must be held on his cross-examination as waiving the privilege as to any matter about which he had given testimony in chief. Roddy v. Finnegan, 43 Md. 490.

So, a defendant who is called by his own counsel as a witness, and testifies in the case, cannot complain when the opposite party, on cross-examination, is allowed to examine him as to his intention in signing a written contract involved in the case. Quimby v. Morrill, 47 Me. 470.

And it is within the sound discretion of a trial court to permit a party to recall a witness after his evidence in rebuttal is in, for 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the purpose of testifying to the intent with which he did an act material in the case, which ought properly to have been given in the case of the plaintiff in chief. State use of Glaser v. Mason, 24 Mo. App. 321.

2. To homicide.

A person under trial for homicide may, when the intention is material, testify as to the intent with which he did the act charged. Taylor v. People, 21 Colo. 426, 42 Pac. 652; Barnhart v. Fulkerth, 93 Cal. 497, 29 Pac. 50.

And testimony that the accused is a prosecution for murder had no unlawful purpose in going to the place of the killing is competent if his guilt in some measure depended upon his purpose in going there. State v. Hall, 132 N. C. 1094, 44 S. E. 553.

And where, in a prosecution for homicide, evidence is given that, previous to the killing, the accused had entered the room where the killing took place, with a pistol in his hand, he is entitled to testify in his own behalf as to what his intention was at the time he entered the room where the killing took place. State v. Wright, 40 La. Ann. 589, 4 So. 486.

So, in a prosecution for homicide, where evidence of a threat by the accused against the deceased is given to show a motive and intent to kill, it is permissible for the defendant to testify directly as to his intent or feeling toward the deceased when he made the threat, for the purpose of rebutting such evidence. Emery v. State, 92 Wis. 146, 65 N. W. 848; Pratt v. State, 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 227, 96 S. W. 8.

And where, in a prosecution for homicide, evidence was given of ambiguous statements made by the defendant before the homicide, claimed to indicate a purpose to take the life of the deceased, the defendant is entitled to tell the jury what he intended to state. State v. Kirby, 62 Kan. 436, 63 Pac. 752.

So, a person on trial for homicide, who claims action in self-defense, may testify as to what he thought the deceased intended to do when the act in question was committed. Taylor v. People, 21 Colo. 426, 42 Pac. 652.

And he must be permitted to give testimony in his own behalf, based on the facts and circumstances of the case, that it was necessary to kill the deceased in order to save his own life, or to protect himself from great personal injury. Lane v. State, 44 Fla. 105, 32 So. 896; State v. Harrington, 12 Nev. 126.

And in determining whether the evidence of an actual apprehension of bodily harm is admissible in a prosecution for manslaughter, the court cannot be governed by its own conclusions from the testimony as to the sufficiency of the proof of reasonable cause; but, if there is any testimony which, if believed, would warrant the jury in finding that there was such reasonable cause, though it comes from the defendant alone, and is in conflict with all the other evidence in the case, it is sufficient to entitle the defendant to testify that he did in fact act under such an apprehension. Com. v. Woodward, 102 Mass. 155.

So, in a prosecution for homicide, where it is proved that the deceased previously made threats against the accused, and immediately before the killing made some demonstration with his hand, declaring that he would kill the accused, the accused may testify what he believed the person whom he shot was about to do. Wallace v. United States, 162 U. S. 466, 40 L. ed. 1039, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 859.

And a person on trial for manslaughter, who testified to facts from which the jury might find that he had reasonable cause to apprehend an attack upon and serious bodily harm to himself from the person whom he killed, may testify that he struck such person because he thought the deceased was going to strike him. Com. v. Woodward, supra.

So, a person charged with murder, who pleads adequate cause sufficient to reduce homicide to manslaughter, may prove by a witness who was standing by him immediately before the shots were fired that the witness passed from the defendant's left side around behind his back to his right side, because he expected the deceased would strike at the defendant with a billiard cue, and he feared deceased would miss defendant and hit him, the effect produced on a bystander going to illustrate the effect likely to be produced upon the mind of the accused himself. Cochran v. State, 28 Tex. App. 422, 13 S. W. 651.

3. To assaults.

A person under prosecution for assault with intent to murder is entitled to testify as to his intent in making the assault, an intent to kill being an essential element of the crime charged. State v. Ferguson, 71 Conn. 227, 41 Atl. 769.

And he is competent to testify as to the purpose for which he procured the instrument with which he committed the assault. Fenwick v. State, 63 Md. 239.

And he may testify as a witness as to his intention in shooting. State v. Nelson, 118 Mo. 124, 23 S. W. 1088.

And the testimony of the defendant in a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, that she went over to cut the person injured because "she spilled my blood and I was bound to spill some of hers. I did not try to kill her, I only wanted to draw her blood because she drew mine," is admissible and furnishes an appropriate hypothesis for an instruction as to the lower grade of offense charged. State v. Tate, 12 Mo. App. 327.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, refusal to permit a question addressed to the defendant, as to what he intended or would have intended to do to the person assaulted if he had met him under certain circumstances, however, is not error, especially where it does not appear from the record that the contingency suggested ever came to pass. State v. Ferguson, 71 Conn. 227, 41 Atl. 769.

And refusal to permit a person under indictment for assault with intent to murder to testify in his own behalf as to the intent with which he made the assault in question is not prejudicial error, where the record does not show what answer to this question was expected by the defense. Bolen v. State, 26 Ohio St. 371.

So, a person charged with assault with a deadly weapon with intent to inflict a bodily injury has a right to state to the jury on the trial the intent with which the blow was struck. Wohlford v. People, 148 Ill. 296, 36 N. E. 107.

And, when he has pleaded self-defense, he is entitled to testify directly and explain his motives for drawing a revolver at the time of the alleged assault. Ryan v. Territory (Ariz.) 100 Pac. 770.

And, upon the trial of an indictment for an assault with a dangerous weapon, in which the defense was that the defendant committed the assault in defending his property or that of others, intrusted to his care, against a trespasser seeking to take forcible possession, the intent with which the act was done is competent evidence. Filkins v. People, 69 N. Y. 101, 25 Am. Rep. 143.

So, the defendant in an action for damages for assault and battery may testify as to the intent with which he approached the plaintiff, and as to what he thought the plaintiff was about to do with an ax which he then raised in his hand. Plank v. Grimm, 62 Wis. 251, 22 N. W. 470.

But, a person charged with committing an assault with a revolver should not be permitted to testify, in a prosecution therefor, as to his purpose in taking the revolver with him, since, however innocent his purpose may have been, it would not justify an assault with it. State v. Montgomery, 65 Iowa, 483, 22 N. W. 639.

So, a person charged with assault and battery with intent to commit a felony, who becomes a witness in his own behalf, may testify as to what his intention was in committing the alleged assault and battery. Greer v. State, 53 Ind. 420.

And, on a trial for an assault with intent to rape, the defendant may testify that it was not his intention to use force. Le-wallen v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 412, 26 S. W. 832.

And the prosecutrix in a prosecution for rape may be asked if the act of the defendant was against her will. Brown v. State, 127 Wis. 193, 106 N. W. 536, 7 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 258.

And a person charged with aggravated assault upon a child may be asked what was his object and purpose in striking the child. Berry v. State, 30 Tex. App. 423, 17 S. W. 1080.

So, a person sent to the premises of another to collect water rates, and who meets with resistance, and injures the person resisting him, may testify, in a prosecution for maliciously wounding the latter with intent to maim and kill, that he did not intend to cut the water off from the premises of the latter through malice, but thought he had a right to do so. Jackson v. Com. 96 Va. 107, 30 S. E. 452.

And whether the conductor of a railway train intended to expel a passenger, or was misunderstood as to his purpose, is relevant evidence on a claim of punitive damages in an action against a railroad company for the improper expulsion of a passenger, and the conductor is competent to testify as to what his intention really was. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Eskew, 86 Ga. 641, 22 Am. St. Rep. 490, 12 S. E. 1061.

4. To burglary, larceny, robbery, etc.

In a criminal case, a defendant may testify as to the intent with which he entered a building, although, of course, a jury is not bound to believe him. Barnhart v. Fulkerth, 93 Cal. 497, 29 Pac. 50.

And a person on trial for burglary, charged with breaking and entering a railway car in which property was kept, with intent to steal therein, may testify in defense that he entered the car to obtain coal, in reliance upon statements made to him by persons who accompanied him and assisted in taking the coal, that such persons had a license to take coal from the car; and he is entitled to have the jury instructed, upon his request, as to the statutory definition of larceny, in order that they may be informed that, to convict, they should find he intended all that is essential to constitute larceny. State v. Tough, 12 N. D. 425, 96 N. W. 1025.

And a person prosecuted for taking goods from a vessel, under a statute imposing a penalty for stealing or destroying goods or other effects belonging to any vessel in distress, wrecked, lost, stranded, or cast away, may be permitted to testify as to his intention in taking the goods in question. United States v. Stone, 8 Fed. 232.

But an instruction in a prosecution for burglary in which the defendant did not testify, that the intent is a simple mental operation, and unless the defendant himself speaks, it is not possible to give any direct, positive proof of intent in the commission of any act, is not subject to the objection that it tells the jury that a presumption should be indulged against the defendant because he did not give evidence as a witness in the cause. People v. Morton, 72 Cal. 62, 13 Pac. 150.

So, a man who lost a large sum of money gambling, believing that it was unlawfully won from him, who, after losing it, at the point of a revolver took back a sum of money from the card table, and robbed the person in charge of another sum, may be asked, on a prosecution for the robbery, if he honestly believed that the money was his and that he had a right to take it. People v. Hughes, 11 Utah, 100, 39 Pac. 492.

And where a person is charged with maliciously and wantonly destroying the goods of another, his motive is in issue, and he may testify to it himself. Conway v. Clinton, 1 Utah, 215.

So, in larceny, the intent to steal is an element of the crime, and it is competent for the defendant to testify as to the intent with which he did the act. State v. Williams, 95 Mo. 247, 6 Am. St. Rep. 46, 8 S. W. 217.

And a person charged with stealing property may testify in a prosecution therefor as to the intention existing in his mind when he came into possession of the property which he is charged with having stolen. White v. State, 53 Ind. 596; State v. Lowe, 67 Kan. 183, 72 Pac. 524.

So, a person charged with having stolen certain personal property from a farm occupied by him may be permitted to show the nature of his contract, the character of his occupation, and that, in doing what he did, he was acting under a claim of right and without any wrong intent. Severance v. Carr, 43 N. H. 65.

And where boards were placed by a person upon his neighbor's premises, of which the neighbor was the lawful occupant, without his consent, and he removed them from the place where they were put to the cellar way of his house, and afterwards, upon vacating the premises, left them there, on a charge of larceny for removing the boards, he is entitled to testify that he had no other object in view when he moved them except to clear out his yard. George v. Johnson, 25 App. Div. 125, 49 N. Y. Supp. 203.

So, a person charged with stealing a cow has the right to testify, in a prosecution therefor, that he purchased a duebill against the owner of the cow, and was informed and believed that such owner would let the cow go on the duebill, and he took her, believing he had a right to do so, and with no intent to steal the cow or do a wrong. State v. Williams, supra.

And where a person was found in possession of a skiff which had been recently stolen, he is entitled to testify in his own behalf that he had no felonious intention in taking it, and no intention of converting the property to his own use, or of depriving the owner of it, but that he was endeavoring to escape arrest under a warrant, and, in so doing, took the skiff and used it, intending to send it back by a person whom he had carried along for that purpose. State v. Dillon, 48 La. Ann. 1365, 20 So. 913.

And a person charged with the larceny of a watch, who had picked up the owner of the watch from the ground in a public street where he was lying, is not debarred from testifying why he picked him up, on the ground that this would be permitting him to make his own defense. People v. Quick, 51 Mich. 547, 18 N. W. 375.

And, upon a charge of grand larceny against a banker in obtaining possession of and converting to his own use a draft which had been deposited in the bank, he may be asked whether or not he intended, at the time of discounting the draft, to make an assignment, and as to whether he expected to pay the proceeds of the draft to the owner, and as to whether, at the time, he expected to continue in business and be able to pay his debts as they matured. People v. Moore, 37 Hun, 84.

So, a person charged with knowingly, and without the consent of the owner, cutting and carrying away timber on lands not his own, but adjoining his own, may give evidence that he did not intend to get on the adjoining land. Matthews v. State (Tex. Crim. App.) 42 S. W. 375.

And a tenant for life of a farm, sought to be evicted on the charge of waste in maliciously cutting the timber thereon, is entitled to testify that he cut the wood in good faith, believing that he had a right to do so. Rutherford v. Aiken, 2 Thomp. & C. 281.

Likewise, where property is alleged to have been stolen, the best evidence of non-consent is that of the owner himself. Smith v. State, 13 Tex. App. 507.

5. To seduction or alienation.

The prosecutrix in a trial for seduction under promise of marriage may be permitted to tell the jury that she yielded because of the defendant's promise of marriage, and her reliance thereon. Ferguson v. State, 71 Miss. 805, 42 Am. St. Rep. 492, 15 So. 66; Kenyon v. People, 26 N. Y. 203, 84 Am. Dec. 177.

But she cannot be asked if she would have consented in the absence of a promise, such a question calling for merely a speculative answer on her part. Cook v. People, 2 Thomp. & C. 404.

So, in an action to recover damages for the procuring and enticing of plaintiff's wife to leave him, if the separation appears to have resulted from statements made and advice given to the wife by the defendant, he may be permitted to testify that he had no intention to bring about a separation. Tasker v. Stanley, 153 Mass. 148, 10 L.R.A. 468, 26 N. E. 417.

6. To usury.

The voluntary taking or reservation of a greater interest or compensation for a loan or forbearance of money than that allowed by law is per se usurious, and the offense is not condoned by a want of intent to violate the law, and the person taking the usury cannot testify as to his intent not to take more than the law allows. Fiedler v. Darrin, 50 N. Y. 437.

And, in a case of alleged usury, where a bonus is specified and agreed upon between the parties, whether of money or other valuable thing, the case is not open to the admission of evidence of a purpose or intent to or not to violate the law, for in such case the law itself declares the unlawful intent. More v. Deyoe, 22 Hun, 208.

So, where there is a direct or express agreement to take more money for a loan than the law allows, evidence of the intent of the parties is not admissible. Ibid. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And, where an action on a note is sought to be defeated by a plea of usury, it is not admissible by way of rebutting a usurious intent to inquire of the party who made the loan whether there was any intention, shift, or device on his part to get more than the legal rate of interest, since that is calling on him to pronounce broadly upon the very point in dispute. Sizer v. Miller, 1 Hill, 227.

The rule that a party may testify what his motive or intention was, where the motive or intention actuating him is a subject of inquiry, however, applies in cases in which the question of usury is involved. Peightal v. Cotton States Bldg. Co. 25 Tex. Civ. App. 390, 61 S. W. 428.

And where the facts in regard to an alleged usurious transaction do not directly show usury, but are such that a jury could infer that they were intended as a cover for usury, it is competent to ask the lender whether he intended to take usury. Black v. Ryder, 5 Daly, 304.

And where a transaction by which a loan is made is equivocal, and usury is alleged, the illegality of the act depends upon the intention of the parties; and the intent must be ascertained in order to characterize the act, and in such case it is admissible to allow the party to testify as to his intention. More v. Deyoe, supra.

In the above case, Fiedler v. Darrin, 50 N. Y. 437, supra, was distinguished upon the ground that, in the former case, there was no specified sum of money offered or demanded as a bonus for the loaning of the money in the case, as was done in the latter.

So, where a loan was made and a larger sum was reserved than that allowed by law for interest, it is competent to ask a party to the loan whether the amount in excess of the legal rate was intended as compensation for the loan, or as compensation for trouble and expense incurred in collecting the money to be loaned. Thurston v. Cornell, 38 N. Y. 281.

And a person taking a note reserving usurious interest, claimed to be an accommodation note, never having had a legal inception until it came to his hands, may testify to his belief in the truth of a certificate required of and given by the maker after the transfer of the note in suit, to the effect that it was business paper, and that he had no purpose or intent to use it to evade the statute of usury. Bayliss v. Cockcroft, 81 N. Y. 363.

So, where a person made a loan, and it appears that she was credited annually with interest at a rate forbidden in the state, on a claim that the note was not void, as an agreement for excessive interest, on the ground that the note was given as security for a note made to parties in another state, where an agreement for interest at the rate in question was legal, she may properly be permitted to testify that she did not intend to make an illegal and corrupt agreement, or to loan the money to a person in the state. Davis v. Marvine, 160 N. Y. 269, 54 N. E. 704.

And where it was sought to avoid a mortgage upon the ground of usury, the usury consisting in the overvaluation of certain railroad bonds transferred by the mortgagee to the mortgagor, and which formed part of the consideration for which the mortgage was given, the mortgagee is entitled to testify as to his intention in making the arrangement for the transfer of the bonds, and he may be asked whether, at the time the mortgage was taken, he believed the bonds were worth the price for which they were taken by the mortgagor. More v. Deyoe, supra.

7. To libel and slander.

The rule that the motive with which an act was done or words uttered may be inquired into, and the real motive may be stated as a fact to be considered with the other evidence, is applicable in an action for libel or slander. Lally v. Emery, 54 Hun, 517, 8 N. Y. Supp. 135; Wilson v. Noonan, 35 Wis. 321.

And, as the question of malice is directly at issue in a libel case, the defendant may testify to his lack of malice, and that his feelings toward the plaintiff were friendly both before and recently after the publication. Dorn v. Cooper (Iowa) 118 N. W. 35, overruling Barr v. Hack, 46 Iowa, 308.

And direct evidence to disprove the existence of a bad motive or malicious intent, such as the testimony of the defendant himself, denying that he had any such intent, is admissible in an action for libel under the general denial. Wilson v. Noonan, 35 Wis. 321.

So, it is proper for the defendant in an action for damages for an alleged libelous publication to testify that he had no ill-will against the plaintiff when he made the publication, and that he had no other motive in such publication than the public good. Hay v. Reid, 85 Mich. 296, 48 N. W. 507.

And, in an action for libel, under a statute authorizing the defendant to give proof of intention, the defendant may give evidence of his intent in making the publication, for the purpose of showing that it was without malice; and this includes the right to show that the libelous language charged was rendered so by mistake in punctuation; and when an alleged libelous publication consists of several epithets, the defendant may be permitted to disclaim any intention to apply certain of the epithets to the plaintiff, and justify the others. Arnott v. Standard Asso. 57 Conn. 86, 3 L.R.A. 69, 17 Atl. 361.

So, in an action for libel, where the proof is such as to indicate that the defendant is at least liable in compensatory damages, direct testimony of the defendant himself is admissible to show that the publication was not made with any bad motive or malicious intent, as bearing on the question of the liability of the defendant for punitive damages. Wilson v. Noonan, supra; Henn v. Horn, 56 Ohio St. 442, 47 N. E. 248. 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

And a person sued for libel for the publication of an article may be asked, as a witness, why he wrote it; his testimony on this subject being admissible, not in mitigation of the compensatory but of the vindictive damages which a jury might award in such a case. Bennett v. Smith, 23 Hun, 50.

And where an action was brought against a union for damages for charging a person with selling a certain kind of bad meat, and it was claimed that one object of the union was to prevent the sale of that particular kind of meat, it is proper to allow the plaintiff to explain that he had other reasons for refusing to join the union than a desire to deal in that particular kind of meat. Mowry v. Raabe, 89 Cal. 606, 27 Pac. 157.

The testimony of a person charged with the publication of a libel as to what he meant by the article in question, however, is properly excluded where the language of the article is not ambiguous. State v. Heacock, 106 Iowa, 191, 76 N. W. 654; Wilson v. Noonan, supra.

And a defendant in an action for an alleged libel cannot be allowed to state that, in the article published, he did not intend to charge the plaintiff with the commission of any crime or misdemeanor, where the article was not ambiguous, since, in such case, he must be held to have intended the meaning those words obviously conveyed. Hay v. Reid, supra.

But where a landlord said to a tenant, "If you have money in your pocket and do not pay your rent, you are acting like a thief," the landlord may testify, in an action for slander brought against him by the tenant, that he did not intend to accuse the plaintiff of the crime of stealing. Faxon v. Jones, 176 Mass. 206, 57 N. E. 359.

So, in an action for newspaper libel, the motive of a subordinate in publishing the libelous article is irrelevant if not communicated to his principal, and if a showing has been made of everything that passed between principal and subordinate before the publication. Maclean v. Scripps, 52 Mich. 214, 17 N. W. 815, 18 N. W. 209.

Where a person caused a publication alleged to be a libel, the question whether his belief in the truth of the publication was well or ill founded is for the jury in an action for damages for the libel. Henn v. Horn, supra.

8. To malicious prosecution.

The motive which operated upon and induced the defendant in an action for malicious prosecution to have the plaintiff arrested is directly involved in the issues before the jury, and, where he is a competent witness, the defendant has the right to explain to the jury the motives under which he acted. Flickinger v. Wagner, 46 Md. 580; Coleman v. Heurich, 2 Mackey, 189; Heap v. Parrish, 104 Ind. 36, 3 N. E. 549; Leake v. Carlisle, 75 N. Y. Supp. 382; George v. Johnson, 25 App. Div. 125, 49 N. Y. Supp. 203.

And a person who caused a prosecution against another, and who was sued for malicious prosecution, is entitled to testify, in the action against him, as to whether or not he was influenced by malice in instituting the prosecution. Autry v. Floyd, 127 N. C. 186, 37 S. E. 208; Coleman v. Heurich, supra; Spalding v. Lowe, 56 Mich. 366, 23 N. W. 46; Turner v. O'Brien, 5 Neb. 542; McCormack v. Perry, 47 Hun, 71; Greer v. Whitfield, 4 Lea, 85; Sherburne v. Rodman, 51 Wis. 474, 8 N. W. 414.

In McCormack v. Perry, supra, the court refused to follow Lawyer v. Loomis, 3 Thomp. & C. 396, so far as that case expresses the opinion or holds that, in an action for malicious prosecution, the law infers malice on the part of the defendant when the want of probable cause is established.

So, a defendant in an action for malicious prosecution may be asked on direct examination whether he made the complaint in such prosecution in good faith, believing the other party was guilty as therein charged. Sherburne v. Rodman, and Spalding v. Lowe, supra; Garrett v. Mannheimer, 24 Minn. 193; Turner v. O'Brien, supra; White v. Tucker, 16 Ohio St. 468; Greer v. Whitfield, supra.

And he may, while on the stand, testify that he acted in good faith, and had no ill feelings against the person prosecuted. Vansickle v. Brown, 68 Mo. 627.

And where one person started a prosecution against another for perjury, and the latter sued him for malicious prosecution, the defendant may testify in his own behalf that he believed the evidence given by the plaintiff, charged to be false, was material, and that he believed, at the time he made the complaint against the plaintiff for perjury, that he was guilty of the charge made against him, as tending to repel the imputation of malice and want of probable cause. McKown v. Hunter, 30 N. Y. 625.

So, in a suit for malicious prosecution by the arrest of a boy by a special officer of a railroad company, charging him with being unlawfully on the cars, in which the special officer is called to prove the arrest and the circumstances under which it was made, it is competent for the railroad company to show that the officer was not actuated by any feeling of ill-will, in order to exclude an inference of malice in fact. Campbell v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 97 Md. 341, 55 Atl. 532.

And a party may testify that, in taking out a writ of attachment, he did not intend to injure or harass defendants, and that he was actuated only by an honest desire to collect his debt. Gimbel v. Gomprecht (Tex. Civ. App.) 36 S. W. 781.

But, while a defendant, in an action for malicious prosecution, may testify that he believed the complaint upon which proceedings were instituted against the plaintiff to be true, such belief is a question for the jury, and the defendant's testimony has no more weight than that of any other witness. Spalding v. Lowe, supra.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

D. To fraud.

(a) Generally.

When a fraudulent intent is imputed to a person, or forms an element of a crime with which he is charged, he may deny the fraudulent intent, whether the effect is to defeat the action or to diminish the damage or punishment. Babcock v. People, 15 Hun, 347.

And where intent to defraud upon the part of the defendant is an issue in an action, his own testimony as to the absence of such intention is admissible on his own behalf. Hubbell v. Alden, 4 Lans. 214; Pope v. Hart, 35 Barb. 630.

And this is so, however inconclusive, unsatisfactory, or inconsistent his evidence may be. Pope v. Hart, supra.

So, where the facts of a case in which fraud is alleged do not necessarily prove it, but only tend to that conclusion, the evidence of the party charged with the fraud, when he is so circumstanced as to be a competent witness, should be received for what it may be considered worth. Seymour v. Wilson, 14 N. Y. 567.

And the former secretary and vice president of a corporation, in an action by it to set aside a decree foreclosing a vendor's lien, may be permitted to testify that they had no intent to defraud the corporation in waiving service of citation in the foreclosure proceeding. Fox v. Robbins (Tex. Civ. App.) 70 S. W. 597.

And where an action on an insurance policy was defended on the ground of fraud practised upon the adjusters in procuring an adjustment based upon an inspection of the books of the insured, which had been altered, testimony of the manager of the assured, who made the alterations, as to his intent in doing so, is admissible. Commercial Bank v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 87 Wis. 297, 58 N. W. 391.

So, where a person was charged with receiving a sum of money from another with intent to defraud him, and evidence of other payments made by the other to him before and after the payment in question was given, he may testify that, at the time of the payment in question, he did not intend to defraud the person making it, and, as proof of the other payments was competent only to show a guilty intention, he has the right to show also that he did not receive them with such intent. People v. Baker, 96 N. Y. 340.

(b) By false representation.

Where representations upon which a person acted are alleged to have been fraudulent, the belief of the person so acting upon them is one of the facts to be proved in an action for damages therefor, and the plaintiff's own testimony directly upon the point may be received. Thorn v. Helmer, 2 Keyes, 27; Ohio Coal Co. v. Davenport, 37 Ohio St. 194; Com. use of Shaffer v. Julius, 173 Pa. 322, 34 Atl. 21.

And testimony by the parties as to what was believed and intended and relied upon is admissible in an action for false representations in effecting a sale of property. Boddy v. Henry, 113 Iowa, 462, 53 L.R.A. 769, 85 N. W. 771.

Thus, in a suit involving the good faith of a sale of goods, which is attacked for fraud the vendor may testify in his own behalf regarding his motives in selling. Brown v. Lessing, 70 Tex. 546, 7 S. W. 783.

And, on an issue as to fraud or good faith of a party in making a transfer of his property, he may be asked in his examination as a witness, in general terms, if he made the transfer in good faith, and may answer in the same general terms that it was made in good faith, without stating the particular terms of the sale. Miner v. Phillips, 42 Ill. 123.

And, in an action for false and fraudulent representations concerning the character of land, the plaintiff may be permitted to testify that he was induced to buy the land by reason of the representations of the defendant that it was land of a certain character. Bartlett v. Falk, 110 Iowa, 346, 81 N. W. 602.

So, a purchaser charging that a sale to him was voidable by reason of false representations which induced it may testify, in a suit to enforce payment of the purchase money, that he would not have purchased if the false representations had not been made. Pridham v. Weddington, 74 Tex. 354, 12 S. W. 49.

Likewise, when the good faith of a purchase is sought to be impeached, the purchaser may be examined as to the intent with which it was made. Bedell v. Chase, 34 N. Y. 386; Standard Oil Co. v. Meyer Bros. Drug Co. 74 Mo. App. 446.

And, in an action to replevin goods from an assignee on the ground that the sale thereof to the assignor was induced by fraud, the vendee may be permitted to testify that he did not purchase them with intent to cheat his vendor, the plaintiff, nor with intent not to pay for them. Morris v. Wells, 4 Silv. Sup. Ct. 34, 7 N. Y. Supp. 61; Bell v. Kaufman, 9 Colo. App. 259, 47 Pac. 1035.

And a defendant in an action in attachment may testify as a witness in his own behalf as to his intent in regard to the transaction in question. Shockey v. Mills, 71 Ind. 288, 36 Am. Rep. 196.

And so, in a proceeding to dissolve an attachment. Brown v. Blanchard, 39 Mich. 790.

And where the good faith of one who buys a stock of goods is in question in a contest between himself and an officer who has taken them under attachment, the purchaser may properly testify that he bought them in good faith, and for what he considered a full consideration, and with no other purpose than to get the stock at a fair price. Bedford v. Penny, 58 Mich. 424, 25 N. W. 381.

So, whether representations as to his pecuniary circumstances, made at one time by a purchaser to a seller of goods, in order to obtain credit, influenced the seller in making a like sale to the same party at a subsequent time, is a question of fact, and it is competent for the seller to testify that they did. Grever v. Taylor, 53 Ohio St. 621, 42 N. E. 829; Safford v. Grout, 120 Mass. 20.

And a person who took a note in payment for property sold is competent to testify that he relied on representations of the purchaser that the note was good, and believed them to be true. Beebe v. Knapp, 28 Mich. 53; Safford v. Grout, supra.

But a person charged with obtaining a promissory note from another by false and fraudulent representations is entitled to be asked on the trial whether he stated anything to the other that he believed or knew to be false. Babcock v. People, 15 Hun, 347.

And where, in an action for damages for the loss of goods obtained from plaintiff by fraud, in which the plaintiff claims that he was induced to surrender the goods on the representations that a check given for their payment was good and would be paid, and that, after the plaintiff surrendered the goods, the defendant stopped payment of the check, it is proper to permit the defendant to testify that, when he gave the check, he had no other intent than that it should be paid, and that he stopped payment under advice of counsel. Cole v. High, 173 Pa. 590, 34 Atl. 292.

And it has been held that refusing to permit a purchaser of property to testify on an issue charging fraud in the purchase, as to his motive in purchasing it, is not material error. Powell v. Watts, 72 Ga. 770.

So, the understanding and intention of a person in regard to the meaning of an alleged misrepresentation which was acted on in a transaction between other parties may be proved by him in an action against him for fraud in making the statement. Nash v. Minnesota Title Ins. & T. Co. 163 Mass. 574, 28 L.R.A. 753, 47 Am. St. Rep. 489, 40 N. E. 1039.

And a person who sells his stock in a corporation, and brings an action for damages against another for a loss alleged to have been occasioned by a false representation of the defendant, which induced the plaintiff to sell his stock for less than its market value, may properly be asked what it was that induced him to sell his stock at the price at which he did. Weaver v. Cone, 174 Pa. 104, 34 Atl. 551.

So, upon an indictment for false pretenses, where the false pretenses alleged consists of an untrue statement of the accused with reference to his position and occupation, the belief of the person defrauded in the truth of the statement, and his opinion as to the position and occupation of the accused, formed upon such statements, is admissible as evidence of his belief in the truth of the false pretense, though it is not necessarily conclusive. R. v. King, 66 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 67.

But a person who sold goods upon the alleged false and fraudulent representations made by another as to the credit and responsibility of the purchaser, and who sued the person making them for damages, cannot be asked on the trial if he did not sell and deliver the goods on faith of the representations and statements of the defendant respecting the pecuniary position and responsibility of the purchaser, the question requiring the witness to declare to the jury what the private operations of his mind were at the time of the sale. Shaw v. Stine, 8 Bosw. 157.

(c) By insolvent, as against creditors.

Where it is in question whether an act was done to defraud creditors, it is competent to prove directly by the actor what his actual intent was. Sedgwick v. Tucker, 90 Ind. 271.

And the parties to the transaction may testify to their belief as to the solvency of the parties concerned. Durfee v. Bump, 20 N. Y. S. R. 833, 3 N. Y. Supp. 505.

Thus, on an issue of fact as to whether an assignment or transfer of property was made to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, it is competent, where the assignor is a witness, to inquire of him whether, in making the assignment or transfer, he intended to delay or defraud his creditors. Seymour v. Wilson, 14 N. Y. 567; Durfee v. Bump, supra; Persse & B. Paper Works v. Willett, 1 Robt. 131; Vilas Nat. Bank v. Newton, 25 App. Div. 62, 48 N. Y. Supp. 1009; Morris v. Wells, 4 Silv. Sup. Ct. 34, 7 N. Y. Supp. 61; Love v. Tomlinson, 1 Colo. App. 516, 29 Pac. 666; Selz v. Belden, 48 Iowa, 451; Gardom v. Woodward, 44 Kan. 758, 21 Am. St. Rep. 314, 25 Pac. 199; Bice v. Rogers, 52 Kan. 207, 34 Pac. 796; Campbell v. Holland, 22 Neb. 587, 35 N. W. 871; Pierce v. White, 10 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 552; Robertson v. Gourley, 84 Tex. 575, 19 S. W. 1006.

And he may be asked whether he sold out for any other purpose than to pay his debts. Sweeney v. Conley, 71 Tex. 543, 9 S. W. 548.

And he may testify that his object was to prevent sacrifices of his property. Forbes v. Logan, 4 Bosw. 475.

And it is admissible for the witness to state both the particular reasons that induced the act, and that he communicated them to his creditors before doing it. Persse & B. Paper Works v. Willett, supra.

And although, by statute, the question whether or not a sale of chattels was made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors is one of fact, which must be submitted to the jury upon the evidence, in the trial of an action wherein a sale is impeached as made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, the vendor, as a witness, may be asked whether he had such intent in making the sale. Blaut v. Gabler, 8 Daly, 48.

So, where one party to an action has introduced evidence of an intent to defraud his creditors on the part of the other party it is competent for the latter to rebut that evidence by testifying to his intentions. Graves v. Graves, 45 N. H. 323.

And where it is sought to impeach a person's conveyance to his wife on the ground that it was made for a fraudulent purpose, an inquiry into his intentions and motives in making the grant to her is relevant and material, and he may be inquired of as to such intentions and motives, and may testify that he executed the conveyance in good faith. Thacher v. Phinney, 7 Allen, 146; Woodman v. Penfield, 2 Silv. Sup. Ct. 246, 6 N. Y. Supp. 803; McGhee v. Wells, 57 S. C. 280, 76 Am. St. Rep. 567, 35 S. E. 529.

And the wife may also be permitted to testify that they had no intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors when the transfer was made. Woodman v. Penfield, supra.

And a wife who signed a deed of her husband, alleged to have been fraudulent, is a competent witness for the defendant on an issue as to whether or not the deed was made to hinder and delay creditors, to testify as to what was her intent and purpose in making the deed, and that she did not understand at the time that any payment was to be made for the conveyance, and that she was not willing to part with the property. Mulford v. Tunis, 35 N. J. L. 256.

So, where a conveyance to a trustee, made by a father for his daughter, is attacked as fraudulent and void as against creditors, the father may testify that his intention in having the deed made to his daughter was to pay money he owed her, and to set the land aside for her for the purpose of sending her to school. Cohen v. Parish, 105 Ga. 339, 31 S. E. 205.

Likewise, on the question of the validity of a chattel mortgage charged to be fraudulent, the mortgagee may testify directly what her intention was in taking it. Gentry v. Kelley, 49 Kan. 82, 30 Pac. 186.

And a person taking by assignment a mortgage and a note secured by it may testify in his own behalf, where the mortgage is attacked as fraudulent as against creditors, that he knew nothing of any understanding between the parties to the mortgage, that the mortgagor was to remain in possession, nor of any purpose on the part of either to defraud the mortgagor's creditors. Phifer v. Erwin, 100 N. C. 59, 6 S. E. 672.

And a mortgagor of a stock of goods, who was left in possession of them to dispose of them to the best advantage, without any arrangement for the appropriation of the moneys received, is competent to testify that he had no intent, in making the mortgage, to defraud his creditors. Ibid.

And where the question under consideration is whether a person was about to remove his property with intent to defraud his creditors, his belief on the subject is important, and he should be allowed to show, by his own testimony, that, when the attachment was served, he did not know that he ditch and water right had not used it for a period of three years prior to conveying it, it is competent for them, in an action to determine the right to the use of the water, to testify as to their intention in not using it. Gassert v. Noyes, 18 Mont. 216, 44 Pac. 959.

And where one person sues another for flowing his land, if he relies upon an abandonment of an easement by the defendant's predecessor in title, the predecessor may testify to his intent in doing certain acts, as bearing upon the question of abandonment. Butterfield v. Reed, 160 Mass. 361, 35 N. E. 1128.

So, a grantee of two adjoining lots of land, who, after the purchase of the second lot, built a permanent fence westerly of the division line between them, and extended a portion of a building on the first lot upon the second lot, east of the fence, and concreted the space between the building and the fence, and subsequently erected a building on the second lot, west of the fence, may testify, at the trial of a petition to enforce a lien against the second lot, describing it as it was described in the deed to him, that it was his intention, by the erection of the fence, to establish a new and permanent division between the lots. Pollock v. Morrison, 176 Mass. 83, 57 N. E. 326.

11. To dedication.

The question whether a person intends to make a dedication of ground to the public for a street or other purpose must be determined from his acts and declarations explanatory thereof, in connection with all the circumstances that surround and throw light upon the subject, and not from what he may subsequently testify to in relation to his real intentions. Fossion v. Landry, 123 Ind. 136, 24 N. E. 96; Columbus v. Dahn, 36 Ind. 330; Elizabethtown, L. & B. S. R. Co. v. Combs, 10 Bush, 382, 19 Am. Rep. 67.

And the testimony of a person alleged to have dedicated land for a city street, which dedication is shown by surrounding circumstances, that he never intended to dedicate it, is incompetent. Columbus v. Dahn, supra.

Where a dedication of land to public use is clearly manifested by unequivocal acts or declarations upon which the public or those interested in such dedication have acted, the fact that the owner may have entertained a different intention from that manifested by his acts or declarations is of no consequence; and in such case the real intent of the owner in making the dedication cannot be given in evidence. Lamar County v. Clements, 49 Tex. 347; Indianapolis v. Kingsbury, 101 Ind. 200, 51 Am. Rep. 749; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Noftsgger, 148 Ind. 101, 47 N. E. 332.

Where a dedication of land to public use is communicated by declarations of an equivocal character, which are consistent with a dedication to public use or the mere permissive use by the public for a temporary though indefinite period of time, however, the intention of the owner in permitting such use is of controlling importance, and admissible in evidence in determining whether or not the property had been dedicated to the public use. Lamar County v. Clements, supra.

And, on the controversy as to whether or not lands had been dedicated to the public for a street, the testimony of the person claiming to own them, showing the intention and purpose for which the alleged way was previously fenced up, is competent as tending to show an intention not to dedicate. Bidinger v. Bishop, 76 Ind. 244.

In the above case, Columbus v. Dahn, supra, was distinguished upon the ground that, in that case, the secret intention of the witness contradicted his acts manifesting a dedication.

So, in an action involving a question of dedication, where evidence has been given of the removal of a fence, as tending to show dedication, it is error for the court to exclude evidence of the intention with which such removal was made. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Noftsgger, supra.

In the above case, Columbus v. Dahn, supra, was distinguished upon the ground that, in that case, the witness was not asked the intention with which he had done any particular act which had been proved as tending to show a dedication, but as to his intention generally in connection with any act.

So, in Greer v. State, 53 Ind. 420, it was said that Columbus v. Dahn, supra, was decided upon the principle that a person who had indicated an intention to dedicate certain ground to the public for a street or highway was estopped to set up an intent different from that indicated by his acts and conduct.

12. To gambling contracts.

On an issue as to whether purchases of commodities on margins were bona fide or simulated, the defendant may be permitted to testify as to his intention not to receive or deliver any of the commodities, such evidence constituting a link in the chain, necessary to show the real intention of the parties to the transaction. Waite v. Frank, 14 S. D. 626, 86 N. W. 645; Pope v. Hanke, 155 Ill. 617, 28 L.R.A. 568, 40 N. E. 839; Counselman v. Reichart, 103 Iowa, 430, 72 N. W. 490; Kenyon v. Luther, 19 N. Y. S. R. 32, 4 N. Y. Supp. 498, a. c. subsequent appeal, 10 N. Y. Supp. 951.

And where an action is brought by one person against another, to recover money had and received, alleged to have been paid under a wagering contract in securities and commodities, prohibited by law, a person employed by the party paying over the money is a competent witness for the plaintiff to show that the defendant had no intention to perform the purchase by the actual receipt of securities and payment of the price. Crandell v. White, 164 Mass. 54, 41 N. E. 204.

The intention of the parties to a contract for the purchase and sale of stocks, however, may be established not merely by their assertions, but by all the circumstances attending the transaction; and is a question to be determined by the jury. Jamieson v. Wallace, 167 Ill. 388, 59 Am. St. Rep. 302, 47 N. E. 762.

And it has been held that a party who ordered the purchase of grain cannot testify that he did not intend, when he did so, to receive and pay for it, but intended to settle the bill upon differences, since such intent would be directly contradictory of the order given by him. Miller v. Bensley, 20 Ill. App. 528.

13. To cases involving negligence.

An employee suing his employer for personal injuries caused by defective appliances may properly be allowed to testify that he continued to work in reliance upon a promise to repair. Yerkes v. Northern P. R. Co. 112 Wis. 184, 88 Am. St. Rep. 961, 88 N. W. 33; Toledo Stove Co. v. Reep, 18 Ohio C. C. 58.

And he may, when testifying on his own behalf, be permitted to answer the question whether, if he had known the condition of certain appliances, the defects of which were alleged to have caused the accident, he would have continued to work with them. Great Northern R. Co. v. McLaughlin, 17 C. C. A. 330, 44 U. S. App. 189, 70 Fed. 669.

And where an employee was injured by the alleged negligence of his employer, and he remained in the employer's service more than a year after the alleged accident and injury without disclosing the fact or making complaint, his testimony may be given in an action for the injury, showing, as the reason for such conduct, that he was afraid of losing his position in his employer's service. Macy v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 35 Minn. 200, 28 N. W. 249.

So, where a person exercising superintendence over blasting operations negligently assumed that a charge had exploded and passed off through a connecting crevice in the rock, and directed a workman to drill a hole near the same place, and an explosion was caused by which the workman was injured, the workman may testify, in an action against his employer for the injury, that he was assured by the superintendent that there was no danger, and that he believed there was no danger after such assurance. Malcolm v. Fuller, 152 Mass. 160, 25 N. E. 83.

And a person sued for negligently setting and maintaining a fire for a lawful purpose upon his own land, so that it spread to the woodland of another, may properly be asked if, when he set his fire, he thought it a proper time to burn, as tending to negative the intent to injure, set forth in the plaintiff's declaration. Sturgis v. Robbins, 62 Me. 289.

So, where the plaintiff in an action against a railroad company for damages resulting from a collision between an electric car and a vehicle has testified that there was nothing between the motorman and the witness and his cart, he may be allowed to state that he supposed the motorman would stop the car, as tending to explain his conduct in managing his horse upon the occasion of the collision. Atlanta Consol. Street R. Co. v. Beauchamp, 93 Ga. 6, 19 S. E. 24.

And testimony of a witness in an action against a railroad company for damages resulting from a collision between a car and a vehicle, that, if the motorman had turned off the electricity or wound the brake, she supposed she would have seen it, is not objectionable as illegal. Ibid.

And a person suing a railroad company for injury caused by the fright of his horse, resulting from the lowering of gates and the passing of a train at a crossing, is entitled to testify in explanation of his failure to look in a particular direction as he approached the crossing. Gray v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 77 App. Div. 1, 78 N. Y. Supp. 653.

So, where a man's team became frightened on a bridge, and the man remained in the wagon until it fell from the bridge, he is entitled to testify, in an action by him against the bridge owner for the injury, that he thought at the time that the railing would stop the wagon, as a reason for not leaving the wagon before it fell from the bridge. Baldrige & C. Bridge Co. v. Cartrett, 75 Tex. 628, 13 S. W. 8.

A charge of criminal neglect in a petition, however, does not amount to a charge of criminal intent, authorizing a jury to assess punitive damages by way of punishment to the defendant; and a person driving in a street, who drove against a lady, and injured her, cannot be asked, in an action for damages for the injury, whether or not, after seeing the lady, he intentionally ran her down. Taylor v. Scherpe & K. Architectural Iron Co. 133 Mo. 349, 34 S. W. 581.

And where a locomotive fireman, under the direction of his engineer, stepped from the cab of the locomotive, in the nighttime, while the engine was standing on a trestle, in order to obtain an implement from the side of the tender, and was injured by falling through the trestle, the engineer is not competent to testify, in an action for the injury, as to whether he expected or intended that the fireman should get off the engine. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Gray (Tex. Civ. App.) 120 S. W. 527.

14. To other and miscellaneous matters.

In an action for trespass in which the malice of the defendant may be a ground of exemplary damages, he, being a competent witness, may testify what his motive and purposes were in doing the act complained of. Norris v. Morrill, 40 N. H. 395.

So, where letters which were evidence in a case were taken from the files, and the defendant admitted their taking, he has the right to testify in regard to his intention in taking them, and whether he took them with intent to suppress or destroy them, or with intent that they might be preserved and presented to the jury when his trial came on. Crawford v. United States, 212 U. S. 183, 53 L. ed. 465, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 260, reversing 30 App. D. C. 1.

And where it appeared from the examination in chief of the witness for the plaintiffs in an action of garnishment, that the account books of the principal debtor were destroyed before the trial, the garnishee defendant is entitled, on cross-examination, to show the reason for such destruction, in order to repel the inference of an improper motive. Gage v. Chesebro, 49 Wis. 486, 5 N. W. 881.

So, where both the seller and buyer of property believed a note given therefor to be that of a certain person, when it is in fact that of another, the contract of sale will be set aside for mistake; and one of the parties may properly testify that he believed the note delivered to him for his property to be that of the person who he supposed gave it. Parrish v. Thurston, 87 Ind. 440.

And where an employee took a note from the agent of his employer for wages due him, he may testify, in an action against the employer for services rendered, as to the intent with which he took the note. Kruse v. Seiffert & W. Lumber Co. 108 Iowa, 352, 79 N. W. 118.

And where a man deposited money in a savings bank, in his own name, as trustee for his son, the claim of the father thereto is not barred by reason of the form of the deposit, and, on a contest between the father and son, as to the right to the money, the father may testify as to his intention at the time of the deposit. People's Sav. Bank v. Webb, 21 R. I. 218, 42 Atl. 874.

So, an elector who gave a vote for a man, abbreviating his name by using the initial letters of his first name only, may testify, in an election contest, as to who was the person intended to be voted for. People ex rel. Yates v. Ferguson, 8 Cow. 107.

And a voter called as a witness in an action to try the title to an office may be asked for whom he voted, and, if he declines or is unable to state, he may be asked for whom he intended to vote, as one of the circumstances bearing upon the question. People ex rel. Smith v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 45, 84 Am. Dec. 242.

So, the plaintiff in an action upon an insurance policy, in which the defense was a fraudulent overvaluation, may properly be asked if he did not intend an amount named in the application to be what was stated in the application as invoice cost and 5 per cent added. Sturm v. Williams, 6 Jones & S. 325.

And where, in case of a loss under a policy of fire insurance, the insured made out two sworn statements, one covering his father's loss of personalty, and the other his own, and, on cross-examination, he testified that some of the articles in the statement of his own loss belonged to his father, a question as to the good faith of the execution of the papers is raised, and the witness is entitled to swear to his intent, and may testify that this was a mistake. Gristock v. Royal Ins. Co. 84 Mich. 161, 47 N. W. 549.

And a witness who, on his examination upon a second trial, gives his opinion that the value of property in controversy was greater than the amount he had testified to on a former trial, may be permitted to state the reasons for the change, by way of explanation. Phifer v. Erwin, 100 N. C. 59, 6 S. E. 672.

So, a party in a statutory proceeding against intruders may testify as to his mental state, and that he claims possession in good faith. Thompson v. Glover, 120 Ga. 440, 47 S. E. 935.

And where the selectmen of a town took from the collector the warrants and lists of taxes, and brought suit against him and his sureties to recover for uncollected taxes, the plaintiffs may show why they took the warrants and lists, and what was their purpose in so doing. Northumberland v. Cobleigh, 59 N. H. 250.

And where a corporation and its officers or directors are sued for infringement of a patent, and it is claimed by the plaintiff that the corporation was a mere device to protect the individual defendants against the consequences of their infringement, the testimony of one of the defendants as to his belief in the validity of a patent under which they claimed to make their machines is admissible as tending to show that the defendants were acting in good faith. National Cash Register Co. v. Leland, 37 C. C. A. 372, 94 Fed. 502.

So, where a church organ was bought with funds raised by voluntary subscription, whether the property shall remain in the contributors, or pass by gift to the church or society, depends upon the intention of the contributors; and on that question the person who obtained the subscriptions may testify as to the purpose for which he obtained them. Downes v. Union Cong. Soc. 63 N. H. 152.

And where a man purchased a binder with a warranty, and the machine failed to work, and it was claimed that his acts were intended to be and were an acceptance of the machine, he may testify that he persisted in cutting his grain with the machine when it did not do satisfactory work, for the reason that the vendor of it told him to go ahead and use the machine, and he would make it good. McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Hiatt, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 587, 95 N. W. 627.

So, where one person sold liquor to another, and the latter sought to avoid payment, on the ground that the sale was in violation of law, the agent of the seller may be asked if he knew that the purchaser had no license to sell liquors, and may testify that the purchaser intended to sell the liquors again, as tending to show the purpose of the purchase. Weil v. Golden, 141 Mass. 364, 6 N. E. 229.

Upon an issue whether a sawyer waived his lien on lumber for a sawmill by receiving notes in payment, or by surrendering possession of the lumber, however, his testimony that he did not intend to waive his lien is inadmissible, his intention not being the controlling feature of the case. Germain v. Central Lumber Co. 116 Mich. 245, 74 N. W. 644.

And where the defense to an action upon a promissory note is that the note had been given to cover an overdraft by a depositor in the discounting bank, testimony of one of the makers as to his understanding of the purpose and object of giving the note is inadmissible. Lacey v. Central Nat. Bank, 4 Neb. 179.

e. Proof by agent or associate.

Though a party may be examined as to his own intentions and motives when a question of fraudulent intent on his part is in issue, he cannot be permitted to testify as to the motives or intent of another party. Manufacturers' & T. Bank v. Koch, 105 N. Y. 630, 12 N. E. 9; Whetstone v. Bank at Montgomery, 9 Ala. 875; Clement v. Cureton, 36 Ala. 120; Odin Coal Co. v. Denman, 84 Ill. App. 190, affirmed in 185 Ill. 413, 76 Am. St. Rep. 45, 57 N. E. 192.

And an officer or agent of a corporation cannot testify directly to the intent of the whole corporation. Odin Coal Co. v. Denman, supra.

Nor can an attorney employed by a creditor to appear at the time of a disclosure of his debtor be allowed to testify as to his intention of bringing a suit upon a poor debtor's bond, formed at the time of the hearing. Winsor v. Clark, 39 Me. 428.

Officers of a corporation, whose acts of malicious intention would be acts of the corporation, however, may testify, in an action for libel against the corporation, that they had not, and, to their knowledge, no officer or employee of the corporation had, any hatred or ill-will or malicious intention toward the plaintiff in the publication of the alleged libel. Brown v. Massachusetts Title Ins. Co. 151 Mass. 127, 23 N. E. 733.

And the cashier of a bank in which a note was deposited or by which it was discounted, which note was altered by inserting a higher rate of interest, may testify whether he had any intention to defraud, or whether any of the officers of the bank, so far as he knew, had any intent to defraud, in what was done. Tucker v. Hendricks, 25 Ohio C. C. 426.

And where a contract was based upon representations and estimates made by the president and chief engineer of a corporation, one of the parties, and was attacked on the ground that such representations and estimates were fraudulent, the president and chief engineer of the corporation are competent to testify on its behalf that the representations were made in good faith, and from the best information obtainable, and that they had been made upon the estimates in good faith, and with no intention to defraud. Phelps v. George's Creek & C. R. Co. 60 Md. 536.

So, where an insolvent corporation assigns for the benefit of creditors, and the assignment is attacked for fraud, the directors may testify to their good motives in making the assignment. Covert v. Rogers, 38 Mich. 363, 31 Am. Rep. 319.

And, on an issue as to whether the right to divert and use water had been abandoned by the substitution of an iron pipe for part of a flume, evidence by the officers of the corporation which owned the flume, as to the intent with which the substitution was made, is competent. Wood v. Etiwanda Water Co. 147 Cal. 228, 81 Pac. 512.

And a director of a corporation may testify as to his intention in voting for an assignment contested on the ground of actual fraud. National Bank v. George M. Scott & Co. 18 Utah, 400, 55 Pac. 374.

So, where the intent to defraud of a defendant is an issue in the action, his testimony as to the absence of such intent is admissible on behalf of codefendants alleged to have been acting in concert and combination with him in the fraud. Hubbell v. Alden, 4 Lans. 214.

And when a husband and wife are in accord, evidence of the intention of the wife in regard to the selection of a homestead is admissible as pointing to the intention of the husband. Gunn v. Wynne (Tex. Civ. App.) 43 S. W. 290.

And where a father and son were charged with being engaged in the same difficulty which resulted in a homicide, and were separately indicted therefor, the father, as a witness on behalf of the son, may be permitted to testify that he did not intend to have any difficulty. Alexander v. State, 118 Ga. 26, 44 S. E. 851.

Nor is evidence by a witness in an action to rescind a contract for a sewer extension, on the ground that it was entered into under a mutual mistake caused by the error of an engineer employed to make the estimate, of what was in the mind of himself and contractors, incompetent, where it appears that he referred, and was understood to refer, to what was in his own mind as representing them. Long v. Athol, 196 Mass. 497, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 96, 82 N. E. 665.

And, on the trial of an indictment under a Federal statute for an attempt to defraud by means of the postal service by sending out notices promising employment for unemployed teachers, it is competent to ask an agent of the defendant, whose duty it was to send out notices of vacancies, whether, in sending them out, she ever knowingly misrepresented facts, or whether she sent them without having before her information as to the existence of such vacancies, as tending to show the defendant's intent in the conduct of his business. Bass v. United States, 20 App. D. C. 232.

So, on an issue as to whether a transfer of property was made to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, the seller or his agent through whom the sale was made may properly be asked whether or not the transfer was made with intent to delay or defraud creditors. Love v. Tomlinson, 1 Colo. App. 516, 29 Pac. 666.

f. Weight and conclusiveness.

The testimony of a party as to his intent is not conclusive, but is to be weighed and considered by the jury with the other evidence in the case, in passing upon the question of actual intent. Thurston v. Cornell, 38 N. Y. 281; Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Stone, 21 Fla. 555; Juniata Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Hetzel, 103 Pa. 507.

It is not conclusive as against the inference to be drawn from his actions and the circumstances giving color to them. Larson v. Thoma (Iowa) 121 N. W. 1059.

Whether a witness testifying to his purpose or intention should be believed is a question solely for the consideration of a jury. State v. Hall, 132 N. C. 1094, 44 S. E. 553; Graves v. Graves, 45 N. H. 323.

And so is the weight to be given to the testimony of a person as to his belief and intent in a matter. McKown v. Hunter, 30 N. Y. 625; Thorn v. Helmer, 2 Keyes, 27; Wohlford v. People, 148 Ill. 296, 36 N. E. 107; State v. Dillon, 48 La. Ann. 1365, 20 So. 913; McGhee v. Wells, 57 S. C. 280, 76 Am. St. Rep. 567, 35 S. E. 529; Wade v. Odle, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 656, 54 S. W. 786.

Nor does the impracticability of contradicting a witness when he is allowed to testify to the operation of his own mind form any objection to the admissibility of such testimony; it is to be received, and the weight to be given it is a question for the jury. Thorn v. Helmer, supra; Conway v. Clinton, 1 Utah, 215.

While a party to an action or a proceeding may testify as to his mental state, this does not prevent the jury from testing the reasonableness and truthfulness of his statement by comparing it with all the facts and circumstances attending the transaction. Thompson v. Glover, 120 Ga. 440, 47 S. E. 935.

And, in determining the issue of intent, the jury should consider the party's statements as to his own intent, together with all the other evidence, and all the facts and circumstances in evidence in the case. Odin Coal Co. v. Denman, 84 Ill. App. 190, affirmed in 185 Ill. 413, 76 Am. St. Rep. 45, 57 N. E. 192; Royce v. Gazan, 76 Ga. 79.

Though a witness claimed to have acted honestly and in good faith with reference to a matter in which his honesty and good faith were impeached, the court has the right to disregard his unsupported or improbable professions, and to construe his acts in the light which the facts and circumstances of the case throw upon his possible and probable motives, designs, and interests. Bruce v. Kelly, 7 Jones & S. 27.

And where a party testifies to his intention, the court should, if asked, and perhaps upon its own motion, state to the jury in substance that, in judging of a man's belief or intention, they should consider all the evidence and all of the circumstances; that his statement in that respect is not conclusive upon them; but they should arrive at their own conclusion upon the whole case, including the statement of the witness, giving it such weight as, under all the circumstances, they believe it fairly entitled to. Watson v. Chesire, 18 Iowa, 202, 87 Am. Dec. 382.

And where a person charged with crime testifies as to the intent with which he did the act, and his testimony is unreasonable and inconsistent with the experience of mankind, the court is not bound to believe him, and to instruct the jury, on his testimony, for a lesser degree of the offense charged. State v. Nelson, 118 Mo. 124, 23 S. W. 1088.

And the denial of a party charged with fraud that there was any intention to defraud has been held to be nothing more than an expression of opinion of the party charged with the fraud, as to the character of the transaction, and his own estimate of it. Newman v. Cordell, 43 Barb. 448.

So, on an issue as to the fraudulent character of an assignment, the testimony of the assignor that he made it for the purpose of gaining time to pay his creditors and to pay his debts establishes no fact conclusively, but is to be weighed and considered with the other evidence in the case, in passing upon and determining the question of actual fraudulent intent. Griffin v. Marquardt, 21 N. Y. 121.

And where the evidence in an attachment case, other than that given by the defendant himself, tends strongly to establish the fact of the fraudulent intent in contracting the debt, direct testimony of the defendant as to the absence of such intent will not necessarily be permitted to outweigh the other evidence in the case. Anderson v. Wehe, 62 Wis. 402, 22 N. W. 584.

And a disavowal, upon the part of a purchaser of property, of any improper purpose in making the purchase, is subject to correction on an issue in an action as to the fraudulent character of the sale, by evidence going to show the contrary, under proper instructions from the court. Powell v. Watts, 72 Ga. 770.

III. Conclusion.

At common law, parties to an action could not testify at all; and, of course, could not testify as to their intent. The only way of proving intent was by evidence of such conduct or of such circumstances as tended directly or indirectly to show the particular intent. A few of the early American cases leaned toward or adopted this rule, and while it has been repudiated probably in all the states except Alabama, it always has been and is now the law in that state, and is applicable alike in criminal and civil cases, though an exception exists, permitting the examination of a witness as to the intent with which he did acts previously testified to by him, on cross-examination or in rebuttal.

Statutes have been generally, if not universally, enacted, however, by which parties are permitted to testify, and under these statutes, outside of Alabama, the rule would seem to be universal that a party may testify to his intent in doing an act when intent is a material issue, the test of admissibility being the materiality of the intent in giving character to the act. This rule, however, does not warrant the admission of evidence of motive or intent which will have the effect of varying the terms of a written instrument, though motive or intent may be shown to establish reliance upon false representations in entering into a contract, and to establish mistake, and that therefore there was no contract. Nor does this rule warrant a witness in expressing an opinion involving a conclusion of law or a reflection of the witness upon a supposed state of facts; it is the existence of an intention or motive as a fact that may be proved. Nor does the rule warrant evidence of mental operations and intentions depending upon nonexistent or supposititious circumstances or future contingencies which did not happen. Nor is the secret and undisclosed intent or motive of a person admissible in evidence to affect the rights of another. And where a wrongful act is intentionally done, and the intent to do the act is the criminal intent which imparts to it the character of an offense, he cannot deny the existence of the criminal intent; the material question in such case is, Did he intend to do that which the law prohibits? So, where, by law, certain consequences must necessarily follow an act done, the presumption that such consequences were intended is ordinarily conclusive, and cannot be rebutted by evidence of the absence of such intention. And when the case presents circumstances in themselves conclusive evidence of a particular intent, no proof of innocent motives, however strong, will overcome the legal presumption. And evidence by a person of intent in doing an act should not be permitted to prevail against inconsistent overt acts on his part.

These rules apply generally in both criminal and civil suits, applying to all criminal acts in which malice, intent, or motive is involved, and to questions of intent in usury, libel and slander, and malicious prosecution. And they apply also to fraudulent intent, both in general matters and as against creditors, and to reliance upon fraudulent representations. And they apply to intent in matters pertaining to domicile, homestead, and dedication, as well as to practically everything else with relation to civil matters in any way involving intent. And while this note is limited to the "right of one to testify as to his intent," and it is a rule of law that one person cannot be permitted to testify to the motive or intent of another, where the acts and intention of a person would be those of a principal for whom he was agent, or of a corporation for which he was an officer, he may testify to the motive, good faith, or intent of the representative or corporate act performed by him.

The testimony of a party as to his intent is not conclusive. Whether it is to be believed at all, and the weight to be given it, are questions for a jury. And it should be considered in connection with the facts and circumstances of the case throwing light upon his possible and probable motives, designs, and interests.

F. H. B.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

RICHARD PYROSS, Respt.,
v.
JOHN W. FRASER, Appt.

(82 S. C. 498, 64 S. E. 407.)

Mortgage — tender — effect.

1. A tender before maturity of the amount of principal and interest which will be due at maturity on a mortgage is not sufficient to discharge its lien.

Same — partial payment — acceptance — effect.

2. Acceptance before maturity of a partial payment on a mortgage will not waive the right to have the balance of the investment remain until maturity.

(April 24, 1909.)

Case Note. — Effect of tender before maturity of debt to discharge lien of mortgage.

The earlier cases on this question are gathered in a subject note to Parker v. Beasley, 33 L.R.A. 235.

An examination of the cases there found will reveal the fact that, in general, they are in accord with the doctrine of Pyross v. Fraser; viz., that a tender before maturity of the amount of principal and interest which will be due at maturity on a mortgage is not sufficient to discharge its lien. This was also recognized in Buchanan v. Selden, 43 Neb. 559, 61 N. W. 736, where

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Georgetown County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to foreclose a mortgage. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. T. St. Mark Sasportas for appellant.

Mr. M. W. Pyatt for respondent.

Woods, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought for the foreclosure of a mortgage on land in the city of Georgetown, given by the defendant to the plaintiff to secure a bond for the sum of $250, the purchase money of the land. The complaint alleged the balance due at the time of the commencement of the action to be $117, with interest and attorneys' fees. The defense alleged in the answer was tender on March 14, 1905, of the sum of $67, as the full amount then unpaid. The issues were referred to a referee, who reported that the last instalment of the bond became due on July 20, 1905, and on that day the entire sum due by the defendant was $47, and that the defendant's tender on March 14, 1905, was not a legal tender, and did not discharge the lien of the mortgage, because the tender was made before the last instalment fell due, and the mortgagee could not be compelled to accept his debt until maturity. The circuit court sustained the referee and made a decree of foreclosure.

Few adjudications of the question here made as to the right of a debtor to pay his debt before maturity are to be found, for the reason that a creditor rarely refuses to accept a premature tender of his debt when it includes interest to the date of maturity.

In all the cases, however, where the question has been decided under the common law, it has been held that the creditor cannot be compelled to give up his investment before maturity. Quynn v. Whetcroft, 3 Harr. & McH. 136, 1 Am. Dec. 375; Abbe v. Goodwin, 7 Conn. 377; Brown v. Cole, 14 Sim. 427. To hold otherwise would be to change the contract of the parties. The creditor may, however, waive his right to insist on strict compliance with the contract.

In this case it was admitted the plaintiff received from the defendant without objection a partial payment of $15 of the last instalment on 15th February, 1904, long before it became due. The argument is that this showed waiver of right to insist on postponement of payment of the remainder until maturity. But this favor extended to the defendant as to part of the debt did not bind the creditor to extend a like favor as to the remainder. Each party had an equal right to require the other to perform the contract as it was written. Paying a part of the debt before maturity would not have been a waiver by the debtor of his right to postpone payment of the remainder until maturity. So receiving a part of the debt before maturity was not a waiver of the right of the creditor to hold the remainder of his investment until maturity. The provisions of § 2375 of Civil Code of 1902, requiring satisfaction of mortgages on payment or legal tender of the debt, though relied on by the appellant, does not affect the matter, for the reason that the tender before maturity was not a legal tender.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the Circuit Court be affirmed.

it was sought to foreclose a mortgage on real estate, by the terms of which the mortgagee was permitted to declare the whole debt due upon a default in interest payments.

So, in Bowen v. Julius, 141 Ind. 310, 40 N. E. 700, the tender of the amount represented by a note, the day before it was in fact due, was held insufficient to sustain an action for the cancelation and satisfaction of the mortgage.

However, in Rice v. Kahn, 70 Wis. 323, 35 N. W. 465, it was held that, if a mortgagee, availing himself of a stipulation in a chattel mortgage, takes possession of the property, or is about to do so, before the debt secured by the mortgage falls due, he thereby confers upon the mortgagor the right to pay the debt and keep his property.

And where, by the terms of a deed of trust, it is contemplated that the mortgagor may pay off the debt before maturity, such payment will discharge the lien of the deed 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of trust. Snow v. Bass, 174 Mo. 149, 73 S. W. 630.

In Silva v. Turner, 166 Mass. 407, 44 N. E. 532, it was held that, under an agreement that the mortgagee shall accept payment of part of the principal debt at stated times of payment of interest, the mortgagee is bound to accept payments of the principal only upon those dates; and therefore a tender of the whole of the principal and interest upon other days will not defeat a foreclosure of the mortgage because of a breach of condition on the part of the mortgagor to pay taxes.

For cases on effect of tender, after default, of amount due under chattel mortgage, see case note to Thomas v. Seattle Brewing & Malting Co. 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1164.

Effect of tender by vendee of purchase price before due, to put other party in default, see case note to Hanson v. Fox, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 338.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

CITY OF CHICAGO

v.

JANE CREIGH WELLS, Appt.

(236 Ill. 129, 86 N. E. 197.)

Special assessment — subdivision of property.

A municipal corporation cannot be authorized by the legislature to subdivide a tract of private property within its limits for the purpose of levying a tax for water mains with house connections, under a constitutional provision that no person shall be deprived of his property without due process of law.

(October 26, 1908.)

Case Note. — Right to subdivide private owner's land for the purpose of assessment for public improvement.

The conclusion reached in CHICAGO v. WELLS finds support in the Illinois cases reviewed in that opinion, and in State, Muller, Prosecutor, v. Bayonne, 55 N. J. L. 102, 25 Atl. 267, in which it was held that assessing officers had no authority, for the purpose of assessment for the construction of a sewer, to subdivide into lots a tract of land which the owner had always treated as an entirety.

On the other hand, the language of the court in State v. Robert P. Lewis Co. (Ramsey County v. Robert P. Lewis Co.) 72 Minn. 87, 42 L.R.A. 639, 75 N. W. 108, would seem to tend to an opposite conclusion, though the precise question here offered for discussion was not passed upon. The court, in holding that a tract could not be regarded as partly platted and partly unplatted, for the purpose of making assessments thereon, if the owner had not actually platted it, went on to say that, if any portion was treated and considered as if laid out into lots, all must be.

As to whether the establishment of a street across an undivided portion of land will make it two parcels, the authorities are divided. In De Koven v. Lake View, 129 Ill. 399, 21 N. E. 813, and in Watts v. River Forest, 227 Ill. 31, 81 N. E. 12, it was held that the division of a tract of land by a street did not, for the purpose of assessment, make two separate parcels of the lot.

On the other hand, in Spangler v. Cleveland, 35 Ohio St. 409, and in Younglove v. Hackman, 43 Ohio St. 69, 1 N. E. 230, it was held that the opening of a street by a municipal corporation through a tract of land which stood on the tax duplicate as one lot severed the same into two lots for the purposes of assessment.

And in Re Westlake Ave. 40 Wash. 144, 82 Pac. 279, it was held that where a street divided a lot into two parcels, a tax for the benefits accruing to each of them from a public improvement should be assessed thereon separately.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A PPEAL by objector from a judgment of the Cook County Court confirming a special assessment against her property for the laying of water service pipes. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John M. Blakeley, for appellant:

The act is unconstitutional and void in so far as it provides that unsubdivided tracts of land may be subdivided for the purpose of spreading assessments for house drains and water service pipes.

Warren v. Chicago, 118 Ill. 329, 9 N. E. 883, 11 N. E. 218; Cram v. Chicago, 139 Ill. 265, 28 N. E. 758; People ex rel. Kochersperger v. Cook, 180 Ill. 341, 54 N. E. 173; Bickerdike v. Chicago, 185 Ill. 280, 56 N. E. 1096; Braceville Coal Co. v. People,

In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Chicago (Ill.) 27 N. E. 920, in which it appeared that a tract of land owned by a railroad company, through which its right of way passed, was assessed as two parcels, one on each side of the right of way, such assessment was held not to be erroneous, where the sum of the two assessments was not more than the benefits received by the entire block. This decision, however, proceeded apparently upon the ground that the railroad company had in fact divided the tract by running its right of way through it.

The authorities are also divided upon the question whether it is proper to make an assessment only upon that portion of an undivided tract of land which is benefited by the improvement. In Barber v. Chicago, 152 Ill. 37, 38 N. E. 253, and in Mock v. Muncie, 9 Ind. App. 536, 37 N. E. 281, an assessment under such circumstances was upheld.

And in Forry v. Ridge, 56 Mo. App. 615, in which it appeared that an assessment for a street improvement was made upon a tract of land according to the frontage thereof, but the tax bill purported to charge such front extending back only a portion of the entire depth of the tract, the court, though saying that the entire tract, to the full depth, should have been described in the tax bill, refused to condemn the assessment, where it appeared that the owner could not have been injured thereby.

On the other hand, in Sheedy v. Chicago, 221 Ill. 111, 77 N. E. 539, in which it appeared that the property on the opposite side of the street from the undivided tract of land in question was divided into lots, and that the owner of such undivided tract objected to an assessment, upon the ground that the lots opposite each end of his property were not assessed, it was held that it was the assessing officer's duty to assess each tract or parcel benefited by the improvement by its legal description as one tract, without attempting to divide it into smaller tracts to correspond with some legal existing subdivision of other property that was included in the benefited district, —citing Cram v. Chicago, 139 Ill. 265, 28 with nearly 1,200 feet of frontage, into strips of 25 feet in width, fronting on Clark street, or be deprived of a greater or less number of the water service pipes. The unsubdivided tract is assessed in strips of 25 feet each, and each strip is charged with $20.52, according to an arbitrary subdivision of the property, without the sanction of the owner. If property may be subdivided to suit the views of a board of local improvements and city council, against the will of the owner, for the purpose of special assessment, the same thing could be done under any other form of taxation, so as to compel an owner to subdivide property in only one way. The Constitution, which stands for and expresses the will of the people, prohibits an interference with rights of property by legislative enactment, and denies to the legislature the power to provide that a municipality may subdivide the property of an owner without his consent, for any purpose whatever. The amendment and the ordinance based upon it are void.

The judgment of the County Court is reversed, and the cause remanded.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

JOSEPHINE NIEMEYER

v.

CHICAGO, BURLINGTON, & QUINCY
RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(— Iowa, —, 121 N. W. 521.)

Action — married woman — independent employment.

The intention of a music teacher to continue her vocation after marriage is sufficient to give her a right to maintain an action in her own name for personal injuries happening after that event, although, in the few weeks which have elapsed between the marriage and the accident, she has not in fact performed any service as such,—at least, where the husband consents to her maintaining her independent employment.

(June 5, 1909.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Scott County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Lane & Waterman, for appellant:

In order to recover, it must be shown that the woman was in fact engaged in an independent business or employment when the injury occurred.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Fleming v. Shenandoah, 67 Iowa, 505, 56 Am. Rep. 354, 25 N. W. 752; Tuttle v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 42 Iowa, 518; Nichols v. Dubuque & D. R. Co. 68 Iowa, 732, 28 N. W. 44; Denton v. Ordway, 108 Iowa, 487, 79 N. W. 271; McClintic v. McClintic, 111 Iowa, 615, 82 N. W. 1017; Elenz v. Conrad, 115 Iowa, 183, 88 N. W. 337.

Messrs. Ely & Bush, for appellee:

Plaintiff was engaged in an independent business, and the mere fact that she had gone upon a wedding trip, which prevented her from carrying on that business while traveling on such trip, was not an abandonment or discontinuation of her independent business.

Texas & P. R. Co. v. Humble, 181 U. S. 57, 45 L. ed. 747, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526; Mewhirter v. Hatten, 42 Iowa, 288, 20 Am. Rep. 618; Gilbert v. Glenn, 75 Iowa, 513, 1 L.R.A. 479, 39 N. W. 818; Lindsey v. Lindsey, 116 Iowa, 480, 89 N. W. 1096; Ehlers v. Blumer, 129 Iowa, 168, 105 N. W. 406; Croft v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 134 Iowa, 411, 109 N. W. 723; Millmore v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 198 Mass. 370, 84 N. E. 468;

Case Note. — Effect of temporary cessation from independent employment upon right of married woman to recover for loss of earning capacity due to personal injury.

A thorough search has disclosed but one other case involving the question presented in NIEMEYER v. CHICAGO, B. & Q. R. Co. as to the right of a married woman to recover for the loss of her earning power because of personal injuries, where at the time, she was temporarily not following an independent employment.

In Texas & P. R. Co. v. Humble, 181 U. S. 57, 45 L. ed. 747, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526, the plaintiff, a married woman, had for some years conducted a hotel as her sole and separate business; during a period of temporary illness she had given up the business, but had in substance recovered when she sustained injuries which incapacitated her for further work. It was held that, under these circumstances, the lower court properly refused to charge that the plaintiff could not recover for diminished capacity to labor because there was "no evidence showing any capacity to labor or earn money at and just before she was injured." To pin the evidence of the capacity down to the very point of time when the injury was inflicted was said to be refining too much on the principle involved. "This loss of ability to make earnings outside the discharge of household duties, and irrespective of her husband, was, under the statutes of Arkansas, her loss, and not her husband's, and the mere fact that, at the moment of the injury, she happened to be out of business, should not deprive her of the benefit of the rule which would have been otherwise applicable."

Harmon v. Old Colony R. Co. 165 Mass. 100, 30 L.R.A. 658, 52 Am. St. Rep. 499, 42 N. E. 505; Jordan v. Middlesex R. Co. 138 Mass. 425; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dick, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1831, 78 S. W. 914; Powell v. Augusta & S. R. Co. 77 Ga. 192, 3 S. E. 757; Hamilton v. Great Falls Street R. Co. 17 Mont. 334, 42 Pac. 860, 43 Pac. 713.

Weaver, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, a married woman, while a passenger on one of defendant's trains, was injured in a collision, and brought this action at law to recover damages. There was a verdict and judgment in her favor for the sum of $2,300. As the appellant does not contest the question of its liability to make compensation to plaintiff for the pain and suffering caused by the injury, and assigns error only upon the ruling of the trial court allowing her to recover for loss or impairment of earning capacity, we shall consume no time in referring to the circumstances of the accident, or discussing questions of negligence or contributory negligence.

The evidence tended to show that the plaintiff was a resident of Jamestown, North Dakota. She had been recently married, and, after a wedding trip to the South, was returning with her husband to their home at Jamestown, when the accident occurred. Prior to her marriage she taught music, and at that date had a class of about thirty pupils, from each of whom she received $1 per lesson. Before leaving upon her wedding trip, she promised her pupils to resume charge of their music lessons on her return, and it was her intention, approved or agreed to by her husband, to continue in said business; but she had in fact given no lessons and earned no independent income between the date of her marriage and her injury. On this showing, the appellant asks the court to instruct the jury that, plaintiff having failed to prove that she had been engaged in any independent business since her marriage, she could not recover in her own right for loss of earnings or earning capacity; and that her recovery, if any, must be confined to compensation for pain and suffering caused by the injury received by her in the collision. This request was refused, and the court charged the jury that, if appellee had, prior to her marriage and wedding journey, engaged in music teaching as an independent calling on her own account, her marriage and trip were in fact only a temporary interruption of her said business, and she was intending to resume the work of her said calling on returning to 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) her home, but was prevented from so doing by her injury in the collision upon appellant's road, then she would be entitled to compensation not only for pain and suffering, but also for loss, if any, of earnings and impairment of earning capacity. The same question was raised upon the trial by objections to testimony offered. The record as to these objections and rulings is confused, but we think the facts as we have stated them are fairly shown, or, at least, that the testimony left in the case by the rulings of the trial court was sufficient to support such findings. It is to be admitted that our statute, which apparently provides for the removal of common-law disabilities of coverture so far as they hamper or restrict the rights of married women to transact business and to sue and be sued in their own right, has been so construed by the courts as to leave the time, labor, earnings, and earning capacity of the wife among the assets of the husband,—and, we may add, not infrequently, the most valuable of his possessions. It is held, however, that, if she has a separate and independent employment in which she earns and receives compensation from her customers and employers, she is sufficiently mistress of her own time and of her own person to maintain in her own right an action for damages on account of injuries disabling her from pursuing such employment. Fleming v. Shenandoah, 67 Iowa, 505, 56 Am. Rep. 354, 25 N. W. 752.

Counsel for appellant do not deny the rule thus stated, but ask us to hold that appellee, not having performed any service as a music teacher during the few days or weeks intervening between her marriage and her injury, cannot be said to have had, as a married woman, any independent employment. In support of this proposition it is said that marriage works a radical change in the legal status of a woman, that she is presumed to have entered the household of her husband as his helpmate; that, to justify the finding of any independent right on her part to her own time and earning capacity after such event, there must be something more than an intention or mental purpose on her part to resume and continue the work on her own account, and that she must actually have resumed the independent employment after marriage before she can maintain an action of this nature. In the cases to which we are cited we find nothing to uphold the doctrine we are here asked to approve. The most they can be said to establish is that service performed by a married woman as a housewife and in the care and nurture of her family constitutes no cause of action by her against her husband, and, so long as her activities are confined to such employment, the husband alone can maintain an action for the loss of her time and earning capacity when she has been negligently or wrongfully injured; but marriage works no surrender of her legal capacity to carry on other business or to serve another employer than her husband, and if, while single, she has fitted herself to be a teacher, a stenographer, a bank clerk, a milliner, or musician, and as such has built up a business from which she derives a substantial income, and then marries with the expectation and intention of continuing such employment,—and especially when such purpose is known to and concurred in by the man she marries,—we see no reason why she does not remain teacher, stenographer, clerk, milliner, and musician, with all the legal rights, immunities, and liabilities which would have been hers had she remained single. Her status with relation to her domestic and family relations has been changed, but her status as a business person remains unchanged. It would be unreasonable to say that a brief vacation from such service during the honeymoon season operates as an abandonment of her business, and that she cannot be held to have an independent occupation until she returns to earth and takes up again her accustomed labor. The lawyer who temporarily leaves an established business to take a wedding journey does not cease ad interim to be a lawyer, simply because he tries no case and earns no professional fees during his absence. The appellee was none the less a music teacher because she had become a wife. She had left a large class of pupils, to whom she was returning to continue their course of instruction. Whatever she might earn in such employment would be her own, and her capacity to earn money in this manner was her own personal capital, her stock in trade, for the loss or impairment of which she was entitled to recover. Whether it be necessary to show the husband's consent to the independent employment before the wife can successfully assert a right of recovery in this class of actions we do not undertake to decide, for the record here sufficiently shows the consent.

There was no error in the rulings of the trial court, or in the refusal of the instructions asked by the appellant, or in denying appellant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and the judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.
23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

LEWIS F. COOPER, Plff. in Err.,

v.

CITY OF GOODLAND et al.

(— Kan. —, 102 Pac. 244.)

Waterworks plant — municipal regulation.

1. Under the provisions of chapter 135, p. 223, Laws 1907, power is delegated to cities of the second class to make by ordinance every necessary and reasonable regulation for the control, operation, and maintenance of waterworks plants supplying the inhabitants of the city, provided such regulation be not in derogation of the laws of the state, nor subversive of the property rights of the inhabitants.

Public water supply — municipal regulation — meters.

2. An ordinance of a city of the second class, owning and operating waterworks to supply its inhabitants, which prohibits consumers from taking from its mains any water except such as shall have been measured by means of a water meter, and that meters of the kind and make ordered by the mayor and council shall be furnished, or the expense thereof be borne by the consumers severally, also reserving to the city the right to stop the supply of water for a violation of the regulations, is not unreasonable, but is valid.

(May 8, 1909.)

Headnotes by SMITH, J.

Case Note. — Right of municipal corporation to require use of water meters and to impose expense of same on consumers.

It is within the power of a municipal corporation to require consumers of water, in certain cases, to install meters, and keep them in repair at their own expense, under charter authority to legislate as to means for ascertaining the amounts to be paid as water rates by consumers, and to make regulations for the protection of the works and the use thereof. State ex rel. Hallauer v. Gosnell, 116 Wis. 606, 61 L.R.A. 33, 93 N. W. 542.

It was also held in State ex rel. Hallauer v. Gosnell, supra, that an ordinance which required consumers who used large service pipes to procure a meter, and left the matter of using a meter optional with other consumers, was not unreasonable or discriminating.

The right of a city to require the use of water meters by consumers was upheld in Powell v. Duluth, 91 Minn. 53, 97 N. W. 450, where a regulation of the board of water commissioners provided that meters might be installed at the wish of the consumer or at the pleasure of the board, and the latter had refused the application of a ERROR to the District Court for Sherman County to review an order refusing to enjoin the defendants from installing a water meter on complainant's premises and from shutting off his water supply. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. C. C. Perdieu and John Hartzler, for plaintiff in error:

The defendant city sustains the same relation to the property owners and water consumers as a private corporation, which cannot compel its patrons to install water meters at the expense of the consumer.

30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 404; Albert v. Davis, 49 Neb. 579, 68 N. W. 945; Louisville Gas Co. v. Dulaney, 100 Ky. 405, 38 L.R.A. 125, 38 S. W. 703; State, Red Star S. S. Co., Prosecutors, v. Jersey City, 45 N. J. L. 246; Springle Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 82 Cal. 286, 6 L.R.A. 756, 16 Am. St. Rep. 116, 22 Pac. 910, 1046; Smith v. Birmingham Waterworks Co. 104

Ala. 315, 16 So. 123; State ex rel. Weise v. Sedalia Gaslight Co. 34 Mo. App. 501; Blondell v. Consolidated Gas Co. 89 Md. 732, 46 L.R.A. 187, 43 Atl. 817; Public Service Corp. v. American Lighting Co. 67 N. J. Eq. 122, 57 Atl. 482; Smith v. Capital Gas Co. 132 Cal. 209, 54 L.R.A. 769, 64 Pac. 258; Ferguson v. Metropolitan Gaslight Co. 37 How. Pr. 189; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. p. 95 (note 2); American Waterworks Co. v. State, 46 Neb. 194, 30 L.R.A. 477, 50 Am. St. Rep. 610, 64 N. W. 711.

Mr. E. F. Murphy, for defendants in error:

Municipal water companies who serve the inhabitants of a city with water may make rules for the government of their customers in the use of water, and enforce such rules even by shutting off such customers' supply of water for any violation thereof.

Shiras v. Ewing, 48 Kan. 170, 29 Pac. 320; Wagner v. Rock Island, 146 Ill. 139, 21 L.R.A. 519, 34 N. E. 545; 30 Am. & Eng.

consumer to discontinue the use of a meter and renew the uniform flat rate.

The constitutionality of a statute authorizing the commissioner of public works of the city of New York to cause water meters to be placed in buildings in which water was furnished for business purposes, and to charge the cost of the water to the owner of the premises, is upheld in Hill v. Thompson, 18 Jones & S. 165.

A municipal corporation having power to distribute water throughout the city and regulate the use thereof, and establish and collect the prices to be paid therefor, may require water supplied to a private fire system to pass through a meter, to be set at the expense of the owner. Shaw Stocking Co. v. Lowell, 199 Mass. 118, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 746, 85 N. E. 90. It should be noted in this case that the defendant city was found to be under no legal obligation to furnish the plaintiff with water for its private fire service system.

Swanberg v. New York, 123 App. Div. 774, 108 N. Y. Supp. 364, was an action to restrain the defendant from installing a water meter on the premises of the plaintiff at the latter's expense. A demurrer to the complaint was overruled and a temporary injunction was granted. The special term did not indicate the grounds for its action, but, upon appeal, it was urged that the section of the city charter authorizing the placing of meters upon the premises of consumers at the discretion of the water commissioners was unconstitutional, as authorizing the taking of property for private purposes without due process of law. The contention was held untenable, the court saying: "While it is true that the city of New York, in delivering water to private individuals, acts, in a sense, as a private corporation, yet the duty and obligation of the municipality to afford fire protection and to safeguard the public health through 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) a pure and wholesome supply of water make the maintenance of the water system more of the nature of a duty owing by a public or municipal corporation; and to say that it is not within the province of the state legislature, in authorizing the city of New York to construct and maintain a water plant, to provide for placing meters upon the premises of those who are to use the water, on the theory that this is a taking of the property of the individual without due process of law, is carrying constitutional limitations to the limit of absurdity."

The power of a municipal corporation to require the use of water meters "to enable them to fix their rates with exactness, instead of uncertain estimates, and to deal justly with the consumer," is conceded in State, Red Star Line S. S. Co., Prosecutors, v. Jersey City, 45 N. J. L. 246, where the board of public works had statutory power to make by-laws, rules, and regulations for the security and proper management of the waterworks, for the introduction of water into the houses, and to regulate the use thereof as might seem to them necessary or proper, but the right to charge the cost of a meter to the consumer is denied.

General statutory provisions conferring upon a city power to enforce all needful rules and regulations for the use of water, and to assess and collect a rent or rate for the use of water, do not authorize the city to require consumers of water to supply meters at their own expense, where there is not only an absence of express power in the city to sell meters or to compel consumers to supply themselves, but, on the other hand, an affirmative grant of power to fix and collect charges for the use of water meters, thus excluding by implication the power to compel consumers to furnish their own meters. Albert v. Davis, 49 Neb. 579, 68 N. W. 945.

Enc. Law, pp. 418, 419; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 6, 10, 18; State ex rel. Lanyon v. Joplin Waterworks, 52 Mo. App. 312.

Smith, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The city of Goodland is a city of the second class, and as such, for some time previous to the commencement of this action, had owned, operated, and maintained a system of waterworks, and had thereby supplied the inhabitants of the city with water. It seems that the city had been supplying water to the users thereof without any means of measuring the amounts used, and in January, 1908, the mayor and council of the city duly passed and published an ordinance, providing, among other things, that on and after April 1, 1908, no consumer of water from the city waterworks should take from the mains thereof any water except such as should be measured by means of a water meter connected with the pipe of the consumer, and of the kind and make ordered by the mayor and council of the city for the purpose; that all the expense of connecting and establishing the meter with a box or other receptacle for the same should be borne by the consumer, and, when the same was done and furnished by the city, the price thereof would be $17. By the ordinance the city reserved the right to shut off the supply of water to a consumer for any violation of the rules governing the use of water in the city. Shortly prior to April 1, 1908, the plaintiff in error, Cooper, filed in the district court of the county his verified petition, setting forth the facts, and with a copy of the ordinance attached as an exhibit, in which petition he prayed for an injunction against the city to restrain it from installing a water meter upon his premises at his expense, and also from shutting off the water and excluding him from the use thereof, and praying that the ordinance be declared unconstitutional, null, and void. Thereafter the plaintiff also filed his motion for a temporary injunction, supported by affidavits that the city was installing water meters on the premises of consumers and threatening to shut off the water from such consumers as had no meters. Notice of the hearing of the motion, and that the same would be heard upon the petition and affidavits filed, was duly served upon the attorney of record for the city, and the application for a temporary injunction was heard in accordance with such notice, and the temporary injunction was by the court refused.

The attorney for the city moves to dismiss the case here on the ground that the evidence heard on the application for a temporary injunction was not made a part of the record by a bill of exceptions, and hence has no place in the transcript of the record upon which the case is brought here. Technically, under the common law, depositions or affidavits used in evidence did not become a part of the record until made so in a bill of exceptions. It is, in substance, said in Miller v. Tobin (C. C.) 9 Sawy. 401, 18 Fed. 609-611, that while, at common law, depositions were not included in the record unless made a part thereof by a bill of exceptions, yet depositions which were used in evidence and filed in the case should be considered as a part of the record, and taken up as a part of the transcript of the record, upon the removal of a cause from a state court to the Federal court. We have a statute providing for the identification and correction of evidence taken by stenographers in court, and making the same a part of the record without including the same in a bill of exceptions, and where evidence is reduced to the form of an affidavit, and notice of the filing thereof is given and acknowledged before the hearing, and the same is used as evidence on the hearing, it would seem that no good purpose is subserved by requiring a bill of exceptions, but that the evidence, being in writing and filed, and thus fully identified, may be included in a transcript of the record. However this may be, the affidavits appear to be only cumulative evidence of the facts alleged in the verified petition, and, if they were excluded from consideration, it would not necessitate the dismissal of the case. It would not then appear that the motion of the plaintiff in error was entirely unsupported by evidence. The verified petition is evidence of equal standing with the affidavit upon such hearing. The motion to dismiss is overruled.

It is contended by the plaintiff in error that a water meter used in connection with a waterworks system is for the benefit of the owner of the waterworks, and is a part of the system,—an instrumentality for measuring and delivering the water,—and should be installed and paid for by the owner of the system. Chapter 135, p. 223, Laws 1907, provides for the acquirement and ownership of waterworks by cities of the first and second class, and authorizes the mayor and council of such cities to enact ordinances necessary for the control, operation, and maintenance of such waterworks located in such cities. It is conceded that the only restriction upon the power to pass such ordinances is that they conform to the laws of the state and are reasonable. Provisions are made in the ordinance in question, making the charges for furnishing water and incidentals a lien upon the real estate, and for the collection thereof as other taxes are collected. These provisions may be invalid, but the question is not involved herein. Practically the only question we have to determine is whether or not the ordinance is reasonable, in that it requires the consumer to furnish a meter and meter box of the kind and description ordered by the mayor and council of the city.

It is said in Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 82 Cal. 286, 6 L.R.A. 756, 16 Am. St. Rep. 116, 22 Pac. 910, 1046, that the expense of such meters cannot be imposed upon the consumer. In that case the question arose between a waterworks company, presumably organized and conducted for profit, and the city and the board of supervisors under an ordinance requiring the water company to furnish meters to consumers who made request therefor. The ordinance also provided that the company should collect only for water furnished at meter rates, which were different from the house rates. One of the questions involved in the case was whether this provision of the ordinance was valid. It was held valid, and that the expense of the meters could not be imposed upon the consumers. Other cases are cited in which it is held, as between water companies, organized and conducted for profit, and consumers of the water furnished by them, that a meter for the measurement of water is for the benefit of the water company and an instrumentality for delivering the water, and that the cost of such meters should be borne by such companies. The case most nearly in point, however, is Albert v. Davis, 49 Neb. 579, 68 N. W. 945. By the statute of Nebraska the city, litigant, was authorized to construct or acquire waterworks and appoint a water commissioner, and that "it shall be the duty of such water commissioner, subject to the supervision of the mayor and council or board of trustees, to have the general management and control of the system of waterworks in the city or village, fixing the rates to be paid by the inhabitants thereof within such limits as may be prescribed by ordinance for the use of water, water meters, and hydrants." The court held that, inasmuch as the franchise authorized the city neither to sell meters nor to compel consumers to supply themselves with meters, but did authorize the city to collect rent for meters, it was implied that the city should furnish the meters and collect rent therefor, but could not compel consumers to furnish their own meters. The court, in that case, expressly declined to express an opinion as to whether, in the absence of authority to rent water meters, the city would be authorized by ordinance to require that meters should be furnished by consumers, but based its decision solely upon the provision authorizing the city to rent meters. The statute of Kansas, supra, makes no provision for the renting of water meters or the supplying or ownership thereof, but in the broadest terms authorizes the mayor and council of cities to which the act applies to enact ordinances necessary for the control, operation, and maintenance of such waterworks located in such cities.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The inhabitants of the city of Goodland have, through their mayor and council, and under the statutory franchise, acquired a system of waterworks and are supplying themselves with water. It is evident that the only fair basis of fixing the amount which the individual consumer should contribute for the benefit individually received is by measuring the water he gets. The water meter is the instrument for this purpose, and the question is whether it is reasonable to require each consumer of water to pay for his individual meter, instead of all the taxpayers of the city paying for all the meters used. As is commonly the case, it may be in Goodland that some of the taxpayers of the city are not so located that they can, and they do not in fact, use water from the public waterworks. If this be true, it seems very reasonable that they should be relieved of any contribution to pay for the meters of those who do use the water, and very reasonable that the consumers of water should pay for the meters of which they alone, as individuals, get the benefit.

The only question remaining, then, is whether the grant of power from the legislature to the city is sufficiently broad to authorize this provision of the ordinance. The court found, and we believe correctly, that the provision made by the ordinance is reasonable and fairly included in the grant of power. No inhabitant of the city is required to use water furnished by the city, or to buy of the city or otherwise to furnish a water meter; but, if one desires to use the city water, he must furnish or pay for a meter to measure the quantity he may receive. The city has the right to have the measurement uniform, and for this reason, and to avoid mistakes of its employees, may require all meters to be of one kind and make. Whether the city is authorized to buy and sell meters is not involved in this case. Presumably a large number could be bought at a less price for each meter than one could be had singly, and perhaps for this reason the plaintiff did not ask to have the city enjoined from doing the business.

The order of the court refusing the temporary injunction is therefore affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

Petition for rehearing denied June 12, 1909.

Enc. Law, pp. 418, 419; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 6, 10, 18; State ex rel. Lanyon v. Joplin Waterworks, 52 Mo. App. 312.

Smith, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The city of Goodland is a city of the second class, and as such, for some time previous to the commencement of this action, had owned, operated, and maintained a system of waterworks, and had thereby supplied the inhabitants of the city with water. It seems that the city had been supplying water to the users thereof without any means of measuring the amounts used, and in January, 1908, the mayor and council of the city duly passed and published an ordinance, providing, among other things, that on and after April 1, 1908, no consumer of water from the city waterworks should take from the mains thereof any water except such as should be measured by means of a water meter connected with the pipe of the consumer, and of the kind and make ordered by the mayor and council of the city for the purpose; that all the expense of connecting and establishing the meter with a box or other receptacle for the same should be borne by the consumer, and, when the same was done and furnished by the city, the price thereof would be $17. By the ordinance the city reserved the right to shut off the supply of water to a consumer for any violation of the rules governing the use of water in the city. Shortly prior to April 1, 1908, the plaintiff in error, Cooper, filed in the district court of the county his verified petition, setting forth the facts, and with a copy of the ordinance attached as an exhibit, in which petition he prayed for an injunction against the city to restrain it from installing a water meter upon his premises at his expense, and also from shutting off the water and excluding him from the use thereof, and praying that the ordinance be declared unconstitutional, null, and void. Thereafter the plaintiff also filed his motion for a temporary injunction, supported by affidavits that the city was installing water meters on the premises of consumers and threatening to shut off the water from such consumers as had no meters. Notice of the hearing of the motion, and that the same would be heard upon the petition and affidavits filed, was duly served upon the attorney of record for the city, and the application for a temporary injunction was heard in accordance with such notice, and the temporary injunction was by the court refused.

The attorney for the city moves to dismiss the case here on the ground that the evidence heard on the application for a temporary injunction was not made a part of the record by a bill of exceptions, and hence has no place in the transcript of the record upon which the case is brought here. Technically, under the common law, depositions or affidavits used in evidence did not become a part of the record until made so in a bill of exceptions. It is, in substance, said in Miller v. Tobin (C. C.) 9 Sawy. 401, 18 Fed. 609-611, that while, at common law, depositions were not included in the record unless made a part thereof by a bill of exceptions, yet depositions which were used in evidence and filed in the case should be considered as a part of the record, and taken up as a part of the transcript of the record, upon the removal of a cause from a state court to the Federal court. We have a statute providing for the identification and correction of evidence taken by stenographers in court, and making the same a part of the record without including the same in a bill of exceptions, and where evidence is reduced to the form of an affidavit, and notice of the filing thereof is given and acknowledged before the hearing, and the same is used as evidence on the hearing, it would seem that no good purpose is subserved by requiring a bill of exceptions, but that the evidence, being in writing and filed, and thus fully identified, may be included in a transcript of the record. However this may be, the affidavits appear to be only cumulative evidence of the facts alleged in the verified petition, and, if they were excluded from consideration, it would not necessitate the dismissal of the case. It would not then appear that the motion of the plaintiff in error was entirely unsupported by evidence. The verified petition is evidence of equal standing with the affidavit upon such hearing. The motion to dismiss is overruled.

It is contended by the plaintiff in error that a water meter used in connection with a waterworks system is for the benefit of the owner of the waterworks, and is a part of the system,—an instrumentality for measuring and delivering the water,—and should be installed and paid for by the owner of the system. Chapter 135, p. 223, Laws 1907, provides for the acquirement and ownership of waterworks by cities of the first and second class, and authorizes the mayor and council of such cities to enact ordinances necessary for the control, operation, and maintenance of such waterworks located in such cities. It is conceded that the only restriction upon the power to pass such ordinances is that they conform to the laws of the state and are reasonable. Provisions are made in the ordinance in question, making the charges for furnishing water and incidentals a lien upon the real estate, and for the collection thereof as other taxes are collected. These provisions may be invalid, but the question is not involved herein. Practically the only question we have to determine is whether or not the ordinance is reasonable, in that it requires the consumer to furnish a meter and meter box of the kind and description ordered by the mayor and council of the city.

It is said in Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 82 Cal. 286, 6 L.R.A. 756, 16 Am. St. Rep. 116, 22 Pac. 910, 1046, that the expense of such meters cannot be imposed upon the consumer. In that case the question arose between a waterworks company, presumably organized and conducted for profit, and the city and the board of supervisors under an ordinance requiring the water company to furnish meters to consumers who made request therefor. The ordinance also provided that the company should collect only for water furnished at meter rates, which were different from the house rates. One of the questions involved in the case was whether this provision of the ordinance was valid. It was held valid, and that the expense of the meters could not be imposed upon the consumers. Other cases are cited in which it is held, as between water companies, organized and conducted for profit, and consumers of the water furnished by them, that a meter for the measurement of water is for the benefit of the water company and an instrumentality for delivering the water, and that the cost of such meters should be borne by such companies. The case most nearly in point, however, is Albert v. Davis, 49 Neb. 579, 68 N. W. 945. By the statute of Nebraska the city, litigant, was authorized to construct or acquire waterworks and appoint a water commissioner, and that "it shall be the duty of such water commissioner, subject to the supervision of the mayor and council or board of trustees, to have the general management and control of the system of waterworks in the city or village, fixing the rates to be paid by the inhabitants thereof within such limits as may be prescribed by ordinance for the use of water, water meters, and hydrants." The court held that, inasmuch as the franchise authorized the city neither to sell meters nor to compel consumers to supply themselves with meters, but did authorize the city to collect rent for meters, it was implied that the city should furnish the meters and collect rent therefor, but could not compel consumers to furnish their own meters. The court, in that case, expressly declined to express an opinion as to whether, in the absence of authority to rent water meters, the city would be authorized by ordinance to require that meters should be furnished by consumers, but based its decision solely upon the provision authorizing the city to rent meters. The statute of Kansas, supra, makes no provision for the renting of water meters or the supplying or ownership thereof, but in the broadest terms authorizes the mayor and council of cities to which the act applies to enact ordinances necessary for the control, operation, and maintenance of such waterworks located in such cities.

The inhabitants of the city of Goodland have, through their mayor and council, and under the statutory franchise, acquired a system of waterworks and are supplying themselves with water. It is evident that the only fair basis of fixing the amount which the individual consumer should contribute for the benefit individually received is by measuring the water he gets. The water meter is the instrument for this purpose, and the question is whether it is reasonable to require each consumer of water to pay for his individual meter, instead of all the taxpayers of the city paying for all the meters used. As is commonly the case, it may be in Goodland that some of the taxpayers of the city are not so located that they can, and they do not in fact, use water from the public waterworks. If this be true, it seems very reasonable that they should be relieved of any contribution to pay for the meters of those who do use the water, and very reasonable that the consumers of water should pay for the meters of which they alone, as individuals, get the benefit.

The only question remaining, then, is whether the grant of power from the legislature to the city is sufficiently broad to authorize this provision of the ordinance. The court found, and we believe correctly, that the provision made by the ordinance is reasonable and fairly included in the grant of power. No inhabitant of the city is required to use water furnished by the city, or to buy of the city or otherwise to furnish a water meter; but, if one desires to use the city water, he must furnish or pay for a meter to measure the quantity he may receive. The city has the right to have the measurement uniform, and for this reason, and to avoid mistakes of its employees, may require all meters to be of one kind and make. Whether the city is authorized to buy and sell meters is not involved in this case. Presumably a large number could be bought at a less price for each meter than one could be had singly, and perhaps for this reason the plaintiff did not ask to have the city enjoined from doing the business.

The order of the court refusing the temporary injunction is therefore affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

Petition for rehearing denied June 12, 1909.

Possession of securities by an agent is indispensable to authorize him to collect.

Stiger v. Bent, 111 Ill. 328; Eaton v. Knowles, 61 Mich. 625, 28 N. W. 740; Williams v. Walker, 2 Sandf. Ch. 325; Smith v. Kidd, 68 N. Y. 130, 23 Am. Rep. 157; Garrels v. Morton, 26 Ill. App. 433; Lane v. Duchac, supra; Roberts v. Matthews, 1 Vern. 150; Wolstenholm v. Davies, Freem. Ch. 289; Hooks v. Frick, 75 Ga. 715; Henn v. Conisby, 1 Ch. Cas. 93; Curtis v. Drought, 1 Molloy, 487; Klindt v. Higgins, 95 Iowa, 529, 64 N. W. 414; Crane v. Gruenewald, 120 N. Y. 274, 17 Am. St. Rep. 643, 24 N. E. 456; Antioch College v. Carroll, 11 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 220; Western Security Co. v. Douglass, 14 Wash. 215, 44 Pac. 257; Cox v. Cutter, 28 N. J. Eq. 13; Haines v. Pohl-mann, 25 N. J. Eq. 179; Jones, Mortg. 2d ed. § 964; Lucas v. Harris, 20 Ill. 169; Mayo v. Moore, 28 Ill. 428; Keohane v. Smith, 97 Ill. 156; Stiger v. Bent, 111 Ill. 338.

The mere possession by an agent of evidences of indebtedness or securities does not confer upon him ostensible power to receive payment thereof.

22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 520; Lawson v. Nicholson, 52 N. J. Eq. 821, 31 Atl. 386; Central Trust Co. v. Folsom, 26 App. Div. 40, 49 N. Y. Supp. 670; Brown v. Taylor, 32 Gratt. 135.

The broker did not have apparent authority to make the collection.

Crane v. Gruenewald and Smith v. Kidd, supra; Dickson v. Wright, 52 Miss. 585, 24 where there is competent evidence tending to prove it. Swegle v. Wells, 7 Or. 222.

Where a general agency is shown, payments made to such agent are binding upon the principal, although the agent did not have possession of the securities at the time of the payment. In so holding, in Noble v. Nugent, 89 Ill. 522, the court said that "the circumstance that the notes were not surrendered, as against clear proof that they were paid to a person having authority to receive payment, amounts to nothing. Their possession is simply presumptive evidence of nonpayment, which may always be overcome by proof that they were in fact paid."

This doctrine was also recognized in the following cases, wherein the facts were held to show a general agency to collect the principal without the possession of the securities: Doe v. Callow, 64 Kan. 886, 67 Pac. 824; Verdine v. Olney, 77 Mich. 310, 43 N. W. 975; Howe Mach. Co. v. Simler, 59 Ind. 307; Sax v. Drake, 69 Iowa, 760, 28 N. W. 423; Dilenbeck v. Wilhelm, 105 Iowa, 749, Appx., 73 N. W. 1072; Fowle v. Outcalt, 64 Kan. 352, 67 Pac. 889.

If general agency is established to transact all of a principal's business in the making of loans and the collection of principal and interest, this will be sufficient to sustain a payment to such agent, even though he has not the possession of the securities. Cheshire Provident Inst. v. Feusner, 63 Neb. 682, 88 N. W. 849; Bettle v. Tiedgen, 77 Neb. 795, 110 N. W. 548.

But in no case can agency be established without showing some connection between the principal and the claimed agent, from which may be reasonably inferred authority from the principal to do the act for which it is sought to hold him responsible; the general rule being that, unless express authority is established aliunde, possession of the securities by the agent is the indispensable evidence of his authority to collect the principal, and whoever pays the agent without that authority does so at his own risk. Hall v. Smith, 3 Kan. App. 685, 44 Pac. 908.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Ostensible or apparent authority.

Payment to a person not in possession of the security paid, but who assumes to act as agent for the holder, is not only valid when actual authority to receive payment is shown, but, according to many authorities, at least, such a payment may be justified and sustained by showing apparent or ostensible authority to receive payment.

Thus, Quinn v. Dresbach, 75 Cal. 159, 7 Am. St. Rep. 138, 16 Pac. 762, while recognizing the principle that lack of possession of a security is a circumstance to be considered in determining the agent's authority to receive payment, held that such fact is not conclusive of the question, and that ostensible authority can be proven from other facts tending to show that the holder of the paper either intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, caused or allowed the mortgagor to believe that the person to whom payment was made had authority to receive payment.

So, the nature and extent of the authority of the agent may be implied or inferred from circumstances. If the agency arises by implication from numerous acts done by the agent with the tacit consent or acquiescence of the principal, it is deemed limited to acts of like nature; and where it appears that an alleged agent has repeatedly performed acts like the one in question, which the principal has ratified and adopted, his authority for the performance of the disputed act may be inferred. Cummings v. Hurd, 49 Mo. App. 139 (facts held not sufficient to show agency to collect within this rule, where agent did not have possession of the securities).

A holder of securities is bound according to the extent of the apparent authority of an agent to receive payment; and, if he knowingly permits the agent to assume authority to collect his notes, or holds him out to the public or the debtor as possessing such authority, and money is paid in reliance thereon, payment will be good though in fact no authority to receive payment was given, and the agent did not have possession of the security paid. May v. Jarvis-Conklin Mortg. Trust Co. 138 Mo. 275, 39 S. W.

Am. Rep. 677; Bristol Knife Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 41 Conn. 421, 19 Am. Rep. 517; Doubleday v. Kress, 50 N. Y. 410, 10 Am. Rep. 502; Curtin v. Phenix Ins. Co. 78 Cal. 619, 21 Pac. 370; Martin v. United States, 2 T. B. Mon. 89, 15 Am. Dec. 129.

Straup, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is brought by the plaintiff to foreclose a deed of trust on real property, executed and delivered by the defendants Hugh S. and Betsy Gowans, to secure their promissory note of even date, payable to the plaintiff. The defendant S. B. Milner, a resident of Salt Lake City, was named the trustee in the deed. The answer of the Gowanses contained a plea of payment, and a demand for the surrender and cancelation of the note and deed.

The note was for $500, dated July 1896, and was payable July, 1898, at the National Bank of the Republic, at Salt Lake City. The facts are substantially as follows: The Gowanses, who resided in Tooele county, applied to Porter J. Conway, who was in the real estate and loan business at Salt Lake City, for a loan of $500. Conway, who was acquainted with the plaintiff, wrote him in New York, where the plaintiff resided, that the Gowanses desired a loan, and that, in his opinion, the loan would be good. The plaintiff wrote him that he would make the loan if Milner approved it. The plaintiff testified Milner represented him at Salt Lake City, and 782; First Nat. Bank v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 145 Mo. 127, 46 S. W. 615; White v. Kehlor, 85 Mo. App. 557; City Nat. Bank v. Goodloe-McClelland Commission Co. 93 Mo. App. 123; Maguire v. Donovan, 108 Mo. App. 511, 84 S. W. 156.

Possession of the securities is not, in every case, essential to the existence of apparent or ostensible authority in an agent to receive payment. The existence of an apparent agency is essentially a question of fact, to be determined from the legitimate and relevant evidence bearing on the question; and where there is evidence tending to establish such fact, it is error not to submit it to the jury. Union Trust Co. v. McKeon, 76 Conn. 508, 57 Atl. 109, and see, to the same effect, International Harvester Co. v. Smith, 51 Fla. 220, 40 So. 840.

And where there is evidence from which may be inferred ostensible authority to collect the principal of a note and trust deed not in possession of the collector, that question is one properly to be submitted to the jury, although the facts are undisputed, where different inferences may reasonably be drawn therefrom. Reid v. Kellogg, 8 S. D. 596, 67 N. W. 687.

Whether the facts authorize an inference of authority to collect where not in possession of the security is a question for the jury if there is evidence from which such inference may be drawn. Ferneau v. Whitford, 39 Mo. App. 311.

By operation of estoppel.

In some jurisdictions, even as to negotiable securities, it is held where a principal has, by his voluntary act, placed an agent in such a situation that a person of ordinary prudence, conversant with business usages and the nature of the particular business, is justified in presuming that such agent has authority to accept payment of a negotiable security, and therefore pays him, the principal is estopped as against such third person from denying the agent's authority, although he retains possession of the security. Harrison Nat. Bank v. Austin, 65 Neb. 632, 59 L.R.A. 294. 101 Am. St. Rep. 639, 91 N. W. 540.

23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

That the holder of securities may, by his conduct or course of dealing, estop himself from denying authority in a person who assumed to act as his agent in receiving payment of securities not in his possession, was also the doctrine of Pennypacker v. Latimer, 10 Idaho, 618, 81 Pac. 55, wherein the facts were held sufficient to establish such estoppel. This doctrine was also recognized in Hollinshead v. John Stuart & Co. (Hollinshead v. Globe Invest. Co.) 8 N. D. 35, 42 L.R.A. 659, 77 N. W. 89; but the facts were held insufficient to create such estoppel.

A payment by the mortgagor to a person acting as agent of the mortgagee will not be held to be at the risk of the mortgagor, although the person to whom payment was made did not have possession of the mortgage or note, and it was payable at his place of business, where so to hold would be a fraud upon the mortgagor, who was induced to make the payment to such third person by the conduct of the mortgagee. Kent v. Congdon, 33 Fed. 228.

Evidence of agency or authority.

As heretofore shown, authority to collect a security not in possession of the person collecting it may be established by showing general agency, express, apparent, or ostensible authority to collect, and also facts to raise an estoppel. Without reference to the variant theories adopted by courts of different jurisdictions as to whether a certain state of facts establishes general agency, or a certain character of authority, the facts relied upon to establish authority or agency are usually very similar, and the conclusion of the court on a given state of facts is generally, in its result, the same, although such facts are held to have established authority of a character different from that held to have been established by the same state of facts in some other jurisdiction. Hence, as a practical proposition, the important question is not whether a certain state of facts establishes authority of a certain character, but whether it establishes authority. In the cases already considered, the abstract question has been covered, and the cases have those written by him to Conway, he testified that he did not keep either. He admitted receiving the letters from Milner, and that he replied to them, but stated that he also kept no copies of those letters. Milner testified that he received letters from the plaintiff in reply to the letters written by him, but that he was able to find only one of them. The plaintiff, however, testified that after the Gowanses were behind on their interest due January 13, 1899, he wrote Conway several letters, saying, "Please have Gowans pay interest." He, however, testified that he wrote these letters "considering and believing that Conway was the agent or representative of the defendants, Gowans, in the matter of my loan to them." The interest was thereafter paid by the Gowanses to Conway, as theretofore, which was by him paid over to Milner, and by him forwarded to plaintiff. On July 12, 1899, the Gowanses paid Conway $325, principal and interest, and on September 15, 1899, they paid him the further sum of $203, principal and interest, being payment in full of the principal and interest on the note. Conway failed to pay these moneys over to either Milner or plaintiff. He absconded after he received them, and has not been heard of since. One of the defendants testified that when he made the last payment he asked Conway for the note and mortgage and for a release; that Conway told him that the note and mortgage were in the possession of Mr. Campbell, in New York, and that Mr. Campbell receive the principal. Smith v. Kidd, 68 N. Y. 130, 23 Am. Rep. 157; Hefferman v. Boteller, 87 Mo. App. 316.

On this subject, in Madison v. Cabalek, 86 Ill. App. 450, the court said: "It would be a very dangerous rule to hold that a loan broker, engaged in negotiating loans upon real estate, should be regarded as the general collecting agent of a lender from whom he has obtained money for a client, merely because he frequently before, for other borrowers, had obtained money from him [the lender] and collected interest coupons in certain instances."

This doctrine was also applied in Cooley v. Willard, 34 Ill. 68, 85 Am. Dec. 296, and the debtor was held not entitled to make payment to a third person, not in possession of the note and deed of trust, although the note was payable at the office of such person, and he was trustee in the deed of trust collateral thereto, and he had also negotiated the loan and collected the interest thereon, which had been thereafter credited on the note by the holder.

And where the broker paid was not in possession of the security, the same result was also reached in Leon v. McIntyre, 88 Ill. App. 349, where, among other facts to establish agency or ostensible authority, it was shown that the broker to whom payment had been made had collected the interest and had made the loan.

Also in Ortmeier v. Ivory, 208 Ill. 577, 70 N. E. 665, where, among other facts tending to show authority, it appeared that the holder and securities had written to the broker who had made the loan and collected the interest thereon, to notify the debtor to pay his interest. The court said this letter was as consistent with the theory that the holder of the securities was writing to the broker as the agent of the debtor, as that he was treating the broker as his agent.

But see Petersen v. Fullerton, 106 Ill. App. 237, where the court held that, under the facts shown, general authority to receive payment would be presumed. In this case, however, the securities were payable to the agent and had been thereafter assigned to the principal, who did not notify the debtor of the assignment, and permitted the agent to collect the interest as though it was his own matter, although he retained possession of the securities.

Collecting interest and principal.

The fact that a bond and mortgage, when paid, were not in the hands of the person assuming to receive payment as agent for the holder, is not conclusive of the question of agency, but is a matter of evidence, to be weighed and considered in connection with all the facts and circumstances in evidence. And even though the principal retains possession of the security, agency may be established by evidence of previous payments of principal as well as interest to the person assuming to act as agent for the holder, to the knowledge of the holder, and without protest on his part. Thomson v. Shelton, 49 Neb. 644, 68 N. W. 1055; Holt v. Schneider, 57 Neb. 523, 77 N. W. 1086; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Walter, 51 Neb. 182, 70 N. W. 938; Bradbury v. Kinney, 63 Neb. 754, 89 N. W. 257; Breck v. Meeker, 68 Neb. 99, 93 N. W. 993; Cheshire Provident Inst. v. Gibson, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 392, 89 N. W. 243; Faulkner v. Simms, 68 Neb. 295, 89 N. W. 171, 94 N. W. 113; Lebanon Sav. Bank v. Blanks, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 403, 89 N. W. 169.

Such a payment, however, is not sufficient, unless it affirmatively appears that the holder knew that the person collecting the interest and principal assumed to do so as his agent. Bradbury v. Kinney, supra; but, to establish ostensible authority, a single payment of the principal is sufficient. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Walter, supra. Contra, see Bacon v. Pomeroy, 118 Mich. 145, 76 N. W. 324.

In Minnesota, if the holder of securities paid to an agent knows that the agent is assuming to collect the principal without having in his custody the securities or a satisfaction thereof, the court will imply an admission or recognition on the part of the principal of authority in the agent to collect. General Convention v. Torkelson, 73 Minn. 401, 76 N. W. 215; Springfield Sav. Bank v. Kjaer, 82 Minn. 180, 84 N. W. 752; Randall was indisposed and sick and had gone South. He further testified that he knew Campbell did not live in Utah, that he resided in New York, and that Conway had to send East to get the note and mortgage and a release; and that, believing and expecting everything would be all right, he paid the money.

With respect to the foregoing facts there is substantially no conflict. Milner, however, testified that some time prior to July, 1899, and before the first payment of principal was made to Conway, he wrote a letter to both of the Gowanses, addressed to them at Tooele city, notifying them that he was the trustee, and that he represented the plaintiff and had charge of his affairs, and that they should pay all moneys to him, and not to Conway; that the letter was postpaid, and mailed in due course of business. Both the Gowanses testified that they lived in Tooele city for something like fifty years, and that they were well known to the postmaster and to the people generally in Tooele city, and that no such letter was received by them as testified to by Milner. They further testified that the only letter received by them from Milner was a letter dated December 17, 1900, which notified them that the note and interest were past due, and requested them to call and arrange for further time or to pay the note; that, when they received the letter, they had paid the note in full to Conway, and that, in response to the letter, they came to Salt Lake City, and showed it to

v. Eichhorn, 80 Minn. 344, 83 N. W. 154; Dexter v. Berge, 76 Minn. 216, 78 N. W. 1111; Lynn v. Hanson, 75 Minn. 346, 77 N. W. 976, 1117; Hare v. Bailey, 73 Minn. 409, 76 N. W. 213. In the following cases, where such fact did not appear, it was held that authority to collect was not established, and the cases were distinguished on this ground: Dwight v. Lenz, 75 Minn. 78, 77 N. W. 546; Budd v. Broen, 75 Minn. 316, 77 N. W. 979; Thomas v. Swanke, 75 Minn. 326, 77 N. W. 981; Smith v. Fletcher, 75 Minn. 189, 77 N. W. 800.

Evidence of the previous payment of a portion of the principal of a note and mortgage to one not in possession thereof, but assuming to act as agent for the holder, and an acceptance of the same by the holder, without disclaiming the authority of the agent, is sufficient to sustain a finding that he had authority to receive payment of the balance, although not in possession of the security. Doyle v. Corey, 170 Mass. 337, 49 N. E. 651.

The doctrine that ostensible authority to collect negotiable securities without being in possession thereof may be implied from a general course of dealing was applied in the following cases, where such authority was implied from the fact that collections of both principal and interest had been previously made by the assumed agent with the knowledge and apparent approval of the holder. Harrison v. Legore, 109 Iowa, 618, 80 N. W. 670; Meserve v. Hanford, 59 Kan. 777, Appx., 53 Pac. 835; Security Co. v. Richardson, 33 Fed. 16; Security Co. v. Christy, 33 Fed. 22; International Harvester Co. v. Smith, 51 Fla. 220, 40 So. 840.

McVay v. Bridgman, 21 S. D. 374, 112 N. W. 1138, holds that an assignee of a negotiable note secured by a trust deed, who permits the trustee to collect the interest coupons attached to the note as they fall due, thereby ostensibly, at least, holds him out to the debtor as his agent to collect the coupons, and justifies the debtor in believing that he is authorized to receive payment of the principal indebtedness, and to release or enter satisfaction of the trust deed, although not in possession of the note or deed.

And see Estey v. Snyder, 76 Wis. 624, 45 23 L.R.A. (N.S.)

N. W. 415, where, as to non-negotiable security, it was held that evidence that an agent made collections and remitted same to his principal, who thereupon sent him the original securities representing the debt collected, was sufficient evidence of authority in the agent to collect a chattel mortgage given to secure the purchase price for property sold by him, although his principal had possession of the mortgage at the time of payment. The court said: "It seems to us idle to contend, in the face of such testimony, that Hills [the agent] had no authority, express or implied, to do what he did in collecting the money on a chattel mortgage. . . . For . . . Hills did make such collections and was allowed to make them."

But the doctrine as to the necessity of possession of a security to justify payment to a third person, as applied to negotiable instruments, is different in this jurisdiction, and the ordinary rules of agency or of apparent or ostensible authority do not apply. This distinction is very clearly drawn in Loizeaux v. Fremder, 123 Wis. 193, 101 N. W. 423, wherein the court said "that this rule [of commercial paper] has been held sufficient to deny efficacy to such acts as permitting collection of interest, or even prior instalments of principal, which, in relation to other business not involving collection of negotiable paper, might well suffice to establish apparent agency. Commercial paper has always been favored in the law, not less for the ultimate benefit of the giver than of the holder; and the rule just referred to is in line with that policy. It is so simple, and, once understood, furnishes so easy and sure a means for both debtor and owner to protect themselves against unauthorized acts of others, that it ought not to be weakened or confused. The holder can always be safe by retaining the instrument in his possession; the debtor, by refusing payment without actual presentation. It is justified in application to negotiable paper distinctively from other property by the very dominant purpose of easy and probable transfer at any moment, so that what may be true as to ownership of such paper on one day is likely to have changed on the next.

one of their attorneys in this case. Further testimony was given by the plaintiff that he at no time had authorized Conway to represent him in negotiating the loan or in collecting the interest, or in receiving payment of moneys for him for any purpose, and that Milner alone represented him in all the transactions in which he and the Gowanses were interested. He further testified that Conway was the agent of the Gowanses in negotiating the loan and in collecting the interest, but such testimony seems to be a voluntary statement made by the plaintiff, not responsive to any question propounded to him, and was the mere conclusion of the witness.

The court found that Conway was not at any time the agent of the plaintiff; that he did not represent him in any of the dealings or transactions had by Conway with the Gowanses; and that Conway, in the negotiation of the loan and the payment of moneys made by the Gowanses to him, was the agent of the Gowanses. The court further found that Conway was not authorized by the plaintiff to receive payments of the sums of money paid to him on the principal; that the Gowanses had no right or authority to pay such money to Conway for the plaintiff; that, at the time the Gowanses paid such money to Conway, they knew that the note and mortgage were not in the possession of Conway, but were in the possession of the plaintiff, and that Conway would have to send East for them, and also for a release; and that, in the

Of the probability of such change the negotiability of the instrument is a continual warning."

